THE PREFACE.

SINCE 'tis obſervable that the Beſt and Braveſt of Mankind are far from being exempted from criminal Proſecutions, and that potent Malice, or prevailing Faction, have too often attempted the moſt conſummate Merit; that Learning which ſhews how Life, Honour, and Innocence are to be defended, when they ſhall happen to be injuriouſly attack'd, will not, 'tis preſum'd, be thought inferiour to that, which inſtructs us how to defend our leſs important Rights.

And as the Common Law is nothing elſe but immemorial Cuſtom, and the Cuſtom and Methods of Tryal, and bringing Offenders to Puniſhment, is no inconſiderable Branch of that Law; and ſince theſe, as other Cuſtoms, are only to be collected from former Precedents, 'tis ſomething ſtrange, that amongſt the numerous Authors of Reports and Inſtitutes, not one has hitherto thought fit to make any conſiderable Collection of this kind, or thorowly to methodize or digeſt this ſort of Learning: nor can any probable Reaſon be aſſign'd for this Neglect, unleſs they have been deterr'd by the vaſt Trouble and Expence it muſt have been to any private Undertaker.

As to the Crown-Law already extant, 'tis ſo far from being a compleat Direction, even in the moſt ordinary Tryals, that it affords little more than ſome imperfect Hints of what the Authors intended. And as to the Doctrine of Impeachments, Tryals of Peers by Commiſſion, or in Parliament, Bills of Attainder, and the Cuſtoms and Uſage of Parliaments, in relation to theſe Matters: This is a Learning that remains entirely untouch'd, and is only to be collected from Precedents of this Nature.

The Undertakers of this Work therefore have ſpar'd no Pains or Expence to procure whatever is valuable of this kind: They have had Recourſe to every Library publick and private, where they had intimation there was any thing worth inſerting; and they have for ſome time ſince offer'd large Encouragement to thoſe who ſhould contribute either Manuſcripts or printed Tryals, towards rendring the Deſign compleat.

And having at length finiſh'd their Collection, they have added a Table to the whole, wherein all the various Learning the Work contains is reduc'd under proper Heads. And that which before lay diſpers'd in many Volumes, very difficult to be obtain'd, and ſeveral valuable Manuſcripts that have been perfectly buried in private Hands, are here brought to light; and ſo diſpos'd, that the ſtudious Reader may make himſelf Maſter of the Subject, with much leſs Labour and Expence than has hitherto been requiſite.

And as to the Manuscripts, such Care has been taken to avoid all Mistakes, that the Judges and Counsel, who were concern'd in such Tryals, and are still living, have been attended with their respective Arguments, and have been pleased [illegible] courage the Undertaking, as to correct whatever was amiss. [illegible] ubility's conscious they have omitted one remarkable Tryal [illegible] ibly be obj[illegible]d, unless that of Mr. Hampden in the Case of [illegible] and that of my Lord S[illegible]fford; both which being to be found in [illegible]th, are already in the hands of most Gentlemen, who are suppos'd to p[illegible] these: and the inserting them could be of no other use than to increase the Bulk, and enhance the Price of the Book. There is indeed another Account of my Lord Strafford's Tryal, which differs in some Instances from Mr. Rushworth's, and is more concise; and this it has been thought proper to insert.

And as the Union of the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland is so near compleated, and there remains little else to distinguish us at present but the municipal Laws of the respective Kingdoms, it has been thought advisable to add some remarkable Scots Tryals: In which (to do that Nation Right) are discover'd great Learning, Eloquence, and strong Reasoning. And indeed as the Civil Law prevails very much there, they have at least as large a Field to exercise their Parts and Learning as our more Southern Orators, who are so unalterably attach'd to their Common Law; and it must be admitted, that the Party accus'd has in Scotland all the fair Play imaginable: He has what Counsel he thinks fit; he has a Copy of his Charge in his own Language, his Counsel are permitted to inspect the very Depositions against him before he is brought to Tryal; and they are so little in haste to dispatch a State-Prisoner, that the Tryal often lasts some Months.

This Specimen of Scotch Tryals, as it will at present be acceptable to the Curious; so as we have one Senate, and one Legislature, it may hereafter give Birth to the introducing such Methods of Tryal in each Kingdom, as in either shall appear to be founded on the greatest Reason and Justice.

As to any Partiality in this Undertaking, it seems almost needless to disclaim it; for the Reader has the Evidence and Arguments entire, without any Alteration or Diminution. It is true, as it falls out in History, so it will do here; The farther we search into Antiquity, and the higher we go, the less perfect will our Accounts be; the same Exactness cannot be expected there as in Tryals of a more modern Date: but thus much may be said for the more antient Tryals, that they are the most perfect and compleat that could possibly be procur'd.

We shall detain the Reader no longer than to observe, that this Collection will not only be useful to the Learned in the Law, and to those whose Misfortune it may be to fall under a criminal Prosecution, but in many Instances it corrects as well as illustrates our English History: And there is scarce a controverted Point in Divinity or Politicks, but the Reader will find has been fully debated here by the greatest Men our Nation has bred. And if Justness of Argument and true Eloquence have any Attraction, and these are Talents worth improving, here will be found the greatest Collection of fine Speeches and Arguments, on the most important Subjects, that have hitherto been exhibited to the World.

COLLECTION OF TRIALS, &c.

The Examinacion of Maſter WILLIAM THORPE, Preſte, accuſed of Hereſye before Thomas Arundel, Archebiſhop of Canterbury, the Yere of ower Lorde, M.CCCC. and ſeven, and the eighth Yere of King Henry IV.

KNOWEN be yt to all Men that rede or heare thys Writyng benethe, That on the Sondaye next after the Feſte of Seynt Peter, that we call Lammeſſe, in the yeare of our Lorde a M.CCCC. and vii. yeare, I William of Thorpe beyng in Preſon in the Caſtell of Saltwode, was brought before Thomas Arundell Archebyſhope of Canterbury, and Chaunceller than of Ingland: And when that I came to hym, he ſtoode in a great Chamber, and moch People aboute hym; and when that he ſawe me, he went faſte into a Cloſett, byddyng all ſeculer Men that folowed hym to go forth from hym ſone; ſo that no Man was left than in that Cloſet but the Archebyſhop hymſelfe, and a Phyſician that was callyd Malueren, Perſon of Seynt Dunſtanys in London, and other two Perſonys unknowen to me, whych ware Minyſterys of the Lawe. And I ſtandyng before them, by-and-by the Archebyſhop ſeyd to me, William, I know well that thou haſt thys twenty Wynter and more trauelyd about beſyly in the North Contre, and in other diverſe Contres of Ingland, ſowyng about falſe Doctrine, hauyng great Buſyneſſe yf thou myght wyth thyne untrew Teachyng, and ſhrewyd Wyll for to enfecte and poyſon all this Lande: But through the Grace of God thou art now wythſtonded and brought in to my Warde, ſo that I ſhall now ſequeſter the from thyne euill purpoſe, and lett the to enuenyme the Shepe of my Provynce. Never the leſſe Seynt Paul ſeythe, Yf it may be as ferre as in us is, we owe to have Peace wyth all Men: Therefore, William, yf thou wyll now mekely, and of good Harte, without onye feynyng, knele downe and leye thy Hande upon a Booke and kyſſe yt, promyſyng feythfully, as I ſhall here charge the, that thou wilt ſubmyt the to my Correccyon, and ſtande to myne Ordinance, and fulfyll yt dewly by all thy Connyng and Power, thou ſhall yet fynde me graeyouſe unto the. Than ſeyd I to the Archebyſhop, Syr, ſyns ye deme me an Heretyke out of Beleue, wyll ye gyue me here Audience to tell my Beleue; and he ſeyd, ye tell on. And I ſeyd, I beleue that ther is not but one God Almyghty, and in thys Godheed, and of thys Godhede ar thre Perſones; that is, the Fader, the Sonne, and the ſothe faſte Holy Goſte: And I beleue that all thes thre Perſones ar euen in Power, and in Connyng, and in Myght, full of Grace and of all Goodneſſe; for whatſoever that the Father dothe, or can, or wyll, that thyng alſo the Sonne dothe, and can, and wyll; and in all their Power, Connyng and Wyll, the Holy Goſte is equall to the Father and to the Sonne. Ouer thys I beleue, that thrugh Counſell of thys moſte bleſſyd Trinitie, in moſte conuenient tyme before ordenyd for the Salvacyon of Man kynde, the ſeconde Peerſon of thys Trinite was ordenyd to take the Fourme of Man, that is the kynde of Man. And I beleue that thys ſeconde Perſon, our Lorde Jeſu Chriſte, was conceiuyd thorough the Holy Ghoſte into the Wombe of the moſt bleſſyd Virgyn Marye, wythout Manys Seede: And I beleue that after nyne monthys Chriſte was borne of thys moſte bleſſyd Vergyn, without one Peyne, or brekyng of the Cloſter of hyr Wombe, and wythout Fylthe of hyr Virginite: And I beleue that Chriſte our Sauyour was circuncyſyd in the eyghte daye after hys Byrthe in fulfillyng of the Lawe, and hys Name was callyd Jeſu, which was callyd of the Angell before that he was conceiuyd in the Wombe of Marie hys Moder: And I beleue that Chriſte, as he was about thyrty yeare old, was baptyzed in the Fludde of Jordane of John Baptiſt; and, in lykeneſs of a Dove, the Holy Goſte deſcendyd there upon hym, and a Voyce was herde from Heuen, ſeiyng, Thou art my welblouyd Sonne, in the I am full pleaſyd. And I beleue that Chriſte was moeuyd than by the Holy Goſte for to goo into Deſert, and there he faſtyd fourty dayes and forty nyghtes wythout bodely Meate and Drynk: And I beleue that by and and by, after hys Faſtyng, when the Manhode of Chriſte hongeryd, the Feende came to hym and temptyd hym in Glotony, in veyn Glory, and in Couetyſe; but in all thoes Temptacyons Chriſte concludyd the Fende, and withſtoode hym; and than wythout tariyng, Jeſu began to preache and to ſeye unto the People, Doe ye Penaunce, for the Relme of Heven ys now at hande: And I beleue that Chriſt, in all hys tyme here, lyued moſte holyly, and taught the Wyll of hys Fader moſte trewly; and I beleue that he ſufferyd therefore moſte wrongfully greatyſt Repreuys and Deſpyſynges: And after thys whan Chriſte wolde make an ende here of hys temporall Lyfe, I beleue that in the daye next before that he wolde ſuffer Paſſyon in the Morne, in fourme of Brede and of Wyne he ordenyd the Sacramente of hys Fleſh and hys Blood, that ys, hys owne precyous Body, and gave it to hys Apoſtles for to eate, commaundying them, and by them all their Aftercomers, that they ſholde doo it in thys fourme that he ſhewyd to them, uſe them ſelf, and teache and commone forthe to other Men and Woomen thys moſte worſhypfull holieſt Sacrament, in myndefulneſſe of hys holyeſt Lyuyng, and of hys moſte trew Teachyng, and of hys wilfull and pacient Sufferyng of the moſte peynful Paſſion: And I beleue that thus Chriſte our Savyour, after that he had ordenid thys moſt woorthy Sacrament of hys owne preciouſe Body, he went forthe wyllfully agenſt hys Enemyes, and he ſufferyd them moſt paciently to ley their Handys moſte violently uppon hym, and to bynde hym, and to leade hym forthe as a Thefe, and to skorne hym, and buffet, and all to blow or fyle him with their Spittinges. Over this I beleue that Chriſte ſuffered moſt mekely and paciently his Enemies for to dinge out with ſharpe Scourges the Bloude that was betwene his Skyn and his Fleſh; yee without grudginge Chriſte ſuffered the cruell Jewes to crown hym with moſt ſharp Thornes, and to ſtrike him with a Rede: And after Chriſte ſuffered wicked Jewes to draw him out upon the Croſſe, and for to nayle hym there upon Fote and Hande; and ſo, thorow this pitiefull Naylinge, Chriſte ſhed out wilfully for Man's Lyfe the Bloude that was in his Vaynes: And then Chriſte gave wilfully his Spirite in to the Handes or Power of his Father, and ſo as he wolde, and when he wold, Chriſt deid wilfully for Man's ſake upon the Croſſe. And notwithſtandinge that Chriſte was wilfully, paynfully, and moſt ſhamefully put to deeth as to the Worlde, there was left Bloude and Water in his Herte, as he before ordened, that he wolde ſhede out this Bloude and this Water for Man's Saluacion: And therefore he ſuffered the Jewes to make a blinde Knight to thruſt him in to the Herte with a Spere, and this the Bloude and Water that was in his Hert Chriſte wolde ſhede out for Man's Love. And after this I beleue that Chriſte was taken downe from the Croſſe, and buried; and I beleue that on the third daye, by power of his Godheed, Chriſt roſe again from Deth to Life; and the xlth day ther after, I beleue that Chriſte aſcended up into Heven, and that he there ſitteth on the right Hande of God the Father Almyghty; and the tenth daye after this up goinge, he ſente to his Apoſtles the Holy Gooſt that he had promyſed them before; and I beleue that Chriſte ſhall come and judge all Mankinde, ſome to euerlaſtinge Peace, and ſome to euerlaſtinge Paynes. And as I beleue in the Father and in the Sonne, that they are one God Almyghty; ſo I beleue in the Holy Gooſt, that is alſo with them the ſame God Almyghty. And I beleue an holy Chirche, that is, all thei that haue byn, and that now are, and alwayes to the ende of the Worlde ſhal bé a People, the which ſhall endeuer them to knowe and to kepe the Commaundments of God, dredinge over all thynge to offende God, and lovynge and ſekynge moſt to pleaſe hym. And I beleue that all they that haue had, and yet haue, and all they that yet ſhall haue the foreſayde vertuous ſurely ſtandynge in the Belefe of God, hopyng ſtedfaſtly in hys merciſull Doynges, continuynge to their ende in perfect Charitie, wilfully, paciently, and gladly ſoferynge Perſecutions, by the example of Chriſt chefly and his Apoſtles, all theſe haue their Names wryten in the Boke of Life: Therefore I beleue that the gaderynge together of this People, lyuynge now here in this Lyfe, ys the holye Chyrche of God, feyghtynge here on Erth agaynſt the Fende, the Proſperyte of the Worlde, and their fleſhely Luſtes. Wherfore ſeyng that all the gadering together of this Church before ſaid, and euery parte therof, nother coueteth, nor willeth, nor loveth, nor ſeketh any thinge but to eſchew the Offence of God, and to do his pleaſing Will; mekely, gladly, and wilfully of all myne Herte I ſubmitt my ſelfe unto thys holye Church of Chriſte, to be ever buxom and obedient to the Ordinaunce of it, and of euery Member thereof, after my Knowlege and Power by the helpe of God. Therefore I knowlege now and euermore ſhall, if God will, that of all my Harte, and off all my Might, I will ſubmyt me only to the Rule and Gouernaunce of them whome, after my Knowlege, I may perceave, by the havynge and uſynge of the beforeſayd Vertues, to be Membres of the holy Churche: Wherfore theſe Articles of Belefe, and all other bothe of the olde Lawe and of the newe, which after the Commaundement of God any Man oughte to beleue, I beleue verely in my Soule, as a ſynnefull deedly Wretche, of my Cunnynge and Power oughte to beleue, prayenge the Lorde God, for his holye Name, for to encreaſe my Belefe, and help my Unbelefe.

And forbycauſe to the prayſynge of Goddes Name, I deſyre above all thynge to be a faythfull Membre of holy Churche, I make this Proteſtacyon before you all foure that are now here preſente, covetynge that all Men and Women that nowe abſente knewe the ſame, that what thynge ſo ever before this tyme I haue ſayde or done, or what thynge here I ſhall doo or ſaye, at any tyme here after; I beleve that all the olde Lawe and the newe Lawe, geuen and ordened by the Councell of theſe thre Perſones of the Trynite, were geuen and wrytten to the Saluacyon of Mankynde: And I beleue that theſe Lawes are ſufficient for Man's Saluacyon: And I beleue every Article of theſe Lawes, to the entente that theſe Articles were ordened and commaunded of theſe thre Perſones off the moſte bleſſed Trynyte to be beleued. And therfore to the Rule and the Ordynaunce of theſe Goddes Lawes, mekely, gladly, and wilfully I ſubmytte me with all myne Harte, that who ever can or wyll by ouctoryte of Goddes Lawe, or by open Reaſon, tell me that I haue erred, or now erre, or any tyme here after ſhall erre in any Article of Belefe (fro whyche Inconvenience God kepe me for his Goodneſſe) I ſubmytte me to be reconcyled, and to be buxum and obedyente unto to theſe Lawes of God, and to every Article of them. For by Auctorite, ſpecyally of theſe Lawes, I will, thorowe the Grace of God, be vnyed charytably unto theſe Lawes. Yee, Syr, and ouer thys I beleue and admytte all the Sentences, Auctorites, and Reaſons of the Sayncte and Doctoures, accordynge unto Holy Scripture, and declarynge it truely.

I ſubmytte me wylfully and mekely to be ever obediente after my connynge and power to all theſe Sayncte and Doctoures, as they are obedyente in Worke and in Worde to God and to his Lawe, and forther not to my Knowlege, not for any erthly Power, Dignity or State, thorowe the helpe of God. But Syr, I praye you tell me yf after youre biddying I ſhall laye my Hande upon the Boke to the entente to ſwere thereby?

And the Archebiſhope ſaid to me, ye, wherfore els? And I ſayde to him, Syr, a Boke is nothyng els but a thyng coupled together of dyuerſe Creatures, and to ſwere by any Creature both Gods Lawe and Mans Lawe is agaynſt.

But Syr, this thinge I ſaye here to you before theſe your Clerckes, with my forſayd Proteſtacion, that how, where, when and to whom Men are bounden to ſwere or to obey in ony wyſe after Gods Lawe, and Sayntes and trewe Doctours according with Gods Lawe: I will thorow Gods Grace be ever redy thereto with all my conning and power. But I pray you Syr, for the Charity of God, that ye will before that I ſwere as I have here reherſed to you, tell me how or whereto that I ſhall ſubmytt me; and ſhewe me whereof that ye will correct me, and what is the Ordinaunce that ye will thus oblige me to fulfyll.

And the Archebiſhop ſeid unto me, I will ſhortely that nowe thou ſwere here to me that thou ſhalt forſake all the Opinions which the Secte of Lollards holde, and is ſlaundred with; ſo that after this tyme nother pryuely nor apertly thou holde any Opinion which I ſhall after that thou haſte ſworne reherſe to the here. Nor thou ſhalt fauer no Man nor Woman, young nor old, that holdeth any of thes foreſeid Opinions; but after thi Knowledge and Power thou ſhalt enforſe the to withſtand all ſoche diſtroblers of Holye Chyrche in euery Dioceſe that thou comeſt in: and them that will not leaue their falſe and dampnable Opinions, thou ſhalt put them up, publeſhyng them and their Names, and make them knowen to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe that they are in, or to the Biſhopes Miniſtres. And ouer this I will that thou preach no more unto the tyme that I know by good Witneſſe and trewe, that thy Conuerſacion be ſoch that thy Hart and thy Mouth accorde treuly in one contrariyng all the leude Learnying that thou haſt taught here before.

And I hearying thes Wordes, thought in my Harte, that this was an vnlefull asking; and I demyd myſelf curſed of God, yf I conſented hereto, and I thought howe Suſan ſeid, Anguyſſch is to me on euery ſyde. And in that I ſtode ſtill, and ſpake not, the Archebiſhop ſeid to me, Anſwere one wyſe or a nother: and I ſeid, Syr, if I conſented to you thus, as ye haue here reherſed to me, I ſhould become an Appelar, or euery Biſhopis eſpye, ſomonour of all Englonde. For, and I ſholde thus put up, and publeſhe the Names of Men and Women, I ſholde herein deceiue full many Perſones; ye Syr, as it is likely by the dome of my Conſcience I ſholde herein, becauſe of the dethe both of Men and Women, ye both bodely and goſtely. For many Men and Women that ſtand now in the Treuthe, and are in the waye of Salvation; yf I ſholde for the Learnying and Reding of their Beleve publeſhe them, and put them therfor up to Biſhopes, or to their unpituouſe Miniſters, I know ſome dele by Experience, that they ſholde be ſo diſtrobled and diſeaſed with Perſecucion or otherwiſe, that many of them (I thinke) would rather choſe to forſake the waye of Treuthe, than to be traveled, skorned and ſlaundred, or puniſhed as Biſhopes and their Miniſtres now uſe for to conſtreyne Men and Women to conſent to them. But I fynde in no place in Holy Scripture, that this Office that ye wolde now enfeſſe me with accordith to ony Priſte of Chriſtes Secte, nor to any other Chriſten Man. And therefore to do thus wer to me a full'noycous bonde to be bounden with, and over grevouſe Charge. For I ſuppoſe, that yf I thus dede many Men and Women would, ye Syr, might juſtly unto my Confuſion ſey to me, that I wer a Traitur to God and to them; ſyns (as I thinke in myne Hert) many Men and Women truſte ſo mekle in me in this caſe, that I wold not for ſavyng of my Lyfe do thus to them. For yf I thus ſholde do, full many Men and Women wolde (as they might full truly ſey) that I hadde falſly and cowerdly forſaken the Truthe, and ſlaundred ſhamefully the Word of God. For yf I conſented to you to do hereafter your Will for bon chefe or miſchef that may befall to me in this Lyfe, I deme in my Conſcience that I were worthy herefore to be curſed of God, and alſo of all his Seyntes, fro which inconuenience kepe me, and all Chriſten People Almighti God now and ever for his Holy Name. And than the Archebiſhop ſaid vnto me, O thine Hart is full hard endured as was the Herte of Pharao, and the Deuell hath ouercomen the and perverted the; and he hath ſo blynded the in all thy Wittes, that thou haſt no Grace to know the Treuthe, nor the meſure of Mercy thot I haue profered to the. Therefor, as I perceyue now by thy foliſh Anſwere, thou haſt no will to leaue thyne olde Errours. But I ſey to the leude Loſell, other thou quickly conſente to myne Ordinaunce, and ſubmit the to ſtand to my Decrees, or by Seynt Thomas thou ſhalt be diſgraded, and folowe thy Felowe in Smithfelde. And at this ſeying I ſtode ſtyll and ſpake not, but I thought in myne Harte that God did to me a greate Grace, if he wolde of his great Mercy bring me to ſoch an ende. And in myne Harte I was nothing frayde with this menaſing of the Archebiſhop. And I conſidered there two things in him: one, that he was not yet ſorofull for that he had made William Soutre wrongfully to be burnt. And as I conſydered that the Archebiſhop thyrſted yet after more ſheding out of innocent Bloode. And faſt therfore I was moved in all my Wittes, for to hold the Archebiſhop nother for Prelate nor for Preiſt of God; and for that myne inward Man was thus altogether departed from the Archebiſhop, methought I ſhould not haue ony dread of him. But I was right heuy and ſorouful, for that ther was none Audience of Seculer Men by: but in myne Hart I praid the Lord God for to comforte me and ſtrengith me ageinſt them that there ware agaynſte the ſothefaſteneſſe. And I purpoſed to ſpeak no more to the Archebiſhop and his Clerckes than me nede behoved: and all thus I praied God for his Goodneſſe to geue me than and alwaye Grace to ſpeake with a meke and an eaſy Spyrit; and whatſoeuer thinge that I ſhulde ſpeke, that I might haue true Authorities of Scriptures, or open Reaſon. And for that I ſtode thus ſtill, and nothing ſpake, one of the Archebiſhopes Clerkes ſeid vnto me,

What thing muſiſte thou ? Do thou as my Lord hath now commanded to the here.

And yet I ſtode ſtill, and anſwered him not; and than ſone after the Archebiſhope ſeid to me, Arte thou not yet bethought, whether thou wilt do, as I haue here ſeid to the? And I ſeid than to hym;

Syr, my Father and my Mother, on whoſe Soules God haue Mercy (if it be his will) ſpent mekyll Money in diuerſe Places about my Learning, for the entent to haue made me a Prieſte to God: but when I came to Yeares of Diſcretion I had no will to be Prieſte, and therfore my Friends were right heuy to me; and than me thought their grudging agenſt me was ſo peynfull to me, that I purpoſed therfor to haue left their Company: and when they perceiued this in me, they ſpake ſome tyme full feire and pleaſaunt Wordes to me; but for that they might not make me to conſent of good Harte to be a Prieſte, thei ſpake to me full ofte tymes very grevous Wordes, and manaſſed me in diuerſe manners, ſhewing to me full heuy chere. And thus one while in feire manner, a nother while in greuous they wer long tyme as me thought full beſy about me, or I conſented to them to be a Prieſte: but at the laſte, whan in this matter they wold no longer ſuffer myne Excuſacions; but other I ſhould conſent to them, or I ſholde ever bear their Indignation, ye, their Curſe, (as they ſeide) than I ſeing this, praid them that they wold gyue me licence for to go to them that wer named wyſe Prieſtis and of vertuous Conuerſacion, to haue their Counſell, and to know of them the Office and the Charge of Prieſthode. And hereto my Father and my Mother conſented full gladly, and gaue me their Bliſſing and goode leaue to go, and alſo Money to ſpende in this Journey. And ſo than I went to tho Prieſts, whom I herde to be of beſte Name, and of moſte holy lyvyng, and beſte learnid, and moſte wyſe of heauenly Wiſdom; and ſo I communed with them vnto the tyme that I perceiuyd by their verteuous and continuall Occupacions that their honeſte and charitable werks paſſed their Fame wich I herde before of them. Wherefore, Syr, by the example of the Doctrine of them, and ſpecially for the godly and innocent Workis wich I perceiued than of them and in them; after my Conning and Power I have exerciſed me than and in this tyme to knowe perfectly Goddis Lawe, hauing a will and a deſyre to lyve ther after, willing that all Men and Women exerciſed them ſelf feithfully theraboute. Yf than, Syr, other for Pleaſure or Diſpleaſure of them that ar nother ſo wiſe, nor of ſo verteuouſe Conuerſation to my Knowledge; nor by comone Fame to ony other Mannis Knowledge in this Land, as thes Men wer of whome I toke my Counſell and Information: I ſholde now forſake thus ſodenly and ſhortely, and unwarnid all the Learning that I exerciſed my ſelf in this thirty Winter and more; my Conſcience ſhulde ever be herewith out of meſure vnquieted: and as, Syr, I knowe well that many Men and Women ſhould be therthrowe greatly troublid and ſclaunderid, and as I ſaid Syr to you before, for myne Untrewthe and falſe Cowardneſs many a one ſholde be put into full great repreſe: ye Syr I drede, that many a one, as thei might then iuſtely, wolde curſe me full bitterly, and Syr I feare not but the Curſe of God, which I ſholde deſerve herein, wolde bring me to a full euyll end, yf I continewid thus. And if thorow remorſe of Conſcience I repentid me any tyme retourning into the way, which you doo your diligence to conſtreine me now to forſake ye Syr, all the Biſhopis of this Lande with full many other Prieſtis wolde defame, and purſew me as a Relapſe, and thei that now have (though I be unworthy) ſome Confidence in me, hereafter wolde neuer truſte to me though I cowlde teache and liue neuer ſo verteuouſly more than I can or may. For if after your Counſell I lefte vtterly all my Learning, I ſholde hereby firſte wounde and defyle myne owne ſoule; and alſo I ſholde here through geue occaſion to many Men and Women of full ſore hurting: ye Syr, as it is likely to me, if I conſented to your will I ſholde herein by myne euill Example in it, as ferre as in me wer, ſlee many Folke goſtely, that I ſholde neuer deſerue for to haue Grace of God to the edifying of his Chirche nother of my ſelf, nor of none other Mannes Lyfe, and undone bothe before God and Man. But Syr, by Example chefely of ſome whos Names I will not now reherſe, H. of J. P. and B. and alſo by the preſent doyng of Philip of Rampenton that is now becomen Biſhop of Lincoln, I am now learnid as many mo hereafter thorow Goddis Grace ſhall be learned, to hate and to fle all ſoche ſclander, that thes foreſeid Men chefely hathe defyled principally themſelves with. And in it that in them is they haue enuenemid all the Chirche of God for that ſclanderous reuoking at the Croſſe of Paulis of H. P. and of B. and how now Philip Rampenton perſewith Criſtis People. And that feining, that thes Men diſſemble by worldly Prudence keping them cowerdly in their Preaching and Communing within the Bondis and Termis (wich without blame may be ſpokyn and ſhewid out to the moſte worldly lyuers) will not be vnponiſhid of God. For to the point of Trewthe that thes Men ſhewid out ſome tyme they will not now ſtreche forth their Lyues. But by Example eche one of them as their Wordis and their Works ſhewe they beſy them thorow their feinyng; for to ſclaunder and to perſewe Chriſte in his Membres, rather than they will be perſewed.

And the Archebiſhop ſeid to me, Thes Men the which thou ſpekiſt of now wer Foolis and Heretiques, whan they were countid wyſe Men of the and other ſoche loſelles. But now they ar wyſe Men, though thou and ſoche other deme them vnwyſe. Neuertheleſſe I wiſte neuer none, that right ſeide, that eny while were enuenymed with your contagiouſneſſe, that is, contaminate and ſpottid Doctrine.

And I ſeid to the Archebiſhop, Syr, I think well that thes Men and ſuch other ar now wyſe as to this Worlde; but as their Wordis ſoundid ſometyme, and their Workis ſhewid outwardly, it was likely to move me that they had earneſte of the Wiſdome of God; and that they ſholde haue deſeruid mickell Grace of God to haue ſauyd their own Soules, and meny other Mennis, if they had continewid feithfully in wilfull pouerte, and in other ſymple verteuous lyvyng; and ſpecially if they hadde with thes foreſeide vertueis continewid in their beſy frutefull ſowing of Goddis Worde: as to many Mennys Knowledge they occupied them a Seaſon in all their Wittes full beſyly to know the pleſaunt Will of God, trauelyng all their Membres full beſily for to doo therafter, purely and chefely to the praiſing of the moſt Holy Name of God, and for grace of Edification and Saluacion of Chriſten People; but wo worthe falſe Couetiſe, and euill Counſell, and Tyrannye, by wiche they and many Men and Women are ledde blyndely into an evill ende.

Than the Archebiſhop ſeide to me, Thou and ſoche other loſellis of thy Secte wolde ſhaue your Herdis full nere for to have a Benefice. For by Jeſu I know none more couetouſe ſhrewis than ye ar, when that ye haue a Benefice. For lo I gave to John Puruay a Benefice but a Myle out of this Caſtell, and I herde more Compleintis aboute his Covetouſneſſe for Tythes and other Myſdoyngys, than I didde of all Men that wer auancid within my Dioceſſe.

And I ſeid to the Archebiſhop, Syr, Puruay is nother with you now for the Benefice that ye gaue him, nor he holdith feithfully with the Learnying that he tawght and writ before tyme, and thus he ſhewith hymſelf nother to be hote nor cold; and therfore he and his Felaws may ſore drede, that if they torne not haſtely to the waye that they have forſaken, perauenture they be put out of the nombre of Criſtis choſyn People.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Though Puruay be now a falſe Harlot, I quyte me to him; but come he more for ſoche Cauſe before me, or we depart, I ſhall knowe with whome he holdith. But I ſey to the, Whiche ar thes holy Men and Wyſe of whom thou haſte takyn thyne Informacion?

And I ſeid, Sir, Maſter John Wicliff was holden of full many Men the greatiſte Clerke that they knewe than lyvyng; and therwith he was namid a paſſing ruely Man, and an ynnocent in his lyuynge, and herefore greate Men commonyd ofte with him, and they louyd ſo his Learnying that they writ it, and beſily enforſid them to rule themſelf there after. Therefore Syr, this foreſeid Learnying of Maſter John Wicliff is yet holden of full many Men and Women, the moſt agreable Learning unto the lyuing and teachyng of Criſte and of his Apoſtles, and moſte openly ſhewing and declaring how the Chirche of Criſte hathe ben, and yet ſhulde be rewlid and gouern'd. Therfore ſo many Men and Women couet this Learnying, and purpoſe through Goddis Grace to conforme their lyuying Life to this Learnying of Wicliff. Maſter John Aiſton tawght and writ accordingly, and full beſily wher and whan, and to whome that he might; and he vſid it hymſelf right perfitely unto his Lifes ende. And alſo Philip of Rampenton while he was a Chanone of Laceſter, Nicholas Herforde, Dauy Gotray of Pakring, Monk of Bylande, and a Maſter of Diuinitie, and John Puruay and many other wich wer holden right wiſe Men and prudent tawcht, and writ beſily this foreſeid Learnyng, and conformid them thereto. And with all thes Men I was ofte right homely, and communyd with them long tyme and ofte; and ſo before all other Men I choes wilfully to be informid of them and by them, and ſpecially of Wicleff himſelf, as of the moſte verteuous and godly wiſe Men that I herde of or knewe. And therefore of him ſpecially, and of thes Men, I tooke the Learning that I haue taucht, and purpoſe to liue there after (if God will) to my Liues end. For though ſome of thes Men be contrary to the Learning that they taucht, before I wote well that their Learning was trewe wich they taught; and therfore with the helpe of Gode I purpoſe to holde and to uſe the Learning wich I harde of them, while they ſat on Moſes Chaire, and ſpecially while they ſat on the Chaire of Criſte. But after the Werkis that they now do, I will not doo with Goddis helpe. For they feine and hide, and contrary the Trewthe wich before they taucht out plenily and trewly. For as I know well when ſome of thes Men hathe been blamid for their ſclaunderous doing, they graunte not that they haue tauchte a miſſe, or erryd before time; but that they were conſtreinid by peine to leave to tell out the ſothe, and thus they choeſe now rather to blaſpheme God than to ſuffer a while here Perſecution bodely for ſothefaſtneſſe that Chriſte ſhed out his Harte Bloode for.

And the Archebiſhop ſeid, That Learning that thou calliſt Trewthe and Sothefaſtneſſe, is open ſclaunder to Holy Chirche, as it is prouid of Holy Chirche. For all be it, that Wicliff your Autour was a great Clerke, and though that many Men held him a perfite liuer, yet his Doctrine is not approuid of Holy Cherche, but many Sentences of his Learning are dampnid as they well woorthy ar. But as touching Philip of Rampenton that was firſt Chanone, and after Abbot of Laceſter, which is now Biſhop of Lincoln: I tell the that the Day is comen for wich he faſtid the euene. For nother he holdeth now, nor will hold the Learning that he thought when he was a Chanon of Laceſter: For no Biſhop of this Land perſeweth now more ſharpely them that holde thy way than he doeth.

And I ſaid, Syr, full many Men and Women wonderith upon him, and ſpeakith him mekill Shame, and holdith him for a curſid Enemy of the Trewthe.

And the Archebiſhop ſeid to me, Wherefore tarieſt thou me thus here with ſoche Fables, wilt thou ſhortely (as I have ſeid to the) ſubmit the to me or no?

And I ſeid, Syr, I tell you at one word, I dare not for the drede of God ſubmit me to you, after the Tenour and Sentence that ye have aboue reherſed to me.

And than as if he hadde been wrothe he ſeid to one of his Clerkis, fetch hider quikely the Certification that came to me fro Shrewisbury under the Bailiues Seal, witneſſing the Errours and Hereſies which this loſell hath venemouſly ſowen there.

Then haſtely the Clerke tooke out, and leid forth on a Cupborde diverſe Rollis and Writings, among which there was a little one, which the Clerke delivered to the Archebiſhop. And by and by the Archebiſhop redde this Rolle, conteining this Sentence.

¶ The thirde Sonday after Eaſter, the Yere of our Lorde M. CCCC. and Seuen, William Thorpe came vnto the Towne of Shrewisbury, and thorow leaue graunted vnto him to preache:

He ſaid openly in Seynt Chaddis Chirche in his Sermone, that the Sacrament of the Altare after the Conſecration was material Brede.

And that Ymages ſhulde in no wiſe be worſhiped.

And that Men ſhulde not go on Pilgremages.

And that Prieſtes have no Title to Tythes.

And that it is not lefull for to ſwere in any wiſe.

And when the Archebiſhop had red thus this Rolle, he rolled it up agein, and ſaid to me,

Ys

Ys this holſome Learninge to be amonge the People?

And I ſaid to him, Syr, I am both aſhamed on their behalfe, and right ſoroufull for them that have certified you thes things thus vntrewly: for I preached never nor taught thus priuely nor apertly.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, I will give Credence to thes worſhipfull Men which haue written to me, and witneſſed vnder their Sealis there among them. Though thou now denieſt this, weniſt thou that I will give Credence to the? Thou loſell haſte trobled the worſhipful Cominalte of Shrewisbury; ſo that the Bailives and Cominalte of that Towne haue written to me, praynge me that am Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, Primate and Chaunceler of Englond, that I will vouchſafe to graunte them, that if thou ſhalt be made (as thou art worthy) to ſuffer open Joureſſe for thine Hereſyes, that thou maye haue thi youreſſe openly ther among them: ſo that all they whome thou and ſoche other loſelles haue ther peruerted, may thorow feare of thy Dede be reconſyled ageyn to the vnite of Holy Chirche. And alſo they that ſtande in true Faithe of Holy Churche may thorowe thy Dede be more ſtabliſhed therin. And as yf thys askyng hadde pleaſed the Archebiſhop, he ſaid, By my thrifte this hartye Prayoure and feruente Requeſte ſhall be thought on.

But certeynly nother the Prayer of the Men of Shrewisbury, nor the manaſſynge of the Archebiſhop made me any thing a frayde. But in reherſyng of this malice, and in the hearynge of it my herte greatly rejoyſed and yet dothe. I thanke God for the Grace that I than thought and yet thinke ſhall come to all the Chirche of God here thorowe, by the ſpeciall merciſull doynge of the Lord. And as hauynge no dreade of the Malice of Tyrauntes, by truſtynge ſtedfaſtly in the helpe of the Lorde with full purpoſe for to knowlege the ſothefaſteneſſe, and to ſtande thereby after my connyng and power, I ſaid to the Archebiſhop; Syr, yf the Truthe of Gods Worde might now be accepted as it ſholde be, I doute not to proue by lykely evidence, that they that are famed to be out of the Faythe of Holy Church in Shrewisbury, and in other Places alſo, are in the true Faith of Holy Chirche. For as their Wordes ſounde, and their Workes ſhewe to Mannis Judgment, dreading and louing faithfully God, their Will, their Deſyre, their Loue, and their Beſineſſe are moſte ſett to dreade to offend God, and to loue for to pleaſe him in true and faithfull keping of his Commandments. And agene, they that are ſaid to be in the Faithe of Holy Chirche in Shrewisbury and in other places, by open euidence of their proude, enuiouſe, maliciouſe, couetouſe, lecherouſe and other foule Wordes and Workes, nother knowe nor haue will to knowe, nor to occupye their Wittes truely and effectuouſly in the right Faith of Holy Churche. Wherfore all theſe, nor none that folowe their maners, ſhall ony time come verely in the Faith of Holy Churche, except they enforce them more truelye to come in the waye whiche nowe they deſpiſe. For theſe Men and Women that are now called feithfull and holden juſte, nother knowe nor will exerciſe themſelfe to know of Faithfulneſſe one Commaundement of God. And thus full many Men and Women now, and ſpecially Men that are named to be principall Lymmes of Holy Church, ſtiere God to greate Wrathe, and deſerue his Curſe, for that they call or holde them juſte Men, which are full vnjuſte, as their viciouſe Wordes, their great cuſtomable Sweringe, and their ſlaunderouſe and ſhamefull Workes ſhew openly and witneſſe. And herefore ſoche viciouſe Men and unjuſte in their owne Confuſion call them unjuſte Men and Women, which after their power and conning beſy them ſelf to liue juſtely after the Commaundement of God. And where Syr ye ſay, that I haue diſtrobled the Cominaltie of Shrewisbery, and many other Men and Women with my teaching, if it thus be, it is not to be wondred of wiſe Men, ſins all the Cominalte of the Cite of Jeruſalem was deſtrobled of Chriſtes awne Perſon that was very God and Man, and moſt prudent Precher that ever was or ſhall be. And alſo all the Synagogue of Nazareth was moued ageinſt Chriſte, and ſo fulfilled with ire towardes him for his preaching, that the Men of the Synagogue roſe up and caſt Chriſte out of their Cyte, and ledde him vppe to the top of a Mountaine for to caſt him doune ther hedeling. Alſo accordingly hereto the Lord witneſſyth by Moſes, that he ſhall put Diſſenſion betwixt his People and the People that contrarieth and perſewith his People. Who, Syr, is he that ſhall preache the Treuthe of Goddes Worde to the vnfeithful People, and ſhall lett the ſothefaſteneſſe of the Goſpell, and the Prophecye of God Almightie to be fulfilled?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, It foloweth of thes thy Words, that thou and ſoche other thinkeſt that ye do right well for to preach and teach as ye do without Authoritie of any Biſhop. For ye preſume, that the Lord hath choſen you only for to preache as faithfull Diſciples and ſpeciall Folowars of Chriſte.

And I ſaid, Syr, by Authoritie of Gods Lawe, and alſo of Seintes and Doctours, I am learned to deme, that it is euery Prieſtes Office and Deutie for to preache beſily frely and truely the Worde of God. For no doute euery Prieſt ſhould purpoſe firſt in his Soule, and couett to take the Order of Prieſthode chefly for to make knowen to the People the Worde of God after his conning and power, approuing his Wordes euer to be true by his vertuous Workes: and for this entent we ſuppoſe that Biſhopes and other Prelates of Holy Chirch ſhold chefely take and uſe ther Prelacie. And for the ſame cauſe Biſhopes ſholde giue to Prieſtes their Orders. For Biſhopes ſholde accept no Man to Prieſthode, except that he had good Will and full purpoſe, and were well diſpoſed, and well learned to preache. Wherefore, Syr, by the bidding of Chriſt, and by Example of his moſte holy liuing, and alſo by the witneſſing of his Holy Apoſtles and Prophets, we are bounde under full great Peine to exerciſe vs after our conning and power (as euery Prieſte is likewiſe charged of God) to fulfill dewly the Office of Prieſthode. We preſume not here of oure ſelfes for to be eſtemed (nother in our owne Reputacion, nor in none other Mannes) feithfull Diſciples, and ſpeciall Folowers of Chriſte: but Syr, as I ſaid to you before, we deme this by Authoritie chefely of Goddes Worde, that it is the chefe deutie of euery Prieſte to beſy them feithfully to make the Law of God knowen to his People, and ſo to comune the Commaundement of God charitably, howe that we may beſte, where, whan, and to whom that euer we may, is our very deutie. And for the will and beſineſſe that we owe of our dewe dette to do juſtely our Office thorow the ſteiring and ſpecial helpe (as we we truſte) of God, hoping ſtedfaſtely in his mercie, we deſire to be the feithfull Diſciples of Chriſte; and we pray this gracious Lorde for his holy Name, that he make us able ſo to pleaſe him with deuout Prayers, and charitable Prieſtly workes, that we may obteine of him to folowe him thankfully.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Lewde Loſell, wherto makiſt thou ſoche veyne Reaſones to me? Asketh not Seynt Paul, How ſholde Prieſtes preche, except they be ſent? but I ſent the neuer to preche; for thy venemous Doctryne is ſo knowen thorow out Englond, that no Biſhop will admitt the for to preche by witneſſyng of their Letters. Why than, lewde Ydiot, willeſt thou preſume to preach, ſyns thou art not ſent, nor licenſed of thy Souereyn to preach? Saith not Seynt Paule, That Subjectes owe to obeye their Souereyns, and not only good and vertuous, but alſo Tyrauntis that are vicious?

And I ſaid to the Archebiſhop, Syr, As touching your Letter of Licence or other Biſhopes, whiche ye ſay we ſholde haue to witneſſe that we wer able to be ſent for to preache; we knowe well that nother you, Syr, nor ony other Biſhop of this Lande will graunte to us ony ſoche Letters of Licence, but we ſholde oblige us to you and to other Biſhopes, by unlefull Othes, for to paſſe not the Bondes and Termes which ye, Syr, or other Biſhopes wil limyt to us. And ſins in this Matter your Term is be ſome to large, and ſome to ſtreite, we dare not oblige vs thus to be bounden to you for to kepe the Termes, which you will lymitt to us, as ye do to Friere and ſoch other Prechers: and therfor though we haue not your Letter, Sir, nor Letters of other Biſhops writen with Ynke upon Perchement, we dare not herefor leaue the Office of Preching; to which Preching all Prieſtes, after there Connying and Power, are bounde by diuerſe Teſtimonies of God's Lawe, and of great Doctours, without ony mencion making of Biſhopes Lettres. For as mekell as we haue taken upon vs the Office of Prieſthode (though we are vnworthy thereto) we come and purpoſe to fulfyll it with the helpe of God, by Authoritie of his owne Lawe, and by witneſſe of great Doctours and Seintes accordingly, hereto truſting ſtedfaſtly in the mercye of God: For that he commaundeth vs to do the Office of Prieſthode, he will be our ſufficient Letters and Witneſſe, if we by example of his holy lyuing and teaching ſpecially occupye vs feithfully to do our Office juſtly, ye the People to whome we preache, be they feithfull or unfeithfull, ſhall be our Letters, that is, our Witneſſeberers; for the Treuthe, where it is ſowen, maye not be unwitneſſed: For all that are conuerted and ſaued by learninge of Goddes Worde, and by working therafter, are Witneſſeberers, that the Trewith and Sothfaſtneſſe which they harde and dyd after, is cauſe of their Saluacion. And ageyn, all unfeythfull Men and Women, which herde the Treuthe tolde out to them, and wolde not do there after; alſo all they that might haue herde the Treuthe, and wold not heare it, becauſe that they wolde not do thereafter: all thes ſhall beare witneſſe againſt themſelfes, and the Treuth which they wold not heare, or elſe harden and deſpiſed to do thereafter thorow their Unfeythfulneſſe, is and ſhall be cauſe of their Dampnacion. Therfore, Syr, ſyns this forſeide witneſſing of God, and of diverſe Seintes and Doctours, and of all the People good and evyll, ſufficeth to all true Prechers; we thinke that we do not the Office of Preſthode, if that we leaue our Preaching, becauſe that we haue not, or maye not, haue dewly Biſhopes Letters to witneſſe that we are ſent of them to preache. This Sentence approueth Seynt Paul, wher he ſpeketh of himſelfe, and of feithfull Apoſtles and Diſciples, ſaing thus: We neede no Letters of Commendacion, as ſome other Preachers do, whiche preache for Couetouſnes of temporal Goodes, and for Mennes praiſing. And where ye ſay, Syr, that Paul biddeth Subjectes obey their Souereyns; this is ſoth, and may not be denied: But ther is ij. maner of Souereyns, vertuous Sufferenys, and vicious Tyrauntes; therefore to thes laſt Souereyns nother Men nor Women that be ſubjecte owe to obey in ij. maners. To vertuous Suffereins and charitable, Subjectes owe to obey wilfully and gladly, in hearing of their good Counſell, in conſenting to their charitable Biddinges, and in werkynge after their frutefull Workes. This Sentence Paul approueth, wher he ſaith thus to Subjectis: Be ye mindefull of your Souereyns that ſpeke to you the Worde of God, and folow you the Feithe of them whos Conuerſacion you know to be vertuous. For as Paul ſaith after, Thes Souereyns, to whome Subjectis owe to obeye in folowing of their Maners, worke beſily in holy ſtudiyng, how they may withſtande and deſtroye Vices firſte in themſelf, and after in all their Subjectis, and how they may beſte plante in them Vertues. Alſo thes Souereyns make deuoute and feruent Prayers for to purchaſe Grace of God, that they and their Subjectis may ouer all thing dreade to offende hym, and to loue for to pleaſe hym. Alſo theſe Souereyns to whome Paul biddeth vs obey, as it is ſeid before, lyue ſo vertuouſly, that all they that will lyue well may take of them goode Example to knowe and to kepe the Commaundmentis of God. But in this foreſeid wyſe, Subjectis owe not to obey, nor to be obedient to Tyrauntis, while they ar vicious Tyrauntis, ſyns their Will, their Counſell, their Biddingis, and their Workis ar ſo vicious, that they owe to be hatid and lefte. And though ſoche Tyrauntis be maſterfull and cruell in Boſtyng, and manaſing in Oppreſſions and diverſe Punyſhyngis; Seynt Peter biddeth the Seruauntis of ſoche Tyrauntis to obey mekely to ſoche Tyrauntis, ſuffering paciently their malicious Cruelnes: But Petyr counſellith not ony Seruant or Subjecte to obey to ony Lorde, or Prince, or Souereyn in ony thyng that is not pleaſing to God.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid vnto me, Yf a Souereyn bidde his Subject doo that thing that is vicious, this Soueryn herein is to blame; but the Subjecte for his Obedience deſerueth mede of God, for Obedience pleaſith more to God than ony Sacrifice.

And I ſaid, Samuel the Prophete ſaid to Saul the wickyd King, That God was more pleaſed with the Obedience of his Commaundement, than with ony Sacrifice of Beſtis: But Dauid ſaith, and Seynt Paul, and Seynt Gregory accordingly to gither, That not onely they that doe Euyll is worthy of Dethe and Dampnacion, but alſo all they that conſente to euyll Doers. And, Syr, the Law of holy Chirche teachith in the Decrees, That no Seruant to his Lorde, nor Childe to the Father or Mother, nor Wyfe to hyr Husbond, nor Monke to his Abot, ought to obey except in lefull thingis and lawfull.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, All theſe Allegingis that thou bringeſt forth ar not els but proude proude Preſumptuouſnes ; for hereby thou enforciſt the to prove, that thou and ſoche other ar ſo juſtè, that ye owe not to obeye to Prelatis. And thus agenſt the Learning of Seynt Paul, that teachith you not to preache but if ye wer ſent, of your owne Authorite ye will go forthe, and preache, and doo what ye liſte.

And I ſaid, Sir, preſentith not every Prieſte the Office of the Apoſtles, or the Office of the Diſciples of Chriſte ? And the Archebiſhop ſaid ye. ¶ And I ſaid, Syr, as the tenthe Chaptre of Mathew, and the laſte Chaptre of Marke witneſſeth, Chriſte ſent his Apoſtles for to preache : And the tenthe Chaptre of Luke witneſſeth, that Chriſte ſent his two and ſeuentie Diſciples for to preache in every place that Chriſte was to come to. And Seynt Gregory in the common Lawe ſaith, That every Man that goth to Prieſthode, takith upon hym the Office of Preaching ; for as he ſaith, that Prieſte ſteirith God to great Wrathe, of whos Mouthe is not herde the Voice of Preaching. And as other more gloſes upon Ezechiel witneſſe, That the Prieſte that prechith not beſily to the People, ſhall be Partetaker of their Dampnacion that periſhe thorow his Defaute ; and though the People be ſauyd by other ſpeciall Grace of God than by the Prieſtis Preachyng, yet the Prieſtis, in that they ar ordenyd to preache and preache not, as before God they ar Manſlears, for as ferre as in them is ; ſoche Prieſtes as preache not beſily and trewly ſleeth all the People goſtely, in that they withhold from them the Worde of God, that is Lyfe and Suſtenaunce of Menes Soules. And Seynt Iſidore ſaith, Prieſtis ſhall be dampnid for Wickedneſſe of the People, if they teache not them that ar ignorant, or blame not them that are Synners : For all the Worke or Beſineſſe of Prieſtis ſtandith in preaching and teaching, that they edifye all Men as well by Connyng of Feithe, as by Diſcipline of Workes, that is vertuous teaching. And as the Goſpell witneſſith, Chriſte ſaid in his teaching, I am borne and comen into this Worlde to beare witneſſe to the Trewthe, and he that is of the Trewthe hearith my Voice. ¶ Than, Syr, ſyns by the Worde of Chriſte ſpecially, that is, his Voice, Prieſtis ar commaundid to preache, whatſoeuer Prieſte that it be that hathe not Goodwill and full Purpoſe to doo thus, and ableth not hymſelf, after his Conning and Power, to doo his Office by the Example of Chriſte and of his Apoſtles, whatſoever other thing that he dothe diſpleaſith God. For lo Seynt Gregory ſaith, that thing lefte that a Man is bounde chefely to doo, whatſoeuer other thing that a Man dothe, it is unthankefull to the Holy Goſte : And therfore ſaithe Lincoln, That Prieſte that preachith not the Worde of God, though he be ſiene to have none other Defaute, he is Antichriſte and Sathanas, a Night-thefe and a Day-thefe, a Slear of Soules, and an Angell of Light tournid into Derkeneſſe. Wherfore, Syr, thes Authorites and other well conſidered, I deme my ſelf dampnable if I, other for Pleeſure or Diſpleaſure of ony Creature, applye me not diligently to preache the Worde of God. And in the ſame Dampnacion I deme all thoſe Prieſtis, which of goode Purpoſe and Will enforſe them not beſily to doo thus ; and alſo all them that have Purpoſe or Will to lett ony Prieſte of this Buſineſſe.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to thoſe three Clerkis that ſtoode before hym, Lo, Syrs, this is the Manner and Buſineſſe of this Loſell and ſoche other, to pike out ſoche ſharpe Sentencis of holy Scripture, and of Doctoris, to mainteine their Secte and Lore ageinſte the Ordinaunce of Holy Chirche. And therefore, Loſell, it is that thou couetiſt to have ageyn the Pſalter that I made to be takyn from the at Canterbury, to recorde ſharpe Verſys ageinſt vs ; but thou ſhalt neuer haue that Pſalter, nor none other Boke, tyll that I know that thy Harte and thy Mouthe accorde fully to be gouernid by holy Chirche.

And I ſaid, Syr, all my Will and Power is and euer ſhall be (I truſte to God) to be gouernyd by holy Chirche.

And the Archebiſhop asked me, What was holy Chirche ?

And I ſaid, Sir, I tolde you before what was holy Chirche ; but ſyns ye aske me this Demaunde, I call Chriſte and his Seyntes holy Chirche.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid unto me, I wote well that Chriſte and his Seyntes ar holy Chirche in Heuene ; but what is holy Chirche in Erthe ?

And I ſaid, Syr, though holy Chirche be euery one in Charite, yet it hath two Partis : The firſte and principall Parte hath ouercomen perfitely all the Wretchedneſſe of this Lyfe, and reigneth joyfully in Heuene with Chriſte ; and the tother Parte is here yet in Erth, beſily and continually fighting day and night ageinſt Temptacions of the Fende, forſakyng and hatyng the Proſperite of this Worlde, deſpiſing and withſtonding their fleſſchely Luſtis ; which onely ar the Pilgrimes of Chriſte, wandering toward Heuene by ſtedfaſt Feith, and groundid Hope, and by perfite Charite : For thes heuenly Pilgremis may not, nor will not be lettid of their goode purpos, by the reaſon of eny Doctours diſcording fro holy Scripture, nor by the Fluddis of any Tribulacion temporall, nor by the Winde of any Pride of Boſte, or of manaſing of ony Creature ; for they ar all faſte grounded upon the ſuer Stone Chriſte, hearing his Worde, and louing it, exerciſing them feithfully, and continually in all their Wittes to doo thereafter.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to his Clerkis, Se ye not how his Harte is endured, and how he is traueled with the Deuill, occupiyng him thus beſely to allege ſoche Sentencis to mainteyne hys Errours and Hereſies ? Certeyn thus he wold occupie vs here all day, if we wold ſuffer hym.

One of the Clerkes anſwered, Syr, he ſaid right now, that this Certificacion that came to you fro Shrewisbery is untrewly forged againſt hym ; therfore, Syr, appoſe you hym now here in all the Pointis which ar certified ageinſt hym, and ſo we ſhall heare of his owne Mouthe his Anſwers, and witneſſe them.

And the Archebiſhop tooke the Certificacion in his Honde, and looked theron a while, and than he ſaid to me.

Lo here it is certified ageinſt the by worthy Men and feithfull of Shrewisbury, that thou preachedſt there openly in Seynt Chaddis Chirche, that the Sacramente of the Altare was materiall Brede after the Conſecracion : What ſaiſt thou ? Was this trewly preached ?

And I ſaid, Syr, I tell you trewly that I touchid nothing there of the Sacrament of the Altare, but in this wyſe, as I will with Goddis Grace tell you here. As I ſtoode ther in the Pulpet, beſiyng me to teache the Commaundement of God, ther knylled a ſacring Bell, and therfore mekill People toornid awaye haſtely, and with great noyſe noyſe ran fro towardis me. And I ſeyng this, ſaid to them thus: Goode Men, ye wer better to ſtand here ſtill, and to heare Goddis Worde; for certis the Vertue and the Mede of the moſte holy Sacrament of the Altare ſtandith mekill more in the Beleue thereof that ye ought to haue in your Soule, than it dothe in the outward Sighte thereof. And therefor ye were better to ſtande ſtill quietely to heare Goddis Worde, becauſe that thorow the hearing therof Men come to very trewe Belefe. And otherwyſe, Syr, I am certein I ſpake not there of the woorthy Sacrament of the Altare.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, I beleue the not what ſo euer thou ſaiſt, ſyns ſo worſhipfull Men haue witneſſed thus ageinſt the; but ſyns thou denyeſt that thou ſaidiſt thus there, what ſaiſt thou now? Reſtith there, after the Conſecracion, in the oſte materiall Brede or no?

And I ſaid, Sir, I knowe in no place in holy Scripture where this Terme materiall Brede is writen; and therfore, Sir, when I ſpeake of this matter, I vſe not to ſpeake of materiall Brede.

Than the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, How teacheſt thou Men to beleue in this Sacrament?

And I ſaid, Sir, as I beleue my ſelf, ſo I teache other Men.

He ſaid, Tell out pleinly thy Beleue hereof.

And I ſaid with my Proteſtacion, Sir, I beleue that the Nyght before that Chriſte Jeſu wold ſuffer wilfully Paſſion for Mankynde on the Morne after, he toke Breade in his holy and moſte worſhipfull Handis, lifting vp his Eyes, and gyuyng Thankis to God his Father, bleſſed this Breade and brake it, and gaue it to his Diſciples, ſaiyng to them, Take and eate of this all you, this is my Body; and tho this is and ought to be all Mennis Belefe, Mathew, Marke, Luke, and Paul witneſſith: other Beleue, Sir, haue I none, nor will haue none elſe; for I beleue that this ſufficeth in this matter: For in this Beleue, with Goddis Grace, I purpoſe to lyue and dye, knoleging as I beleue and teache other Men to beleue, that the worſhipfull Sacrament of the Altare ys the Sacramente of Chriſtis Fleſche, and his Bloode in fourme of Breade and of Wine.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, It is ſothe that this Sacrament is very Chriſtis Body in fourme of Breade; but thou and thy Secte techiſt it to be Subſtaunce of Brede: Thynke you this true Teachinge?

And I ſaid, Nother I nor ony other of the Secte that ye dampne, teache ony other wyſe than I haue tolde you, nor beleue other wiſe to my knowynge. Neuertheleſſe, Syr, I aske of you for Charyte, that ye will tell me here pleynly, how ye ſhall vnderſtonde this Text of Saynt Paule, wher he ſayth thus; This thinge feale you in youre ſelfe, that is in Chriſte Jeſu, while he was in the fourme of God. Sir, calleth not Paule here the Fourme of God, the Subſtaunce or Kynde of God? Alſo, Sir, ſaith not the Chirche in the houres of the moſt bleſſed Virgine accordinly hereto, where it is written thus: Thou Auctour of Healthe remembre, that ſometyme thou toke of the vndefyled Vyrgyne the Fourme off oure Bodye? Tell me for Charyte therfore, whether the Fourme of our Bodye be called here the Kynde of oure Body or no?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Woldeſt thou make me to declare this Texte after thy Purpoſe, ſyns the Chirche hathe nowe determyned, that there abideth no Subſtaunce of Breade after the Conſecracion in the Sacrament of the Altare? Beleueſt thou not on this Ordinaunce of the Churche?

And I ſaid, Syr, What ſoeuer Prelates haue ordened in the Churche, our Beleue ſtandith euer hooll. I haue not herde that the Ordinaunce of Men under Beleue ſhulde be putt in to Beleue. And the Archebiſhop ſaide to me, Yf thou haſt not learned this before, learne now to knowe that thou art out of Beleue, if in this matter and other thou beleueſt not as holy Chirche beleueth. What ſaye Doctours treatinge of this Sacrament?

And I ſaid, Syr, Seynt Paule that was a greate Doctour of holy Chirche, ſpeakynge to the People, and teaching them the right Beleue of this moſte holy Sacrament, calleth it Breade that we breake. And alſo in the Canon of the Maſſe, after the Conſecracion, this moſt worthy Sacrament is called holy Breade; and euery Prieſte in this Lande, after that he hathe receyued this Sacrament, ſaythe in thys wyſe: That thynge that we haue taken with oure Mouthe, we praye God that we maye take it with a pure and clene Mynde; that is, as I underſtonde, we praye God that we maye receyue, thorowe very Beleue, this holy Sacrament worthely. And, Syr, Seynt Auguſtine ſaith, That thing that is ſene is Breade; but that Mennys Feithe asketh to be informed of, is verye Chriſtes Body. And alſo Fulgence, an ententyfe Doctour, ſaith, As it were an Errour to ſaye that Chriſte was but a Subſtaunce, that is, very Man, and not very God, or to ſay, that Chriſte was very God, and not very Man; ſo is it (this Doctour ſayth) an Errour to ſay, that the Sacrament of the Altar is but a Subſtaunce. And alſo, Syr, acordingly hereto in the Secrete of the midde Maſſe on Chriſtmaſſe Day, it is writen thus: Idem refulſit Deus, ſic terrena ſubſtantia nobis conferat quod divinum eſt; which Sentence, Syr, with the Secrete of the forth ferye, quatuor temporum Septembris; I pray you, Syr, declare here openly in Engliſh.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, I perceiue well ynough wher about thou art, and how the Deuell blyndeth the, that thou may not underſtond the Ordinaunce of holy Churche, nor conſent therto: But I commaunde the now anſwere me ſhortly; Beleueſt thou that, after the Conſecracion of this forſaid Sacrament, there abideth Subſtaunce of Breade or not?

And I ſaid, Sir, as I vnderſtond, it is all one to graunte or to beleue, that there dwelleth Subſtaunce of Breade, and to graunte and to beleue, that this moſt worthy Sacrament of Chriſtes owne Body is one Accident without Subjecte. But, Syr, for as mekell as your asking paſſeth myne Underſtonding, I dare nother denye it nor graunte it; for it is Skole-Mater, aboute which I beſyed me neuer for to know it: and therfore I commit this Terme, Accidens ſine Subjecto, to thoſe Clerkes which delyte them ſo in curiouſe and ſuttill Sophiſtrie, becauſe they determine oft ſo difficulte and ſtraunge Maters, and wade and wander ſo in them, from Argument to Argument with pro & contra, till that they wote not where they are, nor underſtonde not themſelfe: But the Shame that thes proude Sophiſtrers haue to yelde them to Men and before Men, maketh them ofte Foolis, and to be concluded ſhamefully before God.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, I purpoſe not to oblige the to the ſuttyll Argumentes of Clerkes, ſyns thou art vnable therto; but I purpoſe to make the obeye to the Determinacion of holy Chirche.

And I ſaid, Syr, by open Evidence and great Witneſſe a thouſand yeare after the Incarnacion of Chriſte, the Determinacion which I haue here before you reherſed was accepte of holy Church, as ſufficient to the Saluacion of all them that wolde beleue it faithfully, and worke theraſter charitably. But, Syr, the Determinacion of this Mater, which was brought in ſyns the Fende was loſed by Frier Thomas agayn, ſpecially calling the moſte worſhipful Sacrament of Chriſtes owne Body an Accident witheut Subjecte, which Terme ſyns I knowe not that Goddes Lawe approueth it in this mater, I dare not graunte, but vtterly I denye to make this Frier's Sentence, or ony ſoche other my Beleue, do with me God what thou wilt.

And the Archebiſhop ſaide to me, Well, well, thou ſhalt ſaye other wyſe or that I leaue the.

But what ſaiſt thou to this ſeconde Poynte that is recorded ageinſt the by woorthy Men of Shrewisbury, ſaing, that thou preachedſt openly there, that Ymages oughte not to be worſhipped in ony wiſe?

And I ſaid, Syr, I preached neuer thus, nor thorow Gods Grace I will not any tyme conſent to thinke nor to ſay thus nother pryuely nor apertly: For, lo! the Lorde witneſſeth by Moſes, that the thinges which he made were righte good, and ſo than they were, and yet they are and ſhall be good, and worſhipfull in their kynde; and therfore to the ende that God made them to, they are all preiſable and worſhipfull, and ſpecially Man, that was made after the Ymage and Likeneſſe of God, is full worſhipfull in his kynde: ye this holy Ymage, that is Man, God worſhippeth; and herefore euery Man ſhuld worſhippe other in kynde, and alſo for heuenly Vertues that Men uſe charitably. Alſo I ſaye, Woode, Tynne, Gold, Syluer, or any other Mater that Ymages are made of, all theſe Creatures are worſhipfull in theire kynde, and to the ende that God made them for; but the keruyng, caſtyng, nor peyntyng of ony Ymagery made with Mannes Hande, all behit that this doing be accepte of Man of hyeſt State and Dignite, and ordened of them to be a Kalendar to leude Men, that nother can nor will be learned to know God in his Worde, nother by his Creatures, nor by hys wonderfull and diuerſe Workinges; yet this Ymagery ought not to be worſhipped in the Forme nor in the Likeneſſe of Mannes Crafte, neuertheleſſe that euery Mater that Peinters peynte with, ſyns it is Gods Creature, ought to be worſhipped in the kynde, and to the ende that God made and ordened it to ſerue Man.

Than the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, I graunte well that no body oweth to do worſhippe to any ſoche Ymages for them ſelfe; but a Crucifyxe ought to be worſhipped for the Paſſion of Chriſte that is peynted therein, and ſo brought ther thorow to Mannes Mynde: And thus the Ymages of the bleſſed Trinite, and of Virgyn Mary, Chriſtes Mother, and other Ymages of Sayntes ought to be worſhipped. For lo earthely Kynges and Lordes, which uſe to ſend their Letters enſealid with their Armes, or with their preuy Signet, to Men that are with them, are worſhipped of thes Men: For whan thes Men receiue their Lordes Letters, in whiche they ſe and knowe the Willes and Biddinges of their Lordes, in worſhippe of their Lordes they do of their Cappes to thes Letters. Why not than, ſins in Ymages made with Mannes Hande, we may rede and knowe many diuerſe thinges of God, and of his Sayntes, ſhall we not worſhippe their Ymages?

And I ſayde with my forſaid Proteſtacyon, I ſay that theſe worldly Vſages of temporall Lordes that ye ſpeake now of, maye be done in caſe without Synne; but thys is no Similitude to worſhip Ymages made by Mannes Hande, ſyns that Moſes, Dauid, Salomon, Baruch, and other Seyntes in the Bible, forbidde ſo pleynly the worſhipyng of all ſoche Ymages.

Than the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Lewde Loſell, in the olde Lawe, before that Chriſte toke Mankind, was no Likeneſſe of any Perſone of the Trinite, nother ſhewed to Man nor knowen of Man; but nowe ſyns Chriſte became Man, it is lefull to haue Ymages to ſhewe his Manhode: ye though many Men, which are right greate Clerkes, and other alſo helde it an Errour to peynte the Trinite, I ſay it is well done to make and to peynte the Trinite in Ymages: For it is great mouing of Deuocion to Men, to haue and to behold the Trinite and other Ymages of Seyntes caruyd, caſte, and peynted; for beyonde the See are the beſte Peynters that euer I ſaw. And, Syrs, I tell you this is their Maner, and it is a goode Maner. Whan that an Ymagemaker ſhall kerue, caſte in Moulde, or peynte ony Ymages, he ſhall go to a Prieſte, and ſhryue him as clene as if he ſholde than dye and take Penaunce, and make ſome certeyn Vowe of Faſtyng or of Praiynge, or of Pilgrimages doinge, praiyng the Prieſte ſpecially to praye for hym, that he may haue Grace to make a faire and a deuoute Ymage.

And I ſaid, Syr, I doute not yf thes Peynters that ye ſpeake of, or ony other Peynters, vnderſtode truely the Texte of Moſes, of Dauid, of the wiſe Man, of Baruch, and of other Seyntes and Doctoures, theſe Peynters ſholde be moued to ſhryue them to God wyth full inwarde Sorowe of Harte, takynge vpon them to doo right ſharpe Penaunce for the ſynfull and vayne Crafte of Peyntinge, Karuynge or Caſtinge that they had vſed, promiſing God feithfully neuer to do ſo after, knowleging openly before all Men theyr reprouable Earning. And alſo, Syr, thes Prieſtes that ſhriue (as ye do ſay) Peinters, and injoine them to do Penaunce, and praye for theire ſpede, promyſyng to them helpe of their Prayers for to be curious in their ſynfull Craftes, ſynne herein more greuouſly than the Peynters: For thes Prieſtes do comforte and gyue them Counſell to do that thynge, which of great Peyne, ye vnder the Peyne of Goddes Curſe, they ſholde vtterly forbydde them. For certis, Syr, yf the wonderfull werking of God, and the holy lyuynge and teachynge of Chriſte, and of his Apoſtles and Prophetes, were made knowen to the People by holy lyuynge, and true and beſy teachynge of Prieſtes: theſe thynges (Syr) were ſufficient Bokes and Kalendares to knowe God by and his Sayntes, without ony Ymages made with Mannes Hond; but certis the vicious lyuynge of Prieſtes, and their Couetouſneſſe, are chefe Cauſe of this Errour, and all other Vicioufneſſe that reigneth among the People.

Than the Archebiſhop ſaid unto me, I holde the a vicious Prieſt and acurſte, and all them that are of thy Secte; for all Prieſtes of holy Chirche, and all Ymages that moue Men to Deuocion, thou and ſoche other go about to deſtroy. Looſell, ware it a feire thing to come in to a Chirche, and ſee therin none Ymage?

And

And I ſaid, Syr, they that come to the Chyrch for to pray deuoutly to the Lorde God, may in their inwarde Wittes be the more feruent, that all their outwarde Wittes be cloſed fro all outwarde ſeynge and hearing, and fro all Diſtroblaunce and Lettingis. And ſyns Chriſte bleſſed them that ſaw hym not bodely, and haue beleuyd feithfully in hym; it ſufficeth than to all Men, thorow hearing and knowing of Goddis Worde, and to doo there after, for to beleue in God, though they ſee neuer Ymagis made with Mannis Hande, after ony Perſon of the Trinite, or of ony other Seynte.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me with a feruent Spyrite, I ſay to the, Loſell, that it is right well done to make and to haue an Ymage of the Trinite, ye what ſaiſt thou? Ys it not a ſtiering thing to beholde ſoche an Ymage?

And I ſaid, Sir, ye ſaid right now, that in the olde Lawe, or Chriſte toke Mankynde, no Likeneſſe of ony Perſon of the Trinite was ſhewid to Men: wherfore, Sir, ye ſaid it was not than lefull to haue Ymagis; but now ye ſay, ſyns Chriſte is becomen Man, it is lefull to make and to haue an Ymage of the Trinite, and alſo of other Seyntis. But, Syr, this thing wolde I learne of you, Syns the Father of Heuen, ye and euery Perſon of the Trinite was without beginnyng God Almighty, and many holy Prophetis that wer dedely Men wer martireſed violently in the olde Lawe, and alſo many Men and Women than died holy Confeſſours; why was it not than as lefull and neceſſarie as now to haue made an Ymage of the Father of Heuen, and to haue made and hadde other Ymagis of Martires, Prophetis, and holy Confeſſours, to haue ben Kalendaris to aduiſe Men, and move them to Deuocion, as ye ſay that Ymagis now doo?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, The Sinagoge of Jues hadde not Authorite to approue thes thingis, as the Chirche of Chriſte hathe now.

And I ſaid, Sir, Seint Gregory was a great Man in the newe Lawe, and of great Dignite, and as the comon Lawe witneſſith, he commendid greatly a Biſhop, in that he forbadde vtterly the Ymagis made with Mannis Hande ſholde be worſhipid.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Vngracious Loſell, thou faueriſt no more Trewthe than an Hounde, ſyns at the Roode at the Northe Dore at London, at our Lady at Walſingham, and many other diuerſe Placis in England, ar many great and preiſable Miracles done; ſhulde not the Ymagis of ſoche holy Seyntis and Placis, at the Reuerence of God and our Lady, and other Seyntis, be more worſhippid than other Placis and Ymagis wher no ſoche Miracles ar done?

And I ſaid, Sir, ther is no ſoche Vertue in ony Ymagery, that ony Ymagis ſholde herefore be worſhippid; wherfore I am certein, that ther is no Miracle done of God in ony Place in Erthe, becauſe that ony Ymagis made with Mannis Hande ſholde be worſhippid. And herefore, Sir, as I preached openly at Shrewisbury and other Placis, I ſay now here before you, that no body ſholde truſte that ther war ony Vertue in Ymagery made with Mannis Hande, and herefor no body ſholde vowe to them, nor ſeake them, nor knele to them, nor bow to them, nor pray to them, nor offer any thing to them, nor kyſſe them, nor enſence them: For lo the moſt worthy of ſoche Ymagis, the braſen Serpente by Moyſes made at Goddis bidding, the goode Kyng Ezechie deſtroied worthily and thankefully, forbycauſe it was encenſed. Therefore, Sir, yf Men take goode hede to the writing and to the lerning of Seynt Auguſtine, of Seynt Gregory, and of Seynt John Chriſoſtome, and of other Seyntis and Doctours, how they ſpeake and write of Miracles that ſhall be done now in the laſte ende of the Worlde, it is to dreade that for the Vnfeithfulneſſe of Men and Women, the Fende hath great power for to worke many of the Miracles that now ar done in ſoche Placis: For bothe Men and Women delyte now more for to heare and knowe Miracles, than they doo to knowe Goddis Worde, or to heare it effectuouſly. Wherfore to the great Confuſion of all them that thus doo, Chriſte ſaith, The Gnacion of Aduolteres requireth Tokyns, Miracles, and Wonders: Neuertheleſſe as diuerſe Seyntis ſay, now whan the Feithe of God is publiſhed in Chriſtendome, the Worde of God ſufficeth to Mannis Saluacion without ſoche Miracles; and thus alſo the Worde of God ſufficeth to all feithfull Men and Women, without ony ſoche Ymagis. But, goode Sir, ſyns the Father of Heuen that is God in his Godhed, is the moſte vnknowen thing that may be, and the moſte wonderfull Spyrit, hauyng in it no Shape or Likeneſſe of ony Membres of ony dedely Creature; in what Likeneſſe or what Ymage may God the Father be ſhewid or peintyd?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, As holy Chirche hathe ſufferid and yet ſufferith the Ymagis of all the Trinite, and other Ymagis to be peyntid and ſhewid, ſufficeth to them that ar Membres of holy Chirche; but ſyns thou art a rotten Membre, cutt away frome holy Chirche, thou fauereſt not the Ordinaunce therof. But ſyns the Daye paſſith, leaue we this Mater.

And than he ſaid to me, What ſaiſt thou to the thirde Poynte that is certified againſt the, preching openly in Shrewisbury, that Pilgrimage is not lefull? And ouer this thou ſaidiſt, that thoſe Men and Women that go on Pilgrimagis to Canturbery, to Beuerley, to Karlington, to Walſinghame, and to ony ſoche other Placis, ar accurſed, and made fooliſch, ſpending their Goodes in waſte.

And I ſaid, Sir, by this Certificacion I am accuſed to you, that I ſholde teache that no Pilgrimage is lefull. But I ſaid neuer thus: For I knowe that ther be trew Pilgrimagis, and lefull and full pleſaunt to God; and therfore, Sir, how ſo euer myne Enemies haue certified you of me, I tolde at Shrewisbury of two maner of Pilgrimagis.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, whom calleſt thou trewe Pilgrimes?

And I ſaid, Sir, with my Proteſtacion I call them trew Pilgremis trauelyn toward the bliſſe of Heuen, which in the ſtate, degree, or ordre that God calleth them, doo beſy them feithfully for to occupie all their Wittes bodely and goſtely, to knowe trewly and to keape feithfully the biddinges of God, hatyng and fleyng all the ſeuen dedely ſynnes, and euery braunche of them, reulyng them verteuouſly (as it is ſaid before) with all their Wittes, doyng diſcretely, wilfully and gladly all the Werkis of mercy bodely and goſtely after their connyng and power, ablyng them to the gyftes of the Holy Goſte, diſpoſing them to receyue in their Soules, and to holde therin the right Bleſſinges of Chriſte, beſeyng them to knowe and to kepe the ſeuene principall Vertues; and ſo than they ſhall obteyne here thorow grace for to uſe thankfully to God all the Condicions of Charitie, and than they ſhall be moouyd with the good Spirite of God for to examyne ofte and diligently their Conſcience, that nother wilfully nor wittingly they erre in ony Article of Beleue, hauyng continually (as frailte will ſuffer) all their beſineſſe to drede and to flee the Offence of God, and to looue ouer all thing, and to ſeke euer to doo his pleſaunt Will. Of theſe Pilgremis I ſaid, what ſo euer goode thoughte that they ony tyme thinke, what verteuous Worde that they ſpeake, and what fruitefull worke that they worke, euery ſoche Thoughte, Worde and Werke is a ſteppe noumbered of God toward hym into Heuene. Thes forſaid Pilgremis of God, delyte ſore whan they heare of Seyntis or of verteuous Men and Women, how they forſoke wilfully the Proſperity of this Lyfe, how they withſtode the Suggeſtion of the Fende, how they reſtreined their fleſchly Luſtes; how diſcrete they wer in their Penaunce doyng; how pacient they wer in all their Adverſites, how prudent they wer in counſeling of Men and Women, moouyng them to hate all ſynne, and to flye them, and to ſhame euer greatly thereof, and to loue all Vertues, and to draw to them, ymaginyng how Chriſte and his Folowers by example of hym, ſuffered Skornis and Sclaunders, and how paciently they abode and toke the wrongfull manaſyng of Tyrauntis, how homely they wer and ſeruiſable to poore Men to relieue and comforte them bodely and goſtely after their power and connyng, and how deuote they wer in Praiers, how feruent they wer in heuenly Deſyres, and how they abſented them fro ſpectacles of veyne ſeyngis and hearingis, and how ſtable they were to lett and to deſtroye all Vices, and how laborious and joifull they wer to ſowe and to plante Vertues. Thes heuenly condicions and ſoche other haue the Pilgremis, or endeuer them for to haue, whoſe Pilgrimagie God acceptith. And ageyne I ſaide, as their Werkis ſhew the moſte part of Men and Women that go now on Pilgrimagis have not thes foreſaid Conditions, nor loueth to beſy them feithfully for to have. For as I well know, ſyns I have full ofte aſſaide, examyne whoſoever will twentie of thes Pilgrimis, and he ſhall not fynde thre Men or Women that knowe ſurely a Commaundment of God, nor can ſay their Pater-noſter and Ave-maria, nor their Credo redely in ony maner of Language. And as I haue learnid and alſo know ſomwhat by Experience of thes ſame Pilgrimis, tellyng the Cauſe why that many Men and Women go hither and thither now on Pilgrimagis, it is more for the helthe of their Bodies than of their Soules, more for to haue Richeſſe and Proſperitie of thys Worlde, than for to be enryched with vertues in their Soules, more to haue here worldely and fleſchely Friendſhip, than for to haue Friendſhip of God, and of his Seintes in Heuen. For whatſoeuer thing Man or Woman dothe, the Friendſhip of God, nor of ony other Seynte, cannot be hadde without keaping of Goddis Commaundementis. Forther with my Proteſtacion I ſay now as I ſaid in Shrewisbery, though they that haue fleſchely willes trauell fer their Bodies, and ſpende mekill Money to ſeake and to viſite the Bonys or Ymagis (as they ſay they do) of this Seynte or of that: ſoche Pilgrimage goyng is nother praiſable nor thankefull to God nor to ony Seinte of God: Syns in effect all ſoche Pilgrimes deſpiſe God and all his Commaundmentis and Seyntis. For the Commaundmentis of God they will nother knowe nor keape, nor conforme them to lyue verteuoſly by example of Chriſte and of his Seyntis. Wherfore Syr, I haue prechid and taucht openly, and ſo I purpoſe all my Lyfe time to do with Gods helpe, ſaying that ſoche fonde People waſt blamefully Gods Goods in ther veyne Pilgrimagis, ſpending their Goodes upon vicious Hoſtelars, which ar ofte vnclene Women of their Bodies; and at the leſte thoſe Goodes with the which thei ſholde doo Werkis of Mercie after Goddis bidding to poore nedy Men and Women. ¶ Thes poor Mennis Goodes and their lyuelode thes runnars about offer to riche Prieſtis, which have mekill more lyuelode than they neade: and thus thoſe Goodes they waſte wilfully, and ſpend them vnjuſtely ageinſt Goddis bidding upon Straungers, with which they ſholde helpe and releue after Goddis will their poor nedy Neighbours at home: ye and ouer this foly, ofte tymes diuerſe Men and Women of thes Runners thus madly hither and thither in to Pilgrimage borowe hereto other Mennis Goodes, ye and ſometyme they ſtele Mennis Goodes hereto, and they pay them neuer agein. Alſo Sir, I know well that whan diuerſe Men and Women will go thus after their own Willes, and fynding out one Pilgrimage, they will orden with them before to haue with them both Men and Women that can well ſynge wanton Songes, and ſome other Pilgremis will haue with them Bagge Pipes; ſo that euery Towne they come throwe, what with the Noyſe of their Synging, and with the ſounde of their Piping, and with the Jangelyng of their Canterbury Bellis, and with the Barkyng out of Doggis after them, that they make more Noiſe than if the Kyng came there awaye with all his Clarions, and many other Menſtrelles. And if thes Men and Women be a Moneth in their Pilgrimage, many of them ſhall be an half year after great Jangelers, Tale-Tellers and Lyers.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Leude loſell, thou ſeeſt not ferre ynough in this mater, for thou conſidereſt not the great Trauell of Pilgremys, therfore thou blameſt that thing that is praiſable. I ſay to the that it is right well done, that Pilgremys haue with them both Syngers, and alſo Pipers, that whan one of them that goeth barfote ſtriketh his Too upon a Stone and hurteth hym ſore, and maketh hym to blede; it is well done that he or his Felow begyn than a Songe, or elſe take out of his Boſome a Bagge-pype for to driue away with ſoche Myrthe the hurte of his Felow. For with ſoche ſalace the Trauell and Werineſſe off Pylgremes is lightely and merily broughte forthe.

And I ſaid, Sir, Seynte Paule teacheth Men to wepe with them that wepe.

And the Archebiſhoppe ſaid, What jangliſt thou ageinſt Mennis Deuocion? what ſoeuer thou or ſoch other ſay, I ſay that the Pilgrimage that now is uſed, is to them that doo it a prayſable and a good meane to come the rather to Grace. But I holde the unable to know this Grace; for thou enforſeſt the to lett the Deuocion of the People: ſyns by Authoritie of Holy Scripture Men maye leſully have and uſe ſoche ſolace as thou reproueſt. For David in his laſte Pſalme teacheth me to haue diuerſe Inſtrumentes of Muſick for to praiſe therwith God.

And I ſaide, Sir, by the Sentence of diuerſe Doctours expounding the Pſalmes of Dauid, the Muſike and Menſtrelcy that Dauid and other

Seyntes

Seyntes of the olde Lawe ſpake of, owe now nother to be taken nor uſed by the Letter, but thes Inſtrumentes with their Muſike ought to be interpreted goſtely: for all thoſe Figures are called Vertues and Grace, with which Vertues Men ſholde pleaſe God and praiſe his Name. For Saynt Paul ſaith, All ſoch thynges befell to them in figure. Therefore Sir, I underſtaund that the Letter of this Pſalme of Dauid, and of ſoche other Pſalmes and Sentences dothe ſlee them that take them now letterally. This Sentence I underſtond Syr, Chriſt approueth himſelf, putting out the Menſtrelles, or that he wolde quycken the deade Damſell.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Leude loſell, is it not lefull to us to haue Organes in the Chirche for to worſhip therwithall God? And I ſaid, Ye, Syr, by Mannis Ordynaunce, but by the Ordinaunce of God, a goode Sermonne to the Peoples Underſtondyng were mekill more pleſaunt to God.

And the Archebiſhoppe ſayde, that Organes and goode delectable Songe quyckned and ſharpened more Mennys Wittes than ſholde ony Sermonne.

But I ſaid, Sir, luſty Men and worldly louers delyte and couete, and trauell to haue all their Wittes quickened and ſharpened with diuerſe ſenſible ſolace: but all the feithful Louers and Folowers of Chriſte haue all their delyte to heare Goddis Worde, and to vnderſtond it truely, and to worke therafter faithfully and continually. For no doute to dreade to offende God, and to loue to pleaſe him in all thing, quyckeneth and ſharpeneth all the Wittes of Chriſtes choſen People: and ableth them ſo to grace, that they joye greatly to withdrawe their Eares, and all their Wittes and Membres frome all worldly delyte, and frome all fleſchly ſolace: for Seynte Jerome (as I thinke) ſaith, No body may joye with this Worlde, and reigne with Chriſte.

And the Archebiſhop (as yf he had ben diſpleaſed with myne anſwere) ſaid to his Clerkes, What geſſe ye this ydiote will ſpeke there, wher he hath none dreade, ſyns he ſpeaketh thus nowe here in my Preſence? Well, well, by God thou ſhalt be ordened for. And than he ſpake to me all angerly.

What ſaiſt thou to this forthe Point, that is certified againſt the, preching openly and boldely in Shrewisbery, that Prieſtes haue no Title to Tythes?

And I ſaid, Sir, I named ther no Worde of Tithes in my preaching. But, more than a Moneth after that I was arreaſted, there in Pryſone a Man came to me in to the Pryſon askynge me what I ſayde of Tythes. And I ſaide to him, Sir, in this Towne are many Clerkes and Prieſtes, of which ſome are called Religious Men, though many of them be Seculers, therfore aske ye off them this Queſtion. And this Man ſaide to me, Sir, our Prelates ſay, that we ar alſo obliged to paye our Tythes of all things that renewe to us; and that they ar acurſed, that with drawe ony part wittingly fro them of their Tythes. And I ſaid, Sir, to that Man, as with my Proteſtacyon I ſay now here before you, that I hadde wonder that ony Prieſte dare ſay, Men to be acurſed without grounde of Goddis Worde. And the Man ſaid, Sir, our Prieſtes ſay that they curſe Men thus by Authoritie of Goddes Law. And I ſayde, Sir, I know not wher this Sentence of curſing is authorized now in the Bible. And therfore, Syr, I pray you that ye will aske the moſte conning Clerke of this Towne, that ye may knowe where this Sentence curſyng them that tythe not now is writen in Goddes Lawe: for yf it were writen there, I wolde right gladly be learned where. But ſhortely this Man wolde not go from me, to aske this Queſtion of another body; but required me there, as I wolde anſwere before God, if in this caſe the curſing of Prieſtes wer laufull and approued of God. And ſhortely herewith came to my Mynde the Learnyng of Seynt Peter, teaching Prieſtes ſpecially to halow the Lord Chriſt in their Hartes: beinge euermore redye (as ferre as in them is) to anſwere thorowe Faith and Hope to them that aske of them a reaſon. And this Leſſon Peter teacheth Men to uſe with a meke Spyrit, and with dreade of the Lord. Wherefore, Syr, I ſaid to this Man in this wiſe, In the old Lawe which endyd not fully till the tyme that Chriſte roſe up ageyn fro Dethe to Lyfe, God commaunded Tythes to be gyuen to the Leuites, for the great Beſyneſſe and dayly Trauell that pertayned to their Office. But Prieſtes, becauſe their trauell was mekyll more eaſy and light, than was the Office of the Leuites, God ordeyned that Prieſtes ſhould take for their lifelode to do their Office, the tenth part of tho Tythes that wer giuen to the Leuites. But naw (I ſaid) in the newe Lawe nother Chriſte, nor ony of his Apoſtles toke Tythes of the People, nor commaunded the People to pay Tythes nother to Prieſtes, nor to Deacons. But Chriſte taught the People to do Almeſſe, that is Werkes of Mercy, to poor nedy Men, of Surpluſe, that is ſuperfluouſe of their Temporal Goodes, which they hadde more than them nedid reaſonably to their neceſſary lyuelode. And thus (I ſaid) not of Tythes, but of pure Almeſſe of the People Chriſte lyued and his Apoſtles, whan they were ſo beſye in teachynge off the Worde of God to the People, that they myght not trauell other wyſe for to gett their lyuelode. But after Chriſtes aſcenſion, and whan the Apoſtles had receyued the Holy Goſte, they traueled with their Handes for to get their lyuelode, whan that they myght thus doo for beſye preachynge. Therefore by example of hymſelfe Seynt Paule teacheth all the Prieſtes of Chriſte for to trauell with theire Hande, whan for beſye teaching of the People they myght thus do. And thus all theſe Prieſtes whoſe Prieſtehode God accepteth nowe, or will accepte or dyd in the Apoſtles tyme, and after their Diſceaſe, will do to the Worldes ende. But (as Ciſtercienſis telleth) in the thouſande Year of oure Lorde Jeſu Chriſte, two hundreth and a leuenth Yere, one Pope the tenth Gregory ordened new Tythes fyrſt to be gyuen to Prieſtes now in the newe Lawe. But Seynt Paule in his tyme, whoſe trace or example all Prieſtes of God enforce them to folow, ſeyng the couetouſneſſe that was amonge the People, deſyrynge to deſtroye this foule Synne thorow the Grace of God and true vertuouſe lyuynge an Example of himſelfe, wrotte and taucht all Prieſtes for to folowe him as he folowed Chriſte paciently, willingly, and gladly in hys Pouerte. Wherfore Paule ſaithe thus, the Lorde hathe ordened that they that preache the Goſpell ſhall lyue of the Goſpell. But we (ſaith Paul) that couet and beſy us to be feithfull Folowers of Chriſt, vſe not this Power. For lo (as Paul witneſſeth afterwarde) whan he was full pore and nedy preaching among the People, he was not chargeous vnto them, but with his handes he traueled not only to get his owne lyuynge, but alſo the lyuyng of other poore and nedy Creatures. And ſyns the People was neuer ſo couetouſe nor ſo auarouſe (I geſſe) as thei are now, it were good Counſell, that all Prieſtes toke good hede to this heuenly Learnyng of Paul, folowing him here, in wilfull Pouerte, nothing charging the People for their bodely lyuelode. But becauſe that many Prieſtes do contrary to Paule in this forſayde Doctrine; Paul biddeth the People take hede to thoſe Preyſtes that folow him as he had geuen them example. As, if Paul wolde ſay thus to the People, Accept ye none other Prieſtes than thei that lyue after the fourme that I haue tauchte you. For certeyn in whatſoeuer Dignite or Ordre that ony Prieſte is in, yf he conforme him not to folowe Chriſte and his Apoſtles in wilfull Pouerte, and in other heuenly Vertues, and ſpecially in true preachynge of Goddes Worde: though ſoche a one be named a Prieſte, yet he is no more but a Prieſte in name, for the worke of a very Prieſte ſoch a one wanteth. This Sentence approueth Auguſtine, Gregory, Chriſoſtome and Lincoln plainly.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Thinkeſt thou this holſome Learninge for to ſowe openly, or yet priuely among the People? Certeyn this Doctryne contrarieth playnly the Ordinaunce of Holy Fathers, which haue ordened, graunted and licenſed Prieſtes to be in diuerſe Degres, and to lyue by Tythes and Offringes of the People, and by other Deuties.

And I ſaid, Syr, if Prieſtes were now in meſurable meſure and numbre, and lyued vertuouſly, and taucht beſyly and truely the Word of God by example of Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles: withouten Tythes, Offerynges, and other Dewties that Prieſtes now chalenge and take, the People wolde gyue them freely ſufficient lyuelode.

And a Clerke ſaid to me, How wilt thou make this good that the People will gyue frely to Prieſtes their lyuelode, ſyns that now by the Lawe euery Prieſte can ſcarcely conſtrayne the People to gyue them their lyuelode?

And I ſaid, Sir, it is now no wonder, though the People grudge to gyue Prieſtes the Lyuelode that they aske; for mekill People knowe now how that Prieſtes ſhulde luye, and how that they luye contrary to Chriſte and to his Apoſtles: And therfore the People is full heuy to paye (as they do) their temporall Goodes to Perſones, and to other Vicares and Prieſtes, which ſholde be feithfull Diſpenſatours of the Pareſhes Goodes, taking to themſelfes no more but a ſcarce Lyuing of Tythes nor of Offrynges by the Ordinaunce of the comon Lawe. For whatſoeuer Prieſtes take of the People, be it Tythe or Offering, or ony other Deutie or Seruyce, the Prieſtes ought not to haue thereof no more but a bare Lyuyng, and to departe the Reſidew to the poore Men and Women ſpecially of the Pariſhe, of whom they take this temporal Lyuynge. But the moſt dele of Prieſtes nowe waſteth their Pareſhes Goodes, and ſpendeth them at their owne Will after the Worlde in their veyne Luſtes, ſo that in few places poore Men haue dewly (as they ſholde haue) their owne Suſtenaunce, nother of Tythes nor of Offerynges, nor of other large Wages and Foundations that Prieſtes take of the People in diuerſe maners aboue it, that they nede for nedeful Suſtenaunce of Meat and Clothinge. But the poore nedy People ar forſaken, and left of Prieſtis to be ſuſteinyd of the Paroſhenis, as if the Prieſtis toke nothing of the Paroſhenis, for to help the poor People with. And thus, Syr, into ouer great Chargis of the Paroſhenis they pay their Temporal Goods twiſe, wher ones myght ſuffice, if Prieſtis wer trew Diſpenſatours. Alſo Sir, the Paroſhenis that pay their Temporal Goodes (be they Tythes or Offeringes) to Prieſtis that doo not their Office among them juſtely, are parteners of euery Synne of thoſe Prieſtis: becauſe that they ſuſteyne thoſe Prieſtis foly in their Synne with their Temporall Goods. Yf thes things be well conſiderid, what wonder is it than, Syr, if the Paroſhenis grudge ageinſt thes Diſpenſatours?

Than the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Thou that ſholdeiſt be judged and reulyd by Holy Chirche, preſumptuouſly thou demeſt Holy Chirche to haue erryd in the Ordinaunce of Tythes and other Dewties to be payd to Priſtis. It ſhall be long or thou thryue Loſell, that thou deſpiceſt thy goſtely Mother, how dariſt thou ſpeake this Loſell among the People? Ar not Tythes geuyn to Priſtis for to lyue by?

And I ſaid, Sir, Seynt Paul ſaith that Tythes wer gyuen in the old Lawe to Leuites and to Prieſtis, that came of the Lynage of Leui; but our Prieſt he ſaith came not of the Lynage of Leui, but of the Lynage of Juda; to which Juda no Tythes were promiſed to be geuyn. And therfore Paul ſaith, ſyns the Prieſthode is chaunged from the Generacion of Leui to the Generacion of Juda, it is neceſſary that chaungyng alſo be made of the Lawe. So that Prieſtis lyue now without Tythes and other Dewties that they now claime, folowing Chriſte and his Apoſtles in wilfull Pouertie, as they haue gyuen them example. For ſyns Chriſte lyued all the tyme of his preaching by pure almes of the People, and by example of hym his Apoſtles lyued in the ſame wyſe, or els by the trauell of their Handis, as it is ſaid aboue, euery Prieſte whoſe Prieſthode Chriſte approuyth knowith well, and confeſſith in Worde and in Werke, that a Diſciple owith not to be aboue his Maſter; but it ſufficeth to a Diſciple to be as his Maſter, ſymple, and pure, meke and patient; and by example ſpecially of his Maſter Chriſte, euery Prieſte ſholde reule hym in all his lyuynge, and ſo after his connyng and power a Prieſte ſholde beſy hym to enfourme, and to reule whome ſoeuer he myght charitably.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me with a great Spirite, Goddis curſe haue thou and myne for this teaching; for thou woldiſt hereby make the olde Law more fre and perfect than the new Lawe. For thou ſaiſt that it is lefull to Leuites and to Prieſtis to take Tythes in the olde Lawe, and ſo to enjoye their Priuilegies; but to us Prieſtis in the new Lawe thou ſaiſt it is not lefull to take Tythes: and thus thou geuiſt Leuites of the olde Lawe more fredome than to Prieſtis of the new Lawe.

And I ſaid, Sir, I mervell that ye vnderſtonde this playne Text of Paul thus. Ye wote well, that the Leuites and Prieſts in the olde Lawe that tooke Tythes, wer not ſo fre nor ſo perfite as Chriſte and his Apoſtles that tooke no Tythes. And Sir, there is a Doctour (I thinke that it is Seynt Jerome) that ſaith thus, The Prieſtis that chalenge now in the new Lawe Tythes, ſay in effecte, that Chriſte is not becomen Man, nor that he hath yet ſuffered dethe for Mannis loue. Wherfore this Doctour ſaith thys Sentence, Syns Tythes were the Hyres and Wagis limyted to Leuites uites and to Prieſtes of the olde Lawe for bearing about of the Tabernacle, and for ſleayng and fleayng of Beaſtis, and for burning of Sacrifice, and for keping of the Temple, and for tromping of Battell before the oſte of Iſrael, and other diuerſe Obſeruauncis that perteinyd to their Office; thoſe Prieſtis that will chalenge or take Tythes, denye that Chriſte is comen in Fleſhe, and doo the Prieſtis Office of the old Lawe for whome Tythes were graunted; for els (as this Doctour ſaith) Prieſtis take now Tythes wrongfully.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to his Clerkes, Herde ye euer loſell ſpeake thus? Certeyn this is the Learnyng of them all, that wher ſo ever they come, and they may be ſuffered, they enforce them to expugne the fredome of Holy Chirche.

And I ſaid, Sir, why call you the takyng of Tythes, and of ſoche other Dewties that Prieſtes chalenge now wrongfully, the fredome of holy Chirche? ſyns nother Chriſte nor his Apoſtles chalengid nor tooke ſoche Dewties. Herefore thes takyngis of Prieſtis now ar not callyd juſtely the fredome of Holy Chirche; but all ſoche geuyng and takyng ought to be called and holden the ſclaunderous couetouſneſſe of Men of the Holy Chirche.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Why Loſell wilt not thou and other that ar confedered with the, ſeake out of Holy Scripture, and of the Sentence of Doctours, all ſharp Authorities ageinſt Lordis, and Knyghtis, and Squyeris, and ageinſt other Seculer Men, as thou doeſte ageinſt Prieſtes?

And I ſaid, Sir, what ſo euer Men or Women, Lordis or Ladies, or ony other that ar preſent in our preaching ſpecially, or in our communyng, after our connyng we tell out to them their Office and their Charges; but Syr, ſyns Chriſoſtome ſaith, that Prieſtis ar the Stomake of the People, it is nedefull in preaching and alſo in communyng, to be moſt beſy about this Prieſthode, ſyns by the viciouſnes of Prieſtis both Lordis and Commons ar moſte ſynfully infected and ledde into the worſte: And becauſe that the couetouſneſs of Prieſtis, and Pride and the boſte that they haue and make of their Dignity and Power, deſtroieth not onely the Vertues of Prieſthode in Prieſtis themſelfe; but alſo ouer this it ſtierith God to take greate Vengeaunce both upon Lordis and upon Comons, which ſuffer thes Prieſtes charitably.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Thou judgeſt euery Prieſte proude that will not go arayed as thou doſte. By God I deme hym to be more meke that gothe euery day in a ſcarlet Gowne, than thou in that threde bare blew Gowne. Whereby knoweſt thou a proude Man?

And I ſaid, Sir, a proude Prieſte may be knowen when he denyeth to folow Chriſte, and his Apoſtles in wilfull Pouerte and other Vertues, and couetith worldly Worſhip, and taketh it gladly, and gatherith to gither with pletyng, manaſyng, or with flattering, or with Simony ony worldly Goodis: and moſte if a Prieſte beſy hym not chefely in himſelf, and after in all other Men and Women, after his connyng and power to withſtond Synne.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Though thou kneweſt a Prieſte to haue all thes Vices, and though thou ſaweſt a Prieſte louely lye now by a Woman, knowing hir fleſchly; woldeſt thou herfore deme this Prieſte dampnable? I ſay to the, that in the tournyng about of thy Hande ſoche a Synner may be verily repented.

And I ſaid, Sir, I will not dampne any Man for any Synne that I know done or may be done, ſo that the Synner leuyth his Synne. But by Authoritie of Holy Scripture, he that ſynneth thus openly as ye ſhewe here, is dampnable for doyng of ſoche a Synne, and moſt ſpecially a Prieſte that ſholde be example to all other for to hate and flie ſynne: and in how ſhort tyme that euer ye ſay that ſoche a ſynner may be repented, he oweth not of hym that knoweth his ſynnyng to be judged verily repentaunt, without open euidence of greate ſhame and harty ſorow for his Synne. For whoſoeuer, and ſpecially a Prieſte that vſeth Pride, Enuy, Couetouſnes, Lechery, Simony, or ony other Vices; and ſhewith not as opyn euidence of Repentaunce as he hath gyuen euyll example and occaſion of ſynning, if he contynew in ony ſoche Synne as long as he may, it is likely that Synne leaueth hym, and he not Synne; and as I vnderſtonde, ſoche a one ſynneth unto Dethe, for whome no body oweth to pray, as Seynt John ſaith.

And a Clerke ſaid than to the Archebiſhop, Sir, the lenger that ye appoſe him, the worſe he is; and the more that ye beſy you to amende him, the waiwarder he is: for he is of ſo ſhrewde a kynde, that he ſhamyth not onely to be hymſelf a foule neſte, but without Shame he beſieth him to make his Neſte fouler.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to his Clerke, Suffer a while, for I am at an ende with him: for there is one other poynte certified ageynſt hym, and I will heare what he ſaith thereto.

And ſo than he ſaid to me, Lo it is here certified ageinſt the, that thov preachidſt openly at Shrewisbury, that it is not lefull to ſweare in ony caſe.

And I ſaid, Sir, I preached neuer ſo openly, nor I haue not tauchte in this wyſe in ony place. But Sir, as I preachid in Shrewisbery, with my Proteſtacion I ſay to you now here: that by the Authorite of the Goſpel and of Seynt James, and by witneſſe of diuerſe Seyntis and Doctours I haue preachid openly in one place or other, that it is not lefull in ony caſe to ſweare by ony Creature. And ouer this, Sir, I haue alſo preachid and tauchte by the forſaid Authorities, that no body ſholde ſweare in ony caſe; if that without Othe in ony wyſe he that is charged to ſweare myght excuſe hym to them that haue power to compell hym to ſweare in lefull thyng and laufull. But if a Man may not excuſe hym without Othe to them that haue power to compell hym to ſweare, than he owght to ſweare only by God, takyng him onely that is ſothefaſteneſſe, for to witneſſe the ſothefaſteneſſe.

And than a Clerke askid me, yf it wer not lefull to a Subjecte at the bidding of his Prelate for to knele down and towche the Holy Goſpell Booke and kyſſe it, ſaying, So helpe me God and this Holy Dome; for he ſholde after his connyng and power do all thyng that his Prelate commaundeth hym.

¶ And I ſaid to them, Sirs, ye ſpeke here full generally or largely: What if a Prelate commaunded his Subjecte to doo an unlaufull thyng, ſhould he obey thereto?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, a Subjecte ought not to ſuppoſe that his Prelate will bidde him doo an unlaufull thing; for a Subject ought to thinke, thinke, that his Prelate will bidde hym doo nothing but that he will anſwere for before God that it is lefull; and than though the bidding of the Prelate be unliefull, the Subject hath no parell to fulfill it, ſyns that he thinketh and judgeth that what ſo euer thing his Prelate biddeth him doo, that it is lefull to hym for to doo it.

And I ſaid, Sir, I truſte not hereto. But to our firſte purpoſe, Sir, I tell you that I was onys in a gentill Mannis Houſe, and there war than two Clerkes there, a Maſter of Diuinite, and a Man of Lawe, which Man of Lawe was alſo communing in Diuinite; and among other thinges thes Men ſpake of Othes, and the Man of Lawe ſaid, At the bidding of his Souereign which hadde Power to charge hym to ſweare, he wold lay his Hand upon a Booke, and heare his Charge; and if his Charge to his underſtonding were unlefull, he wolde haſtely with draw his Hande frome the Booke: and if he perceiued his Charge to be lefull, he wolde holde ſtill his Hande upon the Booke, takyng there onely God to witneſſe, that he wolde fulfill that lefull Charge after his power. And the Maſter of Diuinitie ſaid than to hym thus, Certeyn he that leyeth his Hande upon a Booke in this wyſe, and makyth there a Promeſſe to doo that thing that he is commaunded, is obliged there by Booke Othe than to fulfill his Charge. For no doute he that chargeth hym to lay his Hande thus upon a Booke, towching the Booke and ſwearing by it, and kyſſing it, promiſyng in this fourme to doo this thyng or that, will ſay and witneſſe that he that towcheth thus a Booke and kyſſeth it, hath ſworne upon that Booke: and all other Men that ſee that Man thus doo, and alſo all tho that heare hereof in the ſame wyſe, will ſaye and witneſſe, that thys Man hathe ſworne upon a Boke: wherfore the Maſter of Diuinite ſayde, it was not lefull nother to gyue nor to take ony ſoche charge upon a Boke, for euery Boke is nothing els but diuerſe Creatures of whiche it is made of. Therefore to ſwear upon a Boke, is to ſweare by Creatures, and this ſweringe is euer unlefull. This Sentence witneſſeth Chriſoſtome, plainly blaming them greatly that bring forthe a Boke for to ſweare upon, charginge Clerkes that in no wiſe they conſtrayne ony body to ſweare, whether they think a Man to ſweare true or falſe.

And the Archebiſhop and his Clerkes ſcorned me, and blamyd me greatly for this ſaiyng. And the Archebiſhop manaſſed me with great Puniſhement and ſharpe, except I lefte this Opinion of ſwearinge.

And I ſaide, Sir, this is not myne Opinion, but it is the Opinion of Chriſte our Sauyour, and of Seynt Jamis and of Chriſoſtome, and other diuerſe Seyntes and Doctours.

Than the Archebiſhope badde a Clercke rede the Homely of Chriſoſtome, which Homely thys Clerke helde in his Hande writen in a Roll, which Rolle the Archebiſhope cauſed to be taken fro my Felow at Canterbury; and ſo than this Clerke redde this Roll till he came to a Clauſe, wher Chriſoſtome ſaithe, that it is ſynne to ſweare well.

And than a Clerke (Malueren, as I geſſe) ſaid to the Archebiſhop, Sir, I pray you wete of him how that he vnderſtondeth Chriſoſtome here, ſaing it to be ſynne to ſwere well.

And ſo the Archebiſhop asked me how I vnderſtode here Chriſoſtome.

And certeyn I was ſomewhat afraide to anſwere hereto, for I had not beſyed me to ſtudy about the Senſe thereof; but lyfting up my Mynde to God, I prayed him of Grace. And as faſte as I thought how Chriſte ſaid to his Apoſtles, Whan for my Name ye ſhall be brought before Judges, I ſhall gyue into your Mouth Wiſdome, that your Aduerſaryes ſhall not ageynſt ſaye; and truſting feithfully in the Worde of Gode, I ſaid, Sir, I know well that many Men and Women haue now ſwearing ſo in Cuſtome, that thei know not nor will not knowe that they do euell for to ſweare as they do; but they thinke and ſay that they do well for to ſweare as they do, though they know well that they ſweare vntruely. For they ſaye, they may by their ſwearing (though it be falſe) voide blame or temporall harme, which they ſholde haue yf they ſweare not thus. And, Sir, many Men and Women maynteyne ſtrongly that they ſweare well, whan that thing is ſothe that they ſweare for. Alſo full many Men and Women ſay nowe, that it is well done to ſwear by Creatures, whan they may not (as they ſaye) otherwiſe be beleued. And alſo full many Men and Women now ſay, that it is well done to ſweare by God, and by our Ladye, and by other Seyntes, for to haue them in Mynde. But ſyns all theſe Saiynges are but Excuſations and Synne, me thinketh, Sir, that this Sentence of Chriſoſtome may be alleged welle ageinſte all ſoch Swerers, witneſſing that all thes ſynne greuouſly, though they thinke themſelf for to ſwear in this forſaid wyſe well. For it is euyll done and greate ſynne for to ſweare trewthe, whan in ony manner a Man may excuſe him without Othe.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, that Chriſoſtome might be thus vnderſtonde.

And than a Clerke ſaid to me, Wilt thou tarye my Lorde no lenger, but ſubmit the here mekely to the Ordinaunce of Holy Chirche, and laye thyne Hande upon a Booke touching the Holy Goſpell of God, promyſinge not onely with thy Mouth, but alſo with thyne Harte to ſtande to my Lordes Ordinaunce?

And I ſaid, Sir, haue I not told you here, howe that I herde a Maſter of Diuinitie ſay that in ſoche a caſe it is all one to touche a Boke, and to ſweare by a Boke?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, There is no Maſter of Diuinite in Englond ſo great, that yf he hold this Opinion before me, but I ſhall puniſhe him, as I ſhall do the, except thou ſwear as I ſhall charge the.

And I ſaid, Sir, is not Chriſoſtome an ententyfe Doctour?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Ye.

And I ſayde, Yf Chriſoſtome proueth hym woorthy great blame that bryngeth forthe a Boke to ſwere upon, it muſte nedes folowe that he is more to blame that ſweareth on that Booke.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Yf Chriſoſtome ment accordingly to the Ordinaunce of Holy Chirche, we will accepte him.

And than ſaid a Clerke to me, Ys not the Worde of God and God himſelf equipollent, that is, off one Authorite?

And I ſaide, Ye.

Than he ſaid to me, Why wilt thou not ſwere than by the Goſpell of God, that is Gods Worde, ſyns it is all one to ſweare by the Worde of God, and by God himſelfe?

And

And I ſaid, Sir, ſyns I may not nowe other wyſe be beleued but by ſwearynge, I perceyue (as Auguſtine ſaithe) that it is not ſpedefull that ye that ſhold be my Brothern ſholde not beleue me: therefore I am redy by the Worde of God (as the Lorde commaunded me by his Worde) to ſweare.

Than the Clerke ſaid to me, Laye than thyne Hande upon the Boke, touching the Holy Goſpell of God, and take thy Charge.

And I ſaid, Sir, I vnderſtonde that the Holy Goſpell of God may not be touched with Mannes Hande.

And the Clerke ſaide, I fonded, and that I ſayde not trewthe.

And I asked this Clerke whether it wer more to reade the Goſpell, or to touche the Goſpell.

And he ſaid, it was more to reade the Goſpell.

Than I ſaid, Sir, by Authorite of Seynt Jerome, the Goſpell is not the Goſpell for reding of the Letter; but for the beleue that Men haue in the Worde of God, that it is the Goſpell that we beleue, and not the Letter that we rede: for becauſe the Letter that is touched with Mannes Hande is not the Goſpell; but the Sentence that is verely beleued in Mannis Hart is the Goſpell. For ſo Seynt Jerome ſaith, The Goſpell that is the vertue of Goddes Worde is not in the Leauys of the Boke, but it is in the Root of Reaſon. Nother the Goſpell (he ſaith) is in the Writing aboue of the Letters; but the Goſpell is in the marking of the Sentence of Scriptures. This Sentence aproueth Seynt Paule, ſaiynge thus, The Kingdome of God is not in Worde, but in Vertue. And Dauid ſaith, The Voice of the Lorde, that is his Worde, is in Vertue. And after Dauid ſaith, Thorow the Worde of God, the Heuens were fourmed, and in the Spirite of his Mouth is all the Vertue of them. And I pray you, Syr, underſtonde ye well how Dauid ſaith, that in the Spirite of the Mouth of the Lorde is all the Vertue of Angells and of Men?

And the Clerke ſaid to me, Thou woldeſt make us to fonde with the: Saye we not that the Goſpellis are writen in the Maſſe-Boke?

And I ſayde, Syr, though Men uſe to ſaye thus, yet it is unperfyte Speche. For the principall parte off a thinge is properlye the hooll thynge: for lo, Mannes Soule, that may not now be ſene here, nor touched with ony ſenſible thing, is properly Man. And all the Vertue of a Tree is in the Roote thereof, that maye not be ſene; for do awaye the Roote, and the Tree is deſtroyed. And, Syr, as ye ſayde to me right nowe, God and hys Worde are of one Authorite; and, Syr, Seynte Jerome witneſſeth that Chriſte, very Godde and very Man, is hidde in the Letter of his Lawe: thus alſo, Syr, the Goſpell is hidde in the Letter. For, Sir, as it is full likely many diuerſe Men and Women here in the Erthe touched Chriſte, and ſawe hym and knewe his bodely Perſone, whiche nother touched nor ſawe, nor knewe goſtely his Godhede: right thus, Sir, many Men now touche and ſee, and write and rede the Scriptures of Goddis Lawe, whiche nother touche, ſee nor rede effectuallye the Goſpell. For as the Godhede of Chriſte, that is the Vertue of God, is knowen by the Vertue of thorowe Beleſe, ſo is the Goſpell, that is Chriſtes Worde.

And a Clerke ſaid to me, Thes be full myſtie Maters, and unſauery, that thou ſheweſt here to vs.

And I ſaid, Sir, if ye that ar Maſters know not playnly this Sentence, ye may ſore drede that the Kingdome of Heuene be taken fro you, as it was fro the Princes of Prieſtes, and fro the Elders of the Jewes.

And than a Clerke (as I geſſe Malueren) ſayde to me, Thou knoweſt not thyne Equiuocacyons, for the Kyngdome of Heuene hathe diuerſe vnderſtondinges. What calleſt thou the Kingdome of Heuene, in this Sentence that thou ſheweſt here?

And I ſaid, Sir, by good Reaſon and Sentence of Doctours, the Realme of Heuene is called here the vnderſtonding of Godes Worde.

And a Clerke ſaid to me, Frome whome thinkeſt thou that this vnderſtondinge is taken awaye?

And I ſaid, Sir, by Authorite of Chriſte himſelfe, the effectuall vnderſtondinge of Chriſtes Worde is taken awaye frome all them chefely, whiche are greate lettered Men, and preſume to vnderſtonde high thynges; and will be holden wiſe Men, and deſyre Maſterſhippe and hye State and Dignite; but they will not conforme them to the lyuyng and teaching of Chriſte and off his Apoſtles.

Than the Archebiſhop ſaid, Well, well, thou wilt judge thy Souereyns. By God the Kyng doeth not his Deutie, but he ſuffer the to be condempned.

And than another Clerke ſaid to me, Why on Friday that laſt was, counſeldeſt thou a Man off my Lordes, that he ſholde not ſhriue him to Man, but onely to God?

And with this askyng I was abaſſhed, and than by and by I knewe that I was ſuttely betrayed of a Man that came to me in Preſone on the Friday before, comunynge with me in thys mater of Confeſſyon; and certeyn by his Wordes (I thoughte) that this Man came than to me of full feruent and charitable Will: But nowe I knowe he came to tempt me, and to accuſe me (God forgyue him, yf it be his will). And with all myne Harte whan I hadde thoughte thus, I ſaid to this Clerke, Sir, I pray you that ye wolde fetche this Man hither; and all the Wordes as nere as I can repete them, which that I ſpake to hym on Fridaye in the Pryſon, I will reherſe nowe here before you all, and before hym.

And (as I geſſe) the Archebiſhop ſaid than to me, They that are now here ſuffyſe to repete them: How ſaideſt thou to him?

And I ſaid, Sir, that Man came and asked me of diuerſe thinges; and after his askynge I anſwered hym (as I vnderſtoode) that goode was: and as he ſhewed to me by his Wordes, he was ſory of his lyuynge in Courte, and right heuy for his owne vicious lyuynge; and alſo for the Vicioufneſſe of other Men, and ſpeciallye of Prieſtes euyll lyuynge: and herefore he ſayde to me with a ſoroufull Harte (as I geſſed) that he purpoſed fully within ſhorte tyme for to leaue the Court, and beſye him to know Gods Lawe, and to conforme all his Lyfe thereafter. And whan he hadde ſaid to me thes Wordis and mo other, which I woulde reherſe and he wer preſent, he praied me to heare his Confeſſion. And I ſaid to hym, Sir, wherfore come ye to me to be confeſſed of me? ye wote well that the Archebiſhop puttith and holdeth me here as one unworthy, other to gyue or to take any Sacrament of Holy Chirche.

And he ſaid to me, Brother I wote well, and ſo wote many mo other, that you and ſoche other ar wrongfully vexed, and herefore I will comon with you the more gladly. And I ſaid to hym, Certeyn I wote well that many Men of this Court, and ſpecially the Prieſtis of this Houſholde, wolde be full euyll a payde, both with you and with me, if they wiſte that ye wer confeſſed of me. And he ſaid that he cared not therefore, for he hadde full litle Affection in them: and (as me thought) he ſpake thes Wordis, and many other, of ſo goode Will, and of ſo hye Deſire, for to haue knowen and done the pleaſant Will of God. And I ſaid than to hym, as with my fore ſaid Proteſtacion I ſay to you now here; Sir, I counſell you for to abſente you frome all euyll Company, and to drawe you to them that looue and beſy them to know and to keape the Preceptis of God: and than the good Spiiite of God will mooue you for to occupie beſily all your Wittes, in gathering to gither of all your Synnes, as far as ye can bethinke you, ſhamynge greatly of them, and ſorowyng hartely for them: ye, Sir, the Holy Goſte will than put in your Harte a good Will, and a feruent Deſyre for to take and to holde a goode purpoſe to hate euer, and to flie (after your connyng and power) all occaſion of Synne: and ſo than Wyſdome ſhall come to you frome aboue, lightenyng with diuerſe Beamis of Grace, and of heuenly deſyre, all your Wittes, enfourmyng you how ye ſhall truſte ſtedfaſtely in the Mercie of the Lorde, knouledgyng to hym onely all your vicious Lyuyng, praying to hym euer deuoutely of charitable Counſell and Continuance, hoping without doute, that yf ye contynew thus beſiyng you feithfully to knowe and to kepe his biddingis, that he will (for he only may) forgyue you all your Synnes. And this Man ſaid than to me, Though God forgyue Men their Synnes, yet it behoueth Men to be aſſoyled of Prieſtis, and to doo the Penaunce that they enjoyne them. And I ſaid to him, Sir, it is all one to aſſoyle Men of their Synnes, and to forgyue Men their Synnes: Wherefore ſyns it perteinyth onely to God to forgyue Synne, yt ſuffiſith in this caſe to counſell Men and Women for to leaue their Synne, and to comforte them that beſye them thus to doo, for to hope ſtedfaſtely in the Mercie of God. And ageynwarde, Prieſtis owght to tell ſharpely to cuſtomable Synners, that if they will not make an ende of their Synne, but contynew in diuerſe Synnes while that they may ſynne, all ſoche deſerue Peyn without any ende. And herfore Prieſtis ſhoulde euer beſy them to liue well and holily, and to teache the People beſely and trewly the Worde of God, ſhewing to all folke in open preaching, and in preuy counſelyng, that the Lorde God onely forgeuyth Synne. And therfore thoſe Prieſtis that take upon them to aſſoyle Men of their Synnes, blaſpheme God: ſyns that it perteinyth only to the Lorde to aſſoyle Men of all their Synnes. For no doute a thouſande Yeare after that Chriſte was Man, no Prieſte of Chriſte durſte take upon hym to teache the People nother priuely nor apertly, that they behoouyd nedis to come to be aſſoilid of them, as Prieſtis now doo. But by Authoritie of Chriſtis Worde, Prieſtis bound indured cuſtomable Sinners to euerlaſting Peyns, which in no tyme of their lyuyng wolde beſy them feithfully to know the biddinges of God, nor to keape them. And ageyn, all they that wolde occupie all their Wittes, to hate and to flie all occaſion of Synne, dreding ouer all thing to offende God, and ſoouyng for to pleaſe hym continually, to thes Men and Women, Prieſtis ſhewid how the Lorde aſſoileth them of all their Synnes. And thus Chriſte promyſed to conferme in Heuen all the binding and looſyng, that Prieſtis by Authorite of his Worde bynde Men in Synne that ar indured therein, or looſe them out of Synne here upon Erthe that ar verely repentaunt. And this Man hearing thes Wordis ſaid, that he myght well in Conſcience conſent to this Sentence; but he ſaid, Is it not nedeful to the Lay People that cannot thus doo, to go ſhriue them to Prieſtis? And I ſaid, yf a Man feale himſelf ſo diſtrobled with ony Sinne that he cannot by his owne Witte auoide this Synne without Counſell of them that ar herein wyſer than he, in ſoche a caſe the Counſell of a goode Prieſte is full neceſſarie. And if a good Prieſte, faile as they doo now commonly, in ſoche a caſe Seynt Auguſtine ſaith that a Man may lefully comon and take Counſell of a verteuous Seculer Man; but certeyn that Man or Woman is ouer laden and to beſtely, which cannot brynge their owne Synnes into their Mynde, beſiyng them Nyght and Day for to hate and to forſake all their Synnes, doyng a ſighe for them after their connyng and power. And, Sir, full accordingly to this Sentence, upon Midlenton Sonday two Yeare (as I geſſe) now agone, I harde a Monke of Feuerſham, that Men called Moredon, preache at Canterbury at the Croſſe within Chriſte-Church Abbey, ſaiyng thus of Confeſſion, As thorow the Suggeſtion of the Fende, without counſell of any other body, that of themſelf many Men and Women can ymagine, and fynde meanys and wayes inough to come to Pride, to Theſte, to Lecherie, and to other diuerſe Vyces: In contrarie wyſe this Monke ſaid, Syns the Lorde God is more redy to forgyue Synne than the Fende is or may be of power to mooue ony body to Synne, than who ſo euer will ſhame and ſorow hartely for their Synnes, knouledging them feithfully to God, amending them after their power and connyng, without counſell of ony other body than of God and hymſelf, thorow the Grace of God, all ſoche Men and Women may fynde ſufficient meanys to come to Goddis Mercie, and ſo to be cleane aſſoilid of all their Synnes. This Sentence I ſaid, Sir, to this Man of yours, and the ſelfe Wordis as nere as I can geſſe.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Holy Chirche approuyth not this Learnyng.

And I ſaid, Sir, Holy Chirche of which Chriſte is hed in Heuen and in Erthe, muſt nedys approue this Sentence. For lo hereby all Men and Women may, if they will, be ſufficiently tauchte to know and to kepe the Commaundementis of God, and to hate and to flie continewally all occaſion of Synne, and to looue and to ſeke Vertues beſely, and to beleue in God ſtabely, and to truſte in his mercy ſtedfaſtly, and ſo to come to perfite Charite, and contynew therein perſeuerantly. And more the Lorde askith not of ony Man here now in this Lyfe; and certeyn, ſyns Jeſu Chriſte dyed upon the Croſſe wilfully to make Men fre, Men of the Chirche ar to bolde and to beſy to make Men thrall, byndyng them under the peyne of endleſſe Curſe (as they ſay) to doo many Obſervaunces and Ordinauncis, which nother the lyuyng nor teaching of Chriſte, nor of his Apoſtles approueth.

And

And a Clerke ſaid than to me, Thou ſhewiſt playnely here thy Diſceite which thou haſte learnyd of them that trauell to ſowe Popill among Wheate. But I counſell the to go away clene frome this Learnyng, and ſubmyt the lowly to my Lorde, and thou ſhalt fynde hym yet to be gracious to the.

And as faſte than another Clerke ſaid to me, How waſt thou ſo bolde at Paulis Croſſe in London, to ſtonde there harde with thi Tippet bounden about thyne Hedde, and to repreue in his Sermonne the woorthy Clerke Alkerton, drawyng away all that thou myghtiſt; ye and the ſame Day, at after none thou metyng that woorthy Doctour in Watlyng-ſtrete, callidſt hym falſe Flaterer and Ypocrite.

And I ſaid, Sir, I thynk certeinly that there was no Man nor Wooman that hated verely Synne, and loouyd Vertues, hearing the Sermonne of the Clerke of Oxforde, and alſo Alkerton's Sermonne; but they ſayd or might juſtely ſay, that Alkerton reproouyd the Clerke untrewly, and ſclaundered hym wrongfully and uncharitably. For no doute if the lyuyng and teaching of Chriſte chefely, and of his Apoſtles be trewe, no body that loouyth God and his Lawe, will blame any Sentence that the Clerke than preachid there, ſyns by Authorite of Goddis Worde, and by approued Seyntis and Doctours, and by open Reaſon, this Clerke approued all thingis clerly that he preached there.

And a Clerke of the Archebiſhops ſaid to me, His Sermonne was falſe, and that he ſhewith openly, ſyns he dare not ſtande forthe, and defende his preaching that he than preached there.

And I ſaid, Sir, I thinke that he purpoſith to ſtande ſtedfaſtely thereby, or els he ſclaundereth foully hym ſelf, and alſo many other that haue great Truſte, that he will ſtande by the trewith of the Goſpell. For I wote well his Sermonne is written bothe in Latyne and in Englyſch, and many Men haue it, and they ſett great pryſe thereby. And Sir, if ye wer preſent with the Archebiſhop at Lambeth whan this Clerke apered, and was at his Anſwer before the Archebiſhop, ye wote well that this Clerke denyed not there his Sermonne; but two Dayes he maynteinyd it before the Archebiſhop and his Clerkis.

And than the Archebiſhop, or one of his Clerkis, ſaid, I wote not which of them, that Harlot ſhall be met with for that Sermonne. For no Man but he and thou, and ſoche other falſe Harlotis praiſith ony ſoche preaching.

And than the Archebiſhop ſaid, Your curſed Secte is beſy, and it joiethe right greatly to contrarie, and to deſtroye the Priuilege and Fredome of Holy Chirche.

§ And I ſaid, Sir, I knowe no Men that trauell ſo beſely as this Secte dothe (which you repreue) to make reſt and peace in Holy Chirche. For Pride, Couetouſneſſe and Simony which diſtrooble moſte Holy Chirche, this Secte hatith and fliethe, and trauellith beſely to mooue all other Men in lyke maner unto Meakneſſe; and wilfull Pouerte and Charite, and fre miniſtryng of the Sacramentis, this Secte louyth and vſith, and is full beſy to mooue all other Folkis thus to doo. For thes Vertues owe all Membres of Holy Chirche to their hedde Chriſte.

Than a Clerke ſaid to the Archebiſhop, Sir it is ferre Daies, and ye haue ferre to ryde to Nyght, therfore make an ende with him, for he will none make. But the more, Sir, that ye beſy you for to drawe hym toward you, the more contumax he is made, and the ferder from you.

And than Malueren ſaid to me, William knele downe and praye my Lorde of Grace, and leaue all thy Fantaſies, and become a Childe of Holy Chirche.

And I ſaid, Sir, I haue praied the Archebiſhop ofte, and yet I pray hym for the looue of Chriſte, that he will leaue his Indignacion that he hathe ageinſt me; and that he will ſuffer me after my connyng and power, for to doo myne Office of Prieſtehode, as I am chargid of God to do it. For I couete nought els but to ſerue my God to his pleaſing, in the ſtate that I ſtande in, and haue taken me to.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Yf of good Harte thou wilt ſubmyt the now here mekely to be reulid fro this tyme forthe by my counſell, obeiyng mekely and wilfully to myne Ordinaunce, thou ſhalt fynde it moſte profitable and beſt to the for to doo thus. Therefore tary thou me no lenger, graunte to doo this that I haue ſaid to the now here ſhortely, or deny it utterly.

And I ſaid to the Archebiſhop, Sir, owe we to beleue that Jeſu Chriſte was, and is very God and very Man?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Ye.

And I ſaid, Sir, owe we to beleue, that all Chriſtis lyuyng and his teaching is trewe in euery poynte?

And he ſaid, Ye.

And I ſaid, Sir, owe we to beleue, that the lyuyng of the Apoſtles, and the teaching of Chriſte, and of all the Prophetes, are true, which are writen in the Bible for the Helth and Saluacion of Goddes People?

And he ſaid, Ye.

And I ſaid, Syr, owe all chriſten Men and Women after their connyng and power for to conforme all their lyuyng to the teachyng ſpecially of Chriſte, and alſo to the teaching and lyuynge of his Apoſtles, and of Prophetes, in all thinges that are pleſaunt to God, and edificacion to his Churche?

And he ſaid, Ye.

And I ſaid, Sir, ought the Doctrine, the bidding or the counſell of ony body to be accepted or obeid unto, excepte this Doctrine, thes biddinges or this counſell may be graunted and affermed bi Chriſtes lyuyng and his teaching ſpecially, or by the lyuyng and teaching of his Apoſtles and Prophetes?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Other Doctrine ought not to be accepted, nor we owe not to obey to any Mannes bidding or counſell, except we can perceyue that this bidding or counſell acordeth with the bidding and teaching of Chriſte, and of his Apoſtles and Prophetes.

And I ſaid, Sir, is not all the learninge and biddinges and counſellis of Holy Chirche meanes and healfull Remedies to know and to withſtond the preuy Suggeſtions, and the aperte Temptacions of the Fende: and alſo wayes and healfull Remedies to flee Pride, and all other dedely Synnes, and the Braunches of them, and ſouereyn meanes to purcheſe Grace, for to withſtonde and ouercome all the fleſchly Luſtes and Mouynges?

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, Ye.

And I ſaid, Sir, whatſoeuer thing ye or ony other body bid or counſell me to do, accordingly to this forſaid Learning, after my connynge and power thorowe the helpe of God I will mekely with all myne harte obey thereto.

And the Archebiſhop ſayde to me, Submitt the than now here mekely and wilfully to the Ordinaunce of Holy Churche, which I ſhall ſhewe to the.

And I ſaid, Sir, accordingly as I haue here nowe before you reherſed, I will now be redy to obey full gladly to Chriſte the hede off all Holy Churche, and to the learnynge and biddynges and counſelles off euery pleaſynge Membre of hym.

Than the Archebiſhop ſtriking with his Hande ferſelye upon a Cupborde, ſpake to me with a greate Spyrite, ſayng, By Jeſu, but yf thou leaue ſoche Addicions obliging the now here, without ony excepcion to myne Ordinaunce, or that I go out of this place, I ſhall make the as ſure as ony Theſe that is in the Pryſon of Lantern. Aduyſe the now what thou wilt do: and than as if he had ben angered, he went fro the Cupborde where he ſtode to a Wyndowe.

And than Malueren and another Clerke came nerer me, and they ſpake to me many Wordes full pleſantly: and another while they manaſed me, and counſelled full beſily to ſubmyt me, or els they ſayde, I ſholde not eſcape poniſhing ouer meſure; for they ſaide I ſholde be degraded, curſed and burned, and ſo than dampned. But now they ſaid, thou maiſte eſchewe all theſe Miſcheues, yf thou wilt ſubmit the wilfully and mekely to thys worthy Prelate that hath cure of the Soule. And for the pytie of Chriſte (ſaid they) bethinke the, howe great Clerckes the Biſhop of Lincoln, Herford, and Purney, wer and yet are, and alſo B. that is a well vnderſtondinge Man, which alſo haue forſaken and reuoked all the Learnynge and Opinions, that thou and ſoche other holde. Wherefore ſyns eche of them is mekell wyſer than thou arte, we counſell the for the beſte, that by the example off thes four Clerckes thou folowe them, ſubmyttynge the as they did.

And one of the Biſhopes Clerkes ſaid than there, that he herde Nicoll Herforde ſay, that ſyns he forſoke and reuoked all the Learning and Lolardes Opinions, he hathe had mekell greater Favour, and more delyte to holde ageinſt them, than euer he hadde to holde with them while he helde with them.

And therfore Malueren ſaid to me, I vnderſtonde and thou wilt take the to a Prieſt, and ſhryue the clene; forſake all ſoch Opinions, and take thy Penaunce of my Lord here, for the holding and teaching of them, with in ſhorte tyme thou ſhalt be greatly conforted in this doing.

And I ſaid to the Clerckes that thus beſyly counſelled me to folow theſe forſaide Men, Sirs, if thes Men, of whome ye counſell me to take example, had forſaken Benefyces of Temporall Profyte, and of worldly Worſhippe, ſo that they had abſented them and eſchewed frome all Occaſyons of Couetouſneſſe, and of fleſchely Luſtes, and had taken them to ſymple lyuynge, and wilfull Pouerte, they hadde herein geuen goode example to me, and to many other to haue folowed them. But now, ſyns all thes foure Men haue ſlaunderouſly and ſhamefully done the contrarye, conſentyng to receyue and to haue and to holde Temporall Benefyces, lyuynge now more worldly and more fleſchely than they did before, conformyng them to the Maners of this Worlde; I forſake them herein, and in all their forſaid ſlaunderous doynge. For I purpoſe with the helpe of God in to Remiſſion of all my Synnes and of my foule curſed lyuyng, to hate and to flye priuely and apertly, to folow thes Men, teaching and counſellyng whomeſoeuer that I may for to flye and eſchewe the waye that they haue choſen to go in, whiche will lede them to the worſte ende, if in conuenient tyme they repente them not, verely forſakynge and reuokynge openly the Slaunder that they haue put and euery Daye yet put to Chriſtes Churche. For certeyn ſo open Blaſphemye and Slaunder as they haue ſpoken and done in their reuokyng and forſakyng of the trewthe, ought not, nor maye not priuely be amended dewly. Wherefore, Sirs, I praye you that ye beſye you not for to mooue me to folowe theſe Men in reuokynge and forſakynge of the trewthe and ſothefaſteneſſe as they haue done and yet doo, wherein by open euydence they ſteire God to greate wrothe, and not onely ageynſt them ſelfe but alſo ageynſte all them that fauoure them or conſente to them herein, or that comoneth with them, except it be for their amendement. For whereas thes Men firſte were perſued of Enemyes, now they haue obliged them by Othe for to ſlaunder and perſue Chriſte in his Membres. Wherfor as I truſte ſtedfaſtely in the Goodnes of God, the worldly Couetouſneſſe, and the luſtie lyuyng, and the ſlyding fro the treuth of theſe Runagates, ſhall be to me and to many other Men and Women an example, and an euidence to ſtonde the more ſtifly by the trewith of Chriſte. For certeyn, right many Men and Women doo marke and abhorre the foulneſſe and cowardneſſe of theſe forſaide untrewe Men, howe that they are ouercome and ſtopped with Benefyces, and withdrawen fro the trewith off Goddes Worde, forſaking vtterly to ſuffer therfore bodely Perſecucyon. For by this vnfeithfull doynge and Apoſtaſie of them ſpecially that ar great lettered Men, and haue knowledged openly the treuth, and now other for Pleaſure or Diſpleaſure of Tyrantes haue taken Hyer and temporal Wages to forſake the Trewthe, and to holde ageinſt it, ſlaundering and perſewing them that couete to folowe Chriſt in the waye of Rightuouſneſſe, many Men and Women therfore are nowe moued: But many mo, thorow the Grace of God, ſhall be moued hereby for to learne the Treuth of God, and to doo thereafter, and to ſtond boldely thereby.

Than the Archebiſhoppe ſayde to his Clerkes, Beſy you no lenger aboute hym, for he and other ſoche as he is are confedered ſo to gither, that they will not ſweare to be obedient, and to ſubmytte them to Prelates of holy Chirche. For nowe ſyns I ſtode here, his Felowe ſent me worde that he will not ſweare, and that he counſelled hym that he ſholde not ſweare to me. And, Loſell, in that thynge that in the is, thou haſte beſyed the to looſe thys yonge Man, but bleſſed be God, thou ſhalt not haue thy purpoſe of hym: For he hath forſaken all thy Learnynge, ſubmyttynge hym to be buxum and obedient to the Ordinaunce of holy Churche, and wepeth full bitterly, and curſeth the full hartely for the venemous Teachynge whiche thou haſte ſhewed to hym, counſellynge hym to doo thereafter. And for thy falſe councellynge of many other and hym, thou haſte greate Cauſe to be righte ſory. For long tyme thou haſte beſied the to peruert whom ſo euer thou mighteſt; therfore as many Deathes thou arte worthy of, as thou haſt geuen euell Councelles:

celles: And therfore by Jeſu thou ſhalt go thyther, where Nicoll Harforde and Tom Purnay were herbered. And I vndertake, or thys daye eyghte dayes thou ſhalt be righte gladde for to doo what thynge that euer I bydde the doo. And, Loſell, I ſhall aſſaye if I can make the there as ſoroufull (as it was tolde me) thou waſte gladde of my laſte going out of Englond; by Seynt Thomas I ſhall tourne thy Joye into Sorowe.

And I ſayde, Sir, there can no body preue laufully that I ioyed euer of the maner of youre goynge out of this Lande. But, Sir, to ſaye the ſothe, I was ioyfull whan ye were gone, for the Biſhop of London, in whos Pryſon ye lefte me, founde in me no Cauſe for to holde me lenger in his Pryſon, but at the requeſte of my Frendes, he deliuered me to them, asking of me no maner of ſubmittyng.

Than the Archebiſhoppe ſaide to me, Wherfore that I yede out of Englond is vnknowen to the; but be this thinge well knowen to the, that God (as I wote well) hath called me ageyne, and broughte me into this Lande for to deſtroye the and the falſe Secte that thou arte off, as by God I ſhall perſue you ſo naroulye, that I ſhall not leaue a ſteppe of you in thys Lande.

And I ſaid to the Archebiſhop, Sir, the holy Prophete Jeremy ſaid to the falſe Prophete Anany, Whan the Worde that is the Prophecye of a Prophete is knowen or fulfilled, than it ſhall be knowen that the Lorde ſent the Prophete in treuthe.

And the Archebiſhop, as if he hadde not ben pleaſid with my Saiynge, turned hym away warde hyther and thyther, and ſayde, By God I ſhall ſette upon thy Shynnes a pair of Perlis, that thou ſhult be gladde to chaunge thy Voice.

Thes and many mo wonderous and convicious wordes wer ſpoken to me, manaſſing me and all other of the ſame Secte for to be puniſhed and deſtroyed vnto the vttermoſte.

And the Archebiſhop called than to hym a Clerke, and rowned with him, and that Clerke went forthe, and ſone he brought in the Conſtable of Saltwode-Caſtell, and the Archebiſhop rowned a good while with hym, and than the Conſtable went forthe, and than cam in diuerſe Seculers, and they ſcorned me on euery ſyde, and manaſſed me greatly; and ſome counſelled the Archebiſhop to burne me by and by, and ſome other counſelled hym to drounde me in the See, for it is neare-hande there.

And a Clerke ſtandyng beſyde me there, knelede downe to the Archebiſhoppe, praiyng hym that he wolde delyuer me to hym for to ſaye Matenes with hym, and he wolde vndertake that within thre dayes I ſholde not reſiſte any thynge that were commaunded me to doo of my Prelate.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, that he wold ordeine for me himſelfe.

And than after came in ageyn the Conſtable, and ſpake priuely to the Archebiſhop.

And than the Archebiſhop commaunded the Conſtable to lede me forthe thens with hym, and ſo he did; and whan we wer gone forthe thens, we wer ſent after ageyn. Aud whan I came in ageyne before the Archebiſhop, a Clerke badde me knele downe, and aske Grace, and ſubmit me lowly, and I ſholde fynde it for the beſte.

And I ſaid than to the Archebiſhop, Sir, as I haue ſaid to you diuerſe tymes to day, I will wilfully and lowly obey and ſubmit me to be ordenid euer after my Connyng and Power to God, and to his Lawe, and to euery Membre of holy Chirche, as ferre forth as I can perceyue that thes Membres accorde with their Hedde Chriſte, and will teache me, reule me, or chaſtyſe me by Authorite ſpecially of Goddis Lawe.

And the Archebiſhop ſaid, I wiſte well he wolde not without ſoche Addicions ſubmit hym.

And than I was rebukyd, ſcornyd, and manaſyd on euery ſyde; and yet after this diuerſe Perſones cried vpon me to knele down and ſubmit me, but I ſtood ſtill and ſpake no worde: and than there was ſpokyn of me, and to me many greate Wordis; and I ſtoode and herde them manaſe, curſe, and ſcorne me; but I ſaid nothing.

Than a while after the Archebiſhop ſaid to me, Wilt thou not ſubmit the to the Ordinance of holy Chirche?

And I ſaid, Sir, I will full gladly ſubmit me, as I haue ſhewid you before.

And than the Archebiſhop badde the Conſtable to haue me forthe thens in haſte.

The Tryal and Examination of Sir JOHN OLDCASTLE, Lord COBHAM, for Hereſy, the 1ſt of Henry 5. 1413. who was executed the 6th of Henry 5. A. D. 1418. Collected by John Bale.

AFTER that the true Seruaunte of Jeſus Chryſt, Johan Wycleue, a Man of very excellent Lyfe and Learning, had for the ſpace of more than xxvi. yeares mooſte valeauntly battelled with the great Antichriſt of Europa, or Pope of Rome, and his dyuerſly diſgyſed Hoſt of anoynted Hypocrites, to reſtore the Church again to the pure Eſtate that Chryſt left her in at hys Aſcenſyon, he departed hens moſt chriſtely into the handes of God, the yeare of our Lord 1387, and was buried in his owne Parriſh-Church at Lutterworth in Lincolnſhere. No ſmall Nombre of godly Dyſciples left that good Man behynd hym to defend the Lowlyneſſe of the Goſpell againſt the exceading Pryde, Ambition, Symony, Auarice, Ipocryſye, Whoredom, Sacrylege, Tyrannye, ydolatrouſe Worſhipinges, and other fylthy Frutes of thoſe ſtifnecked Pharyſes. Agaynſt whome Thomas Arundel, than Archebiſhop of Caunterbury, ſo ferce as euer was Pharao, Antiochus, Herodes, or Cayphas, collected in Pauls Church at London an vnyuerſall Synode of all the Papiſticall Clergye of England, in the yere of our Lord a M. CCCC. and xiii. as he had done diuerſe other afore, to withſtand their mooſt godly Enterpryſe. And thys was the fyrſt Yere of King Henry the Fifth, whom they had than made fit for theyr hande.

As theſe hygh Prelates with their Pharyſees and Scribes were thus gathered in thys peſtilent Counſell againſt the Lord and his Woorde, fyrſt there reſorted vnto them the xii Inquiſitours of Hereſyes (whom they had appointed at Oxford the yere afore, to ſerche out Heretikes with all Wicleues Bookes) and they brought two hundreth and lxvi. faithfull Concluſyons, whome they had collected as Hereſyes of the ſeyd Bokes. The Names of the ſeyd Inquiſitours were theſe; Johan Witnam a Maſter in the New-College, Johan Languedon Monke of Chry-Churche in Caunterbury, Wilyam Ufforde Regent of the Carmelytes, Thomas Claxton Regent of the Dominikes, Robert Gylbert, Rychard Earthyſdale, John Lucke, Rycharde Snediſham, Richarde Flemming, Thomas Rottborne, Robert Rondbery, and Richard Grafdale. In the meane ſeaſon cauſed they their hyred Seruauntes to blowe it forth abroade throughout all the hole Reame, that they were there congregated for an wholſome Unite and Reformacion of the Churche of Ingland, to ſtoppe ſo the Mouthes of the comen People. Such is always the comen Practiſe of theſe ſubtile Sorcerers, whyls they are in doing Miſchief, to blere the Eyes of the vnlearned Multytude, with one falſe Craft or other.

After a certein Communication they concluded among themſelves, that it was not poſſible for them to make whole Chriſtes Cote without Seme (meaning therby their patched Popyſh Synagoge) onleſſe certeyn great Men were brought out of the way, which ſemed to be the chefe Mainteiners of the ſeyd Diſciples of Wicleue: Among whome the moſt noble Knyght Sir Johan Oldcaſtell, the Lord Cobham, was complained of by the generall Proctours, yea rather Betrayers of Chriſt in his faithful Membres, to be the chefe Principal. Him they acuſed firſt for a mighty Maintener of ſuſpected Preachers in the Dioceſes of London, Rocheſter, and Herforde, contrary to the Mindes of their Ordynaries: Not only they affirmed him to haue ſent thyder the ſeid Preachers, but alſo to haue aſſiſted them ther by force of Armes, notwithſtanding their ſinodall Conſtitucion made afore to the contrarye. Laſt of all, they accuſed him, that he was farre other wiſe in Beleue of the Sacrament of the Altre, of Penaunce, of Pilgrymage, of Ymage-worſhipping, and of the Eccleſiaſtycall Power, than the holy Churche of Rome had taught many years afore.

In the ende it was concluded amonge them, that wythoute anye farther Delaye, Proceſſe ſhulde oute agaynſt hym, as agaynſt a mooſt pernycyous Heretike.

Som of that Fellouſhyp, whych were of more craftye Experyence than the other, wold in no caſe haue that matter ſo raſhlye handeled, but thought thys waye moche better. Conſydering the ſeid Lord Cobham was a Man of great Byrth, and in fauer at that tyme with the King, theyr Counſell was to know firſt the Kinges Mynde, to ſaue all thynges right vp. This Counſell was well accepted, and ther vpon the Archebiſhop Thomas Arundell, wythe his other Byſſhoppes, and a great part of the Clergy, went ſtrayght wayes vnto the Kyng, as than remayninge at Kenyngton; and there layed forth moſt greuous Complayntes againſt the ſaied Lord Cobham, to his great Infamy and Blemyſh, beinge a Man moſt godly. The King gentilly harde thoſe bloud thurſty Rauenours; and farre otherwiſe than became his Princelye Dignite, he inſtauntly deſyred them, that in reſpect of his noble Stock and Knighthode, they ſhuld yet fauourably deale with him; and that they wold, if it were poſſible, without all rigour or extreme handeling, reduce him againe to the Churches Unite. He promiſed them alſo, that in caſe they were not contented to take ſome Delyberacion, his ſelfe wold ſeryouſly common the matter with him.

Anon after the Kyng ſent for the ſeyd Lord Cobham; and as he was come, he called him ſecretly, admoniſhing him betwixt him and him, to ſubmit him ſelfe to hys Mother the holy Church, and as an obedient Chyld to acknowledge him ſelfe culpable. Vnto whom the Chriſten Knight made made this Anſwere, You moſt worthy Prince, ſaith he, am I always prompt and wylling to obeye, for ſo moche as I knowe you a Chriſten Kinge, and the appointed Miniſter of God, bearing the Sworde to the Puniſhement of Yll-doers, and for the Sauegarde of them that be vertuous. Unto you next my æternal God, owe I my whole Obedience, and ſubmit my thervnto, as I haue done euer, all that I haue eyther of Fortune or Nature, redy at all times to fulfill what ſo euer ye ſhall in that lorde commaund me: But as touching the Pope and hys Spiritualty, truly I owe them neyther Sute nor Seruice; for ſo moch as I knowe hym by the Scriptures to be the great Antichryſte, the Sonne of Perdicyon, the open Adverſary of God, and the Abhominacyon ſtanding in the holy place. Whan the King had hearde this, with ſochelyke Sentences more, he wolde talke no longer with him, but lefte hym ſo vtterly.

And as the Archebiſhop reſorted again vnto him for an Anſwere, he gaue him his full Auctorite to cyte him, examine hym, and punyſſhe him according to the deueliſh Decrees, whiche they call the Lawes of holye Church. Then the ſeyd Archebiſhop, by the Counſell of hys other Biſhoppes and Clergy, appointed to call before him Syr John Oldecaſtell, the Lord Cobham, and to cauſe him perſonally to apeare to anſwere to ſuche ſuſpect Articles as they ſhuld lay againſt him. So ſent he forth his chefe Sommener, with a very ſharp Citacion, vnto the Caſtell of Cowling, where as he at that tyme dwelt for his Solace. And as the ſeyd Sommener was thether comen, he durſte in no caſe entre the Gates of ſo noble a Man without his Lycens, and therfore he returned home agayne, hys Meſſage not done. Than called the Archebyſhop one John Butler unto him, whych was than the Dorekeper of the Kynges Prive Chamber, and with him he covenaunted through Promiſes and Rewards to haue this matter craftely brought to paſſe vnder the King's Name. Whervppon the ſeyd Johan Butler toke the Archebyſhops Sommener with hym, and went vnto the ſayd Lord Cobham, ſhewing him that it was the Kinges Pleaſure that he ſhuld obeye that Citacyon, and ſo cyted him fraudulently. Than ſaid he vnto them in fewe woordes, that in no caſe wold he conſent to thoſe mooſt deuelyſh Practiſes of the Prieſtes. As they had informed the Archebiſhop of the Anſwere, and that it was mete for no Man priuately to cyte him after that without parell of Lyfe, he decreed by and by to haue him cyted by publike Proceſſe or open Commaundment. And in al the haſt poſſible, uppon the Wednyſday before the Natiuite of oure Ladye in September, he commaunded Letters Citatory to be ſet vpon the great Gates of the Cathedral Church of Rocheſter, (which was but iij. Engliſh myles from thens) charging him to apere perſonally before him at Ledys, in the xi. daye of the ſame moneth and yeare, all Excuſes to the contrary ſet apart. Thoſe Letters were taken downe anon after, by ſuch as bare fauer vnto the Lorde Cobham, and ſo conueyed aſyde: After that cauſed the Archebiſhoppe newe Letters to be ſet vpon the Natiuite day of our Ladye, which alſo were rent downe and vtterly conſumed.

Than for ſo moche as he did not apeare at the day appoynted at Ledys (where as he ſate in Conſiſtory, as cruell as ever was Cayphas, with his Court of Hipocrites aboute him) he judged hym, denounced him, and condemned him of moſt depe Contumacy: after that whan he had bene falſely infourmed by his hierd Spyes, and other gloſing Glauerers, that the ſayd Lord Cobham had lawghed him to Scorne, diſdayned all his Doings, mainteined his old Opinions, contemned the Churches power, the Dignite of a Biſhop, and the Ordre of Preſthode (for all theſe was he than accuſed) in hys mody Madnes, without juſt profe, dyd he openly excommunicate him. Yet was he not for all this ferce Tiranny qualifyed, but commaunded him to be cited a freſh, to apere afore him the Saturday before the Feaſt of Saint Mathew the Apoſtle, with theſe cruell Threatinges added therunto; That if he did not obey at that day, he wold more extremely handle him; and to make him ſelfe more ſtrong towardes the perfourmaunce therof, he compelled the Lay-Power, by moſt terrible Menacinges of Curſes and Interdictions, to aſſyſt him againſt that cedicious Apoſtate Sciſmatike, that Heretike, that Troubler of the publycke Peace, that Enemye of the Realme, and greate Aduerſarye of all holy Churche; for all theſe hatful Names dyd he giue him.

This moſt conſtaunt Seruaunt of the Lord and worthy Knight Sir Johan Oldecaſtell, the Lord Cobham, beholding the vnpacable Fury of Antichriſt thus kindeled againſt him, perceiuing him ſelf alſo compaſed on every ſide with deadly Daungers, he toke Paper and Penne in hand, and ſo wrote a Chriſten Confeſſion or Rekening of his Faith (which foloweth here after) and both ſigned and ſealed it with his own hande: Wherin he alſo anſwereth to the iiij. chefeſt Articles that the Archebiſhop layed aginſt him; that doone, he toke the Copye with him, and wente therwith to the Kyng, truſtinge to fynd Mercy and Fauer at hys hande. None other was that Confeſſion of his, than the common Beleue or Somme of the Churches Faith, called the Apoſtles Crede, of all Chriſten Men than vſed. As thus;

The Chriſten Beleue of the Lord Cobham.

I Beleue in God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heuen and Earth; and in Jeſu Chriſt his only Sonne our Lord, which was conceyued by the Holy Goſt, borne of the Virgin Mary, ſuffred vnder Ponte Pilate, crucified, dead, and buried, went doun to Helle, the third daye roſe againe from Death, aſcended vp to Heauen, ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almightye, and from thens ſhall come agayne to judge the Quicke and the Dead. I beleue in the Holy Goſt, the vniuerſall holy Churche, the Communion of Sainctes, the Forgeuenes of Sinnes, the Vpriſing of the Fleſh, and everlaſting Life. Amen.

And for a more large Declaracion (ſaith he) of this my Faith in the Catholik Church, I ſtedfaſtly beleue that there is but one God Almighty, in and of whoſe Godhed are theſe iii. Parſonnes, the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Goſt, and that thoſe iij. Parſones are the ſame ſelfe God Almyghtyes. I beleue alſo that the ſeconde Parſonne of this moſt bleſſed Trinite in moſt conuenient tyme appointed therunto afore, toke Fleſh and Bloud of the moſt bleſſed Virgyn Mary, for the Sauegard and Redempcion of the vniuerſall kynd of Man, which was afore loſt in Adams Offence. Moreouer, I beleue that the ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, thus being both God and Man, is the onely Head of the whole Chriſten Churche, and that all thoſe that hath bene, or ſhal be ſaued, be Membres of this moſt holy Church: And this this Holy Church I think to be diuided in to iii. ſortes or Companyes.

Wherof the firſt ſort be now in Heauen, and they are the Saynctes from hens departed. Theſe, as they were here conuerſaunt, conformed alwayes theyre Lyues to the moſt holye Lawes and pure Examples of Chryſte, renouncyng Sathan, the Worlde, and the Fleſh, wyth all their Concupicences and Euels. The ſecond ſort are in Purgatory (yf any ſuch be by the Scriptures) abydyng the Mercy of God, and a full Delyuerance of Payne. The thyrde ſorte are here uppon the Earth, and be called the Churche Mylytaunt. For Daye and Nyght they contend agaynſt the crafty Aſſaultes of the Deuel, the flattering Proſperities of thys Worlde, and the rebellyouſe fylthynes of the Fleſhe.

Thys latter Congregation by the juſte Ordinaunce of God is alſo ſeuered into 3 diuerſe Eſtates, that is to ſay into Prieſthode, Knighthode, and the Comens. Amonge whom the Wyll of God is, that the one ſhuld ayde the other, but not deſtroye the other. The Prieſtes fyrſt of all ſecluded from all Worldlyneſſe ſhuld conforme theyr Lyues vtterly to the Examples of Chryſt and his Apoſtles. Euermore ſhulde they be occupied in preaching and teaching the Scriptures purely, and in geuing wholſom Counſels of good liuing to the other two Degrees of Men. More modeſt alſo, more louing, gentyll, and lowlye in Spirite ſhuld they be than any other ſortes of People.

In Knighthode are all they whych beare Sword by Lawe of Office. Theſe ſhuld defende Gods Lawes, and ſee that the Goſpell were purely taught, conforming their Lyues to the ſame, and ſecludynge all falſe Preachers: yea theſe ought rather to haſard their Lyues than to ſuffer ſuch wycked Decrees as eyther blemiſheth the eternal Teſtament of God, or yet letteth the fre Paſſage therof, wherby Hereſies and Sciſmes might ſpring in the Church. For of none other ryſe they as I ſuppoſe, than of erronyous Conſtitucions, craftely fyrſt creping in under Hypocrites lyes for auauntage. They ought alſo to preſerue Gods Peple from Oppreſſors, Tirauntes, and Theues, and to ſe the Clergy ſupported ſo long as they teache purely, pray rightly, and miniſter the Sacraments frely. And if they ſe them do otherwiſe, they are bound by Law of Offyce to compell them to chaunge ther doinges, and to ſe all thinges performed according to Gods Preſcript or Ordinaunce.

The latter Fellouſhip of this Church are the common People, whoſe Dewtye is to beare their good Mindes and true Obedience to the aforeſeyd Miniſters of God, theyr Kinges, Cyuile Gouernours and Prieſtes. The right Office of theſe is juſtly to occupy euery Man in his Faculte, be it Merchaundiſe, Handy-craft, or the Tilthe of the Grounde. And ſo one of them to be as an helper to another, followynge all wayes in theyr ſortes the juſt Commaundementes of theyr Lord God.

Ouer and beſydes all thys, I mooſt faithfully beleue that the Sacramentes of Chryſtes Church are neceſſary to all Chryſten Beleuers, thys alwayes ſene to, that they be truly miniſtred according to Chriſtes fyrſt Inſtitucion and Ordinaunce. And for ſo moch as I am malyciouſly and moſt falſely accuſed of a misbeleue in the Sacrament of the Aulter, to the hurtfull Slaundre of many; I ſignifye here unto al Men, that thys is my Fayth concerning that. I beleue in that Sacrament to be contayned very Chriſtes Body and Bloude under the Similytudes of Breade and Wyne, yea, the ſame Body that was conceyued of the Holy Goſt, born of Mary the Virgin, done on the Croſſe, dyed, that was buried, aroſe the thyrd Day from the Death, and is now glorified in Heauen. I alſo beleue the vniuerſal Lawe of God to be mooſt true and perfight, and they which do not ſo followe it in theyr Fayth and Workes at one time or other, can neuer be ſaued. Where as he that ſeketh it in Faith, accepteth it, learneth it, delyghteth therein, and perfourmeth it in Loue, ſhall taſt for it the felicity of euerlaſting Innocencye.

Finally this is my Faith alſo, that God wyll axe no more of a Chriſten Beleuer in this Lyfe, but only to obey the Preceptes of that moſt bleſſed Law. If any Prelates of the Churche require more, or elſſe anye other kynd of Obedience, than thys to be vſed, he contemneth Chriſt, exalting himſelf aboue God, and ſo becometh an open Anti-chriſte. Al theſe Premiſſes I beleue particularlye, and generally all that God hath left in his Holy Scryptures that I ſhuld beleue: Inſtauntly deſiring you, my Lyege Lord and moſt worthy King, that thys Confeſſion of mine may be juſtly examined by the moſt godly, wiſe, and learned Men of your Realme. And if it be found in all Pointes agreyng to the Verite, than let it be ſo allowed, and I thervppon holden for none other than a true Chriſtiane. If it be proued otherwiſe, than let it be vtterly condemned: prouided alwaies, that I be taught a better Beleue by the Word of God, and I ſhall moſt reuerently at al times obey therunto.

Thys breſe Confeſſyon of hys Fayth, the Lorde Cobham wrote (as is mencyoned afore) and ſo toke it wyth hym to the Court, offeryng yt wyth all Mekeneſſe vnto the Kyng to rede it ouer. The Kyng wold in no caſe receiue it, but commaunded yt to be delyuered unto them that ſhuld be his Judges. Than deſyred he in the Kinges Preſens, that an hondred Knights and Eſquiers might be ſuffered to come in vpon hys Purgacyon, which he knewe wold clere him of all Hereſyes. Moreouer he offred hym ſelf after the Law of Armes, to fyght for Lyfe or Death with any Man lyuing, Chriſten or Heythen, in the Quarell of his Faith, the King and the Lordes of his Counſell excepted. Fynally with all gentilneſſe he proteſted before all that were preſent, that he wold refuſe no manner of Correction that ſhuld after the Lawes of God be miniſtred vnto him; but that he wold at all times with all Mekenes obey it. Notwithſtandyng all thys, the Kyng ſuffered him to be ſommoned perſonally in his own Preuy Chambre. Than ſayed the Lord Cobham to the Kyng, that he had appealed from the Archbyſhop to the Pope of Rome, and therefore he ought, he ſayd, in no caſe to be his Judge. And hauyng hys appeale there at hande redye written, he ſhewed yt wyth all Reuerence to the Kyng. Wherwith the Kyng was than moche more diſpleaſed than afore, and ſayd angerlye unto him, that he ſhuld not purſue his Appeal: but rather he ſhuld tarry in hold, tyll ſuch tyme as it were of the Pope allowed. And than, wold he or nyld he, the Archebiſhop ſhuld be his Judge. Thus was there nothing allowed that the good Lorde Cobham had lawfully afore required. But for ſo moch as he wold not be ſworn in all things to ſubmit himſelfe to the Churche, and ſo to take what Penaunce the Archbiſhope biſhoppe wold enjoyne him, he was areſted againe at the Kinges Commaundment, and ſo led forth to the Towre of London, to kepe his day (ſo was it than ſpoken) that the Archbyſhop had appoynted hym afore in the Kinges Chambre.

Then cauſed he the aforeſayd Confeſſion of his Faith to be coppyed againe, and the Anſwere alſo (which he had made to the iiij. Articles proponed agaynſt hym) to be wryten in maner of an Indenture in two Shetes of Paper; that whan he ſhuld come to his Anſwere, he might geue the one Copy vnto the Archebiſhop, and reſerue the other to himſelfe. As the day of Examinacion was comen, whyche was the xxiij. day of Septembre, the Saturday before the Feaſt of Saint Mathewe, Thomas Arundell the Archebyſhop, ſytting in Cayphas Roume, in the Chapterhouſe of Paules, wyth Rychard Clyfforde Biſhop of London, and Henry Bolingbroke Biſhop of Wincheſter, Sir Robert Morley Knight and Lefetenaunt of the Towr, brought perſonally before him the ſeyd Lord Cobham, and there left hym for the time, vnto whom the Archebiſhop ſayd theſe wordes.

The fyrſt Examination of the Lord Cobham.

SIR John, in the laſt generall Conuocation of the Cleryge of thys our Prouynce, ye were detected of certein Hereſyes, and by ſufficient Witneſſes founde culpable; whervppon ye were by fourme of ſpirituall Lawe cyted, and wolde in no caſe appeare: In concluſion, vppon your rebellyous Contumacie, ye were both priuatelye and openlye excommunicated. Notwythſtanding we neuer yet ſhewed oure ſelfe unreadye to haue geuen you youre Abſolucion (nor yet do not to thys houre) wolde ye haue mekelye axed it. Unto this the Lord Cobham ſhewed as though he had geuen none eare, hauing his Mynde otherwiſe occupied, and ſo deſyred none Abſolucion: But he ſayd, he wold gladly before him and his Brethren make Reherſall of that Fayth, which he helde and entended always to ſtande to, yf it wolde pleaſe them to lycens him thereunto; and than he toke out of hys Boſome a certein Writting endented, concerning the Articles wherof he was accuſed, and ſo openly redde it before them, geuing it vnto the Archbyſhop, as he had made thereof an ende; wherof thys is the Copye.

I Johan Oldecaſtell Knight and Lord Cobham, wyll all Chryſten Men to vnderſtand, That Thomas Arundell, Archbyſhop of Caunterbury, hath not onely laid it to my Charge malityouſly, but alſo very vntruly by hys Letter and Seale, written againſt me in moſt ſlaunderouſe wyſe, that I ſhuld other wyſe fele and teach of the Sacramentes of the Church (aſſigning ſpecyally the Sacrament of the Aulter, the Sacrament of Penaunce, the worſhipping of Ymages, and the going of Pilgrimage vnto them) far other wiſe than either beleueth or teacheth the vniuerſall holye Churche. I take Almyghtye God vnto wytneſſe, that yt hath bene and nowe is, and euermore wyth the helpe of God yt ſhall be my full Intent and Wyll, to beleue faythfully and wholy all the Sacramentes that ever God ordeined, to be minyſtred in the holy Church; and morouer, for to declare me in theſe iiij. Points afore reherſed.

I beleue that in the mooſt worſhypfull Sacrament of the Alter, is Chriſts very Body in forme of Bread, the ſame Body that was borne of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, done on the Croſſe, dead and buried, and that the thyrd day aroſe from Death to Lyfe, the which Body is nowe glorified wyth the Father in Heauen. And as for the Sacrament of Penaunce, I beleue that it is nedefull to all them that ſhall be ſaued, to forſake theyr Sinne, and to do Penaunce for it wyth true Contricion to God, Confeſſion of ther Fautes, and dewe Satisfactyon in Chryſte, lyke as Gods Laws limiteth and teacheth, els can they haue no Saluation: This Penaunce I deſyre all Men to do. And as for Images, I vnderſtand that they perteyn nothing to our Chriſten Beleue, but were permitted long ſins the Faith was geuen vs of Chriſt, by ſufferance of the Churche, for to be as Kalendars vnto Laymen, to repreſent or bring to mind the Paſſion of our Lorde Jeſus Chriſt, with the Martirdom and good liuing of the Saintes.

I think alſo, that whatſoeuer he which doth that worſhip to dead Ymages, that is duely belonginge vnto God, or that putteth his Faith, Hope, or Confidence in the helpe of them, as he ſhuld do only in his eternall lyuing God, or that hath Affection in one more than in an other, he perpetrateth in ſo doing, the abhominable Sine of Idolatry. Moreouer in this am I fully perſwaded, that everye Man dwellynge on thys Ærth is a Pilgrim, eyther towardes Bleſſe, or els towardes Payne.

And that he which knoweth not, nor wyll not know, nor yet kepe the holy Commaundementes of God in hys lyuyng here (all be it that he goth on Pylgrymage into all quarters of the Worlde) yf he departeth ſo, he ſhall ſurely be dampned. Agayne, he that knoweth the holy Commaundementes of God, and ſo performeth them to the ende of his Life to his power, ſhal without fayle be ſaued in Chriſt, thoughe he neuer in his Lyfe go on Pylgrimage as Men vſe now a dayes, to Caunterbury, Walſingham, Compoſtell, and Rome, or to anye other Places.

Thys Anſwere to his Articles thus ended and redde, he delyuered it to the Byſhopes, as is ſayd afore. Than counceled the Archbiſhop wyth the other two Byſhoppes, and with dyuerſe of the Doctours, what was to be done in thys matter, commaunding him for the time to ſtand aſide. In concluſion, by theyr Aſſent and Informacion, he ſayd thus vnto him: Come hyder Sir Johan; In this your writing are many good thinges conteyned, and ryght Catholyck alſo, we deny yt not; but ye muſt conſyder that thys daye was appoynted you to anſwere to other Poynts concerning thoſe Articles, wherof as yet no mencion is made in this your Byll: And therfore ye muſt yet declare vs your Mind more plainly: as thus, Whether that ye holde, affirme, and beleue, that in the Sacrament of the Alter, after the Conſecracion rightly done by a Pryeſt, remaineth materall Breade or not? Moreouer, whether ye do hold, affirme, and beleue, that as concerning the Sacrament of Penance (wher as a competent nombre of Prieſts are) everye Chryſten Manne is neceſſarely bound to be confeſſed of hys Synnes to a Prieſt ordayned by the Churche or not?

After certein other Communication thys was the Anſwere of the good Lord Cobham, That none otherwiſe wold he declare his Minde, nor yet anſwere vnto hys Articles, than was expreſſelye in hys Wrytinge there conteyned. Than ſayd the Archbiſhop againe vnto him, Syr Johan beware what ye do; for if ye anſwere not clerely to thoſe thinges that are here objected againſt you, ſpecially at the time appointed you only for that purpoſe, the Lawe of holy Church is, that compelled ones by a Judge, we may openly proclayme ye an Heretike. Unto whom he gaue this Anſwere, Do as ye ſhall thinke it beſte, for I am at a point. Whatſoeuer he or the other Byſſhoppes did aske him after that, he bad them reſort to his Byll, for therby wold he ſtande to the verye Death; other Anſwere wold he not geue that day: wherwith the Biſſhops and Prelates were in a maner amaſed and wonderfullye diſquyeted. At the laſt the Archbiſhop counſelled again with his other Biſſhops and Doctours, and in the end therof declared vnto him what the holy Church of Rome, folowing the Sayinges of Saint Auſtyn, Saint Hierom, Saint Ambroſe, and of other holy Doctours, had determined in theſe maters, no maner of mencion ones made of Chriſt; which Determinacion (ſayth he) ought all Chryſten Menne bothe to beleue and to folowe.

Than ſaid the Lord Cobham vnto him, That he wold gladlye bothe beleue and obſerue whatſoeuer the holy Church of Chriſtes Inſtytucion had determined, or yet whatſoeuer God had willed him eyther to beleue or to do; but that the Pope of Rome with his Cardinals, Archbyſſhopes, Biſſhopes, and other Prelates of that Church, had laufull power to determyne ſuche matters as ſtode not with his Word throughly, that wolde he not (he ſayd) at that tyme affyrme. Wyth thys the Archbyſſhoppe bad hym to take good Aduyſement tyll the Monday nexte followinge (whiche was the xxv. daye of September) and than juſtlye to anſwere ſpecyallye vnto thys Pointe, Whether there remayned materyal Breade in the Sacrament of the Aulter, after the Wordes of Conſecration, or not? He promyſed him alſo to ſende vnto him in wryting thoſe matters clerely determined, that he myght than be the more perfyghte in hys Anſwere making; and all this was not els but to blynde the multitude with ſomwhat. The next day folowing (according to his Promes) the Archbiſhop ſent unto him into the Towr this folyſh and blaſphemouſe Writting, made by him and by his vnlearned Clergye.

THE Faith and Determinacion of the holy Church touching the blesfull Sacrament of the Aulter, is this, That after the ſacramentall Wordes be ones ſpoken by a Prieſt in his Maſſe, the materiall Bread, that was before Bread, is turned into Chriſtes very Body; and the materyall Wyne, that was before Wyne, is turned into Chryſtes very Bloud; and ſo there remayneth in the Sacrament of the Aulter, from thens forth, no materyall Breade, nor materiall Wyne, which were there before the ſacramentall Wordes were ſpoken. How beleue ye this Artycle? Holy Churche hath determined, that euery Chryſten Man lyuing here bodyly vppon Earth, ought to be ſhriuen to a Prieſt ordeyned by the Church, if he may come to him: How fele ye thys Article?

Chriſt ordeyned Sainct Peter the Apoſtle to be his Vicar here in Earth, whoſe See is the holy Church of Rome; and he graunted that the ſame power which he gaue vnto Peter, ſhuld ſuccede to al Peters Succeſſours, which we call now Popes of Rome; by whoſe ſpeciall power in Churches particular, be ordeyned Prelates, as Archbiſhops, Byſhops, Parſons, Curates, and other Degrees more, unto whom Chriſten Men ought to obeye after the Lawes of the Churche of Rome. Thys is the Determinacion of holy Church; how fele ye this Article? Holy Church hath determined, that it is meritoryous to a Chriſten Man to go on Pilgrymage to holy Places, and there ſpecially to worſhip holy Relyques and Ymages of Saintes, Apoſtles, Martirs, Confeſſours, and all other Saintes beſydes, approued by the Church of Rome; howe fele ye thys Artycle?

And as the good Lord Cobham had red ouer thys mooſt wretched Writyng, he marueled greatly of their madde Ignoraunce; but that he conſydered agayne, that God had geuen them ouer for theyr Unbeleues ſake, into mooſt depe Errours and Blindneſſe of Soule. Agayne, he perſeyued therby, that theyr vttermooſt Malyce was purpoſed againſt him, how ſoeuer he ſhulde anſwere; and therfore he put his Lyfe into the handes of God, deſyring his onely Spyrit to aſſiſt him in his next Anſwere. Whan the ſeyd xxv. daye of Septembre was come (which was alſo the Monday afore Myghelmaſſe) in the ſayd yeare of our Lorde, M. CCCC. and xiij. Thomas Arundell, the Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, commaunded his judiciall Seate to be remoued from that Chapterhouſe of Pauls, to the Dominike Fryers wythin Ludgate at London; and as he was there ſet with Rychard the Biſhop of London, Henry the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Benet the Biſhop of Bangor, he called in vnto him his Counſell and his Officers, with diuerſe other Doctours and Friers; of whom theſe are the Names here followynge.

Maſter Henry Ware, the Officyall of Caunterbury; Philip Morgan, Doctor of both Lawes; Howell Kiffin, Doctor of the Canon Lawe; Johan Kempe, Doctour of the Canon Lawe; Willyam Carleton, Doctour of the Canon Lawe; Johan Witnam, of the New College in Oxford; Johan Whighthead, a Doctour of Oxforde alſo; Robert Wonbewell, Vicar of Saint Laurence in the Jewry; Thomas Palmer, the Warden of the Mynors; Robert Chamberlaine, Prior of the Dominickes; Rychard Dodington, Prior of the Auguſtines; Thomas Walden, Prior of the Carmelites, all Doctours of Diuinite; Johan Steuens alſo, and James Cole, both Notaries, appointed there purpouſly to write all that ſhuld be eyther ſaid or done: All theſe, with a great ſort more of Pryeſtes, Monks, Channons, Friers, Pariſh-Clarkes, Belringers, and Pardoners, diſdained him with innumerable Mockes and Scornes, rekening him to be an horrible Heretik, and a Man acurſed afore God.

Anon the Archbyſhoppe called for a Maſſeboke, and cauſed all thoſe Prelates and Doctoures to ſweare there vpon, that everye Man ſhulde faythfullye doo hys Offyce and Dewtye that daye; and that neyther for Fauer nor Feare, Loue nor Hate of the one Partye nor the other, any thing ſhuld ther be witneſſed, ſpoken, or done, but according to the Trueth, as they wold anſwere before God and all the World at the day of Dome. Than were the two forſeyd Notaries ſworne alſo to wryt and to witnes the Wordes and Proceſſe that ther ſhuld be vttered on both Parties, and to ſaye their Mindes (if they otherwiſe knewe it) before they ſhuld regeſter it; and all thys Diſſimulacion was but to colour their Miſcheues before the ignoraunt Multytude.

Conſydre herin (gentyll Reader) what this wicked Generacion is, and how farre wyde from the juſt Feare of God; for as they were than, ſo are they yet to this daye.

After that cam forth before them Sir Robert Morley Knight, and Lefetenaunt of the Tower, and he brought with him the good Lord Cobham, there

leauing him among them, as a Lambe among Wolues, to his Examinacion and Anſwere.

The latter Examinacion of the Lord Cobham.

THAN ſayd the Archbyſhoppe vnto hym, Lord Cobham, ye be aduyſed (I am ſure) yt the Woordes and Proceſſe which we had vnto you vppon Saturdaye laſt paſt in the Chapterhouſe of Paules, which Proces were now no long to be reherſed agayne: I ſayd vnto you than, that ye were acurſed for your Contumacy and Diſobedience to holy Church, thinking that ye ſhulde with Mekenes haue deſired your Abſolucion.

Than ſpake the Lorde Cobham with a moſt cherefull Contenaunce, and ſayd, God ſayth by his holye Prophet, Maledicam benedictionibus veſtris, which is as much as to ſay, I ſhall curſe, wher as you bleſſe.

The Archbiſhop made than as though he had continued forthe hys Tale, and not heard him, ſaying, Sir, at that tyme I gentilly proferd to haue aſſoyled you if ye wold haue asked it; and yet I do the ſame, if ye will humblye deſyre it in due Forme and Maner, as holy Church hath ordeined.

Than ſayd the Lord Cobham, Naye, forſoth, wyll I not, for I neuer yet treſpaſed againſt you, and therfore I wil not do it; and with that he kneled downe on the Pauement, holding vp hys handes towardes Heauen, and ſayd, I ſhryue me here vnto the my eternall lyuynge God, that in my frayle Youth I offended the (Lorde) moſt greuouſly in Pryde, Wrath, and Glottony, in Couetouſnes and in Lechery. Many Men haue I hurt in mine Anger, and done manye other horryble Synnes, good Lord I aske the Mercy: and therwith wepingly he ſtode vp againe, and ſayd with a mighty Voice, Lo, good People, lo, for the breaking of God's Lawe, and his great Commaundements, they neuer yet curſed me; but for theyr owne Lawes and Tradicions moſt cruelly do they handle both me and other Men: and therfore both they and theyr Lawes, by the Promes of God, ſhall vtterly be deſtroied.

At this the Archbyſhop and hys Companye were not a lytle blemyſhed; notwithſtanding he toke Stomake vnto hym agayn, after certein wordes had in excuſe of theyr Tyrannye, and examined the Lorde Cobham of his Chriſten Beleue.

Wherunto the Lorde Cobham made thys godly Anſwere, I beleue (ſayth he) fullye and faythfullye the vnyuerſall Lawes of God; I beleue that all is true which is conteyned in the holy ſacred Scriptures of the Byble; finally, I beleue all that my Lord God wolde I ſhulde beleue.

Than demaunded the Archbiſhop an Anſwere of the Byll which he and the Clergy had ſent him into the Tower the day afore, in maner of a Determynacyon of the Church concerning the iiij. Articles wherof he was accuſed, ſpecially for the Sacrament of the Alter, how he beleued therin?

Wherunto the Lord Cobham ſaid, That with that Byll he had nothing to do; but this was his Beleue (he ſaid) concerning the Sacrament, That his Lord and Sauer Jeſus Chriſt, ſytting at hys laſt Supper with his moſt dere Deſciples, the Night before he ſhuld ſuffer, toke Bread in his hand, and geuing Thankes to his eternall Father, bleſſed it, brake it, and ſo gaue it vnto them, ſaying, Take it vnto ye, and eate therof all; this is my Body which ſhall be betraid for you, do this here after in my remembraunce. This do I thoroughly beleue (ſaith he) for this Faith am I taught of the Goſpell in Mathew, in Marke, and in Luke, and alſo in the firſt Epiſtle of Saint Paul to the Corinthians.

Than asked the Archbyſhoppe, If he beleued that it were Breade after the Conſecracion or ſacramentall Woordes ſpoken ouer it.

The Lord Cobham ſayd, I beleue that in the Sacrament of the Aulter is Chryſts very Body in fourme of Breade, the ſame that was born of the Virgin Mary, done on the Croſſe, dead, and buried, and that the thyrd day aroſe from Death to Lyfe, whych nowe is glorified in Heauen.

Than ſayd one of the Doctors of Lawe, After the ſacramentall Wordes be vttered, there remaineth no Breade, but the onely Body of Chriſt.

The Lorde Cobham ſayd than to one Maſter Johan Wightheade, You ſaid ones vnto me in the Caſtell of Coulynge, that the ſacred Hoſt was not Chryſtes Body; but I helde than againſt you, and proued that therin was his Body, though the Seculars and Friers could not therin agree, but helde yche one againſt other in that Opinyon: theſe were my Woordes than if ye remembre it.

Than ſhouted a ſort of them together, and cryed with great noyſe, We ſay all that it is Gods Body.

And dyuerſe of them asked hym in great Anger, Whether it were materiall Breade after the Conſecratyon or not?

Than loked the Lord Cobham ærneſtly vppon the Archbiſhop, and ſayde, I beleue ſurely that it is Chryſtes Body in fourme of Breade; Sir, beleue not you thus?

And the Archbiſhoppe ſayd, Yes mary do I.

Than asked him the Doctours, Whether it were onely Chriſtes Body after the Conſecration of a Prieſt, and no Bread or not?

And he ſayd vnto them, It is both Chriſts Body and Bread. I ſhall proue it as thus: For lyke as Chryſt dwelling here vppon the Earth, had in him both Godhede and Manhead, and had the inuiſible Godhead couered vnder that Manhead, which was only viſible and ſeane in him: ſo in the Sacrament of the Aulter is Chriſtes very Body and very Bread alſo, as I beleue the Breade is the thyng that we ſee with our Eyes, the Bodye of Chriſt (whiche is his Fleſh and his Blood) is there vnder hydde, and not ſeane, but in Fayth.

Than ſmyled they yche one vppon other, that the People ſhulde judge hym taken in a greate Hereſye; and wyth a great bragge diuerſe of them ſayde, It is a foule Hereſy.

Than asked the Archbiſhop, What Breade it was? And the Doctours alſo inquired of him, whether it were materyall or not?

The Lord Cobham ſayd unto them, The Scriptures maketh no mencion of this woorde materyall; and therefore my Faith hath nothing to do therwith: But thys I ſay and beleue it, that it is Chriſtes Bodye and Bread; for Chryſt ſayde in the Syxt of Johans Goſpell, Ego ſum panis viuus, qui de Cœlo deſcendi; I which came downe from Heauen am the lyuing, and not the dead Bread: therfore I ſay now again, like as I ſaid afore, as our Lord Jeſus Chryſt is very God and very Man, ſo in the moſt bleſſed Sacrament of the Aulter, is Chryſtes very Body and Breade.

Than ſeyd they all with one Voyce, It is an Hereſye.

One of the Byſhoppes ſtode vp by and by, and ſayd, What, it is an Hereſye manyfeſt, to ſaye that it is Breade after the ſacramentall Woordes be ones ſpoken, but Chryſtes Body onely.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, Sainct Paule the Apoſtle was (I am ſure) as wyſe as you be nowe, and more godlye learned. And he called yt Breade, wrytting to the Corinthians, The Bread that we breake, ſayth he, is it not the partaking of the Body of Chriſt? Lo, he calleth it Bread and not Chriſts Body, but a meane wherby we receyve Chriſtes Body.

Than ſayd they agayne, Paule muſt be otherwiſe vnderſtanded. For it is ſurely an Hereſye to ſaye that it is Breade after the Conſecration, but onely Chryſtes Body.

The Lord Cobham asked, howe they coulde make good that Sentence of theirs?

They anſwered him thus, For it is againſt the Determination of Holy Churche.

Than ſayde the Archbiſhop vnto him, Sir Johan we ſent you a Wrytting concerning the Faith of thys Bleſſed Sacrament clerely determined by the Church of Rome, our Mother, and by the Holy Doctours.

Than ſayd he again unto him, I knowe none holyer than is Chriſt and his Apoſtles. And as for that Determinacion, I wote it is none of theyrs, for it ſtandeth not with the Scriptures, but manifeſtly againſt them. If it be the Churches, as ye ſaye it is, it hath bene hers onely ſins ſhe receiued the greate Poyſon of worldly Poſſeſſions, and not afore.

Than asked they hym, to ſtoppe hys Mouth therwith, if he beleued not in the Determinacion of the Church.

And he ſaid vnto them, No forſooth, for it is no God. In all oure Crede is in but thryſe mencioned concerning Beleue; in God the Father, in God the Sonne, in God the Holy Gooſt. The Byrthe, the Death, the Buriall, the Reſurrection and Aſcenſyon of Chriſt hath none in, for beleue but in hym. Neyther yet hath the Churche, the Sacramentes, the Forgyuenes of Synne, the latter Reſurrection, nor yet the Lyfe Everlaſting, any other in, than in the Holy Gooſt.

Than ſayd one of the Lawiers, Tuſh, that was but a Worde of Office. But what is your Beleue concerning Holy Church?

The Lord Cobham anſwered, My Beleue is (as I ſayde afore) that all the Scriptures of the Sacred Bible are true. All that is grounded vppon them, I beleue throughly. For, I know, it is Gods pleaſure that I ſhuld ſo do. But in youre lordly Lawes and ydell Determinations haue I no beleue. For ye be no part of Chriſtis Holy Churche, as your open Dedes doth ſhew; but ye are very Antichriſts, obſtinately ſet againſt his Holy Law and Will. The Lawes that ye haue made are nothing to his Glorye; but onely for your vayne Glory and abhominable Couuetouſnes.

This they ſaid, was an exceading Heriſy (and that in a great fume) not to beleue the Determination of Holy Church.

Than the Archbiſhop asked him, what he thought Holy Church?

He ſaid vnto him: My Beleue is, that Holy Church is the nomber of them which ſhall be ſaued, of whom Chriſt is the head. Of this Church one part is in Heauen with Chriſt, an other in Purgatory (you ſay) and the third is here in Ærth. This later part ſtandeth in thre degrees, in Knighthode, Prieſthode, and the Comunalte, as I ſaide afore plainly, in the Confeſſyon of my Beleue.

Than ſaide the Archbiſhop vnto him, Can ye tell me who is of this Church?

The Lord Cobham anſwered, Yea truly can I.

Than ſaid Doctor Walden the Prior of the Carmelites, It is doubte vnto you who is thereof. For Chriſt ſayth in Math. Nolite judicare, Preſume to judge no Man. If ye here be forbidden the Judgement of your Neighbour or Brother, moche more the Judgement of your Superior.

The Lord Cobham made him thys Anſwer, Chryſt ſayth alſo in the ſame ſelfe Chapter of Math. That lyke as the yll Tree is knowne by his yll fruit, ſo is a falſe Prophet by his Works, appear they neuer ſo glorious. But that ye left behind ye. And in Johan he hath this Text, Operibus credite, Beleue you the outwarde doings. And in another place of Johan, Juſtum judicium judicate, Whan we knowe the thing to be true, we may ſo judge it, and not offende. For Dauid ſayth alſo, Recte judicate filii hominum, Judge rightly always ye Children of Men. And as for your ſuperiorite, were ye of Chriſt, ye ſhould be meke Miniſters, and no proud Superiours.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden unto him, Ye make here no difference of Jvdgments: Ye put no diuerſite betwene the yll Judgements, which Chryſt hath forbidden, and the good Judgments, which he hath commaunded us to haue. Raſh Judgement and right Judgement, al is one with you. So is Judgement preſumed, and Judgement of Office. So ſwift Judges always are the learned Scolers of Wickleue. Unto whome the Lord Cobham thus anſwered, It is well ſophiſtried of you forſoth; prepoſterouſe are your Judgements euer more. For as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Ye judge yll good, and good yll. And therefore the ſame Prophet concludeth, That your wayes are not Gods wayes, nor Gods wayes your wayes. And as for that vertuouſe Man Wickleue, whoſe Judgments ye ſo highly diſdayne; I ſhall ſaye here for my part both before God and Man, That before I knew that diſpiſed Doctrine of his, I neuer abſteyned from Synne. But ſyns I learned therein to feare my Lord God, it hath otherwiſe, I truſt, been with me: ſo much Grace could I neuer finde in all your glorioufe Inſtructions.

Than ſayde Doctour Walden again yet unto hym, It were not well wyth me, ſo meny vertuous Men lyuyng, and ſo many learned Men teaching, the Scriptures being alſo ſo open, and the Examples of Fathers ſo plentuouſe, if I than had no grace to amende my Life till I hearde the Deuell preache. Saint Hierom ſaith, that he whych ſeketh ſuche ſuſpected Maſters, ſhall not fynde the mydday Lyght, but the midday Deuell.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, Your Fathers the olde Phariſees aſcrybed Chryſtes Miracles to Belzebub, and hys Doctrine to the Deuell. And you as their naturall Childern haue ſtill the ſame ſelf Judgement, concerning his faithful Followers. They that rebuke your viciouſly lyuyng, muſt nedes be Heretykes; and that muſt your Doctours proue, whan ye haue no Scriptures to do it. Than ſaid he to them all, To judge you as ye be, we nede no farther go than your owne propre Actes. Where do ye fynd in all Gods Lawe, that ye ſhuld thus ſyt in Judgment of any Chriſten Men, or yet ſentens anye other Man vnto Death, as ye do here daily? No ground haue ye in all the Scriptures ſo lordely to take it vppon ye; but in Annas and in Cayphas, whiche ſate thus vppon Chryſt, and vppon his Apoſtles after his Aſcencyon, of them onely haue ye taken it to judge Chriſtes Membres as ye do, and neyther of Peter nor Johan.

Than

Than ſayde ſome of the Lawyers, Yes forſoth, Sir, for Chriſt judged Judas.

The Lord Cobham ſayd, No, Chriſt judged him not, but he judged him ſelfe; and therupon went forth, and ſo did hang himſelfe. But indede Chriſt ſayd, wo vnto him for that couetous act of his, as he doth yet ſtyll unto many of you. For ſens the Venime was ſhed into the Church, ye never folowed Chriſt: neither yet have ye ſtand in the Perfection of Gods Lawe.

Than asked him the Archbyſhoppe, What he meant by that Venim?

The Lord Cobham ſayd, your Poſſeſſyons and Lordſhippes. For than cryed an Aungell in the Ayre (as your owne Chronycles mencioneth) Wo, wo, wo, this Day is Venime ſhedde into the Church of God. Before that tyme all the Byſhopes of Rome were Martirs in a maner. And ſens that time we rede of very few: but in dede ſens that ſame time one hath put down an other, one hath poyſoned an other, one hath curſed an other, one hath ſlayne an other, and done much more Miſchefe beſides, as all the Chronicles telleth. And let all Men conſydre well thys, That Chriſt was meke and mercifull; the Pope is Proud and a Tiraunt. Chriſt was pore and forgaue; the Pope is riche, and a moſt cruell manſlayer, as his dayly Actes doth prove him. Rome is the very Neſt of Antichryſt, and out of the Neſt cometh all his Diſciples; of whome Prelates, Prieſtes and Monkes are the Body, and theſe pylde Friers are the Tayle, whyche couereth his mooſt fylthy part.

Than ſayd the Pryor of the Fryre Auguſtines, Alac, Syr, why do ye ſay ſo? That is uncharitably ſpoken.

And the Lord Cobham ſaid, Not only is it my Saying; but alſo the Prophet Eſayes long afore my tyme. The Prophet, ſayth he, which preacheth Lyes, is the Tayle behinde. As you Fryers and Monkes be lyke Phariſees diuided in your outward Apparell and Vſages, ſo make ye diuyſyon among the Peple. And thus, you with ſuch other are the very naturall Membres of Antychryſt.

Than ſaid he vnto them all, Chriſt ſaith in his Goſpell, Wo to you Scribes and Phariſees, Ypocrites, for ye cloſe up the Kingdom of Heauen before Men. Neyther entre ye in your ſelves, nor yet ſuffre any other that would entre into it. But ye ſtop up the wayes thereunto with your owne Tradicions, and therefore are ye the Houſhold of Antichriſt; ye will not permit Gods veryte to haue Paſſage, nor yet to be taught of his true Miniſters, fearing to haue your Wickedneſs reproued. But by ſuch vayne Flatterers as vpholde you in your Miſcheues, ye ſuffre the common People moſt miſerably to be ſeduced.

Than ſaide the Archbiſhop, By oure Lady, Sir, there ſhall no ſuche preache within my Dioceſe, (and God will) nor yet in my Juriſdiction, (yf I may knowe yt) as either maketh Diuiſion, or yet Diſſenſion amonge the poore Commons.

The Lord Cobham ſayd, Both Chryſt and his Apoſtles were accuſed of Sedicion making, yet were they moſt peaceable Men. Both Daniel and Chriſt prophecyed, that ſuch a troublous tyme ſhulde come, as hath not been yet ſens the Worldes beginning. And this Prophecye is partly fulfylled in your Daies and Doinges. For many haue ye ſlaine already, and more wyl ye ſlee hereafter, if God fulfil not his Promes. Chryſt ſaith alſo, if thoſe Days of yours were not ſhortened, ſcarſly ſhuld any Fleſh be ſaued. Therfore loke for it juſtly, for God wyll ſhorten your Dayes. Moreouer, though Prieſtes and Deacons for preaching of Gods Word, and for miniſtring the Sacramentes, with Prouiſion for the Pore, be grounded in Gods Lawe, yet haue theſe other Sectes no maner of ground thereof, ſo far as I haue red.

Than a Doctour of Lawe, called Maſter Johan Kempe, plucked out of his Boſome a Copye of that Byll whiche they had afore ſent him into the Tower, by the Archbiſhops Councell, thinking thereby to make ſhorter worke with him. For they were ſo amaſed with his Anſweres (not al vnlike to them which diſputed with Steven) that they knew not well howe to occupye the tyme, there Wyttes and Sophiſtry (as God wolde) ſo fayled them that Day.

My Lord Cobham (ſayth this Doctor) we muſt brefely know your Mynde concerning theſe iiii. Poyntes here following. The fyrſt of them is thys. And than he redde vpon the Byll. The Fayth and the Determinacion of Holy Church, touching the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Alter is this, That after the Sacramentall Wordes be ones ſpoken by a Pryeſt in hys Maſſe, the materyall Bread that was before Bread, is turned into Chriſtes very Bodye. And the materiall Wyne that was before Wyne, is turned into Chriſtes very Bloude. And ſo there remaineth in the Sacrament of the Aulter from thens forth no materyall Bread nor materyall Wyne, which were there before the Sacramentall Wordes were ſpoken: Sir, beleue ye not this?

The Lord Cobham ſayd, This is not my Beleue; but my Faith is (as I ſayd to you afore) that in the worſhypfull Sacrament of the Aulter, is very Chryſtes Body in fourme of Breade.

Than ſaid the Archbiſhop, Sir Johan, ye muſt ſay otherwiſe.

The Lord Cobham ſaide, Nay, that I ſhall not, if God be vppon my ſyde (as I truſt he is) but that there is Chriſtes Body in fourme of Breade, as the comen Beleue is.

Than redde the Doctor againe.

The ſecond Point is this, Holy Churche hath determined that euery Chriſten Man lyuing here bodely vppon Earth, ought to be ſhryuen to a Prieſt ordeined by the Church, if he may come to him: Sir, what ſay ye to this?

The Lord Cobham anſwered and ſaid, A diſeaſed or ſore wounded Man had nede to haue a ſure wyſe Chyrurgian, and a true; knowing both the ground and the danger of the ſame. Mooſt neceſſary were it therfore, to be fyrſt ſhryuen vnto God, which only knoweth our Diſeaſes, and can helpe us. I deny not in this the going to a Prieſt, if he be a Man of good Lyfe and Learning: For the Lawes of God are to be required of the Prieſt, which is godly learned. But if he be an Ydiote, or a Man of vicioufe lyuyng, that is my Curate, I ought rather to flee from him, than to ſeke unto him. For ſooner might I catch yll of him that is nought, than any Goodneſſe towardes my Soule Helth.

The third Pointe is this, Chriſte ordeined Sainct Peter the Apoſtle, to be his Vicar here in Ærth, whoſe See is the Church of Rome. And he graunted, that the ſame Powr which he gaue vnto Peter, ſhulde ſucceede to all Peter's Succeſſors, which we call now Popes of Rome. By whoſe ſpeciall Power in Churches partycular he ordeined Prelates, as Archbiſhops, Parſons, Curates, and other Degrees more; vnto whom Chriſten Men ought to obeye after the Lawes of the Church of Rome. This is the Determination of holy Church: Sir, beleue ye not this?

To this he anſwered and ſaid, He that foloweth Peter mooſt nigheſt in pure Lyuing, is next vnto him in Succeſſion; but your lordely Ordre eſtemeth not greatly the lowly Behauer of pore Peter, what ſoeuer ye prate of him; neither care ye greatlye for the humble Maners of them that ſucceded him tyll the time of Silueſtre, which for the more part were Martirs, as I tolde ye afore. Ye can lett all their good Condicions go by you, and not hurt your ſelues with them at all; all the Worlde knoweth thys well inough by you, and yet ye can make boaſt of Peter.

With that one of the other Doctors axed him, Than what do ye ſay of the Pope?

The Lord Cobham anſwered, As I ſaid before, he and you together maketh whole the great Antichriſt, of whom he is the great Heade, yow Byſhops, Prieſtes, Prelates and Monkes, are the Body, and the begging Friers are the Taile, for they couuer the Filthineſſe of you both with their ſubtyle Sophiſtrye: Neuer will I in Conſcience obey any of you all, tyll I ſee you with Peter follow Chryſt in Conuerſation.

Than redde the Doctour againe: The fourth Point is this, Holy Church hath determined, that it is meritoriouſe to a Chryſten Manne to go on Pilgrimage to holy Places, and there ſpecially to worſhip holy Relikes and Ymages of Saintes, Apoſtles, Martirs, Confeſſours, and all other Saintes beſydes, approued by the Church of Rome: Sir, what ſay ye to this?

Wherunto he anſwered, I owe them no Seruice by any Commaundment of God, and therfore I minde not to ſeke them for your Couetouſnes: It were beſt ye ſwept them fayre from Copwebs and Duſte, and ſo layed them vp for catching of Scathe; or els to bury them faire in the Ground, as ye do other aged Peple which are Gods Ymages. It is a wonderfull thing, that Saintes now being dead, ſhuld become ſo couetous and nedye, and thervppon ſo bytterly begge, which al their Lyfe time hated all Couetouſneſſe and Begginge. But this I ſaye vnto you, and I wold all the World ſhuld marke it, That with your Shrines and Idolles, your fayned Abſolutions and Pardons, ye drawe vnto you the Subſtaunce, Welthe, and chefe Pleaſurs of all Chriſten Realmes.

Why, Sir (ſaid one of the Clerkes) will ye not worſhip good Ymages?

What Worſhip ſhuld I geue vnto them? ſayd the Lord Cobham.

Than ſayde Fryer Palmyr vnto him, Sir, ye wyll worſhyp the Croſſe of Chriſt that he dyed vppon.

Where is it? ſaid the Lord Cobham.

The Fryer ſayd, I put ye the Caſe, Sir, that it were here euen now before you?

The Lord Cobham anſwered, This is a great wyſe Manne, to put me an ærneſt Queſtion of a thing, and yet he his ſelfe knoweth not where the thing it ſelfe is: yet ones again aske I you, what Worſhyp I ſhuld do vnto it?

A Clerke ſaid unto him, Such Worſhip as Paul ſpeaketh of, and that is this, God forbidde that I ſhuld joye but onely in the Croſſe of Jeſu Chriſt.

Than ſayd the Lord Cobham, and ſpreade his Armes abroade, This is a very Croſſe, yea and ſo moche better than your Croſſe of Woode, in that it was created of God; yet will not I leke to haue it worſhipped.

Than ſaid the Biſhop of London, Sir, ye wote wel that he died on a material Croſſe.

The Lorde Cobham ſayd, Yea, and I wote alſo that our Saluacion came not in by that materyall Croſſe, but alone by him which dyed thervppon. And well I wote that holy Saint Paull rejoyſed in none other Croſſe, but in Chriſtes Paſſion and Death onely, and in his own Sufferings of like Perſecution with him, for the ſame ſelfe Verite that he had ſuffred for afore.

An other Clerke yet asked him, Wyll ye than do none Honour to the holy Croſſe?

He anſwered him, Yes, if he were myne, I wolde lay him vp honeſtlye, and ſee vnto him that he ſhuld take no more Scathes abroade, nor be robbed of his Goodes as he is now a dayes.

Than ſayd the Archbiſhop vnto him, Sir Johan, ye haue ſpoken here many wonderfull Wordes, to the ſlaundrous Rebuk of the whole Spiritualte, geuing a great yll Example vnto the common ſort here, to haue vs in the more diſdayne. Moche time haue we ſpent here abought you, and al in vaine ſo farre as I can ſee. Well, we muſt be now at this ſhort Point with you, for the day paſſeth away; ye muſte eyther ſubmit your ſelfe to the Ordinaunce of holy Church, or elſe throwe your ſelfe (no remedy) into mooſt depe Daunger; ſe to it in time, for anon it will be els to late.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, I knowe not to what purpoſe I ſhuld otherwiſe ſubmitte me; moch more haue you offended me, than euer I offended you, in thus troubling me before thys Multitude.

Than ſayd the Archbiſhop againe vnto him, We ones again require you to remembre your ſelfe wel, and to haue none other Opinion in theſe maters, than the vniuerſall Fayth and Beleue of the holy Church of Rome is; and ſo lyke an obedient Child to return again to the Vnite of your Mother. Se to it, I ſay in time, for yet ye may have Remedy, where as anon it will be to late.

The Lord Cobham ſayd expreſſely before them all, I will none otherwiſe beleue in theſe Pointes than I haue tolde ye here afore, do with me what ye will.

Finally, than the Archbiſhop ſayd, Wel, than I ſee none other but we muſt nedes do the Lawe, we muſt procede forth to the Sentence diffinitiue, and both judge ye and condempne ye for an Heretike.

And wyth that the Archbyſhoppe ſtode vp, and redde there a Byll of his Condemnacion, all the Clergye and Layte avaylyng their Bonnettes; and thys was therof the Tenour.

The diffinitiue Sentence of his Condempnacion.

IN Dei Nomine, Amen. Nos Thomas, permiſſione diuina, Cantuarienſis Eccleſiæ Archiepiſcopus, Metropolitanus totius Anglie primas, & Apoſtolicæ ſedis Legatus, and ſo forth in barberous Latin, which we haue here tranſlated into Inglyſh, for a more playne Vnderſtanding to the Reader.

In the Name of God, ſo be it. We Thomas, by the Sufferaunce of God, Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, Metropolitane and Primate of all Ingland, and Legate from the Apoſtolyke Seate of Rome, willeth this to be knowen vnto all Men. In a certein Cauſe of Hereſy, and vppon diuerſe Articles, where vppon Sir John Oldecaſtel Knight, and Lord Cobham, after a diligent Inquiſition made for the ſame, was detected, accuſed, and preſented before vs in our laſt Conuocation of all our Province of Caunterbury, holden in the Cathedrall

Churche

Churche of Paules at London; at the laufull Denouncement and Requeſt of our vniuerſall Clergy in the ſeyd Conuocation, we proceded againſt him accordinge to the Lawe (God to witnes) with al the Fauer poſſible. And folowing Chriſtes Example in all that we might, which willeth not the Death of a Synner, but rather that he be conuerted and lyue, we toke vpon vs to correct him, and ſought all other ways poſſible to bring him againe to the Churches Vnite, declaringe vnto hym what the holye and vniuerſall Church of Rome hath ſayd, holden, determined, and taught in that behalfe. And though we found him in the Catholike Faith farre wyde and ſo ſtifnecked, that he wold not confeſſe his Erroure, nor pourge him ſelfe, nor yet repent him therof; we yet pyteing hym of fatherly Compaſſion, and intierlye deſyrynge the Helthe of his Sowle, appoynted him a competent tyme of Delyberacion, to ſe if he wold repent and ſeke to be reformed; and ſens we haue found him worſe and worſe. Conſiderıng therfore that he is incorrygible, we are driuen to the very Extremite of the Lawe, and with great Heuynes of Hart, we now procede to the Publicacyon of the Sentence diffinityue agaynſt him.

Than brought he forth an other Byll, conteyning the ſayd Sentence, and that he redde alſo in his bauger Latyne; Chriſti nomine inuocato, ipſumque ſolum pre oculis habentes, quia per acta mactitata, and ſo forth; which I haue alſo tranſlated into Engliſh, that Men may vnderſtand it.

Chriſt we take vnto witnes, that nothing els we ſeke in this our whole Enterpryſe, but his only Glory. For as much as we haue found by dyuerſe Actes done, brought forth and exhibited by ſondry Euidences, Sygnes, and Tokens, and alſo by many moſt manifeſt Proues, the ſaid Sir Johan Oldecaſtell Knight, and Lord Cobham, not only an evident Heretyke in hys own Parſone, but alſo a mighty Mainteyner of other Heretikes, againſt the Faith and Relygion of the holy and vniuerſal Church of Rome, namely, about the two Sacramentes of the Alter, and of Penaunce, beſides the Popes Power and Pilgrimages: And that he, as the Chyld of Iniquite and Darkenes, hath ſo hardened his Hart, that he will in no caſe attend vnto the Voice of hys Paſtour: neyther wyll he be alured by ſtrayght Admoniſhmentes, nor yet be brought in by fauourable Wordes. The Worthenes of the Cauſe firſt wayde on the on ſide, and his Vnworthynes again conſidered on the other ſyde, his Fautes alſo aggrauated, or made double through his damnable Obſtinacy. We being loth that he which is nought ſhuld be worſe, and ſo with his Contagiouſnes infect the Multitude; by the ſage Councell and Aſſent of the very diſcret Fathers, our honorable Brethren and Lordes Biſhopes here preſent, Richard of London, Henry of Wyncheſter, and Benit of Bangor, and of other great, learned, and wyſe Men here, both Doctours of Diuinite and of the Lawes, Canon and Ciuyle, Seculars and Religious, with dyuerſe other expert Men aſſiſting vs, we ſentencyally and dyffinitiuely, by thys preſent Writeing, judge, declare, and condemne the ſeid Sir Johan Oldecaſtell Knyght, and Lord Cobham, for a moſt pernicious and deteſtable Heretyke, conuycted vpon the ſame, and refuſing vtterly to obey the Churche agayne, commyttyng hym here from hens forth as a condempned Heretik to the ſecular Juriſdiction, Power, and Judgement, to do him ther vpon to death. Furthermore, we excommunicate and denounce a curſed not only this Heretike here preſent, but ſo manye els beſydes as ſhall here after, in fauer of his Errour, eyther receive him or defend him, counſell him or helpe him, or any other way maintein him, as very Fauters, Receiuers, Defenders, Councelers, Ayders, and Maynteyners of condemned Heretikes.

And that theſe Premyſſes maye be the better knowen to all faythfull Chryſten Men, we commit yt here vnto your Charges, and geue you ſtrayghte Commaundement thervpon by thys Wrytyng alſo, that ye cauſe this Condemnacion and diffinityue Sentence of Excommunycacyon, concerning both thys Heretyke and hys Fawters, to be publyſhed through oute all Dyoceſes in Cytyes, Townes, and Vyllages, by your Curates and Paryſh Prieſtes, ſuch time as they ſhall haue moſt recourſe of People, and ſe that it be done after this ſort. As the People are thus gathered deuoutlye together, lett the Curate euery where go into the Pulpet, and there open, declare, and expounde thys Proceſſe in the Mother Tonge, in an audyble and intelligible Voyce, that it maye well be perſeiued of all Men; and that vppon the feare of this Declaracion alſo, the People maye fall from their yll Opinions conceiued now of late by ſedicioufe Preachers. More ouer, we will that after we haue deliuered vnto yche one of you Biſhoppes (which are here preſent) a Coppye hereof, that ye cauſe the ſame to be written out again into dyuers Coppies, and ſo to be ſent vnto the other Biſhops and Prelates of our whole Prouince, that they may alſo ſee the Contents thereof ſolempnely publiſhed within their Dioceſes and Cures. Finally we wyll that both you and they ſignifye again vnto vs ſeriouſly and diſtinctly by your Wrytings, as the matter is without fayned Colour in euery Point perfourmed, the Daye wheruppon ye receyued thys Proceſſe, the tyme whan it was of you executed; and after what ſort it was done in euerye Condicion, according to the Tenour hereof, that we may knowe it to be juſtly the ſame.

A Coppye of thys Wrytinge ſent Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop of Caunterburye, afterwarde from Maydeſton the x. Daye of October, within the ſame Yeare of oure Lorde M.CCCC. and xiii. unto Richard Clifford the Biſhop of London, which thus beginneth, Thomas Permiſſione Diuina, &c.

The ſayde Richard Clyfforde ſent an other Coppye thereof, encloſed within hys owne Letters, unto Robert Maſcall, a Carmelite Fryer, which was than Biſhop of Herford in Walis, written from Hadham the xxiii. Day of Octobre, in the ſame Yere; and the beginning thereof is this, Reuerende in Chriſto Pater, &c.

The ſaid Robert Maſcall directed an other Copy thereof from London the xxvii. Day of Noueml er in the ſame Yere, encloſed in his owne Commiſſion alſo, vnto his Archdeacons and Deanes in Herfforde and Shrewisbury. And this is thereof the beginning, Venerabilibus & diſcretis viris, &c.

In like maner did the other Biſhopes within their Dioceſes.

After that the Archebiſhop had thus red the Byll of his Condempnation, with moſt Extremite, before the whole Multitude; the Lord Cobham ſayd with a mooſt cherefull Countenaunce, Though ye judge my Body, which is but a wretched thing; yet am I certein and ſure, that ye can do no harme to my Soule, no more than could Sathan uppon the Soule of Job. He that created that, will of his infinite Mercy and Promeſs ſáve it, I haue therein no manner of doubt. And as concerning theſe Articles before reherſed, I will ſtande to them, euen to the very Death, by the Grace of my eternall God.

Mercy

And therwith he turned him vnto the People, caſting hys Handes abroade, and ſaying with a very loude Voice, Good Chriſten People, for Gods loue be well ware of theſe Men: for they will els begyle you, and leade you blindelyng into Hell with themſelues. For Chriſt ſaith plainly vnto you, If one blind Man leadeth another, they are lyke both to fall into the Dytche.

After thys he fell downe there vppon his Knees, and thus before them all prayed for his Ennemies, holding vp both his Handes and his Eyes towards Heauen and ſaying, Lord God eternal, I beſeche the for thy great Mercies ſake to forgeue my purſuers, if it be thy bleſſed will. And than he was delyuered to Syr Robert Morleye, and ſo ledde forth againe to the Tower of London. And thus was there an ende of that Dayes worke.

Whyle the Lord Cobham was thus in the Tower, he ſent out priuily vnto his Friends; and they at his deſire wrote this lytle Bill here folowing, cauſing it to be ſet up in diuerſe Quarters of London, that the Peple ſhulde not beleue the Slaundres and Lyes that his Ennemies the Biſhops Seruaunts and Prieſtes had made on him abroade. And this was the Letter.

For as moch as Sir John Oldecaſtell Knight and Lord Cobham, is vntruly conuicted and impriſoned, falſely reported, and ſlaundred among the comen People by his Aduerſaries, that he ſhuld otherwiſe both fele, and ſpeake of the Sacraments of the Church, and ſpecially of the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Aulter, than was written in the Confeſſion of his Beleue, which was indented and taken to the Clergy, and ſo ſet up in diuerſe open places in the Cite of London: Knowen be it here to all the World, that he neuer ſens varyed in any Poynt therfro; but this is plainly his Beleue, that all the Sacramentes of the Church be proffytable and expedient alſo to all them that ſhal be ſaued, taking them after the intent that Chriſt and his true Church hath ordayned. Further more he beleued that in the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Aulter is verely and truly Chriſtes Body, in fourme of Bread.

After thys the Byſhops and Pryeſtes were in moche Obloquie, both of the Nobilite and Comens, partly for that they had ſo cruelly handled the good Lord Cobham; and partlye againe, bycauſe hys Opinion (as they thought at that tyme) was perfyght concerning the Sacrament. As they feared thys to grow to further inconuenience towardes them both wayes, they drew their Heads together, and at the laſt conſented to uſe an other Practiſe, ſomewhat contrary to that they had done afore.

They cauſed it by and by to be blowne abroade by their feed Seruaunts, Fryendes and babeling Sir Johnes, that the ſayde Lord Cobham was becomen a good Man, and had lawlye ſubmitted him ſelfe in all things vnto Holy Church, vtterly chaunging his Opinion concerning the Sacrament. And thervppon they contrefayted an Abjuration in his Name, that the Peple ſhuld take no hold of that Opinion by any thing they had hearde of him before, and to ſtande ſo in the more Awe of them, conſidering hym ſo great a Man, and by them ſubdued.

An Abjuration counterfayted of the Biſhoppes.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. I Johan Oldecaſtell denounced, detected and conuycted of and vppon diuerſe Articles ſauering both Hereſy and Errour, before the Reuerend Father in Chriſt, and my good Lord Thomas, by the Permiſſion of God, Lord Archebiſhop of Caunterburye, and my lauful and rightful Judge in that behalfe, expreſſely graunt and confeſſe, That as concerning the Yſtate and Power of the mooſt Holy Father the Pope of Rome, of his Archbiſhops, his Biſhops, and his other Prelates, the Degrees of the Church, and the Holy Sacramentes of the ſame, ſpecyally of the Sacramentes of the Aulter, and of Penaunce, and other Obſeruaunces beſides of our Mother Holy Church, as Pilgrimages and Pardons; I affyrme (I ſay) before the ſaid Reuerend Father Archbiſhop, and els where, that I being yl ſeduced by diuerſe ſedicioufe Preachers, haue greuouſly erred and heritically perſiſted, blaſphemouſly anſwered and obſtinately rebelled. And therefore I am by the ſayd Reuerend Father, before the Reuerend Fathers in Chriſt alſo the Biſhops of London, Wincheſtre and Bangor, lawfullye condempned for an Heretyke.

Neuertheleſs yet, I now remembering my ſelfe, and coueting by this meane to auoide that temporall Payne, which I am worthy to ſuffer as an Heretike, at the Aſſignacion of my moſt excellent Chriſten Prince and Liege Lord King Henry the Fift, nowe by the Grace of God moſt worthy Kyng of both Englande and of Fraunce; minding alſo to preferre the wholſom Determinacyon, Sentence and Doctryne of the Holy and Uniuerſal Church of Rome, before the vnholſom Opinions of my ſelf, my Teachers, and my Followers: I frely, willyngly, deliberately, and throughly confeſſe, graunt, and affyrme the moſte Holye Fathers in Chriſt, Sainct Peter the Apoſtle, and his Succeſſours Biſhoppes of Rome, ſpecially now at thys tyme my mooſt bleſſed Lorde Pope Johan, by the Permyſſyon of God the xxiii. Pope of that Name, which now holdeth Peter's Seate (and each of them in their Succeſſion) in full Strength and Power, to be Chryſtes Vycar in Ærth, and the Head of the Church Milytaunt. And that by the Strength of hys Office (what thogh he be a great Sinner, and afore knowen of God to be damned) he hath full Auctorite and Power to rule and gouerne, bind and loſe, ſaue and deſtroy, accurſe and aſſoyle, al other Chriſten Men.

And agreably ſtyl unto this, I confeſs, graunt, and affyrme all other Archbiſhoppes, Biſhoppes, and Prelates, in their Prouinces, Dyoceſſes, and Pariſhes (appointed by the ſeid Pope of Rome, to aſſyſt him in his Doinges or Buſineſs) by his Decrees, Canons, or Vertue of his Office, to haue had in tymes paſt, to haue now at this tyme, and that they ought to haue in tyme to come, Auctorite and Power to rule and to gouerne, binde and loſe, acurſe and aſſoyle the Subjectes or Peoples of their aforeſeid Prouinces, Dyoceſes, and Pariſhes; and that theyr ſaid Subjectes or Peoples oughtt of right in all things to obey them. Furthermore I confeſſe, graunt and affyrme, that the ſayde Spyrytuall Fathers, as our mooſt Holy Father the Pope, Archbiſhops, Byſhops and Prelates, haue had, haue now and ought to haue hereafter, Auctorite and Power for the Eſtate, Eſtate, Order and Gouuernaunce of theyr Subjectes or Peoples, to make Lawes, Decrees, Statutes and Conſtitucions; yea, and to publyſh, commaunde and compell theyr ſaid Subjectes and Peples to the Obſeruation of them.

Moreouer, I confeſſe, graunt and affyrme that all theſe forſayd Lawes, Decrees, Statutes and Conſtitucions, made, publyſhed and commaunded accordynge to the fourme of Spirituall Lawe, all Chriſten Peple and euery Man in him ſelfe is ſtraightly bound to obſerue, and mekelye to obeye, accordyng to the diuerſite of the forſayde Powers. As the Lawes, Statutes, Canons and Conſtitucions of our moſt Holy Father the Pope, incorporated in his Decrees, Decretals, Clementynes, Codes, Chartes, Reſcriptes, Sextiles and Extrauagauntes the World ouer all; and as the Prouincial Statutes of Archebiſhops in their Prouinces, the Sinodall Actes of Byſhoppes in theyr Dioceſes, and the commendable Rules and Cuſtomes of Prelates in their Colleges, and Curates in their Pariſhes, all Chriſten People are both bound to obſerve, and alſo mooſt mekely to obeye. Ouer and beſides all this, I Johan Oldecaſtell, vtterly forſakinge and renouncynge all the aforeſayd Errours and Hereſyes, and all other Errours and Hereſyes lyke vnto them, lay my Hande here vppon this Boke, or Holy Euangelye of God, and ſwear, that I ſhall neuermore from hens forth hold theſe forſaid Hereſyes, nor yet any other lyke vnto them wetingly. Neyther ſhall I geue counſell, ayde, helpe nor fauer at any tyme to them that ſhall holde, teache, affyrme or mainteine the ſame, as God ſhall helpe me and theſe Holy Euangelyes.

And that I ſhall from hens forth faithfully obeye, and inuiolably obſerue all the Holy Lawes, Statutes, Canons, and Conſtitucions of all the Popes of Rome, Archbiſhopes, Biſhops and Prelates, as are contayned and determined in theyr Holye Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Chartes, Reſcryptes, Sextyles, Summes Papall, Extrauagantes, Statutes Prouincyall, Actes Synodal, and other ordinary Rules and Cuſtomes conſtituted by them, or that ſhall chaunce hereafter dyrectly to be determined or made. To theſe and all ſuch other, wyll I my ſelfe with all Powr poſſible apply. Beſydes all this, the Penaunce which it ſhal pleaſe my ſaid Reuerend Father, the Lorde Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, hereafter to enjoyne me for my Sinnes, I will mekely obeye and faithfully fulfyll. Finally, all my Seducers and falſe Teachers, and all other beſydes, whom I ſhall hereafter knowe ſuſpected of Hereſye or Errours, I ſhall effectuallye preſent, or cauſe to be preſented, vnto my ſayd Reuerend Father Lord Archbiſhop, or to them which hath his Auctorite, ſo ſone as I can conueniently do it, and ſee that they be corrected to my vttermooſt power. Amen.

The cruell Complaint of the Clergy, and Tyrannouſe Acte thervppon made.

NEuer came this Abjuracyon to the Handes of the Lord Cobham, neyther was it compyled of them for that purpoſe; but onely therwyth to bleare the Eyes of the unlearned Multitude. And whan they perceyued that Polycye wolde not helpe, but made more and more againſt them, than ſought they out an other falſe Practyſe. They went vnto the King with a moſt greuouſe Complaint, lyke as they did afore in his Fathers tyme, that in euery Quarter of the Realme, by reaſon of Wicleues Opinions, and the ſaid Lord Cobham, were wonderful Contentions, Rumours, Tumultes, Vprours, Confederations, Diſſencions, Diuiſions, Differences, Diſcordes, Harmes, Slaunders, Sciſmes, Sectes, Sedicions, Perturbacions, Parels, vnlawfull Aſſemblyes, Variaunces, Strifes, Fyghtinges, rebelliouſe Ruffelinges and dayly Inſurrections. The Church (they ſaid) was hated; the Dioceſanes were not obeyed; the Ordinaries were not regarded; the Spirituall Offycers, as Suffraganes, Archdeacons, Chauncelers, Doctours, Commiſſaries, Offycials, Deanes, Lawers, Scribes and Sommeners were euery where deſpyſed; the Lawes and Liberties of Holy Church were troden vndre fote; the Chryſten Fayth was ruynouſlye decayed; Gods Seruice was laught to Scorne; the Spirituall Juriſdictyon, Auctorite, Honour, Power, Polycy, Lawes, Rytes, Ceremonies, Curſes, Keyes, Cenſures and Canonical Sanctions of the Church were had in an vttre Contempt.

So that all in a maner was come to nought.

And the cauſe of this was, that the Heretikes and Lollards of Wicleues Opinion, were ſuffered to preach abrode, ſo boldly to gether Conuenticles vnto them, to kepe Scoles in Mens Houſes, to make Bokes, compyle Treatiſes, and wryte Ballets, to teach priuately in Angles and Corners, as in Wodes, Feldes, Medowes, Paſtours, Groues, and in Caues of the Ground. This wolde be (they ſayd) a Deſtruction to the Commenwelth, a Subuercion to the Land, and an utter Decay of the Kinges Eſtate Ryall, if remedy were not ſought in tyme. And this was their Policy, to couple the Kinges Auctorite wyth that they had done in theyr former Councell of Craft, and ſo to make it thereby the ſtronger. For they perceiued themſelves very farre to weake els to follow againſt their Ennemies, that they had ſo largely enterpriſed. Upon this Complaint, the Kinge immediatly called a Parlament at Leicheſtre; it might not in thoſe Daies be holden at Weſtminſtre, for the great fauer that the Lord Cobham had both in London, and abought the Cyte. Yet were they deceiued; that they doubted moſt, lyghted there ſoneſt upon them.

A Byll was put in there again by the Commons, againſt their continuall waſting of the Temporalties, lyke as it had bene twiſe afore by procurement of the ſeid Lord Cobham, both in the Daies of Richarde the Second, Anno 1365. and alſo of King Henry the iiii. Anno Domini 1410. wher vpon was growne all this Malice afore ſpecified; but this was than workemanly defeated by an other proper practiſe of theyrs.

They put the King in remembraunce to claime his Right in Fraunce, and graunted him thervnto a Dime, with other great Subſidy of Mony. Thus were Chriſtes People betrayed euery way, and their Liues bought and ſold by theſe moſt cruell Theues. For in the ſaid Parlament, the King made this moſt blaſphemouſe and cruell Acte, to be as a Law for euer, That whatſoeuer they were that ſhould rede the Scriptures in the Mother Tong (which was than called Wicleue's Lerning) they ſhuld forfet Land, Catel, Body, Lif and Godes from theyr Heyres for euer, and ſo be condempned for Heretykes to God, Ennemies to the Crowne, and moſt errant Trayters to the Lande.

Beſides this, it was inacted that neuer a Sanctuary, nor priuileged Grounde within the Realme, ſhulde holde them, though they were ſtill permitted both to Theues and Murtherers. And if in caſe they wold not gyue ouer, or were after their Pardon relapſed, they ſhulde ſuffer Death in two manner of kindes; That is, they ſhulde firſt be hanged for Treaſon againſt the King, and then be burned for Hereſy againſt God, and yet neither of both committed.

The beginning of that Act is this, Pro eo quod magni rumores, &c. Anon after was it proclaymed throughout the Reame, and than had the Biſhops, Prieſts, Monkes and Fryers, a Worlde ſomewhat to theyr Mindes. For than were many taken in diuerſe Quarters, and ſuffred moſt cruel Death. And many fled out of the Lande into Germany, Bohem, Fraunce, Spain, Portingale, and into the Weld of Scotland, Wales and Yreland, working ther many Maruels againſt their falſe Kingdom, to long to wryte. In the Chriſtmas followinge was Syr Roger Acton Knyght, Maſter Johan Browne Eſquire, Sir Johan Beuerlaye, a learned Preacher, and dyuerſe other more attached for quarrelling with certeine Prieſtes, and ſo impriſoned. For all Men at that time coud not paciently ſuffre theyr blaſphemouſe Bragges.

The Complaint was made vnto the King of them, that they had made a greate Aſemble in Saint Gyles Felde at London, purpoſing the Deſtruction of the Land, and the Subuercyon of the Comonwelth. As the King was thus infourmed, he erected a Banner (ſaith Walden) with a Croſſe thereupon, as the Pope doth comonly by his Legate, whan he pretendeth to warre againſt the Turke, and with a great nombre of Men entred the ſame Felde, where as he found no ſuch Company; yet was the Complaint judged true, becauſe the Byſhoppes had ſpoken it at the Informacion of their Prieſtes. All this hath Thomas Walden in diuerſe of his Workes, which was at the ſame tyme a Whight or Carmelite Frire, and the King's Confeſſour; and partly it is touched both by Robert Fabian, and by Polidorus Virgilius in their Engliſh Chronicles; but not in all pointes rightly. In the meane ſeaſon Sir John Oldecaſtell the Lord Cobham, eſcaped out of the Towr of London in the Night, and ſo fledde into Wales, whereas he continued more than iiii. Yeares after.

Some Wryters haue thought this eſcape to come by the ſaid Syr Roger Acton, and other Gentlemen, in diſpleaſure of the Prieſtes, and that to be the chefe occaſion of their Deathes, which might well be; but Walden doth not ſo vtter it, which reigned the ſelfe ſame time. In January next following was the aforenamed Syr Roger Acton, Maſter Johan Browne, Syr Johan Beuerlaye and xxxvi. more (of whom the more part were Gentylmen of Byrthe) conuicted of Hereſy by the Byſhops, and condempned of Treaſon by the Temporalte, and accordyng to the Acte, were fyrſte hanged and than brent in the ſayd Saint Gyles Feld. In the ſame Yeare alſo was one Johan Claydon a Skinner, and one Rychard Turmin a Baker, both hanged and brent in Smytfilde by that vertuous Act; beſides that was done in al other Quarters of Ingland, which was no ſmall nomber, if it were now throughly knowen.

The latter Enpriſoning and Death of the Lord Cobham.

IN the Yeare of oure Lorde a M. CCCC. and xv. dyed Thomas Arundell, which had bene Archbiſhop of Caunterbury more than xxxii. Yeares, to the great Deſtruction of Chryſten Beleue. Yet died not his prodigiouſe Tyrannye with hym; but ſucceeded with his Office in Henry Chichely, and in a great ſort more of the ſpyghtful Spiritualtie. For their Malice was not yet ſatled againſt the good Lord Cobham. But they confedered with the Lord Powys (which was at that time a great Gouuernour in Wales) feeding him with lordly Giftes and Promiſes, to accomplyſh their Deſyre. He at the laſt, thus monied wyth Judas, and outwardly pretending him great Amity and Fauer, mooſt cowardlye and wretchedly toke hym, and in concluſion ſo ſent him up to London, whereas he remayned a Moneth or two impryſoned again in the Tower. And after long Proceſſe they condempned him againe of Hereſy and Treaſon by force of the afore named Act: He rendering Thanks unto God that he had ſo appointed him to ſuffre for his Names ſake.

And vppon the Day appointed he was brought out of the Tower, with his Armes bound behynd him, hauing a very chereful Countenaunce. Than was he layd vpon an Hardle, as though he had bene a mooſt haynouſe Traitoure to the Crowne, and ſo drawn forth into Saint Gyles Felde, where as they had ſet vp a newe paire of Galowes. As he was comen to the Place of Execution, and was taken from the Hardle, he fell down deuoughtly upon his Knees, deſyringe Almightye God to forgeue his Ennemies. Than ſtode he up and beheld the Multitude, exhorting them in moſt godly maner to folow the Laws of God, written in the Scriptures; and in any wyſe to beware of ſuch Teachers as they ſe contrary to Chriſt in their Conuerſacion and Liuing, with many other ſpeciall Councels. Than was he hanged vp ther by the middle in Chaynes of Yron, and ſo conſumed alyue in the Fyre, praiſing the Name of God, ſo long as his Lyfe laſted. In the ende, he commended his Sowle into the Handes of God, and ſo departed hens mooſt Chriſtenly, his Body reſolued into Aſhes.

And this was done in the Yeare of our Lord a M. CCCC. and xviii. which was the ſixt Yere of the Reygne of King Henry the Fift, the People their preſent ſhewyng great Dolour. How the Prieſtes that time fared, blaſphemed, and curſed, requiring the People not to pray for hym, but to judge him dampned in Hell, for that he departed not in the Obedience of their Pope; it were to long to wryte.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury againſt the Lord Oldcaſtle, 1 Hen. 5. in the Year 1413.

THomas, by Divine Permiſſion, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to our venerable Brother Richard, by the Grace of God, Biſhop of London, Health and brotherly Love in the Lord.

Whereas in our late Conſultation, concerning the Unity and Reformation of the Church of England, in Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of our Province of Canterbury, laſt held in our Church of St. Paul's, with the ſaid Prelates and Clergy; among other things it was concluded by us, and the ſaid Prelates and Clergy, next to impoſſible, to repair the rending of our Lord's ſeamleſs Coat, unleſs firſt of all certain great Men of the Kingdom, the Authors, Abettors, Protectors, Defenders and Entertainers of thoſe Hereticks, who are called Lollards, were ſeverely reprehended, and reclaim'd from their Errors, if other means fail'd, by the Cenſure of the Church, aſſiſted by the Secular Arm:

And accordingly, upon the moſt diligent Enquiry in the ſaid Convocation, by the Proxies of the Clergy, and others there aſſembled in great Numbers from each Dioceſs of our ſaid Province, it was found by them, and made known and preſented to us, that Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, was and is the principal Receiver, Abettor, Patron and Defender of the ſame.

And that he ſent the Lollards to preach about in the Dioceſſes of London, Rocheſter and Hereford, without any Licences from the Ordinaries or Dioceſans of the Places, contrary to the Synodical Conſtitution made for that purpoſe; and that he was preſent at the wicked preachings of the ſame, and ſilenced all Oppoſers he met with, with Threatnings and Terrors, and the power of the Secular Sword:

Aſſerting and affirming, amongſt other things, that we and our Brethren the Suffragans of our Province, never had, nor have Authority to make any Conſtitution of this kind.

And concerning the Sacraments of the Altar and Penance, Pilgrimages, Adorations of Images, and the Power of the Keys, he has believed, and does believe, and dogmatizes and teaches otherwiſe than the Roman and Univerſal Church holds and affirms.

Wherefore the ſaid Prelates and Clergy then beſought us, that we wou'd be pleaſed to proceed againſt the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, for and upon the Premiſes.

But in reverence to our Lord the King, (with whom the ſaid Sir John was a great Favourite) and as much out of reſpect to the Order of Knighthood, with all our Brethren and Suffragans of our ſaid Province, and a great part of the Clergy of our ſaid Province, we waited on our ſaid Lord the King, at his Palace at Kenyngton; and making complaint againſt the ſaid Sir John, we in ſome meaſure repreſented the Errors of the ſaid Sir John.

'Sed ad Rogatum ipſius Domini noſtri Regis, 'ipſum Dominum Johannem ſine dedecore ad uni-'tatem Eccleſiæ reducere cupientes, omnem Exe-'cutionem præmiſſorum ad tempus magnum di-'ſtuliſmus.

'Sed demum quia præfatus Dominus noſter 'Rex circa Reductionem ejuſdem, poſt magnos 'labores, non profecit, prout idem Dominus no-'ſter Rex nobis, tam verbo, quam in ſcriptis, 'referre dignabantur; nos ſubſequenter eundem 'Dominum Johannem, de & ſuper Præmiſſis per-'ſonaliter reſponſurum coram nobis, ad certum 'terminum effluxum, decrevimus evocandum, ac 'Nuncium noſtrum cum his noſtris Citatoriis ad 'dictum Dominum Johannem tranſmiſimus, tunc 'in Caſtro ſuo de Couulyng degentem.

'Cui nuncio noſtro dedimus in mandatis, ut 'Caſtrum dicti Domini Johannis nullo modo in-'grederetur niſi licentiatus, ſed per medium 'cujuſdam Johannis Botteleri, Oſtiarii Cameræ dicti 'Domini noſtri Regis, ipſum Dominum Johan-'nem requireret quatenus aut daret dicto Nuncio 'noſtro Licentiam ingrediendi ut citaret eundem, 'ſeu ſaltem extra Caſtrum ſuum prædictum face-'ret ſui Copiam, ut ſic Citatione poſſet appre-'hendi.

'Qui tamen Dominus Johannes dicto Johanni 'Bottelero, ex parte Domini noſtri Regis ſibi 'Præmiſſa exponenti, publice reſpondit, quod 'nullo modo citare voluit, nec Citationem ipſius 'aliqualiter tolerare.

'Noſque præterea, de præmiſſis nobis facta 'fide, ulterius legitime procedentes, facta nobis 'p rimitus fideli Relatione quod idem Dominus 'Johannes perſonali Citatione apprehendi non 'potuit, decrevimus eundem citandum per Edic-'tum, in valvis Eccleſiæ Cathedralis Roffenſis, 'ſibi vicinæ, & niſi modicum ultra tria Milia-'ria Anglicana a dicto Caſtro de Couulyng diſtantis, 'publice affingendum: prout eum ſic citari feci-'mus, & hujuſmodi Edictum noſtrum in valvis 'dictæ Eccleſiæ publice & patenter affigi, ad com-'parendum coram nobis ſecundo Die Septembris, 'jam præteriti de & ſuper præmiſſis, atque nichilo-'minus certis aliis Hæreticam pravitatem con-'cernentibus, perſonaliter reſponſurum,

'Quo Die adveniente, nobis, in Capella ma-'jori, infra Caſtrum de Ledys, noſtræ Dioceſis, 'quod tunc inhabitabamus, & ubi tunc reſidebа-'mus cum Curia noſtra, pro Tribunali ſedenti-'bus, facta fide quæ requiritur, in præmiſſis, ac 'audita per nos & recepta relatione, juxta aſſer-'tionem, & prout communiter prædicatur in par-'tibus ubi dictus Dominus Johannes ſe incaſtellat '& fortificat in Caſtro ſuo prædicto, ac Opi-'niones ſuas defendit, Claves Eccleſiæ ac Po-'teſtatem Archiepiſcopalem multipliciter contem-'nendo:

'Nos eundem Dominum Johannem, ſicut præ-'mittitur, citatum publice & alta Voce præ-'conizari fecimus, ac ſic præconizatum, diutius 'expectatum, & nullo modo comparentem, repu-'tavimus, prout erat, merito contumacem, & in 'pœnam contumaciæ ſuæ hujuſmodi ipſum in 'Scriptis excommunicavimus, tunc ibidem.

'Et quia ex ſerie Præmiſſorum, & aliis per-'ſpicuis Indiciis, & factorum Evidentiis, conce-'pimus quod idem Dominus Johannes in defen-'ſionem hujuſmodi Erroris ſui, contra Claves 'Eccleſiæ ſe fortificat & incaſtellat, ut præmitti-'tur (quorum prætextu vehemens ſuſpitio Hære-'ſis atque Schiſmatis inſurgit) contra eundem 'decrevimus ipſum Dominum Johannem iterato

But at the Inſtance of our Lord the King, and our own Deſire to reduce the ſaid Sir John to the Unity of the Church, without bringing him to open Shame, we deferr'd for a long time all execution of the Premiſes.

But foraſmuch as we had it from the King's own Mouth, and under his Hand, that all his pains to reclaim this Man had proved vain and ineffectual; we thereupon decreed to ſummon the ſaid Sir John to appear before us at a certain time now paſt, to anſwer for and concerning the Premiſes; and we ſent our Officer with theſe our Citations to the ſaid Sir John, then dwelling at his Caſtle of Cowling.

To which our Officer we gave in Command, that he ſhould not in any wiſe enter the Caſtle of the ſaid Sir John without leave; but by the Mediation of one John Buttler, Door-Keeper to the Privy-Chamber of our Lord the King, he ſhou'd apply to Sir John himſelf, for his leave to enter his Caſtle, in order to give him a Citation; or at leaſt that he wou'd appear without the Caſtle, and ſuffer the Citation to be ſerv'd upon him.

But Sir John publickly anſwered the ſaid John Buttler, tho in the Premiſes he had made uſe of the King's Name, that he wou'd by no means be cited, nor ſuffer any manner of way ſuch Citation to be ſerved upon him.

Upon this faithful Account given us, that it was impoſſible to ſerve the ſaid Sir John perſonally with a Citation; and we being fully perſuaded thereof, decreed that he ſhou'd be cited by an Edict, which ſhou'd be publickly fix'd on the great Doors of the Cathedral Church in Rocheſter, which is but three Engliſh Miles from his ſaid Caſtle of Cowlyng. Accordingly we caus'd him to be ſo cited, and our Edict to be fix'd in publick and open View on the great Doors of the ſaid Church, charging him to appear before us on the ſecond Day of September now paſt, perſonally to anſwer to and for the Premiſes, and other Allegations of Heretical Pravity againſt him.

On the Day appointed we held a Court in the greater Chappel in our Caſtle of Leedes, in our Dioceſs, in which we then lived and reſided with our Court; and after the neceſſary proof of the Premiſes, and we had heard and receiv'd the Relation, as it is commonly reported in the Parts where the ſaid Sir John immures and fortifies himſelf in his ſaid Caſtle, and defends his Opinions, by contemning the Keys of the Church, and impugning the Archiepiſcopal Authority:

We cauſed Proclamation aloud and in open Court, to be made for the ſaid Sir John to appear; and after Proclamation made, and we had long waited, and he not appearing, we juſtly pronounced him, as he was, Contumacious; and then and there return'd him excommunicated, in Puniſhment for ſo high a Contumacy.

And becauſe from the Series of the Premiſes, and other plain Demonſtrations and Evidences of Fact, we apprehend that the ſaid Sir John ſtrengthens and fortifies himſelf in defence of his Errours againſt the Authority of the Church, as is premiſed (which gives great handle to ſuſpect him of Hereſy and Schiſm) we decreed againſt the ſaid Sir John, that he ſhou'd be a ſecond time cited perſonally, if he could be found; if not, by Edict, as before, to appear before us on the Saturday next after the Feaſt of the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt St. Matthew next enſuing, to ſhew, if he has reaſonable Cauſe, why he ought not to be proceeded againſt as a publick Heretick, Schiſmatick, and an Enemy of the Catholick Church, and why he ought not to be adjudg'd as ſuch, and the Aſſiſtance of the Secular Arm be ſolemnly call'd for againſt him; perſonally to propound, and further to anſwer, do, and receive concerning all and ſingular the Premiſes, what in Juſtice is meet.

At which time (namely, the Saturday next after the Feaſt of St. Matthew, being the 23d day of Septembre) as we held our Court in the Chapter-houſe of St. Pauls in London, with our Brethren, Richard Lord Biſhop of London, and Henry of Winchester in Seſſions with us, Sir Robert Morley Knight and Lieutenant of the Tower of London, appear'd in Court with the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and deliver'd him to us;

For he had been arreſted a little before by the King's Order, and confin'd to the Tower.

To the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle thus perſonally appearing, we repeated, in ſoft and moderate Terms, and in a manner very courteous and obliging, all our Proceedings againſt him, as they ſtand upon the Journal of the former Day; namely,

How he the ſaid Sir John ſtood preſented and charg'd by and upon the Articles above-mention'd, in Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of our ſaid Province.

And how he had been cited and excommunicated for his Contumacy.

And, tho by his Default it was come to this, we notwithſtanding ſhew'd our ſelves ready and willing to abſolve him.

But he the ſaid Sir John taking no notice of this our Overture, anſwer'd, He would gladly make Profeſſion, before us and my ſaid Brethren, of the Faith which he believ'd and maintain'd.

For which we giving leave, as he deſir'd, he drew out of his Boſom an indented Writing, and there openly read the Contents of it, and afterwards with his own hand preſented to us the ſaid Writing, touching the Articles whereof he was accus'd; of which this is the Copy.

I John Oldcaſtle Knight, and Lord Cobham, deſire it may be known to all Chriſtians, and I call God to witneſs, that I never have entertain'd, and, by the help of God, never will entertain any Perſuaſion, which is not conſiſtent with a firm and undoubting Belief of all the Sacraments, which were ordain'd and appointed by Chriſt himſelf for the uſe of his Church.

Moreover, that my Faith, as to the four Points alledg'd againſt me, might be more clearly underſtood, I declare,

Firſt of all, That I believe that in the adorable Sacrament of the Altar, the very Body of Chriſt does exiſt, under the Species of Bread: the ſame Body, I mean, that was born of his Mother Mary, that was crucify'd for us, that dy'd and was bury'd, and roſe again the third day from the Dead, and was exalted to the right hand of his eternal Father, where he now ſits Partaker with him in his Glory.

Then for the Sacrament of Penance, I believe it is chiefly neceſſary for all that deſire to be ſav'd, to amend their wicked Lives, and undergo ſuch a Penance for the ſinful Part of them, as by a true Confeſſion, an undiſſembled Contrition, and lawful Satisfaction, manifeſts it ſelf to be agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, without which none can hope for Salvation.

Thirdly, With reſpect to Images, I hold that they are no Ingredient in the Chriſtian Belief, but, long after the Publication of the Faith of Chriſt, were introduc'd into the World, by the permiſſion of the Church, to be as a Calendar to the Laity and the Ignorant, that by viſible Repreſentations of the Sufferings of Chriſt, and of the pious Lives and Martyrdoms of the Saints, the remembrance of thoſe things might the more eaſily be impreſs'd on their Minds: but if one ſo abuſes this Repreſentation, as to give that Worſhip to theſe Images of the Saints, which is due to the Saints themſelves, or rather to him to whom the Saints themſelves owe all Honour and Adoration, and putteth his Confidence in them, which is only to be plac'd in God, or is ſo affected towards theſe ſenſleſs Images, as to be more devoted to them than God, in my Opinion he is guilty of Idolatry, and wickedly ſins againſt God, the only Object of Worſhip.

Laſtly, I am fully perſuaded, that there is no abiding place upon Earth, but that we are all Pilgrims either on the way to Happineſs, or tending to Miſery: He that either knows not, or will not be inſtructed in, nor live in the Practice of the Commandments of God, it is in vain for him to expect Salvation, tho he went on Pilgrimage into all Quarters of the World: And on the other ſide, he that lives in Obedience to the Holy Commandments of God, will undoubtedly be ſav'd, tho he never went a ſtep on Pilgrimage in his Life, either to Rome, or Canterbury, or Compoſtell, or to any other Places.

Sir John having thus read his Writing, we with our Brethren the Biſhops abovementioned, and divers other Doctors and learned Men, held a Conſultation about the Contents of it: and by the Advice and Agreement of the ſame, we thus apply'd to the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, at the ſame Time and Place.

Look you, Sir John! in this Writing of yours, it muſt be confeſs'd there are contain'd many good things and right Catholick; but this day was appointed you to anſwer to other Points, which ſavour of Error and Hereſy, which your Declaration has not fully anſwer'd; and therefore you ought to explain your ſelf more clearly as to thoſe Points, and more particularly declare your Faith and Aſſertions expreſs'd in the ſaid Writing, viz.

Whether you hold, believe, and affirm, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after Conſecration by the Prieſt, there remaineth material Bread or not?

Alſo, whether you hold, believe and affirm, that in the Sacrament of Penance, it is neceſſary, where a Prieſt can be had, to confeſs your Sins to the Prieſt, ordain'd by the Church?

well of this matter, becauſe if you don't return a clear Anſwer to the Articles exhibited againſt you, within the time aſſign'd by the Judge, we may proceed to pronounce and declare you an Heretick.

But Sir John would abide by his former Anſwer, and afford us no other.

We therefore advis'd with our Brethren the Biſhops above-mention'd, and others of our Counſel, and by their Advice we declar'd to the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, what the holy Roman Church, following the Doctrines of St. Auſtin, St. Jerom, and St. Ambroſe, and other Fathers, in theſe Points, had determin'd; which Determinations all Catholicks were oblig'd to ſubmit to.

To which the ſaid Sir John gave for Anſwer,

That he would readily aſſent to and obſerve the Determinations and Deciſions of holy Church, and all that God requir'd him to believe and obſerve; but that our Lord the Pope, the Cardinals, the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, and other Prelates of the Church, had power to determine ſuch things, he would by no means affirm.

We, ſtill patiently bearing with him, in hopes he might be better inform'd by mature Deliberation, promis'd the ſaid Sir John, That certain Determinations, relating to the Points abovemention'd, and to which he ought to give a clearer Anſwer, ſhould be tranſlated from the Latin into Engliſh, that he might the more eaſily underſtand them, and they be publiſh'd for his Uſe.

And we commended and affectionately entreated him to prepare and deliver in a full and clear Anſwer to the ſame, on Monday next following.

And we caus'd theſe Determinations to be tranſlated the ſame day, and to be deliver'd into his own hands the next Sunday, the Tenor of which Determinations is as follows:

The Faith and Determination of the holy Catholick Church, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, is this, That after Conſecration by a Prieſt at Maſs, the Subſtance of the Bread is chang'd into the material Body of Chriſt, and the Subſtance of the Wine into the material Blood of Chriſt; therefore after Conſecration, there remaineth not any of the Subſtance of Bread and Wine, which were in both before it.

What Anſwer do you give to this Article?

Alſo Holy Church hath determin'd, that it is the Duty of every Chriſtian living in the World, to confeſs his Sins to a Prieſt, ordain'd by the Church, if he has the Opportunity of ſuch an one.

What are your Sentiments of this Article?

Chriſt ordain'd St. Peter to be his Vicar on Earth, whoſe See is the Church of Rome; and that all the Succeſſors of Peter, who are now call'd the Popes of Rome, ſhould ſucceed in the ſame Power and Authority with which Chriſt inveſted him; by whoſe ſpecial Power are conſtituted and ordain'd Prelates in particular Churches, as Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Curates, and the reſt of the Eccleſiaſtical Order; to which all Chriſtians owe Obedience, according to the Traditions of the Roman Church.

This is the Determination of Holy Church, and what is your Opinion of this Article?

Beſides theſe, the Holy Church hath ordain'd, that it is the indiſpenſible Duty of every Chriſtian Man to go on Pilgrimage to holy Places, and there to adore the ſacred Relicks of Apoſtles,

Martyrs,

How do you hold this Article?

On Monday the 25th of the ſaid Month of September, we aſſembled with our Brethren the Biſhops above-mention'd, with the Addition by our Order and Command, of our venerable Brother Benedict, by the Grace of God Biſhop of Bangor.

And our Counſellors and Officers, namely, Mr. Henry Ware, Official of Canterbury; Philip Morgan, Doctor of both Laws; Howel Kyffen, John Kemp and William Carleton, Doctors of the Canon Law; and John Witnam, Thomas Palmer, Robert Wombervel, John Withead, Robert Chamberlain, Richard Doddington and Thomas Walden, Doctors in Divinity; alſo James Cole and John Stevens, our Notaries, both call'd to aſſiſt, and take the Examinations, in the Tryal;

Were all and every of them ſworn upon the holy Evangeliſts, as they would anſwer it to God and the World, faithfully to diſcharge their Duty that day, in the Matter and Cauſe above-mention'd.

After this Sir Robert Morley Knight, and Lieutenant of the Tower of London, brought Sir John Oldcaſtle into Court, and ſet him before us:

To whom we affably and courteouſly repeated the Proceedings of the former Day, and, as before, told him, How he had been, and ſtill ſtood, excommunicated; and we intreated and beſought him to deſire and accept of Abſolution, in the uſual Form of the Church.

To which Sir John then anſwer'd in theſe words:

That he deſir'd no Abſolution from them, but only from God.

Upon this we pray'd the ſaid Sir John, with an Air of Kindneſs and Concern, to give his full Anſwer to the Articles exhibited againſt him.

And firſt we demanded what he had to ſay about the Sacrament of the Euchariſt? To which Article, among other things, he anſwer'd and ſaid,

That as Chriſt, when he liv'd upon Earth, had the Divine and Human Nature united together in him, and the Divine was veil'd and cover'd under the Human, and only the Human viſible and outward; ſo in the Sacrament of the Altar, there is the very Body of Chriſt, and real Bread too; the Bread is the thing we ſee with our Eyes, and the Body of Chriſt, which is hidden under it, we do not ſee.

And the Faith about this Sacrament of the Altar, expreſs'd in the Writing which we ſent to him, as determin'd by the holy Roman Church and the Fathers, he expreſly deny'd to be the Determination of the Church; or if it was the Determination of the Church, he aſſerted ſuch Determination to be made contrary to the Holy Scriptures, and after the Church was aggrandiz'd and corrupted, and not before.

To the Articles about Penance and Confeſſion, he anſwer'd in theſe words:

That if any one is ſo intangled in the Snares of Sin, that he knows not how to extricate himſelf, it is adviſable and expedient for him to apply to ſome pious and diſcreet Miniſter for Ghoſtly Counſel: but that he ſhould confeſs his Sin to his own or any other Prieſt, tho he had neuer ſo good an Opportunity, is not at all neceſſary to Salvation, becauſe ſuch a Sin can be forgiven only upon Contrition, and on that alone can the Sinner be clear'd.

Concerning the Adoration of the holy Croſs, he then declar'd and aſſerted,——That the Body of Chriſt, which hung upon the Croſs, ought only to be worſhipp'd, becauſe that Body was and is the only adorable Croſs.

And being ask'd what Honour he allow'd to the Image of the Croſs? he anſwer'd in theſe expreſs words;

That to keep it clean and in his Cloſet, was the only Honour he vouchſafed it.

As to the Power of the Keys, our Lord the Pope, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates, he ſaid,

The Pope and we together made up the true Antichriſt: the Pope was the Head, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates the Body and Limbs, and the Friars the Tail of Antichriſt: To which Pope, Archbiſhops, and Prelates there was no Obedience due, any further than they imitated Chriſt, and Peter, in their Lives, Manners, and Converſation; and that he is the Succeſſor of Peter, who follows him in the Purity of his Life and Converſation, and no other.

The ſaid Sir John added, addreſſing himſelf with a loud Voice, and extended Hands, to the People that were preſent;

Thoſe who ſit in Judgment upon me, and are deſirous to condemn me, will ſeduce you all, and themſelves, and lead ye to Hell; take therefore good heed of them.

Upon his ſaying this, we apply'd to the ſaid Sir John, and beſought him, with Tears in our Eyes, and exhorted him in the moſt compaſſionate manner we could, to return to the Unity of the Church, to believe and embrace the Faith and Doctrine of holy Church. To which he return'd this peremptory Anſwer;

That he would not believe nor maintain otherwiſe than he had before declar'd.

Seeing therefore he was ſo harden'd in his Errors, that we had no hopes of working on him to renounce them, we proceeded, with regret and bitterneſs of Heart, to pronounce the following definitive Sentence.

In the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas, by Divine Permiſſion, Archbiſhop and humble Miniſter of the holy Church of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See.

Whereas in our laſt Convocation of the Clergy of our Province of Canterbury, holden in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London, after Conſultation upon ſeveral heretical Tenets, and ſtrict Inquiry made who were the Authors and Abettors of the ſame, Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and Lord Cobham, was detected and preſented of and for the ſaid Hereſies, as having given great Scandal throughout our Province of Canterbury, by openly and avowedly profeſſing the ſame; upon the Addreſs and Repreſentation of all the Clergy in the ſaid Convocation for a Proceſs, we proceeded according to Law againſt the ſaid Sir John, and (as God knows) with all the Equity and Favour that could poſſibly be ſhew'd: and following the ſteps of Chriſt, who would not the Death of a Sinner, but rather that he ſhould be converted and live, we endeavour'd to reclaim the ſaid Sir John, and try'd all ways and means that we could deviſe to reduce him to the Unity of the Church, declaring unto him the Doctrines, Tenets, and Determinations of the Holy Roman and Univerſal Church, relating to thoſe Points.

And tho we found he had apoſtatiz'd from the Catholick Faith, and was ſo confirm'd in his Error, that he would not confeſs it, nor clear himſelf of it, nor diſavow it; yet forbearing him in paternal Love, and out of a ſincere Deſire of his Salvation, we allow'd him a competent time for Deliberation, and wherein he might repent and reform himſelf.

But foraſmuch as we have experienc'd the ſaid Sir John to be incorrigible and irreclaimable, we at laſt with Grief and Heavineſs of Heart, in obedience to what the Law requires, proceed to give Sentence definitive againſt him.

In the Name of Chriſt, and having his Honour only in view; foraſmuch as we have found by divers Acts done, produc'd, and exhibited by Indications, Preſumptions and Proofs, and many other kinds of Evidence, that Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight is really and truly an Heretick, and a Follower of Hereticks, againſt the Faith and Religion of the holy Roman and Catholick Church, and particularly with reſpect to the Sacraments of the Euchariſt and Penance; that, as a Child of Darkneſs and Iniquity, he had harden'd his Heart to that degree, that he refuſes to hear the Voice of his Paſtor, and will not be prevail'd upon by gentle Monitions, nor reduc'd by ſoft Perſuaſions, tho the Merits of our Cauſe, and the Demerits of his own, he had diligently canvaſs'd and weigh'd, and ſo aggravated the Wickedneſs of his Error by his damnable Obſtinacy:

We unwilling that he ſhould contract further Degrees of Guilt, by infecting others with the Contagion of Hereſy, by the Advice and Conſent of Men famous for Diſcretion and Wiſdom, our venerable Brothers, the Lords, Richard Biſhop of London, Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Benedict Biſhop of Bangor, and ſome other Doctors of Divinity, and of Canon and Civil Law, and other religious and learned Perſons, call'd to our Aſſiſtance, we do peremptorily and definitively, by this preſent Writing, judge, declare, and condemn the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle for an Heretick, convicted of the deteſtable Crime of Hereſy, and utterly refuſing to be reconcil'd to the Church by Repentance, and an Apoſtate from thoſe Doctrines, in the above-mention'd Articles eſpecially, which the holy Roman and Catholick Church holds, teaches, and hath determin'd; and we leave him from henceforth as an Heretick, to the ſecular Judgment.

And furthermore, we have excommunicated, and by theſe Preſents do denounce excommunicated, the ſaid Heretick, and all others, who ſhall hereafter, in favour of his Error, countenance, defend, or afford him any Counſel, Aid, or Comfort; deeming ſuch Perſon or Perſons as Abettors, Encouragers, and Defenders of Hereticks.

And that theſe Premiſes might be promulg'd and known to all Chriſtians, we charge and enjoin you, foraſmuch as the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle was and is condemn'd by us for an Heretick, a Schiſmatick, and as erroneous in the above-mention'd Articles, and alſo all other Perſons, who out of Favour or Affection to his Error, ſhall hereafter countenance, defend, or afford him any Counſel, Aid, or Comfort, are excommunicated, as deem'd

Abetters, Encouragers, and Patrons of Hereticks, according to our ſaid definitive Sentence, to give Orders and Directions to your Prieſts and Curates of your reſpective Cities and Dioceſes, in their reſpective Churches, when there is the greateſt Congregation of People, to declare, publiſh, and expoſe, with loud and audible Voice, and in our Mother-Tongue, the ſaid Heretick, and Hereticks, according to our ſaid definitive Sentence, and the Order obſerv'd in this Proceſs; to the end that any wrong Notions, which poſſibly the People may have given into, concerning theſe Matters, and our Proceedings upon them, might be rectify'd by this publick Declaration.

Moreover, we will and command you the Biſhops here preſent, to take Copies hereof word for word, and ſend one to each Biſhop of our Province of Canterbury, that ſo all and every of them may publiſh, intimate, and declare, and cauſe by their reſpective Prieſts and Curates to be publiſh'd, in their ſeveral Cities and Dioceſes, the Manner and Form of this our Proceeding, and alſo the ſaid Sentence pronounc'd by us, and all and ſingular the Contents of the ſame.

And, Laſtly, we require of you and them, that this Buſineſs be diſpatch'd with all convenient Expedition; and that you and they do duly and punctually adviſe and certify us of the time of receiving theſe Preſents, and how this our Command has been executed, by your and their Letters Patents, according to the Tenor hereof.

The Tryal of Sir Thomas More Knight, Lord Chancellor of England, for denying the King's Supremacy, the 26th of Henry VIII. A. D. 1535.

A Bill being preferred in Parliament, November 1534. to attaint Elizabeth Barton, and ſeveral others of High Treaſon, Biſhop Fiſher and Sir Thomas More were alſo brought into it for Miſpriſion of Treaſon, for the refuſing of the Oath of Succeſſion——Says my Lord Herbert. The ſame Author avows the Bill did ſo paſs; but Sir Thomas's Great-Grandſon, in his Life, ſhews the contrary, and that notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, Duke of Norfolk, and Secretary Cromwell, by the King's Command, went to him and preſſed him to a Compliance; yet the Chancellor influenc'd the King ſo far, that the matter of Miſpriſion was dropt.

Sir Thomas was alſo examin'd at other times by the Lord Chancellor, Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, Mr. Secretary, and others of the Privy Council, who preſs'd him, with all the Arguments they could think of, to own the King's Supremacy in direct and open Terms, or plainly to deny it; but he being loth to aggravate the King's Diſpleaſure, would ſay no more than that the Statute was like a two-edged Sword, for if he ſpoke againſt it, he ſhould be the Cauſe of the Death of his Body; and if he aſſented to it, he ſhould purchaſe the Death of his Soul. Thoſe Examinations being over, Richard Rich, newly made Sollicitor General, and afterwards Lord Rich, with Sir Richard Southwell, and Mr. Palmer, Secretary Cromwell's Man, were ſent by the King to take away his Books. Rich pretending Friendſhip to him, and proteſting he had no Commiſſion to talk with him about the former Affair of the Supremacy, he put a Caſe to him thus: If it were enacted by Parliament that Richard Rich ſhould be King, and that it ſhould be Treaſon in any body to deny it, what Offence it were to contravene that Act? Sir Thomas More anſwer'd, That he ſhould offend if he ſaid ſo, becauſe he was bound by the Act; but that this was caſus levis. Whereupon Sir Thomas ſaid, he would propoſe a higher Caſe: Suppoſe it were enacted by Parliament, Quod Deus non ſit Deus, and that it were Treaſon to contravene, whether it were not an Offence to ſay it according to the ſaid Act? Rich reply'd, yea; but ſaid withal, I will propoſe a middle Caſe, becauſe this is too high: The King, you know, is conſtituted ſupreme Head of the Church upon Earth; why ſhould not you, Maſter More, accept him for ſuch? as you would me, if I were made King by the aforeſaid Suppoſition. More anſwered, the Caſe was not the ſame, becauſe, ſaid he, a Parliament can make a King, and depoſe him; and that every Parliament Man may give his Conſent thereunto, but that a Subject cannot be bound ſo in the Caſe of Supremacy. Quia conſenſum ab eo ad Parliamentum præbere non poteſt (ſo ſays my Lord Herbert) it is in my Copy if it be not miſtaken, & quanquam Rex ſic acceptus ſit in Anglia, plurimæ tamen Partes exteræ idem non affirmant.

Sir Thomas having continued a Priſoner in the Tower ſomewhat more than a Twelvemonth, for he was committed about the middle of April 1534, and was brought to his Tryal on the 7th of May 1535. He went into the Court leaning on his Staff, becauſe he was much weakened by his Impriſonment, but appeared with a cheerful and compoſed Countenance. The Perſons conſtituted to try him, were,

Sir Thomas Audley, Lord Chancellor,	Sir Richard Leiceſter,
Sir John Fitz-James, Lord Chief Juſtice,	Sir John Port,
Sir John Baldwin,	Sir John Spelman,
	Sir Walter Luke,
	Sir Anthony Fitz-Herbert.

The Indictment was very long, but where to procure a Copy of it, I could never learn; it's ſaid in general, it contain'd all the Crimes that could be laid to the charge of any notorious Malefactor; and Sir Thomas profeſſed it was ſo long, that he could ſcarce remember the third part of what was objected therein againſt him. It was read aloud by the Attorney-General; and Sir Thomas's mortal Sin ſeem'd plainly to be his refuſing the Oath of Succeſſion, already mention'd.

To prove this, his double Examination in the Tower was alledged againſt him, the firſt before Secretary Cromwell, Thomas Beade, John Tregonnel, &c. to whom he profeſſed he had given over all Thoughts of Titles either to Popes or Princes, tho the whole World ſhould be given him, he being fully determined only to ſerve God. The ſecond time before the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, Earl of Wiltſhire, and others, before whom he compared that Oath to a two-edged Sword, as before obſerved.

Preſently after the Indictment was read, the Lord Chancellor, and the Duke of Norfolk, who it ſeems was one of the Commiſſioners, tho his Name is not in the Liſt above, ſpoke to him to this effect: You ſee now how grievouſly you have offended his Majeſty; yet he is ſo very merciful, that if you will lay aſide your Obſtinacy, and change your Opinion, we hope you may obtain Pardon and Favour in his ſight. But Sir Thomas ſtoutly reply'd, Moſt Noble Lords, I have great reaſon to return thanks to your Honours for this your great Civility, but I beſeech Almighty God, that I may continue in the Mind I am, in thro his Grace, unto Death.

Then having Intimation given that he might ſay what he thought fit in his own Defence, he began thus; When I conſider the length of my Accuſation, and what heinous Matters are laid to my charge, I am ſtruck with Fear, leſt my Memory and Underſtanding, which are both impaired, together with my bodily Health, thro a long Indiſpoſition contracted by my Impriſonment, ſhou'd now fail me ſo far, as to make me incapable of making ſuch ready Anſwers in my Defence, as otherwiſe I might have done.

The Court being ſenſible of his Weakneſs, ordered a Chair to be brought in, wherein he might ſeat himſelf, which he did accordingly, and then went on thus. This my Indictment, if I miſtake not, conſiſts of four principal Heads, each of which I purpoſe, God willing, to anſwer in order. As to the firſt Crime objected againſt me, that I have been an Enemy out of ſtubborneſs of Mind to the King's ſecond Marriage; I confeſs, I always told his Majeſty my Opinion of it, according to the Dictates of my Conſcience, which I neither ever would, nor ought to have concealed: for which I am ſo far from thinking my ſelf guilty of High Treaſon, that on the contrary, being required to give my Opinion by ſo great a Prince in an Affair of ſo much importance, upon which the Peace of the Kingdom depended; I ſhould have baſely flatter'd him, and my own Conſcience, had not I ſpoke the Truth as I thought: Then indeed I might juſtly have been eſteemed a moſt wicked Subject, and a perfidious Traytor to God. If I have offended the King herein; if it can be an Offence to tell one's Mind freely, when his Sovereign puts the Queſtion to him; I ſuppoſe I have been ſufficiently puniſh'd already for the Fault, by the great Afflictions I have endured, by the loſs of my Eſtate, and my tedious Impriſonment, which has continued already near fifteen Months.

The ſecond Charge againſt me is, That I have violated the Act made in the laſt Parliament: that is, being a Priſoner, and twice examined, I would not, out of a malignant, perfidious, obſtinate and traitorous Mind, tell them my Opinion, whether the King was Supreme Head of the Church or not: but confeſſed then, that I had nothing to do with that Act, as to the Juſtice or Injuſtice of it; becauſe I had no Benefice in the Church: yet then I proteſted, that I had never ſaid nor done any thing againſt it; neither can any one Word or Action of mine be alledged, or produced, to make me culpable. Nay, this I own was then my Anſwer to their Honours, that I would think of nothing elſe hereafter, but of the bitter Paſſions of our Bleſſed Saviour, and of my Exit out of this miſerable World. I wiſh no body any harm, and if this does not keep me alive, I deſire not to live; by all which I know, I would not tranſgreſs any Law, or become guilty of any treaſonable Crime: for this Statute, nor no other Law in the World can puniſh any Man for his Silence, ſeeing they can do no more than puniſh Words or Deeds; 'tis God only that is the Judge of the Secrets of our Hearts.

Attorney. Sir Thomas, Tho we have not one Word or Deed of yours to object againſt you, yet we have your Silence, which is an evident ſign of the Malice of your Heart; becauſe no dutiful Subject, being lawfully asked this Queſtion, will refuſe to anſwer it.

Sir Thomas More. Sir, my Silence is no ſign of any Malice in my Heart, which the King himſelf muſt own by my Conduct upon divers Occaſions; neither doth it convince any Man of the Breach of the Law: for it is a Maxim amongſt the Civilians and Canoniſts, Qui tacet conſentire videtur, he that holds his peace, ſeems to give his Conſent. And as to what you ſay, that no good Subject will refuſe to give a direct Anſwer; I do really think it to be the Duty of every good Subject, except he be ſuch a Subject as will be a bad bad Chriſtian, rather to obey God than Man; to be more cautious to offend his Conſcience, than of any thing elſe in the whole World; eſpecially if his Conſcience be not the Occaſion of ſome Sedition and great Injury to his Prince and Country: for I do here ſincerely proteſt, that I never revealed it to any Man alive.

I come now to the third principal Article in my Indictment, by which I am accuſed of malicious Attempts, traiterous Endeavours, and perfidious Practices againſt that Statute, as the Words therein do alledge, becauſe I wrote, while in the Tower, divers Packets of Letters to Biſhop Fiſher; whereby I exhorted him to violate the ſame Law, and encouraged him in the like Obſtinacy. I do inſiſt that theſe Letters be produced and read in Court, by which I may be either acquitted or convinced of a Lye; but becauſe you ſay the Biſhop burnt them all, I will here tell you the whole truth of the matter: Some of my Letters related only to our private Affairs, as about our old Friendſhip and Acquaintance: One of them was in anſwer to his, wherein he deſired me to let him know what Anſwers I made upon my Examinations concerning the Oath of Supremacy, and what I wrote to him upon it was this, That I had already ſettled my Conſcience, and let him ſatisfy his according to his own Mind. God is my Witneſs, and as I hope he will ſave my Soul, I gave him no other Anſwer; and this I preſume is no Breach of the Laws.

As to the principal Crime objected againſt me, that I ſhould ſay upon my Examination in the Tower, That this Law was like a two-edged Sword; for in conſenting to it, I ſhould endanger my Soul, and in rejecting it ſhould loſe my Life: it's evidently concluded, as you ſay, from this Anſwer, becauſe Fiſher made the like, that he was in the ſame Conſpiracy. To this I reply, That my Anſwer there was conditional, if there were both danger either in allowing or diſallowing that Act; and therefore like a two-edged Sword, it ſeem'd a hard thing it ſhould be put upon me, who had never hitherto contradicted it either in Word or Deed. Theſe were my Words, what the Biſhop anſwered, I know not: if his Anſwer was like mine, it did not proceed from any Conſpiracy of ours, but from the Similitude of our Learning and Underſtanding. To conclude, I do ſincerely avouch, that I never ſpoke a Word againſt this Law to any Man living, tho perhaps the King's Majeſty has been told the contrary.

There was little or no reply made to this full Anſwer, by Mr. Attorney, or any body elſe; the word Malice was what was principally inſiſted on, and in the mouths of the whole Court, tho for proof of it no body could produce either Words or Actions: nevertheleſs, to ſet the beſt gloſs that could be upon the matter, Mr. Rich was called to give Evidence in open Court, upon Oath, which he immediately did, affirming what we have already related concerning a Conference between him and Sir Thomas in the Tower; to which Sir Thomas made anſwer, If I were a Man, my Lords, that had no regard to my Oath, I had had no occaſion to be here at this time, as is well known to every body, as a Criminal; and if this Oath, Mr. Rich, which you have taken be true, then I pray I may never ſee God's Face, which, were it otherwiſe, is an Imprecation I would not be guilty of to gain the whole World.

More having recited in the Face of the Court all the Diſcourſe they had together in the Tower, as it truly and ſincerely was, he added; In good Faith, Mr. Rich, I am more concerned for your Perjury, than my own Danger; and I muſt tell you, that neither my ſelf, nor any body elſe to my knowledge, ever took you to be a Man of ſuch Reputation, that I or any other would have any thing to do with you in a Matter of Importance. You know that I have been acquainted with your manner of Life and Converſation a long time, even from your Youth to the preſent Juncture, for we lived in the ſame Pariſh; and you very well know, I am ſorry I am forced to ſpeak it, you always lay under the Odium of a very lying Tongue, of a great Gameſter, and of no good Name and Character either there or in the Temple, where you was educated. Can it therefore ſeem likely to your Lordſhips, that I ſhould in ſo weighty an Affair as this, act ſo unadviſedly, as to truſt Mr. Rich, a Man I had always ſo mean an Opinion of, in reference to his Truth and Honeſty, ſo very much before my Sovereign Lord the King, to whom I am ſo deeply indebted for his manifold Favours, or any of his noble and grave Counſellors, that I ſhould only impart to Mr. Rich the Secrets of my Conſcience in reſpect to the King's Supremacy, the particular Subject, and only Point about which I have been ſo long preſſed to explain my ſelf? which I never did, nor never would reveal, when the Act was once made, either to the King himſelf, or any of his Privy Counſellors, as is well known to your Honours, who have been ſent upon no other account at ſeveral times by his Majeſty to me in the Tower. I refer it to your Judgments, my Lords, whether this can ſeem credible to any of your Lordſhips?

But ſuppoſing what Mr. Rich has ſwore ſhould be true, ſeeing the Words were ſpoke in familiar and private Converſation, and that there was nothing at all aſſerted, but only Caſes put without any offenſive Circumſtances; it cannot in juſtice be ſaid, that they were ſpoke maliciouſly, and where there is no Malice, there is no Offence. Beſides, my Lords, I cannot think ſo many reverend Biſhops, ſo many honourable Perſonages, and ſo many virtuous and learned Men, of whom the Parliament conſiſted in the enacting of that Law, ever meant to have any Man puniſh'd with Death, in whom no Malice could be found, taking the Word Malitia for Malevolentia; for if Malitia be taken in a general Signification for any Crime, there is no Man can be free: Wherefore this Word Maliciouſly is ſo far ſignificant in this Statute, as the Word Forcible is in that of Forcible Entry; for in that Caſe if any enter peaceably, and puts his Adverſary out forcibly, it is no Offence, but if he enters forcibly, he ſhall be puniſhed by that Statute.

Beſides, all the unſpeakable Goodneſs of his Majeſty towards me, who has been ſo many ways my ſingular good Lord, and graciouſly he, I ſay, who has ſo dearly loved and truſted me, even from my firſt Entrance into his Royal Service, vouchſafing to honour me with the Dignity of being one of his Privy Council, and has moſt generouſly promoted me to Offices of great Reputation and Honour, and laſtly to that of Lord High-Chancellor, which Honour he never did to any Layman before, the ſame being the higheſt Dignity in this famous Kingdom, and next to the King's Royal Perſon, ſo far beyond my Merits and Qualifications; honouring and exalting me by his incomparable Benignity, for theſe twenty Years and upwards, heaping continual Favours upon me, and now at laſt, at my own humble Requeſt, giving me liberty to dedicate the Remainder of my Life to the Service of God for the better ſaving of my Soul, has been pleaſed to diſcharge and free me from that weighty Dignity; before which he had ſtill heaped more and more Honours upon me: I ſay, all this his Majeſty's Bounty, ſo long and ſo plentifully conferred upon me, is enough, in my opinion, to invalidate the ſcandalous Accuſation ſo injuriouſly ſurmized and urged by this Man againſt me.

This touched the Reputation of Mr. Rich to the very quick, and was a Slur that could not be effaced, without the utmoſt difficulty; and the only way to do it, was, if poſſible, to produce ſubſtantial and creditable Witneſs to atteſt the contrary: and therefore he cauſed Sir Richard Southwell, and Mr. Palmer, who were in the ſame Room with Sir Thomas and Mr. Rich, when they conferred together, to be ſworn as to the Words that paſſed between them. Whereupon Mr. Palmer depoſed, That he was ſo buſy in thruſting Sir Thomas's Books into a Sack, that he took no notice of their Talk. And Sir R. Southwell likewiſe ſwore, That becauſe his Buſineſs was only to take care of conveying his Books away, he gave no ear to their Diſcourſe.

Sir Thomas having urged other Reaſons in his own Defence, to the diſcrediting of Mr. Rich's Evidence; the Judge proceeded to give the Charge to the Jury. Whether Sir Thomas had challenged any of the Pannel, when they were returned to ſerve, does not appear; but the twelve Perſons on whoſe Verdict his Life now depended, were theſe:

Sir Thomas Palmer, Knt.	Jaſper Leake, Gent.
Sir Thomas Peirt, Knt.	William Browne, Gent.
George Lovell, Eſq;	Thomas Billington, Gent.
Thomas Burbage, Eſq;	John Parnel, Gent.
Geoffry Chamber, Gent.	Richard Bellame, Gent.
Edward Stockmore, Gent.	George Stoakes, Gent.

Now the Jury having withdrawn, ſcarce were out a quarter of an Hour before they return'd with their Verdict, by which they found the Priſoner guilty; upon which the Lord Chancellor, as chief in the Commiſſion for this Tryal, immediately began to proceed to Judgement: which Sir Thomas obſerving, he ſaid to him, My Lord, when I was concern'd in the Law, the Practice in ſuch Caſes was to ask the Priſoner before Sentence, whether he had any thing to offer why Judgment ſhould not be pronounced againſt him. The Lord Chancellor hereupon ſtopping his Sentence, wherein he had already proceeded in part, asked Sir Thomas, What he was able to ſay to the contrary? who preſently made anſwer in theſe words: For as much as, my Lords, this Indictment is grounded upon an Act of Parliament, directly repugnant to the Laws of God, and his Holy Church, the Supreme Government of which, or of any part thereof, no Temporal Perſon may by any Law preſume to take upon him, that which of right belongs to the See of Rome, which by ſpecial Prerogative was granted by the Mouth of our Saviour Chriſt himſelf to St. Peter, and the Biſhops of Rome his Succeſſors only, whilſt he lived, and was perſonally preſent here on Earth: it is therefore, amongſt Catholick Chriſtians, inſufficient in Law, to charge any Chriſtian to obey it. And in order to the Proof of his Aſſertion, he declared among other things, That whereas this Kingdom alone being but one Member, and a ſmall part of the Church, was not to make a particular Law, diſagreeing with the general Law of Chriſt's univerſal Catholick Church; no more than the City of London, being but one Member, in reſpect to the whole Kingdom, might enact a Law againſt an Act of Parliament, to be binding to the whole Realm: ſo he ſhewed farther, That Law was even contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom yet unrepealed, as might evidently be ſeen by Magna Charta, wherein are theſe Words; Eccleſia Anglicana libera ſit, & habet omnia jura integra, & libertates ſuas illæſas: And it is contrary alſo to that ſacred Oath which the King's Majeſty himſelf, and every other Chriſtian Prince, always take with great Solemnity, at their Coronations. So great was Sir Thomas's Zeal, that he further alledg'd, That it was worſe in the Kingdom of England to refuſe Obedience to the See of Rome, than for any Child to do to his natural Parent: for, as St. Paul ſaid to the Corinthians, I have regenerated you, my Children, in Chriſt; ſo might that worthy Pope of Rome, St. Gregory the Great, ſay of us Engliſhmen, Ye are my Children, becauſe I have given you everlaſting Salvation: for by St. Auguſtine, and his Followers, his immediate Meſſengers, England firſt received the Chriſtian Faith, which is a far higher and better Inheritance than any carnal Father can leave to his Children; for a Son is only by a Generation, we are by Regeneration made the ſpiritual Children of Chriſt and the Pope.

Here the Lord Chancellor took him up, and ſaid; That ſeeing all the Biſhops, Univerſities, and the moſt learned Men in the Kingdom had agreed to that Act, it was much wondred that he alone ſhould ſo ſtiffly ſtickle, and ſo vehemently argue there againſt it.

His Anſwer was, That if the Number of Biſhops and Univerſities were ſo material as his Lordſhip ſeem'd to make it; then, my Lord, I ſee no reaſon why that thing ſhould make any Change in my Conſcience: for I doubt not, but of the learned and virtuous Men now alive, I do not ſpeak only of this Realm, but of all Chriſtendom, there are ten to one of my mind in this matter; but if I ſhould take notice of thoſe learned Doctors and virtuous Fathers that are already dead, many of whom are Saints in Heaven, I am ſure there are far more, who all the while they lived thought in this Caſe as I do now. And therefore, my Lord, I do not think my ſelf bound to conform my Conſcience to the Counſel of one Kingdom, againſt the general Conſent of all Chriſtendom.

Here it ſeems the Lord Chancellor, not willing to take the whole Load of this Condemnation upon himſelf, asked in open Court the Advice of Sir John Fitz-James, the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, Whether the Indictment was valid, or no? who wiſely anſwered thus: My Lords all, By St. Gilliam (for that was always his Oath) I muſt needs confeſs, That if the Act of Parliament be not unlawful, then the Indictment is not in my Conſcience invalid. Some have wrote, That the Lord Chancellor ſhould hereupon ſay, Quid adhuc deſideramus teſtimonium, reus eſt mortis, and then preſently proceeded to give Sentence to this effect:

That he ſhould be carried back to the Tower of London, by the Help of William Kingſton, Sheriff, and from thence drawn on a Hurdle through the City of London to Tyburn, there to be hanged till he ſhould be half dead; that then he ſhould be cut down alive, his Privy Parts cut off, his Belly ripped, his Bowels burnt, his four Quarters ſet up over four Gates of the City, and his Head upon London-Bridg.

This was the Judgment pronounc'd upon this great Man, who had deſerv'd ſo well both of the King and Kingdom, and for which Paulus Jovius calls King Henry VIII. another Phalaris.

This ſevere Sentence was afterwards, by the King's Pardon, chang'd to beheading, becauſe he had borne the greateſt Office in the Kingdom; of which mercy of the King's, word being brought to Sir Thomas, he merrily ſaid, God forbid the King ſhould uſe any more ſuch mercy to any of my Friends, and God bleſs all my Poſterity from ſuch Pardons.

When he had receiv'd Sentence of Death, he ſpake thus with a reſolute and ſedate Aſpect: Well, ſeeing I am condemn'd, God knows how juſtly, I will freely ſpeak for the disburdening my Conſcience, what I think of this Law. When I perceiv'd it was the King's Pleaſure to ſift out from whence the Pope's Authority was deriv'd; I confeſs I ſtudy'd ſeven years together to find out the truth of it, and I could not meet with the Works of any one Doctor, approv'd by the Church, that avouch a Layman was, or ever could be the Head of the Church.

Chancellor. Would you be eſteem'd wiſer, or to have a ſincerer Conſcience than all the Biſhops, learned Doctors, Nobility and Commons of this Realm?

More. I am able to produce againſt one Biſhop which you can produce on your ſide, a hundred holy and Catholick Biſhops for my Opinion; and againſt one Realm, the Conſent of Chriſtendom for a thouſand years.

Norfolk. Sir Thomas, you ſhew your obſtinate and malicious Mind.

More. Noble Sir, it's no Malice or Obſtinacy that makes me ſay this, but the juſt neceſſity of the Cauſe obliges me to it for the Diſcharge of my Conſcience; and I call God to witneſs, that nothing but this has excited me to it.

After this the Judges kindly offering him their favourable Audience, if he had any thing elſe to ſay; he anſwer'd moſt mildly and charitably, I have no more to ſay, but that as the bleſſed Apoſtle St. Paul, as we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, was preſent, and conſenting to the Protomartyr Stephen, keeping their Clothes that ſtoned him to death, and yet they are both now holy Saints in Heaven, and there ſhall continue Friends to Eternity; ſo I verily truſt, and ſhall therefore heartily pray, that albeit your Lordſhips have been on Earth my Judges to Condemnation, yet that we may hereafter meet joyfully together in Heaven to our everlaſting Salvation: and God preſerve you, eſpecially my Sovereign Lord the King, and grant him faithful Counſellors.

Sir Thomas, after his Condemnation, was conducted from the Bar to the Tower, an Axe being carry'd before him, with the Edge towards him.

Firſte, after Proclamation made, and the Commiſſion red, the Lieutenant of the Tower, Maſter Tho. Bridges, brought the Priſoner to the Barre; then Silence was commaunded, and Sendall ſaid to the Priſoner as foloweth:

Sendall. Nicholas Throckmorton Knighte, hold vp thy hande, Thou art before this time indited of High Treaſon, &c. that thou then and there didſt falſly and traiterouſly, &c. conſpire and imagine the Death of the Queenes Majeſtie, &c. and falſly and traiterouſly didſt leuie Warre againſte the Queen within hir Realm, &c. and alſo thou waſt adherente to the Queenes Enimies within hir Realm, giuing to them Ayde and Comfort, &c. and alſo falſly and trayterouſly didſt conſpire and intend to depoſe and deprive the Queen of hir Royal Eſtate, and ſo finally deſtroy hir, &c. and alſo thou didſt falſly and traiterouſly deuiſe and conclude to take violently the Tower of London, &c. Of al which Treaſons and euery of them in Maner and Forme, &c. art thou giltie or not giltie?

Throckmorton. May it pleaſe you my Lords and Maiſters, which be authoriſed by the Queenes Commiſſion to be Judges this day, to giue me leaue to ſpeake a fewe words, which doth both concerne you and me, before I aunſwere to the Enditement, and not altogithers impertinente to the Matter, and then pleade to the Enditemente.

Bromley. No, the Order is not ſo, you muſt firſt pleade whether you be giltie or no.

Throckmorton. If that be your Order and Law, judge accordingly to it.

Hare. You muſt firſte aunſwer to the Matter wherwith you are charged, and then you may talke at your pleaſure.

Throck-

Throckmorton. But things ſpoken out of place wer as good not ſpoken.

Bromley. Theſe bee but delayes to ſpende time, therfore anſwer as the Law willeth you.

Throckmorton. My Lords, I pray you make not too muche haſt with me, neither thinke not long for your Diner, for my Caſe requireth leyſure, and you haue well dined when you haue done Juſtice truely. Chriſt ſaid, Bleſſed are they that hunger and thirſt for Righteouſneſſe.

Bromley. I can forbeare my Dinner as well as you, and care as little as you peradventure.

Shrewsbury. Come you hither to checke us Throckmorton; we will not bee ſo uſed, no, no, I for my parte haue forborne my Breakfaſt, Dinner and Supper, to ſerve the Queene.

Throckmorton. Yea, my good Lord, I know it right well; I meant not to touche your Lordſhip, for youre Service and Paines is euidently knowen to all Men.

Southwell. M. Throckmorton, this Talke neede not, we know what we haue to do, and you would teach us our Duties; you hurt your Mater, go to! go to!

Throckmorton. M. Southwell, you miſtake me, I ment not to teach you, nor none of you, but to remember you of that I truſt you all be well inſtructed in, and ſo I ſatisfie my ſelfe, ſince I ſhall not ſpeake, thinking you all know what you haue to doe, or ought to know, ſo I will aunſwer to the Inditement, and do pleade not giltie to the whole, and to euery part thereof.

Sendall. How wilt thou be tried?

Throckmorton. Shall I be tried as I would, or as I ſhuld?

Bromley. You ſhal be tried as the Law will, and therefore you muſt ſay by God and by the Countrey.

Throckmorton. Is that your Law for me? it is not as I wold; but ſince you wil have it ſo, I am pleaſed with it, and do deſire to be tried by faithful juſt Men, which more fear God than the World.

What time the Atturney went forthwith to M. Cholmley, and ſhewed him the Sheriffes Returne, who being acquainted with the Citizens knowing the Corruptions and Dexterities of them in ſuch Caſes, noted certaine to be chalenged for the Q. (a rare caſe) and the ſame Men being knowen to be ſufficient and indifferent, that no Exceptions were to be taken to them, but only for their upright Honeſties, notwithſtanding the Attorney prompting Sergeant Dier, the ſaid Sergeant chalenged one Bacon, and another Citizen peremptorily for the Queen. Then the Priſoner demanded the cauſe of the Chalenge: the Sergeante aunſwered, we neede not ſhew you the cauſe of the Chalenge for the Queen. Then the Inqueſt was furniſhed with other honeſt Men, that is to ſay, Whetſtone and Lucas, ſo the Priſoner vſed theſe Words.

Throckmorton. I truſt you have not provided for me this Day, as in times paſt I knew another Gentleman occupying this woful place was prouided for. It chanced one of the Juſtices upon Jelouſie of the Priſoner's acquitall, for the goodneſſe of his Cauſe, ſaid to another of his Companions a Juſtice, when the Jury did appeare, I like not this Jury for our purpoſe, they ſeeme to be too pitiful and too charitable to condemne the Priſoner. No, no, ſaid the other Judge (viz. Cholmley) I warrant you, they be picked Fellowes for the nonce, he ſhall drink of the ſame Cup his Fellowes haue done. I was then a loker on of the Pageant as others be now here, but now wo is me, I am a Player in that woful Tragedie. Well, for theſe and ſuch other like the black Oxe hath of late troden on ſome of their Feet, but my truſt is, I ſhall not be ſo uſed. Whyleſt this Talke was, Cholmeley conſulted with the Atturney aboute the Jury, which the Priſoner eſpied, and then ſayde as heere enſueth, Ah, ah Maiſter Cholmeley, will this foule packing neuer be left?

Cholmeley. Why what do I, I pray you, M. Throckmorton? I did nothing, I am ſure you do picke Quarrels to me.

Throckmorton. Well Maiſter Cholmeley, if you do well, it is better for you, God help you.

The Jury then was ſworne, and Proclamation made, that whoſoeuer woulde giue Euidence againſte Sir Nicholas Throckmorton Knight, ſhoulde come in and be heard, for the Priſoner ſtood upon his Deliuerance: whereupon Sergeant Stanford preſented hymſelfe to ſpeake.

Throckmorton. And it may pleaſe you Maiſter Sergeante, and the others my Maſters of the Quenes lerned Counſell, like as I was minded to haue ſaid a fewe Words to the Commiſſioners, if I mighte haue had leaue, for their better remembrance of their Dueties in this place of Juſtice, and concerning direct indifferency to bee uſed towards me this Day; ſo by your Patience I do thinke good to ſay ſomewhat to you, and to the reſt of the Quenes learned Counſell, appointed to giue Euidence againſte mee. And albeit you and the reſt by Order be appointed to gyue euidence againſte mee, and enterteyned to ſette forth the Depoſitions and Matter againſt me, yet I pray you remember I am not alienate from you, but that I am youre Chriſtian Brother; neither you ſo charged, but you ought to conſider Equitie, nor yet ſo priuiledged, but that you haue a Duetie of God appoynted you how you ſhal do youre Office, whiche if you exceede, wil be greuouſly required at youre hands. It is lawfull for you to vſe your Gifts, which I know God hathe largely giuen you, as youre Learning, Arte and Eloquence, ſo as thereby you do not ſeduce the Minds of the ſimple and unlearned Jury, to credite Matters otherwiſe than they be. For Maiſter Sergeant, I knowe howe by Perſwaſions, Enforcements, Preſumptions, applying, implying, inferring, conjecturing, deducing of Arguments, wreſting and exceeding the Law, the Circumſtances, the Depoſitions and Confeſſions, that unlearned Men maye bee inchanted to thinke and judge thoſe that bee things indifferente, or at the worſt but ouerſights, to be great Treaſons; ſuch power Orators haue, and ſuch Ignorance the Unlearned haue. Almighty God by the Mouth of his Prophete, doth conclude ſuch Advocates bee curſed, ſpeaking theſe Words, Curſed bee hee that doth his office craftily, corruptly, and maliciouſly. And conſider alſo, that my Bloud ſhal be required at your hands, and puniſhed in you and yours, to the third and fourth Generation. Notwithſtanding you and the Juſtices excuſe always ſuch erronious doings, when they they be after called in queſtion by the Verdict of the twelve Men; but I aſſure you, the Purgation ſerueth you as it did Pilate, and you waſhe your Handes of the Bloudſhed, as Pilate did of Chriſts. And now to your matter.

Stanford. And it pleaſe you, my Lords, I doubt not to proue euidently and manifeſtly, that Throckmorton is worthely and rightly indicted and araigned of theſe Treaſons, and that he was a principall deuiſer, procurer and contriver of the late Rebellion, and that Wyat was but his Miniſter. How ſay you, Throckmorton, dyd not you ſend Winter to Wyat into Kent, and did deuiſe that the Tower of London ſhoulde be taken, with other Inſtructions concernyng Wyat's Sturre and Rebellion?

Throckmorton. May it pleaſe you that I ſhall aunſwer particularly to the Matters objected againſt me, in as muche as my Memorie is not good, and the ſame much decayed ſince my greeuous Empriſonment, with want of Sleep, and other Diſquietneſſe: I confeſſe I did ſay to Winter, that Wyat was deſirous to ſpeake with him, as I underſtoode.

Stanford. Yea Sir, and you deuiſed togither of the taking of the Tower of London, and of the other great Treaſons.

Throckmorton. Noe, I did not ſo; proue it.

Stanford. Yes Sir, you met with Winter ſundry times, as ſhall appeare, and in ſundry places.

Throckmorton. That granted, proveth no ſuch matter as is ſuppoſed in the Enditement.

Stanford red Winter's Confeſſion, whyche was of this effect; That Throckmorton mette with Winter one Day in Tower-ſtreet, and told him, that Sir Thomas Wyat was deſirous to ſpeak with him, and Winter demanded where Wyat was: Throckmorton aunſwered, at his Houſe in Kente, not farre from Gillingham, as I heard ſay, where the Shyps lye. Then they parted at that time, and ſhortly after Throckmorton met with Winter, vnto whome Winter ſayd, Maiſter Wyat dothe much miſlike the comming of the Spanyardes into this Realme, and feareth their ſhort arriuall here, in as much as dayly he heareth therof; dothe ſee dayly diuers of them arriue heere, ſcattered like Soldyers; and therefore he thinketh good the Tower of London ſhould be taken by a ſleighte, before the Prince came, leaſt that peece be deliuered to the Spanyardes. How ſay you Throckmorton to it? Throckmorton aunſwered, I miſlike it for diuers reſpects; euen ſo do I, ſayde Winter. At another tyme Throckmorton mette me the ſayd Winter in Poules, when hee had ſent one to my Houſe to ſeeke me before; and he ſaid to me, you are Admiral of the Fleet that now goeth into Spaine. I aunſwered yea. Throckmorton ſaide, when will your Shippes be ready? I ſaide, within tenne Dayes. Throckmorton ſayde, I vnderſtand you are appointed to conduct and carrie the Lorde Priuie Seale into Spayne; and conſidering the Daunger of the Frenchmen, which you ſay arme them to the Sea apace, me thinke it well done, you put my ſayde Lorde and his Traine on Lande in the Weſt Country to avoyde all Daungers. Throckmorton ſaide alſo, that Wyat changed his purpoſe, for taking the Tower of London; I ſaid I was glad of it: and as for the Frenchmen, I care not much for them, I will ſo handle the matter, that the Queenes Shippes ſhall bee I warrante you in ſafegard. Another time I met with M. Throckmorton when I came from the Emperours Ambaſſadors, vnto whome I declared, that the Emperour had ſent me a fayre Cheyne, and ſhewed it unto Throckmorton, who ſaid, for this Cheyne you haue ſold your Country. I ſaide, it is neyther French King nor Emperoure that can make me ſell my Country, but I will be a true Engliſhman: then they parted. This is the ſumme of the Talke betwixt Throckmorton and Winter.

Stanford. Now my Maſters of the Jury, you haue heard my Sayings confirmed with Winter's Confeſſion: how ſay you Throckmorton, can you denie it? if you will, you ſhall haue Winter juſtifie it to your Face.

Throckmorton. My Lords, ſhall it pleaſe you that I ſhal anſwer?

Bromley. Yea, ſay your mind.

Throckmorton. I may truly denye ſome part of this Confeſſion; but bycauſe there is nothing material greatly, I ſuppoſe the whole to be true, and what is herein depoſed, ſufficiente to bring me within the compas of the Enditement.

Stanford. It appeareth that you were of Counſel with Wyat, in as much as you ſente Winter downe to him, who uttered unto him diuers traitorous Deuiſes.

Throckmorton. This is but conjectural; yet ſithence you will conſtrue ſo maliciouſly, I will recompte how I ſent Winter to Wyat: and then I pray you of the Jury, judge better than Maiſter Sergeante doth. I met by chance a Seruant of Maiſter Wyat's, who demanded of me for Winter, and ſhewed mee, that his Maiſter woulde gladly ſpeake with him; and ſo without any further Declaration, deſired me, if I met Winter, to tel him Maiſter Wyat's mind, and where he was. Thus much for the ſending downe of Winter.

Attourney. Yea, Sir, but how ſay you to the taking of the Tower of London, which is Treaſon?

Throckmorton. I aunſwere, though Wyat thought meete to attempt ſo daungerous an Enterpriſe, and that Winter enformed me of it, you cannot extende Wyat's Deuiſes to be mine, and to bring me within the compaſs of Treaſon; for what maner of reaſoning or proofe is this, Wyat woulde haue taken the Tower, ergo Throckmorton is a Traitor? Winter doth make my Purgation in his owne Confeſſion, euen now redde as it was by Maiſter Sergeante, though I ſay nothing; for Winter doth auowe there, that I did much miſlike it. And becauſe you ſhall the better underſtand that I did alwayes not alow theſe Maſter Wyat's Deuiſes, I had theſe Words to Winter, when he enformed me of it; I think M. Wyat would no Engliſhman hurt, and this Enterpriſe cannot be done without the hurt and ſlaughter of both Parties; for I know him that hath the Charge of the Peece, and his Brother, both Men of good Seruice; the one had in charge a piece of great Importance, Bolloyne I meane, which was ſtoutly aſſayled, and notwithſtanding he made a goode accompt of it for his time, that like I am ſure he will do by this his Charge. Moreouer, to accompte the taking of the Tower is uery dangerous by the Law. Theſe were my Wordes to Winter. And beſides, it is very unlike, that I of all Men woulde confederate in ſuch a matter againſt the Lieutenant of the Tower, whoſe Daughter my Brother hath married, and his Houſe and mine alyed together by Mariage ſundry times within theſe few Yeres.

Hare. But how ſay you to this, that Wyat and you had Conference togither ſundry times at Warner's Houſe, and in other places?

Throckmorton. This is a very general Charge, to haue Conference; but why was it not as lawful for me to confer with Wyat, as with you, or any other Man? I then knew no more by Wyat, than by any other; and to proue to talke with Wyat was lawful and indifferent, the laſt Day I did talke with Wyat, I ſawe my Lord of Arondel, with other Noble Men and Gentlemen, talke with him familiarly in the Chamber of Preſence.

Hare. But they did not conſpire nor talke of any ſtur againſt the Spanyards as you did pretend, and meant it againſt the Queen; for you, Croftes, Rogers and Warner, did oftentimes deuiſe in Warner's Houſe aboute youre traiterous purpoſes, or elſe what did you ſo often there?

Throckmorton. I confeſs I did miſlike the Queenes Mariage with Spain, and alſo the comming of the Spanyards hither; and then me thought I had reaſon to doe ſo, for I did learne the Reaſons of my miſliking of you M. Hare, M. Southwell, and others in the Parliament Houſe; there I did ſee the whole Conſent of the Realm againſt it; and I a Hearer, but no Speaker, did learne my miſliking of thoſe Matters, confirmed by many ſundry Reaſons amongſt you: but as concerning any ſturre or vprore againſt the Spanyards, I neuer made any, neyther procured any to be made; and for my much reſort to M. Warner's Houſe, it was not to conferre with M. Wyat, but to ſhew my Friendſhip to my very good L. the Marques of Northampton, who was lodged there when he was enlarged.

Stanford. Did not you, Throckmorton, tell Winter that Wyat had changed his Mind for the taking of the Tower; whereby it appeared euidently that you knew of his doings?

Throckmorton. Truly I did not tell him ſo, but I care not greately to giue you that Weapon to play you withal: now let us ſee what you can make of it?

Stanford. Yea, Sir, that proueth that you were priuie to Wyat's Mind in all his Deuiſes and Treaſons, and that there was ſending betwixt you and Wyat from time to time.

Throckmorton. What, M. Sergeant, doth this proue againſte me, that I knew Wyat did repent him of an euil deuiſed Enterpriſe? Is it to know Wyat's Repentance, Sinne? No, it is but a Venial Sinne; if it be any, it is not deadly. But where is the Meſſenger or Meſſage that Wyat ſent to me touching his Alteration? and yet it was lawful ynough for me to heare from Wyat at that time, as from any other Man, for any acte that I knew he had done.

Dyer. And it may pleaſe you, my Lordes, and you my Maiſters of the Jurie, to prove that Throckmorton is a principal doer in this Rebellion, there is yet many other things to be declared: amongſt other, there is Croftes Confeſſion, who ſayeth, that he and you and your Accomplices, did manye times deuiſe aboute the whole Matters, and hee made you priuie to all his Determinations, and you ſhewed him that you woulde goe into the Weſt Countrey with the Earle of Deuon, to Sir Peter Caroe, accompanyed with others.

Throckmorton. M. Croftes is yet liuing, and is here this day; how hapneth it he is not brought Face to Face to juſtifie this matter, neither hathe bin of all this time? Will you knowe the Trueth? either he ſayd not ſo, or he wil not abide by it, but honeſtly hath reformed himſelf. And as for knowing his Deuiſes, I was ſo well acquainted with them, that I can name none of them, nor you neyther, as matter knowen to mee.

Attourney. But why did you aduiſe Winter to land my Lord Priuie Seale in the Weſt Countrey?

Throckmorton. He that told you that my mind was to land him there, doth partly tel you a reaſon why I ſaid ſo, if you would remember as well the one as the other; but becauſe you are ſo forgetful, I will recite wherefore: In communication betwixt Winter and me, as he declared to me that the Spanyards provided to bring their Prince hither, ſo the Frenchmen prepared to interrupt his Arrival, for they began to arme to the Sea, and had already certain Shippes on the Weſt Coſt, (as he heard) unto whom I ſaide, that peraduenture not onely the Queenes Shippes under his Charge might be in jeopardy, but alſo my Lorde Priuie Seale, and all his Trayne, the Frenchmen beeing wel prepared to meete with them; and therefore for all Euents it were good you ſhould put my ſaid Lord in the Weſt Countrey, in caſe you eſpie any jeoperdie. But what doth this proue to the Treaſons, if I were not able to giue conuenient Reaſons to my talke?

Stanford. Mary Sir, now commeth the Proofes of youre Treaſons: you ſhal heare what Cutbert Vaughan ſayth againſt you.

Then Sergeant Stanford did reade Vaughan's Confeſſion, tending to this effect, That Vaughan comming out of Kent, met with Throckmorton at M. Warner's Houſe, who after he had don Commendations from Wyat to him, deſired to know where Crofts was; Throckmorton anſwered, either at Arundel Houſe where he lodgeth, or in Poules. Then Vaughan deſired to know howe thyngs went at London, ſaying, M. Wyat and wee of Kent do much miſlike the Mariage with Spaine, and the comming of the Spanyardes, for diuers reſpectes; howbeit, if other Countries miſlike them as Kent doth, they ſhall be but hardly welcome: and ſo they parted. Shortly after, Throckmorton met with Vaughan in Poules, unto whome Throckmorton declared with ſundry Circumſtances, that the Weſtern Men were in readineſſe to come forwards; and that Sir Peter Caroe had ſent unto him euen now, and that he had in order a good Band of Horſemen, and an other of Footemen. Then Vaughan demanded what the Erle of Devon would do: Throckmorton anſwered he will marre all, for he will not go hence; and yet Sir Peter Caroe wold mete him with a Band both of Horſemen and Footemen, by the way of Andeuer, for his Safeguard; and alſo he ſhould haue bin well accompanyed from hence with other Gentlemen, yet all this wyl not moue him to departe hence. Moreouer, the ſaid Erle hath, as is ſaid, diſcouered al the whole matter to the Chancellor, or elſe it is comen out by his Taylor, aboute the trimming of a Shirte of Mayle, and the making of a Cloke. At another time, Vaughan ſaith, Throckmorton ſhewed him that he had ſent a Poſte to Sir Peter Caroe to come forwarde with as muche ſpeede as might be, and to bring his force with him. And alſo Throckmorton adviſed Vaughan to will M. Wyat come forward with his Power, for nowe was the time, in as much as the Londoners would take his part, if the matter were preſented unto them. Vaughan ſaid alſo, that Throckmorton and Warner ſhould have ridden with the ſaid Erle Weſtward. Moreouer, the ſaid Vaughan depoſed, that Throckmorton ſhewed him in talke of the Erle of Pembroke, that the ſaid Earle woulde not fight againſt them, them, though hee woulde not take their partes. Alſo Vaughan ſaid, That Throckmorton ſhewed hym that he would ride downe into Barkeſhire to Sir Francis Englefield's Houſe, there to meete his eldeſt Brother, to moue him to take his part. And this was the ſumme of Cutbert Vaughan's Confeſſion.

Stanford. How ſay you, doth not heere appeare euident matter to proue you a Principall, who not onely gaue order to Sir Peter Caroe and his Adherents, for their rebellious actes in the Weſt Countrey; but alſo procured Wyat to make his Rebellion, appointing him and the others alſo when they ſhould attempt their Enterpriſe, and how they ſhould order their doings from time to time? Beſides all this euident matter, you were ſpecially appointed to go away with the Earle of Devon, as one that would direct all thinges, and giue order to all Men; and therefore Throckmerton, ſince this matter is ſo manifeſt, and the euidence ſo apparent, I would aduiſe you to confeſſe your fault, and ſubmit your ſelfe to the Queenes Mercy.

Bromley. Howe ſay you, will you confeſſe the matter? and it will be beſt for you.

Throckmorton. No, I will neuer accuſe my ſelfe unjuſtly; but in as muche as I am come hither to bee tryed, I pray you let me haue the Law favourably.

Attourney. It is apparent that you lay at London as a Factor, to giue Intelligence as well to them in the Weſt, as to Wyat in Kent.

Throckmorton. How proue you that, or who doth accuſe me but this condemned Man?

Attourney. Why will you denie this matter, you ſhall haue Vaughan juſtifie his whole Confeſſion here before your Face.

Throckmorton. It ſhal not neede, I know his unſhamefaſtnes, he hath aduowed ſome of this vntrue talk before this time to my Face, and it is not otherwiſe like, conſidering the price, but he wil do the ſame again.

Attourney. My Lords and Maiſters, you ſhall haue Vaughan to juſtifie this heere before you all, and confirm it with a Booke Oth.

Throckmorton. He that hath ſaid and lyed, will not, being in this caſe, ſticke to ſwear and lye.

Then was Cutbert Vaughan brought into the open Court.

Sendall. How ſay you, Cutbert Vaughan, is this your own Confeſſion, and wil you abide by all that is here written?

Vaughan. Let me ſee it, and I will tell you.

Then his Confeſſion was ſhewed him.

Attourney. Bycauſe you of the Jury the better may credite him, I pray you my Lords let Vaughan be ſworn.

Then was Vaughan ſworne on a Booke to ſay nothing but the Truth.

Vaughan. It may pleaſe you my Lords and Maiſters, I could haue bin well content to haue choſe ſeauen Yeres Impriſonment, though I had bin a free Man in the Law, rather than I would this Day haue gyuen Euidence againſt Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, vnto whome I beare no diſpleaſure; but ſithence I muſt needes confeſſe my Knowledge, I muſt confeſſe all that is there written is true. How ſay you M. Throckmorton, was there any diſpleaſure betwene you and me, to moue me to ſay aught againſt you?

Throckmorton. No, that I know: how ſay you, Vaughan, what Acquaintance was there between you and me, and what Letters of Credit, or Token did you bring me from Wyat, or any other, to moue me to truſt you?

Vaughan. As for Acquaintance, I knew you as I did other Gentlemen; and as for Letters, I brought you none other but Commendations from M. Wyat, as I did to diuers other of his Acquaintance at London.

Throckmorton. You might as well forge the Commendations as the reſt; but if you haue done with Vaughan, my Lords, I pray you give me leaue to aunſweare.

Bromley. Speak, and be ſhort.

Throckmorton. I ſpeak generally to all that be heere preſent, but ſpecially to you of my Jury, touching the Credit of Vaughan's Depoſitions againſt me, a condemned Man; and after to the Matter: and note I pray you the Circumſtances, as ſomewhat material to induce the better. Firſt I pray you remember the ſmall Familiaritie betwixt Vaughan and me, as he hathe auowed before you. And moreouer, to procure Credite at my hand, he brought neither Letter nor Token from Wyat, nor from any other to me, which he alſo hath confeſſed here: and I will ſuppoſe Vaughan to be in as good Condition as any other Man here, that is to ſay, an uncondemn'd Man; yet I referre it to your good Judgment, whether it were lyke that I knowing onely Vaughan's Perſon from another Man, and having none other Acquaintance with him, would ſo frankly diſcouer my mind to him in ſo dangerous a matter. How like, I ſay, is this, when diuers of theſe Gentlemen now in Captiuitie, being my very Familiars, coulde not depoſe any ſuch matter againſt me, and neuertheleſs vpon their Examinations, haue ſaid what they could? And thogh I be no wiſe Man, I am not ſo raſh to vtter to an unknowen Man (for ſo may I call him in compariſon) a matter ſo dangerous for me to ſpeake, and him to heare; but bycauſe my Trueth and his Falſehood ſhall the better appear unto you, I will declare his Inconſtancy in vttering this his Euidence; and for my better Credite, it may pleaſe you, M. Southwell, I take you to witnes, when Vaughan firſt juſtified this his unjuſt Accuſation againſt me before the L. Paget, the L. Chamberlaine, you M. Southwell, and others, he referred the Confirmation of this ſurmiſed matter to a Letter ſent from him to Sir Thomas Wyat; which Letter doth neither appeare, nor any Teſtimony of the ſaid M. Wyat againſt mee touching the matter: for I doubte not Sir Thomas Wyat hath bin examin'd of me, and hathe ſayde what he could directly or indirectly. Alſo Vaughan ſaith, that yong Edward Wyat coulde confirme this matter, as one that knew this pretended Diſcourſe betwixt Vaughan and me; and therupon I made ſute that Edward Wyat might either be brought face to face to me, or otherwiſe be examined.

Southwell. M. Throckmorton, you miſtake your matter, for Vaughan ſaid, that Edward Wyat did know ſome part of the matter, and alſo was priuie of the Letter that Vaughan ſent to Sir Thomas Wyat.

Throckmorton. Yea, Sir, that was Vaughan's laſt ſhift, when I charged him before the Maſter of the Horſe, and you with his former Allegations touching his witnes; whom when hee eſpyed, woulde not do ſo lewdly as hee thought, then he vſed this Alteration: but where is Edward Wyat's Depoſitions of any thing againſt me, now it appeareth neither his firſte nor his laſt Tale to be true? For you knowe, M. Bridges, and ſo doth my Lord your Brother, that I deſired twice or thrice Edward Wyat ſhuld be examined; and I am ſure, and moſt aſſured, he hathe bin willed to ſay what he could, and here is nothing depoſed by him againſt me, eyther touching any Letter or other Conference; or where is Vaughan's Letter ſent by Sir Thomas Wyat concerning my Talke?

But now I will ſpeake of Vaughan's preſent Eſtate, in that he is a condemned Man, whoſe Teſtimonie is nothing worthe by any Lawe; and bycauſe falſe Witnes be mentioned in the Goſpel, treating of Accuſation, hearke I pray you what S. Jerome ſayeth, expounding the place: it is demanded why Chriſtes accuſers be called falſe Witneſſes, which did report Chriſt's Words not as he ſpake them; they be falſe witneſs, ſaith S. Jerome, which do ad, alter, wreſt, double, or do ſpeake for hope to auoid Death, or for malice to procure another Man's Death: for all Men may eaſily gather he cannot ſpeake truely of me, or in the caſe of another Man's Life, where he hath hope of his owne by Accuſation. Thus much ſpeaketh S. Jerome of falſe witnes. By the ciuil Law there be many Exceptions to be taken agaynſt ſuch Teſtimonies; but bycauſe we be not gouerned by that Law, neither I haue my Trial by it, it ſhal be ſuperfluous to trouble you therewith, and therefore you ſhall heare what your owne Lawe doth ſay. There was a Statute made in my late Soueraigne Lord and Maiſter his time, touching Accuſation, and theſe be the Words:

Be it enacted, That no Perſon nor Perſons, &c. ſhall be indited, araigned, condemned, or conuicted for any Offence of Treaſon, Petit Treaſon, Miſpriſion of Treaſon, for which the ſame Offendor ſhal ſuffer any Paynes of Death, Impriſonment, Loſſe or Forfeyture of his Goodes, Lands, &c. vnleſſe the ſame Offendor be accuſed by two ſufficient and lawful Witneſſes, or ſhall willingly without Violence confeſſe the ſame. And alſo in the ſixth Yere of his Raigne, it is thus ratified as enſueth:

That no Perſon nor Perſons ſhall bee indited, araigned, condemned, conuicted or attainted of the Treaſons or Offences aforeſaide, or for anye other Treaſons that now bee, or hereafter ſhall be, unleſſe the ſame Offendor or Offendors be thereof accuſed by two lawfull and ſufficient Accuſers; whiche at the time of Araignement of the Parties ſo accuſed (if they be then liuing) ſhall be brought in Perſon before the ſaid Partie accuſed, and auowe and mainteine that they haue to ſay againſte the ſaide Partie, to proue him giltie of the Treaſons or Offence conteined in the Byll of Inditement layd agaynſt the Partie araigned, vnleſſe the ſayd Partie araigned ſhall be willing without Violence to confeſſe the ſame.

Heere note I pray you, that our Lawe dothe require two lawfull and ſufficient Accuſers to be brought face to face, and Vaughan is but one, and the ſame moſt vnlawfull and inſufficient; for who can be more unlawfull and inſufficient than a condemned Man, and ſuche one as knoweth to accuſe mee is the meane to ſaue his owne Lyfe? Remember, I pray you, howe long and how many times Vaughan's Execution hathe bin reſpited, and how often hee hathe bin conjured to accuſe, (whych by Goddes Grace hee withſtoode vntill the laſt Houre) what time perceyuing there was no way to liue, but to ſpeake againſte mee or ſome other (his former Grace beeyng taken away) did redeeme his Lyfe moſt unjuſtly and ſhamefully, as you ſee.

Hare. Why ſhoulde he accuſe you more than any other, ſeeyng there was no diſpleaſure betwixte you, if the matter had not bin true?

Throckmorton. Bycauſe he muſt eyther ſpeake of ſome Man, or ſuffer Deathe; and then he did rather chooſe to hurte him he did leaſt know, and ſo loued leaſt, than any other well knowen to him, whome hee loued moſt. But to you of my Jury I ſpeake ſpecially, and therfore I pray you note what I ſay: In a matter of leſſe weight than Triall of Life and Lande, a Man may by the Law take Exceptions to ſuche as be impaneld, to trie the Controuerſies betwixt the Parties: as for example, a Man may chalenge that the Sheriffe is hys Enemie, and therefore hathe made a parciall Returne, or bycauſe one of the Jury is the Sheriffe my Aduerſaries Seruaunte; and alſo in caſe my Aduerſaries Villaine or Bondman be empanelled, I may lawfully chalenge him, bycauſe the Aduerſarie parte hathe power ouer hys Villayne's Landes and Goodes, and hathe the vſe of hys Bodye for ſeruile Office: muche more I may of right take Exception to Vaughan's Teſtimonie, my Lyfe and all that I haue depending therevppon; and the ſame Vaughan beeyng more bounde to the Queenes Highneſſe, my Aduerſarie (that wo is me therefore, but ſo the Lawe dothe here ſo tearme hyr Majeſtie) than anye Villayne is to hys Lord; for hir Hyghneſſe hath not onely Power ouer hys Bodye, Lands, and Goodes, but ouer his Lyfe alſo.

Stanford. Yea, the Exceptions are to be taken agaynſte the Jury in that caſe; but not agaynſt the Witnes or Accuſor, and therefore youre Argument ſerueth little for you.

Throckmorton. That is not ſo, for the vſe of the Jurie, and the Witnes, and the Effect of their doings doth ſerue me to my purpoſe, as the Law ſhall diſcuſſe. And thus I make my Compariſon: By the Ciuill Law the Judge doth giue Sentence upon the Depoſitions of the Witnes, and by your Law the Judge doth giue Judgement upon the Verdict of the Jury, ſo as the effect is both one, to finiſh the matter, Trial in Law, as well by the Depoſitions of the Witnes, as by the Juries Verdict, though they varie in Forme and Circumſtance; and ſo Vaughan's Teſtimonie being credited, may be the material Cauſe of my Condemnation, as the Jury may be induced by his Depoſitions to ſpeak their Verdict, and ſo finally therevpon the Judge to giue Sentence. Therefore I may uſe the ſame Exceptions againſt the Jury, or any of them, as the principal mean that ſhall occaſion my Condemnation.

Bromley. Why do you denie, that euery part of Vaughan's Tale is untrue?

Attourney. You may ſee he will denie all, and ſay there was no ſuch Communication betwixt them.

Throckmorton. I confeſſe ſome part of Vaughan's Confeſſion to be true, as the Name, the Places, the Time, and ſome part of the Matter.

Attourney. So you of the Jury may perceiue the Priſoner doth confeſſe ſome thing to be true.

Throckmorton. As touching my ſending to Sir Peter Carue, or his ſending to me, or concerning my Aduice to M. Wyat to ſturre, or to repaire hither, or touchyng the Earle of Deuon parting hence, hence, and my going with him; and alſo concerning the matter of the Earle of Pembroke, I do aduow and ſay that Vaughan hath ſaid untruely.

Southwell. As for my Lord of Pembroke, you neede not excuſe the matter, for he hath ſhewed himſelfe cleere in theſe matters like a Nobleman, and that we all know.

Hare. Why what was the talke betwixt Vaughan and you ſo long in Poules, if theſe were not ſo, and what meant your oft Meetings?

Throckmorton. As for our often Meetings, they were of no ſet purpoſe, but by chance, and yet no oftner than twice; but ſithence you would know what Communication paſſed betwixt us in Poules Church, I will declare. We talked of the Incommodities of the Marriage of the Queene with the Prince of Spayne, and how grieuous the Spanyards would be to vs here. Vaughan ſaid, that it ſhould be very dangerous for any Man that truly profeſſed the Goſpel to liue here, ſuch was the Spanyards Crueltie, and eſpecially againſt Chriſtian Men. Whereunto I anſwered, it was the Plague of God come juſtly vppon vs; and now Almighty God dealt with vs as he did with the Iſraelites, taking from them for their vnthankefulnes their Godly Kings, and did ſend Tirants to raign over them; even ſo he handled us Engliſhmen, whiche hadde a moſt godly and vertuous Prince to raigne ouer vs, my late Soueraigne Lord and Maiſter King Edwarde, vnder whome we might both ſafely and lawfully profeſſe Gods Word; which with our lewd doyngs, demeanour, and liuing, we handled ſo irreuerently, that to whip vs for our Faultes, he woulde ſend vs Straungers, yea ſuch very Tyrants to exerciſe great Tyrannie ouer vs, and did take away the vertuous and faithfull King from amongſt us; for euery Man of euery Eſtate did coulour his naughty Affections with a pretence of Religion, and made the Goſpell a ſtaulking Horſe to bring their euil deſires to effect. This was the Summe of our talke in Poules, ſomewhat more dilated.

Stanford. That it may appeare yet more euidently howe Throckmorton was a principal Doer and Counſellor in this matter, you ſhall heare his owne Confeſſion of his own hand writing. The Clerke did begin to reade; Throckmorton deſired M. Stanford to reade it, and the Jury well to marke it. Then M. Stanford did read the Priſoner's own Confeſſion to this effect, that Throckmorton had Conference with Wyat, Caroe, Croftes, Rogers and Warner, as well of the Queenes Mariage with the Prince of Spayne, as alſo of Religion, and did particularly confer with euery the forenamed of the matters aforeſaid. Moreouer, with Sir Thomas Wyat, the Priſoner talked of the bruite, that the Weſtern Men ſhould much miſlike the comming of the Spanyards into this Realme, beeing reported alſo that they intended to interrupt theyr arriual here. And alſo that it was ſaid, that they wer in conſultation about the ſame at Exeter. Wyat alſo did ſay, that Sir Peter Caroe could not bring the ſame matter to good effect, nor was there any Man ſo mete to bring it to good effect, as the Erle of Devon; and ſpecially in the Weſt Country, in as much as they did not draw al by one line. Then Throckmorton ask'd how the Kentiſhmen were affected to the Spanyards? Wyat ſaid, the People like them euill ynough, and that appeared now at the comming of the Count Egmont, for they were ready to ſturre againſt him and his Traine, ſuppoſing it had bin the Prince; but ſaid Wyat, Sir Robert Southwel, M. Baker, and M. Moyle, and their Affinitie, which bee in good Credite in ſome places of the Shire, wil for other malicious Reſpects hinder the Libertie of their Country. Then Throckmorton ſhuld ſay, though I know ther hath bin an vnkindneſſe betwixt M. Southwell and you for a Money matter, wherein I trauelled to make you Friends; I doubt not, but in ſo honeſt a matter as this is, he will for the ſafegard of his Country joyne with you, and ſo you may be ſure of the Lord Burgainey and his Force. Then Wyat ſaid, it is for another matter than for Money that we diſagree, wherein he hath handled me and others very doubly and vnneighbourly; howbeit he can do no other, neither to me, nor to anye other Man, and therfore I forgiue him. Item, with Sir Peter Caroe, Throckmorton had Conference touching the Impeachment of the landing of the ſaid Prince, and touchyng Prouiſion of Armour and Munition, as enſueth; that is to ſay, that Sir Peter Caroe told Throckmorton, that he truſted his Countrymen would be true Engliſhmen, and would not agree to let the Spanyards to gouerne them. Item, the ſaid Sir Peter Caroe ſayd, the matter importing the French King as it did, he thought the French King would work to hinder the Spanyards coming hither, with whome the ſaid Sir Peter dyd thinke good to practiſe for Armour, Munitions and Money. Then Throckmorton did adviſe him to beware that he brought any Frenchmen into the Realme forceably, in as much as he could as euill abyde the Frenchmen after that ſort as the Spanyards. And alſo Throckmorton thought the French King vnable to giue aide to vs, by meanes of the great Conſumption in their own Warres. M. Caroe ſaid, as touching the bringing in of Frenchmen, he meant it not, for he loued neither Partie, but to ſerue his own Countrey, and to help his Countrey from Bondage; declaring further to Throckmorton, that he had a ſmall Barke of his owne to worke his practiſe by; and ſo he ſaid, that ſhortly he intended to depart to his owne Countrey, to vnderſtand the Deuotion of his Countrymen. Item, Throckmorton did ſay, he would for his part hinder the comming in of the Spanyards as much as he could by Perſwaſion. Item, to Sir Edward Warner, he had and did bemone his owne Eſtate, and the Tyrannie of the tyme extended upon dyuers honeſt Perſons for Religion, and wiſhed it were lawfull for all of each Religion to liue ſafely according to their Conſcience; for the Law (Ex officio) will be intollerable, and the Cleargies diſcipline now may rather be reſembled to the Turks Tyrannie, than to the teaching of Chriſtian Religion. This was the Summe of the matter, whiche was red in the foreſaid Confeſſion, as matters moſt greuous againſt the Priſoner. Then Throckmorton ſaid, ſithence M. Sergeante you haue red and gathered the place as you think, that maketh moſt againſt me, I pray you take the Paynes, and reade further, that hereafter whatſoeuer become of me, my Words be not peruerted and abuſed to the hurt of ſom others, and eſpecially againſt the great Perſonages, of whome I haue bin ſundry times (as appeareth by my Anſwers) examined; for I perceiue the Net was not caſt only for little Fiſhes, but for the great ones, juxta adagium.

Stan-

Stanford. It ſhall be but loſſe of time, and we haue other things to charge you withall, and this that you deſire doth make nothing for you.

Dyer. And for the better Confirmation of al the Treaſons objected againſt the Priſoner, and therein to proue him giltie, you of the Jury ſhall heare the Duke of Suffolkes Depoſitions againſt him, who was a Principal, and hath ſuffered accordingly. Then the ſaid Sergeant red the Dukes Confeſſion touching the Priſoner, amounting to this effect; That the Lord Thomas Grey did informe the ſaid Duke, that Sir Nicholas Throckmorton was privie to the whole Deuiſes againſte the Spanyardes, and was one that ſhoulde goe into the Weſt-Countrey with the Earle of Deuonſhire.

Throckmorton. But what doth the principall Author of thys matter ſay againſt me, I mean the Lord Thomas Gray, who is yet liuing? Why is not his Depoſition brought againſt me, for ſo it ought to bee, if he can ſay any thing? Will you know the Trueth? Neyther the Lord Thomas Grey hath ſayd, can ſay, or wil ſay any thing againſt me, notwithſtanding the Duke his Brothers Confeſſion and Accuſation, who hathe affirmed manye other things beſides the Trueth. I ſpeake not without certaine knowlege; for the Lord Thomas Grey, being my Priſon-Fellow for a ſmall time, informed me, that the Duke his Brother had miſreported him in many things, amongſt others in matters touching me, which he had declared to you Mr. Southwell, and other the Examinors not long ago. I am ſure if the Lord Thomas could or would haue ſaid any thing, it ſhould haue bin here now: And as to the Dukes Confeſſion, it is not material, for he doth referre the matter to the Lord Thomas's Report, who hath made my Purgation.

Attorney. And it pleaſe you my Lordes, and you my Maiſters of the Jury, beſides theſe matters touching Wyats Rebellion, Sir Peter Carues Treaſons, and confederating with the Duke of Suffolke; and beſides the Priſoners Conſpiracie with the Earle of Deuon, with Crofts, Rogers, Warner, and ſundry others in ſundrye Places, it ſhall manifeſtly appeare vnto you, that Throckmorton did conſpire the Queens Majeſties Death with William Thomas, Sir Nicholas Arnold, and other Traitors intending the ſame; which is the greateſt matter of all others, and moſt to be abhorred; and for the Proofe hereof you ſhall heare what Arnold ſayth. Then was Sir Nicholas Arnold's Confeſſion redde, affirming, that Throckmorton ſhewed vnto him, riding betwixt Hinam and Croſſe Laund in Gloceſterſhire, that John Fitz-williams was verye much diſpleaſed with William Thomas.

Attorney. William Thomas deviſed, that John Fitzwilliams ſhould kyll the Quene; and Throckmorton knew of it, as appeareth by Arnold's Confeſſion.

Throckmorton. Firſt I denie that I ſaide anye ſuche thing to Mr. Arnold; and though he be an honeſt Man, he may either forget himſelf, or deuiſe meanes how to vnburthen himſelfe of ſo weightie a matter as this is; for he is charged with the mater as principall, which I did perceiue when he charged mee with his Tale, and therefore I do blame him the leſſe, that he ſeeketh how to diſcharge himſelf, vſing me as a witnes if he could ſo transferre the Deuiſe to William Thomas. But truely, I neuer ſpake anye ſuche wordes vnto him; and for my better Declaration, I did ſee John Fitzwilliams here euen now, who can teſtifie, that he neuer ſhewed me of any Diſpleaſure betwixt them: and as I know nothing of the Diſpleaſure betwixt them, ſo I know nothing of the Cauſe. I pray you, my Lordes, let him bee called to depoſe in thys matter what hee can. Then John Fitzwilliams drew to the Barre, and preſented himſelfe to depoſe his knowledg in the mater in open Court.

Attorney. I pray you, my Lordes, ſuffer him not to be ſworne, neither to ſpeake; we haue nothing to do with him.

Throckmorton. Why ſhoulde hee not bee ſuffered to tell Truthe? And why bee yee not ſo well contented to heare Troth for mee, as Untroth againſt me?

Hare. Who called you hither Fitzwilliams, or commaunded you to ſpeake? you are a verye buſie Officer.

Throckmorton. I called him, and doe humbly deſire that he may ſpeake and be heard as well as Vaughan, or elſe I am not indifferently vſed; ſpecially ſeeing Maiſter Atturny doth ſo preſſe this matter againſt me.

Southwell. Goe youre wayes Fitzwilliams, the Courte hath nothing to doe with you; peraduenture you woulde not bee ſo readie in a good Cauſe.

Then John Fitzwilliams departed the Court, and was not ſuffered to ſpeake.

Throckmorton. Since this Gentlemans Declaration maye not bee admitted, I truſt you of the Jurie can perceyue, it was not for anye thing hee had to ſay againſt me; but contrariwiſe, that it was feared he woulde ſpeake for mee. And nowe to Maiſter Arnoldes Depoſitions againſt me, I ſay I did not tell him anye ſuch wordes; ſo as if it were material, there is but his yea and my nay. But becauſe the wordes be not ſore ſtrayned againſt me, I praye you, Maiſter Atturney, why might not I haue tolde Maiſter Arnolde, that John Fitzwilliams was angrie with William Thomas, and yet knowe no cauſe of the Anger? it might be vnderſtande, to diſagree oftentimes. Who doth confeſſe that I knowe any thing of William Thomas Deuiſe touching the Quenes Death? I will aunſwere, no Man: For Maiſter Arnolde doth mention no worde of that matter, but of the Diſpleaſures betwixte them; and to ſpeake that, dothe neyther proove Treaſon, nor knowledge of Treaſon. Is here all the Euidence againſte me that you haue to bring mee within the compaſſe of the Inditement?

Stanford. Methinke the Matters confeſſed by others againſt you, together with your owne Confeſſion, will weye ſhrewdlye. But howe ſaye you to the Riſing in Kent, and to Wiats Attempte againſte the Queenes Royal Perſon at hir Palace?

Bromley. Why doe you not reade Wiat's Accuſation to him, whiche dothe make him Partener to his Treaſons?

Southwell. Wiat hath grieuouſlye accuſed you, and in manye thinges that others haue confirmed.

Throckmorton. Whatſoeuer Wiat hath ſaide of me in hope of his Life, he vnſayde it at his Death. For ſince I came into this Hall, I hearde one ſaye (but I knowe him not) that Wiat, upon the Scaffolde, didde not onelye purge my Ladie Elizabeth hir Grace, and the Earle of Deuonſhire, but alſo all the Gentlemen in the Tower, ſaying, they were all ignoraunt of the Sturre and Commotion; in whiche number I take my ſelfe.

Hare. Notwithſtanding he ſaide, all that he had written and confeſſed to the Counſayle, was true.

Throckmorton. Nay, Sir, by your patience, Maiſter Wiat ſayde not ſo, that was Maiſter Doctors Addicion.

Southwell.

Southwell. It appeareth you haue hadde good Intelligence.

Throckmorton. Almightie God prouided that Reuelation for mee this Daye ſince I came hither: for I haue bene in cloſe Priſon theſe lviii. Dayes, where I hearde nothing but what the Birdes tolde mee, which did flie ouer my heade. And nowe to you of my Jurie I ſpeake ſpeciallye, whome I deſire to marke attentively what ſhall be ſayde: I haue been indited, as it appeareth, and now am arreigned of compaſſing the Queenes Majeſties Death, of leuying Warre againſte the Queene, of taking the Tower of London, of depoſing and depriuing the Queene of hir Royall Eſtate, and finally to deſtroy hir, and of adherence to the Queenes Enimies. Of all whiche Treaſons, to proue mee guiltie, the Queenes learned Counſayle hath giuen in Euidence theſe Pointes materiall: that is to ſaye, for the compaſſing or imagining the Queenes Death, and the Deſtruction of hir Royal Perſon, Sir Nicholas Arnoldes Depoſitions; whiche is, that I ſhoulde ſaye to the ſaid Sir Nicholas in Gloceſterſhire, that Maiſter John Fitzwilliams was angrie with William Thomas. Whereunto I haue aunſwered, as you haue hearde, bothe denying the matter; and for the proofe on my ſide, doe take Exceptions, bicauſe there is no Witneſſe but one. And neuertheleſſe, though it were graunted, the Depoſitions proue nothing concerning the Queenes Death. For leuying of Warre againſt the Queene, there is alledged my Conference with Sir Thomas Wiat, Sir James Croftes, Sir Edwarde Rogers, Sir Edwarde Warner, againſte the Marriage with Spaine, and the comming of the Spanyardes hither: which talke I doe not denie in ſorte as I ſpake it, and ment it; and notwithſtanding the malicious gathering this Day of my Conference, proueth yet no levying of Warre. There is alſo alledged for proofe of the ſame Article, Sir James Crofts's Confeſſion, which as you remember, implieth no ſuch thing, but generall talk againſt the Mariage with Spaine, and of my departing Weſtwarde with the Earl of Devon, which the ſayde James doth not auowe, and therefore I praye you conſider it as not ſpoken. There is alſo for proofe of the ſayde Article, the Duke of Suffolkes Confeſſion, with whom I neuer had Conference; and therefore he advouched the tale of his Brother's Mouth, who hath made my Purgation in thoſe Matters, and yet if the matter were proued, they be not greatly materiall in Lawe. There is alſo alledged for the further proofe of the ſame Article, and for depoſing and depriuing the Queene of hir Royall Eſtate, and for my adhering to the Queenes Enimes, Cutbert Vaughan's Confeſſion, whoſe Teſtimonie I have ſufficiently diſproued by ſundrie Authorities and Circumſtances, and principally by your owne Lawe, which dothe require two lawfull and ſufficient Witneſſes to be brought face to face. Alſo for the taking of the Tower of London, there is alledged Winter's Depoſitions, which vttereth my miſliking, when he vttered vnto mee Sir Thomas Wiat's Reſolution and Deuiſe for attempting of the ſayde peece. And laſt of all, to enforce theſe matters, mine owne Confeſſion is engrieued greatly againſt me, wherein there doth appeare neyther Treaſon, neyther concelement of Treaſon, neyther whiſpering of Treaſon, nor procurement of Treaſon. And for as much as I am come hither to be tried by the Lawe, though my Innocencie of all theſe Pointes materiall objected, be apparant to acquite mee, whervnto I doe principallye cleaue; yet I will for your better Credit and Satisfactions ſhewe you euidentlye, that if you woulde beleeue all the Depoſitions layde againſt me, which I truſt you will not doe, I ought not to be attainted of the Treaſon compriſed within my Inditement, conſidering the Statute of Repeale the laſt Parliament, of all Treaſons, other than ſuche as be declared in the xxv. Yeare of King Edwarde the Third; both which Statutes I pray you my Lords may be redde here to the Enqueſt.

Bromley. No, for there ſhall be no Bookes brought at your deſire; we know the Law ſufficiently without Booke.

Throckmorton. Do you bring me hither to trie mee by the Lawe, and will not ſhewe me the Lawe? What is your Knowledge of the Lawe to theſe Mens Satisfactions, which haue my Triall in hande? I pray you, my Lordes, and my Lordes all, let the Statutes bee redde, as well for the Queene, as for mee.

Stanford. My Lord Chiefe Juſtice can ſhew the Lawe, and will, if the Jurie doe doubt of any Poynt.

Throckmorton. You knowe it were indifferent that I ſhould knowe and heare the Law whereby I am adjudged; and foraſmuch as the Statute is in Englyſhe, Men of meaner Learning than the Juſtices, can vnderſtande it, or elſe how ſhoulde we know when we offend?

Hare. You knowe not what belongeth to youre caſe, and therefore we muſt teach you: it appertaineth not to vs to prouide Bookes for you, neyther ſit wee here to be taught of you; you ſhould haue taken better hede to the Law before you had come hither.

Throckmorton. Bicauſe I am ignoraunt, I woulde learne, and therefore I haue more neede to ſee the Law, and partlye as well for the Inſtructions of the Jurie, as for my owne Satisfaction, which mee thinke, were for the Honor of this Preſence. And now if it pleaſe you my Lorde Chiefe Juſtice, I do direct my Speach ſpecially to you. What time it pleaſed the Queenes Majeſtie, to call you to this Honourable Office, I did learne of a great Perſonage of hir Highneſſe Priuie Counſayle, that amongſt other good Inſtructions, hir Majeſtie charged and enjoyned you to miniſter the Law and Juſtice indifferently without reſpect of Perſons. And notwithſtanding the old Error amongſt you, whiche did not admit any Witneſſe to ſpeake, or any other matter to be hearde in the favor of the Aduerſarie, hir Majeſtie being partie, hir Highnes pleaſure was, that whatſoeuer could be brought in the fauor of the Subject, ſhoulde be admitted to be heard. And moreouer, that you ſpecially, and likewiſe all other Juſtices, ſhoulde not perſuade themſelues to ſit in Judgement otherwiſe for hir Highneſſe, than for hir Subject. Therefore this maner of indifferent proceeding being principally enjoined by Gods Commandement, which I had thought partly to haue remembred you and others here in Commiſſion in the beginning, if I might haue had leaue; and the ſame alſo being commanded you by the Queenes owne Mouth, me think you ought of right to ſuffer me to haue the Statutes red openly, and alſo to reject nothing that coulde be ſpoken in my Defence: and in thus doing you ſhal ſhew your ſelves worthy Miniſters, and fit for ſo worthie a Miſtreſſe.

Bromley. You miſtake the matter, the Queene ſpake thoſe Wordes to Maiſter Morgan Chiefe Juſtice

Juſtice of the Common Place; but you haue no cauſe to complaine, for you haue been ſuffered to talke at your pleaſure.

Hare. What woulde you doe with the Statute-Booke? the Jury doth not require it, they haue hearde the Euidence, and they muſt vppon their Conſcience trie whether you bee guiltie or no, ſo as the Booke needeth not: if they will not credite the Euidence ſo apparent, then they know what they haue to doe.

Cholmley. You ought not to haue any Bookes red here at your Appointment, for where doth aryſe any doubte in the Law, the Judges ſitte here to informe the Court; and now you doe but ſpende time.

Attourney. I pray you my Lorde Chiefe Juſtice repeate the Euidence for the Queene, and giue the Jurie their Charge, for the Priſoner will keepe you here all day.

Bromley. How ſaye you, haue you any more to ſaye for your ſelfe?

Throckmorton. You ſeeme to giue and offer mee the Lawe, but in very dede I have only the Forme and Image of the Lawe; neuertheleſſe, ſince I cannot be ſuffred to haue the Statutes red openly in the Booke, I will by your Pacience geſſe at them as I may, and I pray you to help me if I miſtake, for it is long ſince I did ſee them. The Statute of Repeale made the laſt Parliament hath theſe Wordes, Be it enacted by the Queene, that from henceforth none Acte, Deede, or Offence, being by Acte of Parliament or Statute made Treaſon, Petit Treaſon, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, by Words, Writing, Printing, Ciphering, Deedes, or otherwiſe whatſoeuer, ſhall be taken, had, deemed, or adjudged Treaſon, Petit Treaſon, but only ſuch as be declared, or expreſſed to be Treaſon, in or by an Acte of Parliament made in the xxv. Yeare of Edward III. touching and concerning Treaſons, and the Declaration of Treaſons, and none other. Here may you ſee this Statute doth referre all the Offences aforeſayde, to the Statute of the xxv. of Edward III. which Statute hath theſe Wordes touching and concerning the Treaſons that I am indited and arraigned of; that is to ſaye, Whoſoeuer doth compaſſe or imagine the Death of the King, or leuie War againſt the King in his Realm, or being adherent to the Kings Enimies within this Realme, or elſewhere, and bee thereof probably attainted by open Deede by People of their Condicion, ſhall be adjudged a Traytor. Now I praye you of my Jurie which haue my Lyfe in Triall, note well what things at this daye bee Treaſons, and howe theſe Treaſons muſt be tried and decerned, that is to ſaye, by open Deede, which the Lawes doth at ſome time terme ouert acte. And now I aske, notwithſtanding my Inditement, which is but matter alledged, where doth appeare the open Deede of any compaſſing or imagining the Queenes Death; or where doth appeare any open Deede of being adherent to the Queenes Enimies, giuing to them ayde and comfort; or where doth appeare any open Deede of taking the Tower of London?

Bromley. Why doe not you of the Queenes learned Counſell aunſwere him? Me thinke, Throckmorton, you neede not to haue the Statutes, for you haue them meetely perfectly.

Stanford. You are deceyued, to conclude all Treaſons in the Statute of the xxv. Yeare of Edwarde the Thirde; for that Statute is but a Declaration of certaine Treaſons, whiche were Treaſons before at the Common Lawe. Euen ſo there doth remayne diuers other Treaſons at this day at the Common Lawe, which be expreſſed by that Statute, as the Judges can declare. Neuertheleſſe, there is matter ſufficient alledged and proued againſt you, to bring you within the compaſſe of the ſame Statute.

Throckmorton. I praye you expreſſe thoſe Matters that bring me within the compaſſe of the Statute of Edwarde the Third; for the Wordes be theſe, And be thereof attainted by open Deede by People of like Condicion.

Bromley. Throckmorton, you deceyue your ſelfe, and miſtake theſe Wordes, by People of their Condicion; for thereby the Lawe doth vnderſtande the diſcouering of your Treaſons. As for example, Wiat and the other Rebelles, attainted for their great Treaſons, already declare you to be his and their adherent, in as much as diuerſe and ſundrie times you had Conference with him and them aboute the Treaſon; ſo as Wiat is now one of your Condicion, who as all the Worlde knoweth, hath committed an open trayterous Fact.

Throckmorton. By your leaue, my Lorde, this is a very ſtraunge and ſingular Underſtanding. For I ſuppoſe the meaning of the Lawe-makers did vnderſtande theſe Wordes, By People of their Condicion, of the State and Condition of thoſe Perſons whiche ſhoulde bee on the Inqueſt to trie the Partie arreygned, guiltie or not guiltie, and nothing to the bewraying of the Offence by another Man's act, as you ſay: for what haue I to doe with Wiat's actes, that was not nigh him by one hundred Myles?

Attorney. Will you take vppon you to skill better of the Lawe than the Judges? I doubt not but you of the Jurie will credit as it becommeth you.

Cholmley. Concerning the true vnderſtanding of theſe Words, By People of their Condicion, my Lord Chiefe Juſtice here hath declared the Truth; for Wiat was one of your Condicion, that is to ſay, of your Conſpiracie.

Hare. You doe not denie, Throckmorton, but that there hath bene Conference, and ſending betweene Wiat and you, and he and Winter doth confeſſe the ſame, with others; ſo as it is playne, Wiat may well be called one of your Condicion.

Throckmorton. Well, ſeeing you my Judges rule the vnderſtanding of theſe Wordes in the Statute, By People of your Condicion, thus ſtraungelye againſt mee, I will not ſtande longer vppon them. But where dothe appeare in mee an open Deede, wherevnto the Treaſon is ſpeciallye referred?

Bromley. If thre or foure do talke, deuiſe, and conſpire togither of a trayterous Acte to be done, and afterwards one of them doth commit Treaſon, as Wiat did; then the Lawe doth repute them, and euerye of them as their Actes; ſo as Wiat's Actes do implie and argue your open Deede, and ſo the Lawe doth terme it and take it.

Throckmorton. Theſe be marueylous Expoſitions, and wonderfull Implications, that another Man's acte, whereof I was not privy, ſhould be accounted myne; for Wiat did purge me that I knew nothing of his ſtirre.

Hare. Yea, Sir, but you were a principal Procurer and Contriuer of Wiat's Rebellion, though you were not with him when he made the ſtirre. And as my Lord here hath ſayd, the Law always doth adjudge him a Traytor, which was priuie and doth procure Treaſon, or any other Man to committe Treaſon, or a trayterous acte, as you did Wiat, and others; for ſo the Ouert Acte of thoſe whiche did it by your Procurement, ſhall in this caſe be accounted your open Deede. We haue a common caſe in the Lawe, if one by Procurement ſhoulde diſſeyſe you of your Lande, the Lawe holdeth vs both wrong doers, and giueth remedie as well againſt the one as the other.

Throckmorton. For God's ſake applie not ſuch Conſtructions againſt me; and though my preſent Eſtate doth not moue you, yet it were well you ſhoulde conſider your Office, and think what meaſure you giue to others, you your ſelues I ſay ſhall aſſuredly receyue the ſame agayne. The ſtate of mortall Life is ſuch, that Men know full little what hangeth ouer them. I put on within this xii. Moneths ſuch a Mind, that I moſte wofull Wight, was as unlike to ſtande here, as ſome of you that ſit there. As to your caſe laſt recited, whereby you woulde conclude, I haue remembred and learned of you Maſter Hare, and you Maſter Stanforde in the Parliament Houſe, where you did ſit to make Lawes, to expounde and explaine the Ambiguities and Doubtes of Lawe ſincerely, and that without Affections. There I ſay I learned of you, and others my Maiſters of the Lawe, this difference betwixt ſuch Caſes as you remembred one euen nowe, and the Statute whereby I am to be tried. There is a Maxime or Principle in the Lawe, which ought not to bee violated, that no penall Statute may, ought, or ſhoulde be conſtrued, expounded, extended, or wreſted, otherwiſe than the ſimple Wordes and nude Letter of the ſame Statute doth warrant and ſignifie. And amongſt diuers good and notable Reaſons by you there in the Parliament Houſe debated, Maiſter Sergeant Stanford, I noted this one, why the ſaid Maxime ought to be inuiolable: you ſaid, conſidering the priuate Affections many tymes both of Princes and Miniſters within this Realme, for that they were Men, and woulde and coulde erre, it ſhoulde be no Securitie, but very daungerous to the Subject, to referre the Conſtruction, and extending of Penall Statutes to anye Judges Equitie, as you termed it, which might eyther by feare of the higher Powers be ſeduced, or by Ignoraunce and Follye abuſed. And that is an aunſwere by procurement.

Bromley. Notwithſtanding the principle, as you alledge it, and the preciſeneſſe of your ſticking to the bare wordes of the Statute, it doth appeare and remaine of recorde in our Learning, that diuerſe Caſes haue bene adjudged Treaſon, without the expreſs wordes of the Statute, as the Quenes learned Counſell there can declare.

Attourney. It doth appeare, the Priſoner did not only intiſe or procure Wiat, Caroe, Rogers, and others, to commite their trayterous Actes, and there doth his open factes appear, whiche Vaughan's Confeſſion doth witneſſe; but alſo he did mynde ſhortlye after to aſſociate himſelfe with thoſe Traytours; for hee minded to haue departed with the Earle of Deuonſhire Weſtwardes.

Throckmorton. My Innocencie concerning theſe matters, I truſt, ſufficientlye appeareth by my foremer Aunſwers, notwithſtanding the condempned Man's unjuſt Accuſation. But becauſe the true underſtanding of the Statute is in queſtion; I ſaye, procurement, and ſpecially by words onely, is without the compaſſe of it: and that I doe learne and proue by the principle which I learned of Maiſter Stanforde.

Stanforde. Maiſter Throckmorton, you and I maye not agree this Day in the underſtanding of the Lawe, for I am for the Queene, and you ſpeake for your ſelfe: the Judges muſt determine the matter.

Bromley. He that doth procure another Man to commit a Felonie or a Murther, I am ſure you know well ynough, the Law doth adjudge the Procurer there, a Felon or a Murtherer; and in caſe of Treaſon, it hath bene alwayes ſo taken and reputed.

Throckmorton. I doe and muſt cleaue to my Innocencie, for I procured no Man to committe Treaſon; but yet for my learning I deſire to heare ſome caſe ſo ruled, when the Lawe was as it is nowe. I do confeſſe it, that at ſuche time there were Statutes prouided for the procurer, counſaylour, ayder, abetter, and ſuche lyke, as there were in King Henrie the VIIIth's tyme, you might lawfullye make this cruell Conſtruction, and bring the procurer within the compaſſe of the Lawe. But theſe Statutes being repealed, you ought not nowe ſo to doe; and as to the principal procurer in Fellonie and Murther, it is not lyke as in Treaſon, for the Principal and Acceſſaries in Felonie and Murther be triable and puniſhable by the Common Law; and ſo in thoſe caſes the Judges may uſe their Equitie, extending the determinacion of the fault as they thinke good: but in Treaſon it is otherwiſe, the ſame being limited by Statute Law, which I ſay and aduow is reſtreyned from any Judges Conſtruction by the Maxime that I recited.

Stanforde. Your Lordſhips do know a caſe in R. 3. time, where the procurer to counterfeyt falſe Mony, was judged a Traytor, and the Law was as it is now.

Hare. Maiſter Sergeaunt doth remember you Throckmorton, of an Experience before our time, that the Lawe hath bene ſo taken, and yet the procurer was not expreſſed in the Statute, but the Lawe hath ben always ſo taken.

Throckmorton. I neuer ſtudied the Law, whereof I do much repent mee; yet I remember, whyleſt Penall Statutes were talked of in the Parliament-Houſe, you the learned Men of the Houſe remembred ſome Caſes contrarie to this laſt ſpoken of. And if I miſreport them, I pray you helpe me. In the like caſe you ſpeake of concerning the procurer to counterfeyte falſe Money, at one time the procurer was judged a Fellon, and at another time neither Fellon nor Traytor; ſo as ſome of your Predeceſſours adjudged the procurer no Traytour in the ſame caſe, but leaned to their principle, though ſome other extende their Conſtructions too large. And here is two caſes with me, for one againſt me.

Bromley. Bicauſe you replie ſo ſore upon the principle, I will remember, where one taking the Great Seale of Englande from one Writing, and putting it to another, was adjudged a Traytour in Henry the IVth's tyme, and yet his act was not within the expreſſe words of the Statute of Edwarde the Third. There be diuerſe other ſuch like caſes that maye be alledged and need were.

Throckmorton. I pray you my Lord Chiefe Juſtice, call to your good Remembraunce, that in the ſelfe ſame caſe of the Seale, Juſtice Spilman, a graue and well learned Man, ſince that time, woulde not condemn the Offender, but did reproue that former Judgment by you laſt remembred, as erronious.

Stanforde. If I had thought you had bene ſo well furniſhed with Booke Caſes, I woulde haue bene better prouided for you.

Throckmorton. I haue nothing but I lerned of you ſpecially M. Sergeant, and of others my Maſters of the Law in the Parliament Houſe; and therefore I may ſay with the Prophet, Salutem ex inimicis noſtris.

Southwell. You have a very good Memorie.

Attorney. If the Priſoner may auoyde his Treaſons after this maner, the Queenes Suretie ſhall bee in great jeoperdy. For Jack Cade, the Blackſmith, and diuerſe other Traytors, ſometime alledging the Law for them, ſomtime they ment no harm to the King, but againſt his Counſell; as Wiat, the Duke of Suffolke, and theſe did againſt the Spanyardes, when there was no Spanyardes within the Realme. The Duke and his Brethren did miſtake the Lawe, as you doe, yet at length did confeſſe their Ignorance, and ſubmitted themſelves. And ſo were you beſt to doe.

Throckmorton. As to Cade and the Blackſmith, I am not ſo well acquainted with their Treaſons as you bee; but I haue red in the Chronicle, they were in the Fielde with a force againſt the Prince, whereby a manifeſt acte did appeare. As to the Duke of Suffolke's doings, they appertaine not to mee. And tho you woulde compare my ſpeache and talke againſt the Spanyardes, to the Duke's actes, who aſſembled a force in Armes, it is euident they differ much: I am ſorie to engreue any other Mans doings; but it ſerueth me for a piece of my Defence, and therefore I wiſh that no Man ſhould gather euill of it, God forbid that words and acts be thus confounded.

Attorney. Sir William Stanley uſed this ſhifte that the Priſoner uſeth now, he ſayde he did not leuie War againſt King Henry the VII. but ſayde to the Duke of Buckingham, that in a good Quarrell he wold aid him with 500 Men; and nevertheleſſe Stanley was for thoſe Words attainted, who, as all the Worlde knoweth, had before that time ſerued the King very faithfully and truly.

Throckmorton. I pray you Maiſter Attorney do not conclude me by blinde contraries. Whether you alledge Stanleyes caſe trulye or no, I knowe not. But admitte it be as you ſaye, what dothe this proue againſt me? I promiſed no ayde to Maiſter Wiat, nor to anye other. The Duke of Buckingham leuied Warre againſt the King, with whom Stanley was confederate ſo to doe, as you ſaye.

Attorney. I pray you, my Lords, that be the Queenes Commiſſioners, ſuffer not the Priſoner to vſe the Queenes learned Counſell thus; I was neuer interrupted thus in my Life, nor I neuer knewe any thus ſuffered to talke, as this Priſoner is ſuffered: ſome of us will come no more at the Barre, and we be thus handled.

Bromley. Throckmorton, you muſt ſuffer the Quenes learned Counſell to ſpeake, or elſe we muſt take order with you; you haue had leaue to talke at your pleaſure.

Hare. It is proued that you did talke with Wiat againſt the comming of the Spanyardes, and deuiſed to interrupt their arrivall, and you promiſed to doe what you coulde againſte them; whereupon Wiat being encouraged by you, did levie a force, and attempted Warre againſt the Queenes Royal Perſon.

Throckmorton. It was no Treaſon, nor no procurement of Treaſon, to talke agaynſte the comming hither of the Spanyardes, neyther it was Treaſon for mee to ſaye, I woulde hynder their commyng hither as muche as I coulde, vnderſtanding me rightly as I meant it; yea though you would extend it to the worſte, it was but Words, it was not Treaſon at this day as the Law ſtandeth: and as for Wiat's doings, they touche me nothing, for at his Death, when it was no tyme to report untruly, he purged me.

Bromley. By ſundry Caſes remembred here by the Queenes learned Counſell, as you have hearde, that procurement which did appear no otherwyſe but by Words, and thoſe you would make nothing, hath bin of long tyme, and by ſundry well learned Men in the Lawes, adjudged Treaſon. And therefore your procurement being ſo euident as it is, we may lawfully ſay it was Treaſon, bycauſe Wiat perfourmed a trayterous acte.

Throckmorton. As to the ſaid alledged fore Precedents againſt me, I haue recited as many for me, and I would you my Lord Chief Juſtice ſhuld incline your Judgements rather after the example of your honourable Predeceſſors, Juſtice Markham, and others, which did eſchewe corrupte Judgements, judging directly and ſincerely, after the Law, and the Principles in the ſame, than after ſuch Men as ſwaruing from the Truth, the Maxime, and the Law, did judge corruptely, malicioufly, and affectionately.

Bromley. Juſtice Markham had reaſon to warrant his doings; for it did appeare, a Merchant of London was arraigned and ſlaunderouſly accuſed of Treaſon, for compaſſing and imagining the King's Death, he did ſay he would make his Sonne Heire of the Crown, and the Merchant meant it of a Houſe in Cheapſide at the Signe of the Crowne; but your Caſe is not ſo.

Throckmorton. My Caſe doth differ, I graunt, but ſpecially bicauſe I haue not ſuche a Judge: yet there is another cauſe to reſtraine theſe your ſtrange and extraordinarie Conſtructions; that is to ſay, a Prouiſo in the latter ende of the Statute of Edwarde the Thirde, hauyng theſe Wordes: Provided alwayes, if any other Caſe of ſuppoſed Treaſon ſhall chaunce hereafter to come in Queſtion or Triall before any Juſtice, other than is in the ſaid Statute expreſſed, that then the Juſtice ſhall forbear to adjudge the ſayd caſe, untill it be ſhewed to the Parliament to trie whether it ſhould be Treaſon or Felonie. Here you are reſtrained by expreſſe Wordes to adjudge any caſe that is not manifeſtly mentioned before, and untill it be ſhewed to the Parliament.

Pyrtman. That Prouiſo is underſtand of caſes that may come in trial which hath bin in vre, but the Law hath always taken the procurer to be a principal Offender.

Sanders. The Law alwayes in caſes of Treaſon dothe accompte all Principalles, and no Acceſſaries, as in other Offences; and therefore a Man offending in Treaſon, either by couert acte or procurement, whereupon an open Deede hath enſued, as in this caſe, is adjudged by the Lawe a principal Traytoure.

Throckmorton. You adjudge (mee thinke) Procurement very hardly, beſydes the Principall, and beſides the good Example of your beſt and moſt godly learned Predeceſſors, the Judges of the Realme, as I haue partly declared; and notwithſtanding thys grieuous racking and extending of this worde Procurement, I am not in the daunger of it, for it doth appear by no Depoſition that I procured neyther one or other to attempt any acte.

Stan-

Stanforde. The Jurie haue to trye whether it bee ſo or no, let it weygh as it will.

Hare. I knowe no Meane ſo apparent to try Procurement as by Words, and that Meane is probable ynoughe agaynſt you, as well by youre owne Confeſſion, as by other Mennes Depoſitions.

Throckmorton. To talke of the Queenes Maryage with the Prince of Spayne, and alſo the commyng hyther of the Spanyardes, is not to procure Treaſon to be done; for then the whole Parliament-houſe, I meane the common Houſe, didde procure Treaſon: but ſince you wyll make no Difference betwixte Wordes and Actes, I praye you remember an Eſtatute made in my late Soueraigne Lorde and Maiſters tyme, Kyng Edward the Sixth, whiche apparantly expreſſeth the Difference; theſe bee the woordes: Who ſo euer dothe compaſſe, or imagine to depoſe the Kyng of his Royall Eſtate by open Preaching, expreſſe Wordes or Sayings, ſhall for the fyrſt Offence loſe and forfayte to the King all his and their Goodes and Cattailes, and alſo ſhal ſuffer Impriſonmente of their Bodyes at the King's Will and Pleaſure. Whoſoeuer, &c. for the ſecond Offence ſhall loſe and forfayte to the Kyng the whole Iſſues and Profytes of all his or their Landes, Tenementes, and other Hereditaments, Benefices, Prebendes, and other ſpiritual Promotions. Whoſoeuer, &c. for the thirde Offence, ſhall for Term of Lyfe or Lyues of ſuche Offendour or Offendors, &c. and ſhall alſo forfeite to the Kynges Majeſtie all his or their Goodes and Cattailes, and ſuffer during his or their Liues perpetuall Impriſonement of his or their Bodies. But whoſoeuer, &c. by Writing, Ciphering, or Acte, ſhall for the firſte Offence be adjudged a Traitour, and ſuffer the Paines of Deathe. Here you may perceiue howe the whole Realme and all your Judgementes hathe beefore this vnderſtande Wordes and Actes, diuerſlye and apparantlye; and therefore the Judgementes of the Parliamente did aſſigne Diuerſitie of Puniſhmentes, becauſe they woulde not confounde the true Vnderſtanding of Wordes and Deedes, appointing for compaſſing and imagining by Worde, Impriſonment; and for compaſſing and imagining by open Deede, Paines of Death.

Bromley. It is agreed by the whole Bench, that the Procurer and the Adherent be deemed alwayes Traytors, when as a trayterous Acte was committed by anye one of the ſame Conſpiracie; and there is apparent Proofe of youre adhering to Wiat, both by your owne Confeſſion and other wayes.

Throckmorton. Adhering and procuring bee not all one; for the Statute of Edwarde the Thirde doth ſpeake of adhering, but not of procuring, and yet adhering ought not be further extended, than to the Quenes Enimies within hir Realme, for ſo the Statute doth limit the Vnderſtanding. And Wiat was not the Queenes Enimie, for hee was not ſo reputed when I talked with him laſt, and our Speach implyed no Enmitie, neyther tended to anye Treaſon, or procuring of Treaſon; and therefore I pray you of the Jurie note, thoughe I argue the Lawe, I alledge my Innocencie, as the beſt part of my Defence.

Hare. Your adhering to the Queenes Enimies within the Realme, is euidentlye proued: for Wiat was the Queenes Enimie wythin the Realme, as the whole Realme knoweth it, and he hath confeſſed it, both at his Arrainement and at his Death.

Throckmorton. By your leaue, neither Wiat at his Arreignment, nor at his Death, did confeſſe that he was the Queenes Enimie when I talked laſt with him, neyther he was reputed nor taken in xiiij. dayes after, vntill he aſſembled a Force in Armes, what time I was at your Houſe Maſter Inglefielde, where I learned the firſt Intelligence of Wiats Stirre. And I aske you, who doth depoſe that there paſſed anye maner of Aduertiſement betwixt Wiat and mee, after he had diſcouered his Doings, and ſhewed himſelfe an Enimie? If I had bene ſo diſpoſed, who did let mee that I did not repaire to Wiat, or to ſende to him, or to the Duke of Suffolke eyther, who was in myne owne Countrey? and thither I might have gone and conueyed my ſelfe with him, vnſuſpected for my departing homewards.

Inglefielde. It is true that you were there at my Houſe, accompanied with others your Brethren, and, to my knowledg, ignorant of theſe Matters.

Bromley. Throckmorton, you confeſſed you talked with Wiat and others againſt the comming of the Spanyards, and of the taking of the Tower of London; wherevpon Wiat levied a Force of Men againſt the Spanyardes he ſayde, and ſo you ſaye all, but in Deede it was againſt the Queene, which he confeſſed at length: therefore Wiats Actes doe proue you Counſayler and Procurer, howſoeuer you woulde auoyde the matter.

Throckmorton. Me think you would conclude me with a miſhapen Argument in Logicke, and you will giue mee leaue, I will make another.

Stanforde. The Judges ſit not here to make Diſputations, but to declare the Law, which hath bene ſufficiently done, if you woulde conſider it.

Hare. You haue hearde Reaſon and the Lawe, if you will conceyue it.

Throckmorton. Oh mercifull God! Oh eternall Father, which ſeeſt all things, what maner of Proceedings are theſe? To what purpoſe ſerueth the Statute of Repeale the laſt Parliament, where I hearde ſome of you here preſent, and diuerſe other of the Queenes learned Counſayle, grieuouſlye inuey againſt the cruell and bloudie Lawes of King Henrie the Eyght, and againſt ſome Lawes made in my late Soveraigne Lorde and Maiſters time, King Edwarde the Sixth, ſome termed them Draco's Lawes, whiche were written in Bloude: Some ſayde they were more intollerable than any Lawes that Dionyſius or any other Tyraunt made. In concluſion, as many Men, ſo manye bitter Termes and Names thoſe Lawes had. And moreouer, the Preface of the ſame Eſtatute doth recite, that for Wordes onely, many great Perſonages, and others of good Behauiour, hath bene moſt cruelly caſt awaye by theſe foremer ſanguincolent thirſtie Lawes, with many other Suggeſtions for the Repeale of the ſame. And now let vs put on indifferent Eyes, and throughly conſider with our ſelues, as you the Judges handle the Conſtructions of the Statute of Edwarde the Thirde, with your Equitie and Extentions, whether we be not in much wors Caſe now than we were when thoſe cruel Lawes yoked vs. Theſe Lawes albeit they were grieuous and captious, yet they had the verie Propertie of a Lawe after S. Paules Deſcription: For thoſe Lawes did admoniſh vs, and diſcover our Sinnes plainly vnto vs; and when a Man is warned, hee is halfe armed. Theſe Lawes, as they bee handled, be very Baytes to catche vs, and onely prepared for the ſame, and no Lawes; for at the firſt ſight they aſcertaine vs we be deliuered from our olde Bondage, and by the late Repeale the laſt Parliament, we liue in more Securitie. But when it pleaſeth the higher Powers to call any Mannes Lyfe and Sayings in queſtion, then there be Conſtructions, Interpretations, and Extentions reſerued to the Juſtices and Judges Equitie, that the Partie triable, as I am nowe, ſhall finde himſelfe in much worſe caſe than before when thoſe cruell Lawes ſtoode in force. Thus our Amendement is from God's Bleſſing into the warme Sunne; but I require you honeſt Men whiche are to trie my Life, conſider theſe Opinions of my Life: Judges be rather agreeable to the Time than to the Truth; for their Judgments be repugnant to their owne Principle, repugnant to their godly and beſt learned Predeceſſors Opinions, repugnant, I ſay, to the Prouiſo in the Statute of Repeale made in the laſt Parliament.

Attorney. Maiſter Throckmorton, quiet your ſelfe, and it ſhall be the better for you.

Throckmorton. Maiſter Attorney, I am not ſo vnquiet as you be, and yet our Caſes are not alike; but bicauſe I am ſo tedious to you, and haue long troubled this Preſence, it maye pleaſe my Lorde Chiefe Juſtice to repeate the Euidence wherewith I am charged, and my Aunſwers to all the Objections, if there be no other matter to laye againſt me.

Then the Chief Juſtice Bromley remembred particularly all the Depoſitions and Euidences giuen againſt the Priſoner, and eyther for wante of good Memorie, or good Will, the Priſoners Aunſweres were in part not recited: wherevppon the Priſoner craued Indifferencie, and did helpe the Judges olde Memorie with his owne Recitall.

Sendall. My Maiſters of the Jurie, you haue to inquire whether Sir Nicholas Throckmorton Knight, here Priſoner at the Barre, be guiltie of theſe Treaſons, or any of them, wherof he hath bene indited and this daye arreigned, yea or no: And if you finde him giltie, you ſhall enquire what Landes, Tenementes, Goodes, and Cattalles he had at the Day of his Treaſons committed, or at anye time ſince; and whether he fledde for the Treaſons or no, if you finde him not guiltie.

Throckmorton. Haue you ſayde what is to be ſayd?

Sendall. Yea, for this time.

Throckmorton. Then I pray you giue me leaue to ſpeake a fewe words to the Jurie: The Weyght and Grauitie of my Cauſe hath greatly occaſioned me to trouble you here long, and therfore I minde not to intertain you here long with any prolixe Oration: You perceyue notwithſtanding this daye great Contention betwixt the Judges and the Queenes learned Counſayle on the one partie, and mee the poore and wofull Priſoner on the other partie. The Triall of our whole Controuerſie, the Triall of my Innocencie, the Triall of my Lyfe, Landes, and Goodes, and the Deſtruction of my Poſteritie for euer, doth reſt in your good Judgements. And albeit many this daye haue greatly inveyghed againſt me, the finall Determination thereof is transferred onely to you: howe grieuous and horrible the ſhedding of Innocents Bloude is in the ſight of Almightie God, I truſt you doe remember. Therefore take heede, I ſaye, for Chriſtes ſake, do not defile your Conſciences with ſuch heynous and notable Crimes; they bee grieuouſlye and terriblye puniſhed, as in this Worlde and Vale of Miſerie vppon the Childrens Children, to the thirde and fourth Generation, and in the Worlde to come with euerlaſting Fire an Damnation. Lift vp your Minds to God, and care not too muche for the Worlde; looke not backe to the Fleſhpots of Egypte, whiche will allure you from heauenly Reſpectes to worldlye Securitie, and can thereof neyther make you anye Suretie. Beleeue, I pray you, the Queene and hir Magiſtrates be more delighted with fauourable Equitie, than with raſhe Crueltie; and in that you be al Citizens, I wil take my leaue of you with S. Paules farewell to the Epheſians, Citizens alſo you be, whome he tooke to recorde that he was pure from ſhedding any Bloude; a ſpecial Token, a Doctrine left for your Inſtruction, that euerye of you may waſhe his Handes of Innocents Bloudeſhedde, when you ſhall take your leaue of this wretched Worlde; the Holy Ghoſt be amongſt you.

Sendall. Come hither, Sergeaunt, take the Jurye with you, and ſuffer no Man to come at them, but to be order'd as the Lawe appointeth, vntill they be agreed vpon their Verdit.

Throckmorton. It may pleaſe you my Lordes and Maiſters which be Commiſſioners, to give order that no Perſon haue Acceſs or Conference with the Jurie, neither that any of the Queenes learned Counſayle be ſuffered to repayre to them, or to talke with any of them, vntill they preſent themſelues here in open Court, to publiſh their Verdit.

Upon the Priſoners Suite on this behalfe, the Benche gaue Order that two Sergeauntes were ſworne to ſuffer no Man to repaire to the Jurie, vntill they were agreed.

Then the Priſoner was by Commandement of the Benche withdrawne from the Barre, and the Court adjourned vntill three of the Clocke at Afternoone; at whiche houre the Commiſſioners returned to the Guildehall, and there did tarie vntill the Jurie were agreed vpon the Verdit. And aboute five of the Clocke, their Agreement being aduertiſed to the Commiſſioners, the ſayde Priſoner, Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, was again brought to the Barre, where alſo the Jurie did repaire; and being demaunded whether they were agreed vpon their Verdit, aunſwered vniuerſally with one Voyce, Yea. Then it was asked, who ſhoulde ſpeake for them; they aunſwered, Whetſton the Foreman.

Then the Priſoner did ſo vppon the Summons.

Sendall. You that bee of the Jurie, looke vppon the Priſoner.

The Jurie did as they were enjoyned.

Sendall. Howe ſaye you, is Maiſter Throckmorton Knight, there Priſoner at the Barre, guiltie of the Treaſons whereof he hathe bin indicted and arraigned in manner and forme, yea or no?

Whetſton. No.

Sendall. How ſay you, did he flie vpon them?

Whetſton. No, we finde no ſuche thing.

Throckmorton. I hadde forgotten to aunſwere that Queſtion before; but you haue founde according to Truth: And for the better Warrantie of your Dooings, vnderſtande that I came to London, and ſo to the Queenes Counſell vnbroughte, when I vnderſtoode they demaunded for me; and yet I was almoſte an hundred miles hence, where if I had not preſumed vppon my Truthe, I coulde haue withdrawen my ſelfe from catching.

Bromley. How ſaye you the reſte of ye, is Whetſton's Verdict all your Verdicts?

The whole Inqueſt anſwered yea.

Bromley. Remember youre ſelues better, haue you conſidered ſubſtantially the whole Euidence in ſorte as it was declared and recited? the Matter dothe touche the Queenes Highneſſe, and your ſelues alſo, take good heede what you doe.

Whetſton. My Lorde, wee haue throughly conſidered the Euidence laide agaynſte the Priſoner, and his Aunſwerrs to all theſe Matters, and accordingly wee haue founde him not guiltie, agreable to all our Conſciences.

Bromley. If you haue done well, it is the better for you.

Throckmorton. It is better to be tried, than to liue ſuſpected: Bleſſed be the Lorde God of Iſraell, for he hath viſited and redeemed his People, and hathe raiſed vp a mightie Saluation for vs in the Houſe of his Seruaunte David. And it maye pleaſe you my Lorde Chiefe Juſtice, foraſmuche as I haue ben indited and arraigned of ſundry Treaſons, and haue according to the Lawe put my Triall to God and my Countrey, that is to ſay, to theſe honeſt Men whiche haue founde me not giltie; I humbly beſeeche you to giue me ſuch Benefite, Acquitall, and Judgement, as the Lawe in this Caſe doth appointe.

When the Priſoner had ſaide theſe wordes, the Commiſſioners conſulted togither.

Throckmorton. Maye it pleaſe you my Lorde Chiefe Juſtice, to pronounce Sentence for my Diſcharge.

Bromley. Where as you doe aske the Benefite that the Lawe in ſuche Caſe dothe appointe, I will giue it you, viz. That where you haue bene indited of ſundrye highe Treaſons, and haue bene here this Daye before the Queenes Commiſſioners and Juſtices arreigned of the ſaide Treaſons, wherevnto you haue pleaded not guiltye, and haue for Triall therein putte youre ſelfe on God and youre Countrey, and they haue founde you not guiltie, the Courte doth award that you be clerly diſcharged, paying your Fees. Notwithſtandyng, Mayſter Liuetenant, take hym with you agayne, for there are other Matters to charge hym with.

Throckmorton. It may pleaſe you my Lords and Maſters of the Quenes Highnes Priuie Counſel, to be on my behalfe humble Sutors to hir Majeſtie, that like as the Lawe this daye (God be praiſed) hathe purged mee of the Treaſons wharewith I was moſt dangerouſly charged, ſo it might pleaſe hir excellent Majeſtie to purge me in hir priuate Judgemente, and both forgyue and forgette my ouer raſhe Boldeneſſe, that I vſed in Talke of hir Highneſſe Marriage with the Prince of Spaine, Matters too farre aboue my Capacitie, and I very vnable to conſider the Gravitie therof; a Matter impertinent for me a private Perſon to talke of, which did appertain to hir Highneſſe Privy Counſel to haue in Deliberation: and if it ſhall pleaſe hir Highneſſe of hir bountifull Liberalite, to remitte my former Ouerſightes, I ſhall thinke my ſelfe happye for Triall of the Daunger that I haue this daye eſcaped, and may thereby admoniſhe mee to eſchewe thinges aboue my reache, and alſo to inſtructe mee to deale with Matters agreable to my Vocation; and God ſaue the Queenes Majeſtie, and graunte the ſame long to raigne ouer us, and the ſame Lorde bee praiſed for you the Magiſtrates, beefore whome I haue hadde my Triall this daye indifferentlye by the Lawe, and you haue proceeded with mee accordinglye, and the Grace of God bee amongſt you now and euer.

There was no Aunſwere made by any of the Benche to the Priſoners Sute, but the Attorney did ſpeake theſe wordes:

Attorney. And it pleaſe you, my Lordes, foraſmuche as it ſeemeth theſe Men of the Jurie which haue ſtraungely acquitte the Priſoner of his Treaſons whereof hee was indited, will forthwith departe the Courte; I praye you for the Queene, that they, and euerye of them, maye bee bounde in a Recognizance of fiue hundrethe Pounde apeece, to aunſwere to ſuch Matters as they ſhall be charged with, in the Queenes behalfe, whenſoeuer they ſhall be chardged or called.

Whetſton. I praye you, my Lordes, bee good vnto vs, and lette vs not bee moleſted for diſchardgyng our Conſciences truelye; we bee poore Marchant-men, and haue great Chardge vpon our hands, and our Lyuynges doe depende vppon our Trauailes; therefore it maye pleaſe you to appoynte vs a certaine Daye for our Appearaunce, bycauſe perhappes elſe ſome of vs maye bee in forreine Partes aboute our Buſineſſe.

The Tryal of James Earl of Bothwell, for the Murder of Henry Lord Darnley, Husband to Mary Queen of Scots, at the Senate-Houſe of Edinburgh, April 12. 1567.

AT the Juſtice Court of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, held and begun in the Senate-Houſe of Edinburgh, the 12th Day of April, 1567. by the noble and potent Lord Archibald Earl of Argyle, Lord Campbel, and Lord Juſtice General for our Sovereign Lady, in all the Parts of her Realm, where there's a Convention and lawful Aſſembly of Judges.

In this Court appear'd perſonally in Judgment Mr. John Spence of Conde, and Robert Crichton of Choc, Advocates for our Sovereign Lady, and in her Name; and there the ſaid Mr. John Spence produc'd Letters from our ſaid Sovereign Lady, executed and indors'd with the Summons: the Tenor of which Letters, Endorſements, and Summons hereafter follows.

The

The Commiſſion of Mary Queen of Scots, to try James Earl of Bothwell, for the Murder of her Husband Henry Lord Darnley.

MARY, by the Grace of God, Queen of Scotland. To our beloved Maſters William Purves, William Lawſon, Gawin Ramſey Meſſengers, our Sheriffs in that part conjunctly and ſeverally conſtitute, Greeting. Whereas it has been moſt humbly remonſtrated to us by our beloved and faithful Counſellors, Mr. John Spence of Conde, and Robert Crichton of Choc, our Advocates, that they are inform'd that our well-beloved Couſin and Counſellor Matthew Earl of Lennox, Father of our moſt dear Spouſe, has aſſerted, That James Earl of Bothwell, Lord Hallis and Creygchton, &c. and ſome others, were the Contrivers of the traitorous, cruel, deteſtable, and abominable Murder of his Highneſs, committed the 9th day of February laſt paſt, in the dead of the Night, in his Palace, for the time being, in our City of Edinburgh, near the Church in the Fields, wilfully and with premeditated Felony; and have declar'd their Suſpicion of the ſaid Earl and others, as having committed the ſaid cruel and horrid Murder. And having therefore reſolv'd that the Truth of it ſhould be try'd, in a Courſe of Juſtice, with all poſſible Diligence and Brevity, we have, by Advice of the Lords of our Privy Council, and alſo at the humble Requeſt and Petition of the ſaid Earl of Bothwell made to us, and in our Preſence, offering to ſubmit himſelf to a fair Tryal of what he is charg'd with, according to the Laws of the Land, order'd a Court of Juſtice to meet in the Senate-Houſe of Edinburgh on the 12th of April next enſuing, in order to do Juſtice upon the ſaid Earl and others for committing the ſaid cruel and abominable Crime and Offence, as is more at large ſet forth in an Act inſerted in the Regiſters of our ſaid Privy Council. Therefore it is our Pleaſure, and we enjoin and command you moſt expreſly, that, incontinent theſe our Letters ſeen, you proceed, and, in our Name and Authority, ſummon the ſaid Matthew Earl of Lennox, at his own Houſe, to appear, together with all others of our Subjects, having and pretending to have Intereſt in this Cauſe, by publick Proclamation made at the Mercat Croſſes of our Towns of Edinburgh, Dumbarton, Glaſgow, Lanerk, and other Places neceſſary, to the end that they may appear before our Judges, or their Deputies, in our Senate-Houſe at Edinburgh, on the ſaid 12th day of April next enſuing, and join with us in the Proſecution of this Cauſe, by giving them a Summons. And in caſe that they don't appear, we order that our Judges, or their Deputies, ſhall proceed and give Sentence the ſame day, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of our Realm, without any farther Delay or Prolongation; and that you ſummon every one of them to appear the ſame day, under the Penalty of a Fine of 40 l. Sterling, for which they ſhall anſwer before us as for their own Act and Deed. And for this end, we give to every one of you conjunctly and ſeverally our full Power, by theſe our Letters, to the intent that you may deliver and execute them duly, and indorſe them to him who ſhall be the Bearer thereof. Given under our Seal at Edinburgh the 27th day of March, and of our Reign the 25th, in the year 1567. Sign'd accordingly by Advice of the Queen's Council. MARY.

What was indors'd on the back of the ſaid Commiſſion.

The 19th day of March, 1567. I William Purves, Meſſenger and Sheriff conſtitute for that part, according to the Command of the Letters of our Sovereign Lady, and in her Name and Authority, have ſummon'd Matthew Earl of Lennox, and all others of her Majeſty's Subjects, having and pretending to have Intereſt in what is within ſpecify'd, by publick Proclamation, made at the Mercat Croſs of the City of Edinburgh, in order to appear before the Judges, or their Deputies, in the Senate-Houſe at Edinburgh, the 12th day of April next enſuing, and to proſecute and join with our ſaid Sovereign Lady, in the Cauſe herein ſet forth, with the Summons as it is mention'd in the ſaid Commiſſion; a Copy of which I have affix'd to the Croſs of the ſaid Mercat, in preſence of John Anderſoun and David Land, and many others. And in further Teſtimony of this my Execution and Indorſement, I have hereunto ſet my Seal. Sign'd William Purves.

Another Summons.

The laſt day of March but one, the firſt and ſecond days of April, in the year above-mention'd, I Gawin Ramſey Meſſenger, and one of the Sheriffs conſtitute for that part, went according to the Command contain'd in the Letters of our Sovereign Lady, and in her Name and Authority ſummon'd the ſaid Matthew Earl of Lennox, particularly at his Houſes in Glaſgow and Dumbarton. And whereas I ſought him, but could not find him in Perſon, nor her Majeſty's other Subjects, pretending to have Intereſt in the Proſecution of the Cauſe herein ſet forth, I made a Proclamation at the Mercat Croſſes of the Towns of Glaſgow, Dumbarton, and Lanerk, in order to make them appear before the Judge or his Deputy, at the ſaid Senate-Houſe of Edinburgh, on the ſaid 12th day of April next enſuing, and to join in the Proſecution with the Queen our ſaid Sovereign Lady, in the Action within-mention'd, with the Summons, as it is there declar'd, and according to the Form and Tenour of her Letters, of which I have ſet up a Copy on each of the ſaid Croſſes in thoſe Markets. I have done and executed the above before the Witneſſes that follow, viz. George Herbeſoun, Nicholas Andrew, Robert Letteric Meſſenger; William Smollet, John Hamilton, Jam. Bannatine, Robert Hamilton, and many others: And in further Teſtimony hereof, I have ſign'd theſe Preſents with my Sign Manual. Gawin Ramſey, Meſſenger.

Another Summons.

The firſt day of April, 1567. I William Lawſon, Meſſenger, and Sheriff conſtitute for that part, went according to the Command ſignify'd in the Commiſſion of our Sovereign Lady, to the Mercat Croſs of Perth, and there, by publick Proclamation made according to Law, I ſummon'd Matthew Earl of Lennox, and all other Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lady, having and pretending to have Intereſts, in order to proſecute James Earl of Bothwell, Lord of Hallis and Creygchton, &c. and others, for the cruel Murder committed on the King; and have affix'd a Copy on the ſaid Croſs, according to the Form and Tenour of theſe Preſents. And this in Preſence of the Witneſſes hereafter nam'd, viz. James Mareſchal, Alexander Borthwick, and John Anderſon Meſſengers, and many many others. And in further Teſtimony of this my Execution and Indorſement, I have ſign'd theſe Preſents with my Sign Manual. Signed accordingly, William Lawſon, Meſſenger, with my own hand.

The Indictment.

You James Earl of Bothwell, Lord of Haillis, Creygchton, &c. are indicted on account of the cruel and horrid Murder of the moſt Excellent, moſt High and moſt Mighty Prince the King, the late moſt dear Spouſe of the Queen's Majeſty, our Sovereign Lady, committed in the Dead of the Night, at his Houſe near the Church of the Fields in this City, as he was taking his Reſt, by treaſonably ſetting fire to a great quantity of Gunpowder in the ſaid Houſe, by the violence whereof the whole Houſe was blown up into the Air, and the King himſelf by you kill'd traitorouſly and cruelly, wilfully, and by premeditated Felony. And this you did the 9th day of February laſt paſt, in the Dead of the Night as aforeſaid, as is notorious, and you cannot deny.

Upon the producing of which Letters, ſo executed, indors'd, and publiſh'd, the ſaid Advocate demanded an Act and Inſtrument in the Court, and requir'd that the Judge ſhould proceed according to the Form of them.

Theſe Letters being read in Judgment with the Indorſements, the Judge, by virtue thereof, order'd the ſaid James Earl of Bothwell to be call'd as Defendant of the one part, and Matthew Earl of Lennox, and all other Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lady, pretending to proſecute this Matter, as Plaintiffs on the other part; that they might appear in Court, and exhibit their Complaints and Defences, according to the Laws of the Realm.

And immediately appear'd in Judgment the ſaid James Earl of Bothwell, and enter'd the Court in Perſon; after which he choſe Maſter David Borthwick of Luchthill, and Mr. Edmund Hay for his Advocates, who appearing alſo in Judgment, were admitted by the Judge for that effect.

Appear'd alſo Mr. Henry Kinloch, calling himſelf Proctor for his Maſter Andrew Lord Errol, Conſtable of Scotland, and alledg'd, that the Conſtable of the Realm had at all times been own'd to be the only Judge Competent of Men of that Quality, when accus'd of having committed Murder and Bloodſhed near the Prince's Chamber, and four miles round; and therefore his ſaid Maſter being at preſent Conſtable of this Realm, ought to be Judge to James Earl of Bothwell, and others his Accomplices, ſummon'd to appear this day, and to be charg'd with the above-mention'd Act of the cruel Murder of Henry King of Scotland. And in caſe that Archibald Earl of Argyle, as Juſtice-General of this Realm, proceed and take cognizance of this Fact, the ſaid Mr. Henry, Proctor above-mention'd, proteſted ſolemnly that this Tryal ſhould not be prejudicial to the ſaid Conſtable, his Office, Right, Title, Profit, Juriſdiction, and Poſſeſſion, in any manner whatever: But that he might exerciſe his ſaid Juriſdiction in all ſuch Cauſes for time to come, according to the Seiſin of his Office, and take cognizance of them, as his Predeceſſors had been us'd to do in the like caſe. This he would make appear, by the poſſeſſion which his Predeceſſors had of it at all times and otherwiſe; and he requir'd that this Proteſtation ſhould be regiſter'd in the Acts, and affirm'd that the Juriſdiction of the preſent Judge ought not to be allow'd in this Caſe.

The Judge having no regard to this Proteſtation, did, by Advice of his Aſſeſſor, decree, that he would take cognizance of the Fact notwithſtanding, ſince nothing had been produc'd by the ſaid Mr. Henry, to verify the Contents of what he had alledg'd and proteſted: Of all which the Earl of Bothwell demanded an Act and Inſtrument.

The ſaid Matthew Earl of Lennox, and other Subjects of our Sovereign Lady, having and pretending to have Intereſt in this Proſecution, being call'd ſeveral times to appear, and to join with the ſaid Advocates in proſecuting the ſaid Action, there appear'd Robert Cunningham, who call'd himſelf Servant to the ſaid Matthew Earl of Lennox, and exhibited a Writing, ſign'd with his own hand in full Court, as being authoriz'd thereunto, and made a Proteſtation and Requiſition of the whole, agreeable to the ſaid Writing; of which the Tenor follows.

The Proteſtation of the Earl of Lennox.

My Lords, I am come hither, being ſent by my Maſter my Lord of Lennox, to declare the Cauſe why he is this day abſent, having full Power from him for that effect, as the Truth is. The Cauſe then of his Abſence is the ſhortneſs of the Time allow'd him, and that he is hinder'd to have his Friends and Servants, who ought to accompany him for his Honour, and the Safety of his Perſon, conſidering the Strength of the oppoſite Party, and that he has no Aſſiſtance from any of his Friends, but muſt ſtand by himſelf: Therefore his Lordſhip has commanded me to require another competent Day, according to the Importance of this Cauſe, that he may be here preſent; but if you will proceed now, I proteſt, that I may, without Offence to any Perſon, make uſe of the Authority committed to me by my ſaid Lord and Maſter, of which I demand an Act.

Item, I proteſt, that if thoſe who aſſiſt in this Judgment and Inqueſt upon the Perſons accus'd, do undertake to acquit them of the King's Murder, that it ſhall be held as a voluntary Error, and not of Ignorance; ſince 'tis notoriouſly known who they are that have murder'd the King, as my ſaid Lord and Maſter affirms; of which Proteſtation I require an Act thus ſign'd, Robert Cunningham: of the Production of which Writing and Proteſtation the ſaid Robert demanded an Act and Inſtrument.

The Judge conſidering the Writing and Proteſtation produc'd by the ſaid Robert Cunningham, and having regard to the Letters ſent to our Sovereign Lady, by Matthew Earl of Lennox, alſo produc'd and read in Judgment, the Tenor of which is hereafter inſerted; by which Letters and Writing the ſaid Earl of Lennox requires, that a brief and ſummary Tryal may be made of this Cauſe: And having alſo regard to the Act, and the Order thereupon taken by the Lords of the Privy Council, and other ſuch things; and to what the Advocates inſiſt upon as to the ſame Fact, requiring that Juſtice may be done to the ſaid Earl of Bothwell; and taking notice likewiſe of the Requeſt and Demand which he has made, that the whole may be thorowly examin'd; the Judge, by the Advice of the Lords and Barons his Aſſiſtants, found that they ought to proceed to the Deciſion of the ſaid Cauſe the ſame Day, according to the Laws of the Realm, notwithſtanding the Writing and Proteſtation produc'd by the the ſaid Robert Cunningham, and that in the mean time he ſhall be admitted to join with and aſſiſt the ſaid Advocates, for the final Trial of the ſaid Cauſe, if he thinks good.

Copies of the Letters ſent to the Queen by the Earl of Lennox.

Madam, I return moſt humble Thanks to your Majeſty for the gracious and conſolatory Letters which I receiv'd the 24th of this preſent Month; by which I perceive that 'tis your Majeſty's Pleaſure to put off the Trial of this late execrable Fact, till the Parliament meets. May it pleaſe your Majeſty to conſider, that tho I be aſſur'd that your Highneſs muſt needs think the time long till the Truth of this Fact be found out, and the Authors of it puniſh'd according to their Demerits; yet I moſt humbly beg pardon of your Majeſty for troubling and importuning you ſo often, as I am forc'd to do, the Affair being ſuch as touches me ſo near; and therefore moſt humbly requeſt, that your Majeſty would take in good part my Advice as follows: It is, that 'tis too long to wait for the meeting of the Parliament; beſides this is not an Affair of that ſort, which uſes to be treated of in Parliament, but being ſuch, and of ſo great Importance, as is evident to every one, it ought rather to be inquir'd into with all Diligence, that the Authors may ſuffer an exemplary Puniſhment. I know that your Majeſty is much more able to judge of it than I; but being inform'd that certain Placarts or Writings have been affix'd to the Gate of the Senate-Houſe of Edinburgh, which anſwer'd to your Majeſty's firſt and ſecond Proclamation, and nam'd ſome Perſons as Authors of the ſaid cruel Murder, I moſt humbly requeſt of your Majeſty, for the Honour of God, and for that of your Majeſty and your Realm, and for the Welfare and Peace of it, that you would be pleaſed not only to cauſe thoſe who are nam'd in the ſaid Placarts to be apprehended and put in ſafe Cuſtody, but likewiſe to aſſemble your Nobility with all poſſible Diligence, and then to ſummon by Proclamation the Authors of the ſaid Placarts, to appear for the Ends therein mention'd; and if they appear not, your Majeſty may, by the Advice of your Nobility and Council, ſet at liberty thoſe who are therein nam'd. Your Majeſty will do an honourable Act in bringing this matter to this Iſſue, that according as the matter ſhall appear to your Majeſty, you may puniſh and chaſtiſe the Authors of this cruel Fact; or if the ſaid Placarts ſhall be found falſe and of no validity, thoſe who are charg'd may be acquitted and ſet at liberty, according to your Majeſty's good Pleaſure. Madam, I pray God Almighty to take your Majeſty into his Protection and Safeguard, and to preſerve you in Health and happy Proſperity. From Howſtoun the 26th of February.

A ſecond Letter from the Earl of Lennox.

Madam. I beſeech your Majeſty to attend to what follows: Your Highneſs in your laſt Letters acquainted me, that if there were any Names in the Placarts, which were ſet up at the Door of the Senate-houſe of Edinburgh, of ſuch Perſons as I thought worthy of Condemnation, for the Murder of the King your Majeſty's Huſband, you would, according to my Advice, make it your Buſineſs to bring them to Tryal, according to the Laws of this Realm, and as the Nature of the Crime requir'd. May it therefore pleaſe your Majeſty to know, that from the time I received your ſaid Letters, I always expected that ſome of thoſe bloody Murderers would be made openly known to you; but ſince I perceive they are not, I cannot find in my heart to conceal them from you any longer. Your Majeſty therefore has here the Names of thoſe whom I greatly ſuſpect, viz. the Earl of Bothwell, Sir James Balfour, and Gilbert Balfour his Brother; Maiſter David Chamers; Black Maiſter John Spence; the Sieur Franciſcus Baſtian, John de Bourdeaux, and Joſeph, the Brother of Davy Kizio: Whom I moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty, according to my former Petition, not only to cauſe to be apprehended and committed to ſafe Cuſtody, but alſo with all Diligence to aſſemble your Nobility and Council, and then to take ſuch Advice about the Fact of the Perſons above-mention'd, as they may be duly examin'd. And as I hope, ſo I make no doubt, but that by proceeding in this manner, the Spirit of God will aſſiſt toward bringing it to a good Concluſion. Herein your Majeſty will do an Act holy and honourable for your ſelf, who are a Party, and highly ſatisfy thoſe who ſtand in any Relation to the Deceas'd, whom you lov'd ſo dearly. And not doubting that your Majeſty will give proper Orders for the whole, according to the importance of the Matter (as I moſt humbly beſeech you to do) I ſhall pray to Almighty God to take you into his Protection, and to give you long Life and Health with Grace, that your Reign may be both long and proſperous. Howſtoun, March 17.

The Names of the Judges or Jury deputed for the Abſolution of the Earl of Bothwell.

Andrew Earl of Rothes, George Earl of Caithneſs, Gilbert Earl of Caſſils, Lord John Hamilton, Commendator of Arbroth, Son to the Duke, James Lord Roſſe, Robert Lord Semple, John Maxwell Lord Herris, Lawrence Lord Oliphant, John Maſter of Forbes, John Gourdon of Lochinvar, Robert Lord Boyde, James Cockburn of Lanton, John Sommerville of Cumbuſnethan, Moubray of Barnbougal, and Ogilbye of Boyne.

The above-nam'd being choſen, admitted, and ſworn to give Sentence according to Cuſtom, and the Earl of Bothwell being accus'd by Indictment of the Crime above declar'd, and ſubmitting and referring himſelf to the Sentence of the ſaid Judges, they went out of the Senate-houſe to another Place; and after having long diſputed together upon all the Articles of the ſaid Accuſation, they did each of them, one after another, declare the ſaid James Earl of Bothwell quit and abſolv'd of the whole, and every part of the Murder of the King, and in general of whatever depended on the ſaid Accuſation.

Afterwards the ſaid George Earl of Caithneſs, Chancellor or Preſident at the ſaid Tryal (i. e. Foreman of the Jury) as well in his own Name as that of the other Judges, demanded an Act, to the end that as well the Advocates, as the ſaid Robert Cunningham, having a Proxy from the Earl of Lennox, and all others whomſoever, might be debarr'd hereafter from producing any other Writings or Proofs whatſoever, in order to ſupport the ſaid Indictment, and that the Judges might not be induc'd to give any other Opinion than they had done before; the rather becauſe no body had prov'd the Truth of the Accuſation, not ſo much as any part of it, and that no Accuſer appear'd but the above-mention'd, who were preſented in order to carry on the Tryal: and therefore fore the Judges having regard to the ſame, declar'd him free as far as they could have any knowledge of the Fact, with a Proteſtation, that this might not be afterwards imputed to them as a Fault: which Act and Proteſtation, when the ſaid Earl of Caithneſs Preſident, and ſome of the Judges above-mention'd, return'd to the Court in the Senate-houſe, and before the pronouncing of the aforeſaid Sentence, was, at the requeſt of the ſaid Earl of Caithneſs, read publickly, and in full Court, and he demanded an Act and Inſtrument of it, proteſting as above.

Extracted from the Regiſters of the Acts of our Sovereign Lady's Court of Juſtice, by me John Bellenden of Auchnoule Knight, and Clerk General of the ſaid Court, under my Sign Manual.

Thus ſign'd, John Bellenden, Clerk of the Court.

The Proclamations and Placarts, in anſwer to them mention'd in the Trial, and others that happen'd after, were as follows.

Incontinent after the Murder of the King, the 10th of February, 1566. a Proclamation was iſſu'd, ſetting forth, that whoever would diſcover the Murderers ſhould have 2000 l. Sterling. This Proclamation was anſwer'd by a Placart, fix'd on the door of the Senate-houſe of Edinburgh, on the 16th day of February, in form as follows:

Whereas publick Notice has been given, that whoſoever will diſcover the Murderers of the King, ſhould have 2000 l. Sterling; I who have made Enquiry by thoſe who committed the Act it ſelf, affirm, that the Authors of the ſaid Murder are the Earl of Bothwell, Sir James Balfour, the Curate Elisk, Maſter David Chambers, and black Maſter John Spens, who above all was the principal Author of this Murder; and the Queen, who conſented to it at the Perſuaſion of the ſaid Earl of Bothwell, by the Witchcraft of the Lady Buccleugh.

Upon this, another Proclamation was iſſu'd the ſame day, requiring the Perſon who had ſet up the Placart to appear, own, and ſubſcribe it in Perſon, that he might have the Sum promis'd by the former Proclamation, and more if he deſerv'd it, as the Queen and her Council ſhould think fit.

To this the following Anſwer was given and ſet up at the ſame Place the day following.

Foraſmuch as a Proclamation has been iſſu'd ſince I ſet up my former, requiring that I ſhould come to ſubſcribe and own it; for Anſwer I do likewiſe require, that the Mony may be conſign'd into the hands of ſome Man of Subſtance, and I will appear next Sunday, and four others with me, and then I will ſubſcribe and maintain what I have ſaid. Moreover, I require that the Sieur Francis Baſtien, and Joſeph the Queen's Goldſmith, may be apprehended; and I will declare what each of them and their Accomplices did in particular.

To this no Anſwer was return'd.

Tho the Earl of Bothwell was acquitted as above-mention'd, yet knowing that the World did ſtill eſteem him guilty, he did, in order to clear himſelf further, ſet up a Paper in the Market-place, bearing, that albeit he had been acquitted by Law, yet to make his Innocence the more manifeſt, he was ready to try the ſame by ſingle Combat, with any Man of honourable Birth and Reputation, who would accuſe him of the King's Murder.

To which Anſwer was made by another Placart, ſet up immediately after in the ſame Place, That foraſmuch as the ſaid Earl of Bothwell had caus'd a Placart to be ſet up, ſign'd with his own Hand, whereby he challeng'd any Man of Quality, and of a fair Reputation, who would and dar'd to ſay that he was guilty of the Death of the King; adding, that he who ſaid it, or went about to ſupport that Charge, ſhould be forc'd to eat his Words: A Gentleman of Honour and good Renown accepted his Offer, and ſaid, he would prove by the Law of Arms that he was the principal Author of that horrid Murder, of which the Judges had raſhly acquitted him for fear of Death, after ſo much Inquiry had been made into it. And whereas the King of France and the Queen of England requir'd, by their Ambaſſadors, that the ſaid Murder might be puniſh'd, he alſo intreats their Majeſties to inſiſt with the Queen, his Sovereign Lady, that by her Conſent a Time and Place may be appointed in their Countries to combat the Earl according to the Law of Arms, in their Preſence, or in that of their Deputies; at which Time and Place he promiſes and ſwears, on the word of a Gentleman, to be preſent and do his Duty, provided their Majeſties will, by Proclamation, grant Safe-conduct to him and his Company, to paſs and repaſs thro their Dominions without any moleſtation. He refers it to the Judgment of the Readers and Hearers what juſt Cauſe he has to deſire this of the King of France and the Queen of England, and by this he advertiſes the reſt of the Murderers to prepare themſelves; for he will give each of them the like Challenge, and publiſh their Names in Writing, that they may be known to every body.

To this Bothwell made no Reply.

The Tryal of THOMAS Duke of Norfolk, January 16. 14 Eliz. A. D. 1571.

FIRST of all, there was prepar'd in Weſtminſter-Hall a large Scaffold, about a Foot diſtant from the Chancery-Court; and to the ſame Scaffold a long Paſſage, about ſix foot broad, and high built all the way as far as to the Common-Pleas Bar. In the middle, on the South-ſide of the Scaffold, was erected a Chair, ſomewhat higher than the reſt, with a Cloth of State for the Lord High Steward of England, who for that day was George Earl of Shrewsbury. On both ſides of the Lord High Steward, ſat the Lords in this Order:

Reynold Earl of Kent,	Earl of Worceſter,
Thomas Earl of Suſſex,	Earl of Huntingdon,
Ambroſe E. of Warwick,	Francis Earl of Bedford,
——Earl of Pembroke,	Edward Earl of Hertford,
Robert Earl of Leiceſter,	Viſcount Hereford,
Lord Clinton, Lord High Admiral of England,	William Lord Howard of Effingham,
William Lord Burleigh,	Lord Grey of Wilton,
James Lord Mountjoy,	Lord Sandes,
Lord Wentworth,	Lord Burgh,
Lewis Lord Mordant,	Lord St. John,
Lord Chandois,	Lord Rich,
Oliver Lord St. John of Bletſhoe.	Lord North,
	Thomas Lord Buckhurſt,
	Lord De La Ware.

On both ſides of the Lord High Steward, on a lower Form, at the Lord's Feet, ſat the Judges, viz. on the right Hand;

Sir Robert Catlin, Lord Chief Juſtice of England;
Sir James Dyer, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas;
Sir Edward Saunders, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

On the left Hand, the reſt of the Judges ſat according to their Order.

At the feet of the Lord High Steward, directly before him, in a hollow Place cut in the Scaffold for that purpoſe, ſat Mr. Miles Sands Clerk of the Crown, with his Secondary. Next, beneath the Juſtices in the ſame Row, ſat at the right Hand, viz. on the Eaſt-ſide, Sir Francis Knowles, with three of the Queen's Houſhold, and Sir Walter Mildmay Chancellor of the Exchequer, with ſeveral others of the Queen's Privy Council. On the left ſide, on the Weſt part of the ſaid Scaffold in the ſame Degree, ſat next the Judges, Dr. Wilſon Maſter of the Requeſts, and ſeveral other Perſons of Note.

On the North part of the Scaffold, directly before the Bar where the Priſoner came, ſat Mr. Nicholas Barrham the Queen's Serjeant, Mr. Gilbert Gerard the Queen's Attorney-General, Mr. Thomas Bromley Sollicitor-General, and Mr. Thomas Wilbraham the Queen's Attorney of the Court of Wards. On the right Hand, by Permiſſion, ſat Mr. William Fleetwood Recorder of London; and on their left Hands were Mr. Thomas Norton, who wrote down this Trial upon the Scaffold, as alſo Garter King at Arms, two Gentlemen Uſhers, and two Serjeants at Arms.

The Lord High Steward being ſet in his Chair, and all the Lords and others ſet in their Places, with a great Number of People in the Hall, the Hall being kept by the Knight Marſhal, and the Warden of the Fleet and their Servants with Tipſtaves; about half an hour paſt eight in the morning the Lord High Steward ſtood up at his Chair bare-headed, and Mr. Norris the Gentleman-Uſher holding the white Rod before him, Littleton the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation as follows:

My Lord's Grace, the Queen's Majeſty's Commiſſioner, High Steward of England, commandeth every Man to keep ſilence on pain of Impriſonment, and to hear the Queen's Majeſty's Commiſſion read. Which then was read by the Clerk of the Crown.

Then the ſaid Lord High Steward ſat down again in his Chair, and the Gentleman-Uſher deliver'd him the white Rod, which he held in his hand a great while; and after the Indictment read, redeliver'd it to the Gentleman-Uſher, who held it up before him all the time of the Arraignment. Then Littleton the Serjeant again made Oyer, and proclaim'd thus: Thomas Edwards, Serjeant at Arms, return thy Precept; which being put in immediately, he deliver'd to the Clerk of the Crown the Names of the Peers ſummon'd for the Trial.

Then Littleton the Serjeant again made Oyer, and proclaim'd thus: All Earls, Viſcounts, and Barons, ſummon'd to appear here this day, every one anſwer to your Names on pain of future Peril. Then were all the Lords call'd in order by their Names of Baptiſm, and Sirnames of Dignity, beginning at the antienteſt; and every one ſeverally, as he was called, ſtood and ſignify'd their Appearance.

Their Order of Ancientry, as they were call'd, was thus:

Raynold Earl of Kent,	William Lord Howard of Effingham,
William E. of Worceſter,	William Lord Burleigh,
Thomas Earl of Suſſex,	Lord Grey of Wilton,
Henry E. of Huntingdon,	James Lord Mountjoy,
Ambroſe E. of Warwick,	Lord Sandes,
Francis E. of Bedford,	Lord Wentworth,
——E. of Pembroke,	Lord Burgh,
Edward E. of Hertford,	Lewis Lord Mordant,
Robert E. of Leiceſter,	Lord St. John,
Walter Viſc. Hereford,	Robert Lord Rich,
——Lord Clinton,

Lord

Lord North, Thomas Lord Buckhurſt,
Lord Chandois, Lord De La Ware.
*Ol.*Ld St. John of Bletſhoe,

Then the Serjeant again made Oyer, and proclaim'd thus: Robert Catlin Knight, Chief Juſtice of England, return thy Certiori and thy Precept; which was immediately deliver'd to the Clerk of the Crown, and read. The Serjeant again made Oyer, and proclaim'd thus: Lieutenant of the Tower of London, return thy Habeas Corpus, and bring forth thy Priſoner Thomas Duke of Norfolk.

Then was the Duke brought upon the long half Pace to the Bar, Sir Owen Hopton Lieutenant of the Tower leading him by the right hand, and Sir Peter Garowe by the left, and ſo he was plac'd at the Bar, they ſtill holding him by the Arms; the Chamberlain of the Tower, with the Axe of the Tower ſtanding with the Edge towards Sir Peter; while behind the Duke ſtood Mr. Henry Skipwith, who, after the Duke's Impriſonment, was appointed to attend on him in the Tower.

Then the Duke with a haughty Look, and oft biting his Lip, ſurvey'd the Lords on each ſide him. In the mean time the Lieutenant of the Tower deliver'd in his Return; then the Serjeant made Oyer and Proclamation of Silence, while the Clerk of the Crown ſaid to the Duke thus: Thomas Duke of Norfolk, late of Remming-hall in the County of Norfolk, hold up thy hand: Which the Duke did very luſtily. Then the Clerk of the Crown read the Indictment, the Tenour whereof is thus:

Middleſex.

THE Jury preſent and ſay, in behalf of our Lady the Queen, That Thomas Duke of Norfolk, late of Remming-hall in the County of Norfolk, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and Chriſtian Princeſs Elizabeth, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. and his Sovereign Lady, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing his due Allegiance, but ſeduc'd by the Inſtigation of the Devil, contrary to that cordial Affection and bounden Duty that true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lady the Queen do bear, and of right ought to bear towards our ſaid Lady the Queen; and intending to cut off and deſtroy the ſaid Queen Elizabeth, the 22d day of September, in the 11th year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeth, and divers other Days and Times before and after, at Charter-houſe in the County of Middleſex, hath falſly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly conſpir'd, imagin'd, and gone about, not only to deprive, depoſe, and caſt out the ſaid Queen, his Sovereign Lady, from her Royal Dignity, Title, Power, and Government of her Kingdom of England; but alſo to bring about and compaſs the Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Sovereign Lady the Queen, and to make and raiſe Sedition in the ſaid Kingdom of England, and to ſpread a miſerable Civil War amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid Lady the Queen, and to procure and make an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lady the Queen, his ſupreme and natural Lady; and ſo to make publick War within the Realm of England, contrary to our ſaid Lady the Queen, and the Government of her ſaid Kingdom, and to endeavour a Change and Alteration of the ſincere Worſhip of God, well and religiouſly eſtabliſh'd in the ſaid Kingdom; and alſo totally to ſubvert and deſtroy the whole Conſtitution of the ſaid State, ſo happily inſtituted and ordain'd in all its Parts; with divers Aliens and Foreigners, not the Subjects of our ſaid Lady the Queen, hoſtilely to invade the ſaid Kingdom of England, and to make cruel War againſt our ſaid Lady the Queen and her Dominions.

And for the compaſſing and bringing to paſs all the ſaid wicked and notorious Treaſons, Imaginations, and Intentions propos'd as aforeſaid, he the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, well and truly knew and underſtood, That Mary late Queen of Scots had laid Claim, and pretended a Title and Intereſt to the preſent Poſſeſſion and Dignity of the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom of England; well and truly knowing and underſtanding, that the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, had falſly, wickedly, and unjuſtly ſaid and affirm'd, That our aforeſaid Lady, Queen Elizabeth, had no Right and Title to the Crown of this Realm of England: And alſo well and truly knowing and underſtanding, that the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, had falſly, wickedly, and unjuſtly uſurp'd the Stile, Title, and Regal Name of this Kingdom of England; and that ſhe, the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, had impal'd and join'd the Arms of the Kingdom of England with the Arms of the Kingdom of Scotland, as well in her Seals and Plate, as other things, without any Difference and Diſtinction. And furthermore, well and truly knowing and underſtanding, that the ſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, had not revok'd or renounc'd her wicked and unjuſt Claims and Uſurpations aforeſaid, the 23d day of September, in the 11th Year of our ſaid Lady, now Queen of England, and divers other Days and Places before and after the ſaid time, at the Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtlely and traitorouſly ſought and endeavour'd, without the Aſſent, Conſent, or Agreement of the aforeſaid our Lady Queen Elizabeth, his Supreme and Sovereign Lady, to be join'd in Marriage with the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots. And for this Reaſon and Cauſe, he the ſaid Duke aforeſaid, the 23d day of September, in the 11th Year aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Places before and after, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtlely and traitorouſly writ divers Letters to the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots; and as well as Letters, ſent ſeveral Pledges or Tokens to the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, the 23d day of September aforeſaid, in the year aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times before and after. And alſo on the ſaid 23d day of September, in the 11th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Queen Elizabeth, and divers other Days and Places before and after, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtlely, and traitorouſly gave to, and accommodated the ſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, with divers Sums of Mony; which the ſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, falſly and traitorouſly had and receiv'd of him the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, the 23d day of September aforeſaid, in the year aforeſaid, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; notwithſtanding the aforeſaid Duke had been diſtinctly and eſpecially forbid and prohibited by the aforeſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, upon his Allegiance, that he ſhould upon no account whatſoever hold Correſpondence, or treat with the aforeſaid Mary late Queen of Scots, concerning Marriage with her the ſaid Mary late Queen of Scots; and notwithſtanding the aforeſaid Duke, by divers Letters and Inſtruments writ with his own hand to the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, his ſupreme Sovereign Lady, publickly deny'd and renounc'd the aforeſaid Marriage, proteſting that he the ſaid Duke was never engag'd, or had proceeded in the ſaid Marriage.

And alſo the ſaid Jurors, upon their corporal Oaths, further preſent and ſay, That Thomas Earl of Northumberland, late of Topcliffe in the County of York, and Anne his Wife; Charles Earl of Weſtmoreland, late of Branſpeth in the County of Durham; Richard Norton, late of Norton Comars in the County of York; Thomas Markenfield, late of Markenfield, in the ſaid County, Eſqs; together with ſeveral other falſe Traitors, Rebels, and publick Enemies of our ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, not having the Fear of God before their eyes, nor conſidering their due Allegiance, but ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, imagined, deviſed, and conſpired to deprive and depoſe the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth from her Royal Dignity, Title, and Power of her Kingdom of England: and alſo to bring about and compaſs the Death and final Deſtruction of the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, with the Intention and Deſign to compleat and fulfil all their traitorous Conſpiracies and Devices, on the 16th Day of November, in the 11th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Queen, at Rippon in the ſaid County of York; by their own Conſent and Appointment, they did falſly and traitorouſly meet and aſſemble themſelves together, with a great Multitude of People, to the Number of four thouſand Men and more, ready arm'd and prepar'd for open War againſt their ſaid Queen Elizabeth, their Supreme and Sovereign Lady, at Rippon aforeſaid, the 16th Day of November aforeſaid, in the Year aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly they were ready prepar'd and arm'd to execute all and ſingular the Treaſons and Conſpiracies aforeſaid, of the ſaid Thomas E. of Northumberland and Anne his Wife, Charles E. of Weſtmoreland, Richard Norton, and Thomas Markenfield, with many others of the ſaid falſe Traitors and Rebels aforeſaid, by due Form of Law legally indicted, and afterwards upon that legally outlaw'd and attainted, as they now ſtand upon Record in her ſaid Majeſty's Court of Queen's-Bench.

And after the Perpetration and Commiſſion of the aforeſaid wicked Treaſons, in manner aforeſaid by them committed, the aforeſaid Thomas Earl of Northumberland, and Anne his Wife; Charles Earl of Wſtmoreland; Richard Norton, and Thomas Markenfield; with many other falſe Traitors and Rebels aforeſaid, the 20th Day of December, in the 12th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lady the Queen, for thoſe Treaſons fled out of this Kingdom into the Kingdom of Scotland; and there reſided, and were receiv'd, aided and aſſiſted by ſeveral Noblemen, and other great Men of the ſaid Kingdom of Scotland, viz. by James Duke of Chaſtelleroy, the Earl of Huntley, Mr. Harris, Mr. Hume, and Mr. Firmherſt, and other Scots, then Subjects of the ſaid Kingdom of Scotland, detain'd from our ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth: in and towards which Noblemen, and other great Men of the aforeſaid Kingdom of Scotland, the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth afterwards proclaim'd, and caus'd War to be made upon the ſaid Rebels, as publick Enemies to her Kingdom of England, by Thomas Earl of Suſſex, her Majeſty's Lord Lieutenant, and Lieutenant-General of the North, with a powerful and ſtrong Army to oppoſe the Enemy. Upon which account, Charles Earl of Weſtmoreland, Anne Wife of Thomas Earl of Northumberland, Richard Norton, and Thomas Markenfield, fled from the aforeſaid Kingdom of Scotland, and tranſported themſelves to Antwerp in Brabant, where they reſided. And there the ſame Charles Earl of Weſtmoreland, Anne Wife of the ſaid Thomas Earl of Northumberland, Richard Norton, and Thomas Markenfield, contrary to their due Allegiance, ſtaid in manifeſt contempt of the ſaid Queen and her Laws. Yet the aforeſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, not ignorant of the Premiſes, but well and truly knowing all and ſingular the Tranſactions in manner and form aforeſaid, the 6th Day of Auguſt, in the 12th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Queen Elizabeth, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Places afore and after, falſly and traitorouſly took care, and cauſed to be ſent, deliver'd and diſtributed, ſeveral Sums of Mony, to aid, aſſiſt, and ſupport the aforeſaid Charles Earl of Weſtmoreland, and Anne Wife of Thomas Earl of Northumberland.

And further, That the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, the 16th Day of July, in the 13th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Lady Elizabeth, Queen of England, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Places afore and after, falſly and traitorouſly adhered to, aided and aſſiſted James Duke of Chaſtelleroy, Earl of Huntley, Mr. Harris, Mr. Hume, Mr. Burleigh, and Mr. Firmherſt, publick Enemies to our ſaid Lady Elizabeth, then Queen of England.

And further, the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oaths, preſent and ſay, That when Pius Quintus, ſometime Biſhop of Rome, was and is known to be a deadly and publick Enemy to our ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, and her Kingdom of England; that the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk well and truly knowing and underſtanding this, the 10th Day of March, in the 13th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Places afore and after, with intention to produce the ſaid traitorous Effects, falſely, ſubtilly, and traitorouſly conſented, conſulted, adviſed, and procured one Robert Ridolph, a foreign Merchant beyond the Seas, and out of the Kingdom of England, to ſend to the aforeſaid Biſhop of Rome, to Philip King of Spain, and to the Duke of Alva, to obtain of the aforeſaid Biſhop of Rome certain Sums of Mony, towards the raiſing and maintaining of an Army to invade this Kingdom of England, and to make war in the ſaid Kingdom, againſt the aforeſaid Lady Elizabeth, Queen of England, &c. And that the ſaid King of Spain, by the Mediation of the ſaid Duke of Alva, did ſend into this Kingdom of England a certain Army of Germans, to invade and make open and cruel War againſt the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth.

And alſo that the ſame Thomas Duke of Norfolk, the ſame 10th Day of March, in the ſaid 13th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Places afore and after, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, wickedly, and traitorouſly conſpired, conſented, and agreed with the aforeſaid Robert Ridolph, to advance, ſtir up, and raiſe within this Kingdom of England, all the Forces and Power that he the aforeſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk and his Confederates were by any means capable of raiſing, or engaging others to raiſe within this Kingdom of England, to join with the aforeſaid Army, and with other Subjects of this Kingdom of England, whom the ſame Duke of Norfolk could gather together and join with the ſaid Army by the ſaid King of Spain, in order to make open War againſt our ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, within this her Kingdom of England; and to take away and free Mary, late Queen of Scots, out of the cuſtody and poſſeſſion of our ſaid Lady Elizabeth, Queen of England; and at the ſame time to deprive, depoſe, and eject the moſt Illuſtrious and Chriſtian Princeſs Queen Elizabeth, from her Royal Dignity, Title, Power, Preheminence, and Government of this Kingdom of England: and at the ſame time, him the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, to join himſelf in Marriage with the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots.

And further, the Jurors upon their Oaths preſent and ſay, That the aforeſaid Robert Ridolph had writ and compos'd three diſtinct and ſeparate Letters of Credit, in the name of the aforeſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, for him the ſaid Robert Ridolph, in his falſe, wicked, and treaſonous Meſſages aforeſaid; viz. One of thoſe Letters to the aforeſaid Duke of Alva, another to the aforeſaid Biſhop of Rome, and a third to the aforeſaid Philip King of Spain. That afterwards the ſame Thomas Duke of Norfolk falſly and traitorouſly intending, willing, and deſiring Succeſs and Effect from the aforeſaid falſe and traitorous Meſſages, by the aforeſaid Robert Ridolph, as appeareth by his ſending one William Baker, Gent. one of the Servants of the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, the 20th Day of March, in the 13th Year of the Reign of the Queen, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly ſent to Guerrawe Deſpeis, Embaſſador of the ſaid Philip King of Spain, to declare, ſhew, and affirm to the aforeſaid Embaſſador of the aforeſaid Philip King of Spain, that he the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk had affirm'd and would affirm the aforeſaid Credential Letters to the aforeſaid Duke of Alva, the Biſhop of Rome, and Philip King of Spain, compoſed and writ in his Name, was as valid to all intents and purpoſes, as if he the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk had writ them with his own Hand.

And further, the ſaid Jurors upon their Oaths preſent and ſay, That the aforeſaid Robert Ridolph, the 24th Day of March, in the 13th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Lady Elizabeth Queen of England aforeſaid, at Dover in the County of Kent, took his Journey to ſeveral Parts beyond the Seas, in order to execute, perfect, and compleat the ſaid treaſonable Meſſages, with the Conſent and Agreement of the aforeſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk. And afterwards the aforeſaid Robert Ridolph convey'd, declar'd, and communicated the ſaid wicked and traitorous Meſſages in foreign Countries and Parts beyond the Sea, as well to the aforeſaid Duke of Alva, as to the aforeſaid Biſhop of Rome. And that the aforeſaid Robert Ridolph, amongſt his many other falſe and traitorous Meſſages, convey'd one Letter in unuſual Characters call'd Cyphers, which the aforeſaid Duke of Alva caus'd to be writ and ſent to Thomas Duke of Norfolk; which very Letter, as declared to be writ and ſent, he the ſaid Duke of Norfolk, the eighteenth Day of April, in the thirteenth Year of the Reign of the ſaid Queen Elizabeth aforeſaid, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly receiv'd and had; and then and there gave and deliver'd to the aforeſaid William Baker his Servant ſeveral written Pages in known Letters, commonly to be decypher'd: And the ſaid Papers in common and known Cyphers or Characters, he the ſaid Duke afterwards, on the 25th Day of April, in the 13th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Queen Elizabeth, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly receiv'd, inſpected, and read over the ſaid Papers, and then and there falſly and traitorouſly retain'd and kept them. By which Letters of the ſaid Robert Ridolph to him the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, amongſt other things, are ſignify'd, and he makes known what a kind Audience and Reception he the ſaid Robert met with from the aforeſaid Duke of Alva, in his wicked and traitorous Meſſages aforeſaid. And that the ſaid Duke of Alva required and willed the Friends and Abettors of the ſaid Confederacy to be ready, whenſoever a foreign Power ſhould be ſent into this Kingdom of England.

And furthermore, the ſame Jurors upon their Oaths preſent and ſay, That the ſaid Thomas Duke of Norfolk, the 16th Day of June, in the 13th Year of the Reign of the ſaid Lady Queen Elizabeth, at Charter-houſe aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly and traitorouſly receiv'd a Letter directed to him the ſaid Duke, from Pius Quintus Biſhop of Rome; by which the ſaid Biſhop of Rome promis'd to the ſaid Duke of Norfolk, Aid, Help, and Aſſiſtance towards executing the ſaid wicked and traitorous Deſigns of the aforeſaid Mary, late Queen of Scots, contrary to their due Allegiance, and the Peace of our Sovereign Lady Elizabeth, now Queen of England, her Crown and Dignity, and in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom, as well as the worſt and moſt pernicious Example of all other Delinquents in the like caſe, and contrary to the Form of ſeveral Statutes in this caſe made and provided.

After the reading of the Indictment, the Clerk of the Crown ſaid to the Duke; How ſay'ſt thou, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, art thou guilty of theſe Treaſons whereof thou art indicted, in manner and form as thou art thereof indicted, Yea or No?

Thereupon the Duke began, and ſaid to this effect:

May it pleaſe your Grace, and you the reſt of my Lords here, The hearing of this Indictment giveth me occaſion to enter into the making of a Suit, which I meant not to have done before my coming hither: I beſeech you, if the Law will permit it, that I may have Counſel allow'd me for the anſwering of this Indictment.

The Lord Chief Juſtice anſwer'd, That in caſe of High Treaſon he cannot have Counſel allow'd: And that he was to anſwer to his own Fact only, which himſelf beſt knew, and might without Counſel ſufficiently anſwer.

Duke. That you may underſtand that I ſpeak it not without ſome ground, theſe be the Cauſes that move me to make this Suit: I was told before I came here, that I was indicted upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. I have had very ſhort warning to provide to anſwer ſo great a matter; I have not had fourteen Hours in all, both day and night, and now I neither hear the ſame Statute alledg'd, and yet I am put at once to the whole Herd of Laws, not knowing which Particularity to anſwer unto. The Indictment containeth ſundry Points and Matters to touch me by Circumſtance, and ſo to draw me into matter of Treaſon, which are not Treaſons themſelves: Therefore with Reverence and humble Submiſſion, I am led to think I may have Counſel. And this I ſhew, that you may think I move not this Suit without any ground. I am hardly handled, I have had had ſhort warning, and no Books; neither Book of Statutes, nor ſo much as the Breviate of Statutes. I am brought to fight without a Weapon: yet I remember one Caſe in Law, I think it is in the Firſt Year of King Henry VII. It is the Caſe of one Humphrey Stafford, which was indicted of High Treaſon, and had Counſel allowed him: If the Precedent of his Caſe be ſuch, as it may extend to me, I require it at your hands, that I may have it allow'd: I ſhew you my ground why I crave it. I refer me to your Opinions therein.

Then Sir James Dyer, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, ſaid; My Lord, That Caſe of Humphrey Stafford in primo of Henry VII. was about pleading of Sanctuary, for that he was taken out of Sanctuary at Culneham, which belong'd to the Abbot of Abingdon: So the Queſtion was, whether he ſhould be allow'd Sanctuary in that Caſe, and with that Form of Pleading, which was Matter of Law: In which Caſe he had Counſel, and not upon the Point or Fact of High Treaſon; but only for the Allowance of Sanctuary, and whether it might be allow'd, being claim'd by Preſcription, and without ſhewing any former Allowances in Eier, and ſuch like Matters; but all our Books do forbid allowing of Counſel in the Point of Treaſon; but only it is to be anſwer'd Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Duke. Humphrey Stafford's Caſe was High Treaſon, and he had Counſel. I muſt ſubmit my ſelf to your Opinions: I beſeech you, weigh what Caſe I ſtand in. I ſtand here before you for my Life, Lands and Goods, my Children and my Poſterity, and that which I eſteem moſt of all, for my Honeſty; I forbear to ſpeak of my Honour. I am unlearn'd; if I ask any thing, and not in ſuch Words as I ought, I beſeech you bear with me, and let me have that Favour that the Law allows me. If the Law do not allow me Counſel, I muſt ſubmit me to your Opinions. I beſeech you, conſider of me; my Blood will ask Vengeance, if I be unjuſtly condemn'd: I honour your Learnings and your Gravities: I beſeech you, have Conſideration of me, and grant me what the Law will permit me. I am now to make another Suit to you, my Lords, the Judges: I beſeech you, tell me, if my Indictment be perfect and ſufficient in Law; and whether in Whole, or in the Parts, and in which Parts, that I may know to what I ſhould anſwer.

Lord Chief Juſtice Catlin. The Lord Ch. Juſtice ſaid, For the Sufficiency of your Indictment, it hath been well debated and conſider'd by us all; and we have all, with one Aſſent, reſolv'd, and ſo do certifie you, that if the Cauſes in the Indictment expreſs'd, be true in Fact, the Indictment is wholly and in every Part ſufficient.

Duke. Be all the Points Treaſons?

L. Ch. Juſt. Catlin. All be Treaſons, if the Truth of the Caſe be ſo in Fact.

Duke. I will tell you what moveth me to ask you this: I have heard of the Caſe of the Lord Scroope; it was in the time of Henry the IVth (the Judges ſaid Henry the Vth) he confeſs'd the Indictment, and yet travers'd that the Points thereof were no Treaſons.

L. Ch. Juſt. Catlin. My Lord, he had his Judgment for Treaſon upon that Indictment, and was executed.

Then the Clerk of the Crown ſaid again, How ſayeſt thou, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, art thou guilty of the Treaſons whereof thou art here indicted, in Manner and Form as thou art indicted, Yea, or No?

The Duke anſwer'd, Not Guilty.

The Clerk ſaid, By whom wilt thou be try'd?

The Duke ſaid, By God and my Peers.

Then the Duke ſpake to the Lords, and ſaid thus: Now I am not to uſe a ſhort Speech, which I meant before to have uſed, but that the reading of the Indictment hath driven me to other Occaſions. Altho theſe heinous Treaſons and outrageous Faults objected againſt me, do much abaſh me; yet I conceive no ſmall Comfort, to think under how Gracious a Queen and Sovereign Lady I live, which well appeareth by her moſt gracious Proceeding with me according to the courſe of Law. Her Majeſty ſeeketh not my Blood, but giveth me the Tryal which the Laws admit, and in the moſt favourable manner that I can require; for which I am moſt bounden to her Majeſty. Now I am to make two Suits: the one to your Grace, my Lord High Steward, That as your Place requireth to do Juſtice, ſo it may pleaſe you to extend to me your lawful Favour, that I may have Juſtice, and that I may not be overlaid in Speeches: My Memory was never good, it is now much worſe than it was; ſore Troubles, ſore Cares, Cloſeneſs in Priſon, evil Reſt, have much decay'd my Memory; ſo as I pray God that this day it fail me not, and another time I will forgive it: I beſeech this of you, my Lord High Steward. The ſecond Requeſt, I thought to make to you, my Lords, my Peers: I think my ſelf happy to have my Tryal in ſuch a Company. A much greater Matter, if I could have greater, I durſt put it into your hands, and (a very few excepted) even into every one of your hands ſingly; that Opinion I have of you. I know Religion beareth a ſtroke among you, which, I hope, ſo ruleth your Conſciences, that for no Reſpect you will ſwerve from Juſtice; you will not bring a Worm into your own Conſciences; you will not burden your Souls with condemning me wrongfully; you will not do what God's Law and Right alloweth not: This above all things comforteth me, next unto her Majeſty's moſt gracious Favour of my lawful Tryal. If I had not made a full account to have this for the way of my lawful Purgation, I needed not to have been here at this time, neither for Matters paſs'd two Years ago, nor for that whereof I am charg'd at this preſent. I have choſen, my Peers, I have choſen rather to come here to be try'd by you, than with needleſs and cowardly running away, to have left a Gap open for my Enemies ſlanderouſly to lay to my charge in my abſence what they could maliciouſly invent. I have this day (tho I am ſorry for any Cauſe to come in this Caſe before you) even the day that I could wiſh to be tried by ſuch Peers. I will not enter into Particularities, and diſcourſe my whole Cauſe at large, but anſwer from Point to Point, as I ſhall be charged; for my Memory was never good, and it is now worſe than ever it was. Yet one Requeſt more I beſeech of you, my Peers, which I with Favour may ask, and you with Juſtice may grant: Unhappy Man that I am, tho I have to this Indictment pleaded Not Guilty of the Treaſons therein objected againſt me, nor of no Treaſons; yet I confeſs, as I have with all Humility, and with Tears confeſs'd, and as ſome of you, my Lords, here preſent can witneſs, that I have neglected my Duty to the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty, in Caſes inferiour to Treaſon, and that be no Parts of Treaſon: I have laid them at her Majeſty's feet, and pour'd them forth before her in Confeſſion, ſo far as my Conſcience would ſuffer me to declare. Let,

I

I beſeech you, neither my Confeſſion already made of inferior Faults, that be not in compaſs of Treaſon; nor, if I ſhall now in mine Anſwers confeſs them again, if they be objected againſt me; lead you to judge the worſe of me in the greater Caſe. Let each Fault have his own Pine; I beſeech you, remember the Differences and Degrees of Offences, and not to mix my ſmaller Faults with this great Cauſe: let theſe mean Crimes reſt at her Majeſty's feet, where I with all humility have laid them. Thus I beſeech you all, have conſideration of me.

Then ſpake the Queen's Serjeant, Mr. Barrham, and ſaid to this effect: It hath appear'd to your Grace and your Lordſhips all, that the Duke of Norfolk is by this Indictment charged with three principal Points of High Treaſon: the firſt is, That forgetting his Allegiance and Duty to his Sovereign Lady the Queen, he hath traitorouſly imagin'd, devis'd and practis'd, to deprive and depoſe the Queen's Majeſty of and from the Crown of this Realm, and her Royal Stile, Name and Dignity, and to bring her to Death and Deſtruction; and ſo to alter the whole State of Government of this Realm. The ſecond Point is, That he hath traitorouſly reliev'd and comforted the Engliſh Rebels that levy'd War againſt her Majeſty within her Realm, and which ſince fled into Scotland, and from thence beyond the Sea. The third Point is, That he hath traitorouſly given Relief and Maintenance to the Duke of Chaſtelleroy, the Earl of Huntley, the Lord Harris, the Lord Hume, and other Scots, the Queen's Majeſty's publick Enemies, Succourers and Detainers of the ſaid Rebels. To prove theſe great Treaſons, there is in this Indictment ſet forth unto you good and ſufficient Matter; firſt, to prove that the Duke of Norfolk ſought, imagin'd, compaſs'd and practis'd to deprive and depoſe the Queen's Majeſty of her Royal Crown, Eſtate and Dignity; and conſequently to bring her to Death and Deſtruction, are alledg'd two matters: The firſt is, That the Duke knowing the Scottiſh Queen falſly and unjuſtly to claim and pretend Title, to have and enjoy the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England; and that ſhe untruly uſurp'd the Name and Stile of this Realm; and that ſhe gave and quarter'd the Arms of England without difference; and that ſhe continu'd in that Fact, and uſurp'd Claim without Renunciation thereof, and without acknowledging her Error and the Queen's Majeſty, though ſhe hath been thereto requir'd: He, I ſay, knowing all this, yet without the Queen's Majeſty's Aſſent, againſt her Majeſty's ſpecial and expreſs Commandment upon his Allegiance, and againſt his own Promiſe and Proteſtation upon his Faith, hath nevertheleſs ſecretly ſought and practis'd to join himſelf with the ſaid Scottiſh Queen in Marriage, and to advance and maintain her ſaid falſe and pretended Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of this Realm; which cannot be without purpoſe to depoſe and deprive the Queen's Majeſty, and conſequently to bring her to Death and Deſtruction. The ſecond is, That the Duke of Norfolk hath conſpired and practiſed to procure Strangers to enter into this Realm, and invade the ſame, and here to make open War againſt her Majeſty, within her own Realm; and ſo forcibly to work her Depoſing, Deprivation, Death and Deſtruction. Hereupon the ſaid Duke hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon his Peers; yours therefore is the Tryal. And now for Evidence to prove him guilty of the Treaſons contain'd in the ſaid Indictment, it may pleaſe your Lordſhips to hear ſuch a Matter as I ſhall for the Queen bring forth againſt him.

Duke. I am occaſion'd, by the Speech of Mr. Serjeant, to gather what I ſhall find in the reſt of them; a Meaning with Circumſtance to draw me into Treaſon, with Eloquence to overlay me, and to exaſperate matters extremely againſt me, and to enforce things that be not Treaſons indeed. I beſeech you, my Maſters, for God's ſake do your Duty, remember Equity, conſider Conſcience, and what I am; I am no Stranger, I am a Chriſtian Man, and an Engliſh Man. You may do your Duties to the Queen ſufficiently, and yet deal conſcionably with me, and heap not, unconſcionably, Circumſtances to cloy my Memory. Go directly to the Indictment: It is no Praiſe nor Glory for you to overlay me. I am unlearned, unable to ſpeak, and worſt of all to ſpeak for my ſelf; I have neither good Utterance, as the World well knoweth, nor Underſtanding: For God's ſake do not overlay me with ſuperfluous Matter. One thing I had forgotten: I know a Man ſuſpected is ſelf-condemn'd. Now as it happen'd in my laſt Trouble, ſo at this time there want not to put abroad to the World, and heap up things which I never thought; a great number of ſuch there be, as I ſee many here at this preſent. They have publiſh'd, that I took an Oath of things which afterward prov'd contrary; blame me not that I miſtruſt the worſe, becauſe I have found the worſt. But to take away ſcruple from you, true it is, that I took an Oath, but not generally, but to ſpecial Points. And now when I take an Oath to Points, to draw me to the Whole, and to take Pars pro Toto, is great Injury. To prove that I took that Oath to Parts, and not to the Whole, I refuſ'd to ſet my Hand without expreſſing of the Point; for my Hand, my Oath, and my Heart, ſhall go all together. And for further proof that my Oath was but to ſpecial Points, I can name good Witneſſes to whom I did preſently, within three hours after my Oath taken, ſpecially report the three Points that I made mine Oath unto. This I ſay, to take from you the Scruple of ſuch Matter as I have been charg'd with, and which perhaps you have heard of me to my diſcredit.

Then ſaid Mr. Serjeant Barrham, I have yet given no Evidence, and for that Oath you are not once yet charged withal. I have done nothing yet, but recited the Matters contain'd in the Indictment: now will I bring forth Matter for the Queen in Evidence, and will prove the things in the Indictment to be true. There are alledg'd three great Treaſons, as I have before ſaid; the firſt only I will deal with, that is, to prove that the Duke of Norfolk imagin'd, compaſs'd, and conſpir'd, to deprive and depoſe the Queen's Majeſty, our Sovereign Lady, of her Crown and Royal Eſtate and Dignity: and I will uſe the ſecond Matter but for Inducement of the firſt, by ſhewing how the Scottiſh Queen falſly and unjuſtly claim'd the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of this Realm; and that he knowing that the Scottiſh Queen ſo unjuſtly claim'd the ſaid Crown, that ſhe quarter'd the Arms of England, that ſhe uſurp'd the Stile and Royal Name; that ſhe hath not acknowledg'd her Error, nor renounc'd her untrue and unjuſt Claim and Uſurpation, tho ſhe hath been requir'd thereunto; and whereto himſelf hath been privy, and hath dealt in Treaty, as a chief Commiſſioner for the Queen's Majeſty for that purpoſe: This Matter, I ſay, I will ſet out; how he knowing all this, yet without the Aſſent of the Queen's Majeſty, againſt her Highneſs's expreſs Commandment upon his Allegiance, againſt his own Faith and Promiſe to the contrary, practis'd to join himſelf in Marriage with the ſaid Queen of Scots: and I mean to join thereto an Intent of his, to advance and maintain that unjuſt Title of the Scottiſh Queen. If then this attempting to join himſelf in Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen ſhall be prov'd unto you, and that he knew of her unjuſt Claim and Pretence of Title, and that thereby he join'd himſelf to advance and maintain the ſaid Title, this muſt needs tend to a Purpoſe; and imagining to depoſe and deprive the Queen's Majeſty, and thereupon conſequently to bring her to Death and Deſtruction, which is High Treaſon within the Compaſs of the Statute of 21 of King Edward III. For whoſo ſhall imagine and go about to maintain a Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Queen's Crown, and to join himſelf in Marriage with her that ſo claimeth, without doubt he meaneth to aſpire to the Crown himſelf; and ſo meaning, it plainly followeth, that he cannot ſuffer her Majeſty to reign, and his Jealouſy cannot ſuffer her to live where he deſireth to reign. Now will I ſhew you the manner of his procuring to match himſelf in Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen, and firſt the beginning thereof: Firſt of all, to prove how ſecretly he dealt to that end, by Suits and Means, before he was a Commiſſioner, to examine Cauſes between the Scottiſh Queen, and the young King her Son, and other the Lords of Scotland. Before that time there were ſecret Suits and Practices between them by Motions, by Meſſages, by Letters and Tokens, and pleaded ſo far forth, as that the Scottiſh Queen took it, that ſhe was aſſur'd of his Good-Will. For when Commiſſion was directed to him, and to the Earl of Suſſex, and to Sir Ralph Sadler, Counſellors of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, the Scottiſh Queen had and repos'd full Affiance in the Duke of Norfolk, to have at his hands favourable hearing; and ſo ſhe reported, and ſo indeed it follow'd. And where you ſpeak of an Oath, and ſeem ſo loth to be diſprov'd, and would ſo feign have it taken, that your Oath, Hand, and Heart go all together; there was an Oath ſpecially appointed for the Commiſſioners, that they ſhould deal in that matter between the Scottiſh Queen and her Son and Nobility, directly, ſincerely, and uprightly, and to weigh all things that ſhould be objected or anſwer'd on either part indifferently without all Partiality. Then after this Oath taken, the Duke being the firſt nam'd Commiſſioner, this Oath notwithſtanding, dealt indirectly, deceiv'd the Queen's Majeſty's Truſt, and demean'd him partially againſt his ſaid Oath, wherein he committed wilful Perjury: Beſides that, without regard of his Oath of a ſworn Counſellor to the Queen's Majeſty of her Privy Council, he diſclos'd her Majeſty's Secrets, and fell to practiſing for matching himſelf with the Scottiſh Queen in Marriage. Now ſhall I prove his Knowledge at the ſame time, that the Scottiſh Queen pretended Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of this Realm.

Duke. Then the Duke ask'd, if all the Treaſons contain'd in his Indictment were upon the Statute of King Edward III. and it was anſwer'd by Mr. Serjeant and Mr. Attorney-General, that they were grounded upon the ſame Statute only. Then the Duke began thus:

Here the Matters that Mr. Serjeant hath prov'd againſt me ſtand in two Points; by which he chargeth me with imagining the Deprivation and Death of the Queen's Majeſty, and with indirect and untrue Dealing in the Scottiſh Queen's Cauſe; and therein he burdeneth me with Perjury. The Scottiſh Cauſe hath divers Pleas, and therefore bear with me, I pray you, if I caſt back again to rehearſe my Doing therein, for my Memory is not good: As for my Dealing therein, God is my Witneſs, that I have done uprightly.

Serj. Then Mr. Serjeant urged him to confeſs if he had knowledge that the Scottiſh Queen pretended Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England; offering, if the Duke would deny it, to make proof of it.

Duke. The Duke ſaid, I will make mine own Confeſſion; I pray you teach me not how to anſwer or confeſs, becauſe it is the firſt Ground that you build upon againſt me: and becauſe I know not whether my Peers do all know it or no, I will make a ſhort Declaration of my Doings in that Matter with the Scottiſh Queen.

Serj. Firſt we pray your Grace (ſpeaking to the Lord High Steward) that he may directly anſwer, whether he knew that the Scottiſh Queen ſo claim'd or no; if he ſay no, we will prove it.

Duke. Then being ruled over by the Lord High Steward, that he ſhould anſwer directly to that Queſtion; he anſwer'd, that indeed he knew that ſhe had ſo claim'd, but with Circumſtance.

Serj. Say plainly, Did you know it or no? for if you ſay nay, we can prove it.

Duke. You handle me hardly, you would ſo trap me by Circumſtance, and infer upon me that ſhe was the Queen's Enemy, and ſo make me a Traitor. I will anſwer directly to the whole Matter of my Dealing with her.

Serj. Anſwer to the Parts as they fall out. Did you know that ſhe claim'd the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown? That ſhe uſurp'd the Arms and Royal Stile of this Realm? And that ſhe made no Renunciation of that uſurp'd Pretence? If you ſay you knew it not, we will prove every part of it.

Duke. I did not know it in ſuch ſort as is alledg'd; I know that Renunciation of that Claim was offer'd, and upon certain Cauſes reſpited.

Serj. It is well known, and your ſelf then knew it, That the Scottiſh Queen claim'd the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England, quarter'd the Arms of England with the Arms of Scotland, and uſurp'd the Stile of this Realm; and that there was a French Power ſent to proſecute it, by invading this Land by the way of Scotland: your ſelf was made the Queen's Majeſty's Lieutenant, and levy'd an Army to expulſe them. Afterward the Queen's Majeſty ſent her Embaſſadors, which met with the French Lords and Scottiſh Queen's Commiſſioners at Edinburgh, and agreed upon a Treaty of Peace; in which one ſpecial Article was, that the Scottiſh Queen ſhould acknowledge her Error, and ſhould renounce her pretended Claim to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of this Realm. It was not done, nor yet is done. My Lord of Norfolk was at this Treaty; and when this laſt Commiſſion went out, when the Commiſſioners ſat at York about the Matter between the Scottiſh Queen, her Son, and the Nobility of Scotland, wherein were Commiſſioners the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Suſſex, and Mr. Chancellor of the Dutchy; one ſpecial Inſtruction was for the Scottiſh Queen's Recognition of her unjuſt Claim, and to require that ſhe ſhould ratify the ſaid former Treaty of Peace. The Duke knoweth well it was not done.

Duke.

Duke. What is this to me? I need not enter to defend her Doings, I like them not. It is not my Caſe, but that you make it my Caſe, elſe I would not meddle with it, anſwer it who would for me. Indeed I have heard, that being Covert-Baron then, marry'd to the French King in her Husband's Life, ſhe made Claim to the Crown of England, and quarter'd the Arms of England with the Arms of Scotland. I have heard alſo, That Sir Nicholas Throgmorton made Complaint thereof, and mov'd for Redreſs, and thereupon it was laid down. I have heard that ſhe hath been requeſted to make Renunciation of that Claim when the Peace was concluded, when Memorancy came over, and time was taken for it. After this there grew Amity between the Queen's Majeſty and the Scottiſh Queen; the Queen took her for her Friend, ſent Embaſſadors unto her, and chriſtned her Child; all this excluded Enmity. And when my Lord of Bedford was there, and mov'd her for ratifying of the Treaty, and for the Renunciation, ſhe refus'd not; but ſaid, ſhe would ſend to ſhew Cauſes why ſhe did it not preſently. And then it was refuſed not abſolutely, but upon certain Words, and the treating thereof committed to my Lord Burleigh and Mr. Wotton. As for our Commiſſion at York, it took no end; the Matter was brought up hither, and here was ſat upon at Weſtminſter in the Parliament-Chamber. And this is my underſtanding, that ſhe claim'd the Crown, and I have not otherwiſe known it.

Serj. Thus have you confeſs'd far enough, That you knew that ſhe did pretend Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown; That ſhe quarter'd the Arms, and uſurp'd the Royal Stile of this Realm.

Duke. It was in her Husband's time, when ſhe was Covert-Baron.

Serj. You knew alſo, how ſince her Husband's Time, ſhe hath not renounc'd that Claim; and you had, in ſpecial, Inſtruction to require it when you were Commiſſioner.

Duke. A full Renunciation was offer'd when the Lord Burleigh was with her, and our Commiſſion was ended, and the Matter brought up hither.

Serj. But what was the Cauſe why it took no end by your Commiſſion? Your ſelf was the Cauſe that the Commiſſion broke up, becauſe you dealt indirectly; you ſet out your own Affection and Partiality, and behav'd your ſelf partially, without regard to the Queen's Majeſty's ſpecial Commandment, without regard of your Oath, then ſpecially taken for that Commiſſion, or of your Oath as a Counſellor: you utter'd your Partiality, you diſclos'd to the other ſide aforehand the Queen's Secrets: you devis'd with the one ſide, and gave them Counſel how to deal for ſtay of the Matter: you did prevaricate the Queen's Intention, and when you were by your Commiſſion to examine the Scottiſh Queen's Adulteries, and her Murdering of her Husband, you practis'd with thoſe that were Dealers for the Scottiſh Queen, and you told them, by way of Advice, That if theſe Matters went forwards to Hearing, the Earl Murray, and his Side, would diſcloſe all the foul Matter that they could, both by her Letters and other Evidences, to her Diſhonour; and that the Queen's Majeſty had ſome ſuch Counſellors about her, as if theſe things were once produc'd, ſhe would cauſe them to be publiſh'd, that all foreign Princes ſhould underſtand them, to the Scottiſh Queen's great Infamy, and to move foreign Princes to proceed no further ſuing for her. And this was the Cauſe of the Breach and Diſſolution of your Commiſſion.

Duke. You ſaid you would prove that I knew of the Scottiſh Queen's claiming the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown.

Serj. Your ſelf have confeſſed it; for you knew there was yet no Renunciation made, and you were ſpecial Commiſſioner for that purpoſe; and tho your Commiſſion took no effect, yet by that, that the requiring of the Renunciation was matter of your Inſtructions, and the ſame not done, it is plain that you knew ſufficiently of her former unjuſt claiming of the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown: And now will we by good Evidence prove your partial and indirect dealing in that Commiſſion. Here I will produce Matter of your own Conference at York with Ledington and the Biſhop of Roſſe, and how your ſelf told them, that you underſtood at Lyth, that rigorous Matter would be ſet out by the Earl Murray and the reſt of that Side, againſt the Scottiſh Queen, touching her Whoredom and the Murder of her Husband. You gave Advice to ſtay the Earl of Murray from ſo doing; you told the Scottiſh Queen's Miniſters, how the Queen of England had ſome Counſellors that could cauſe her to publiſh all thoſe Matters to the Scottiſh Queen's Infamy; you practis'd with them to deviſe to qualify the Matter; you told the Way that you thought beſt to do it; you adviſ'd them to deal with the Earl Murray, that the Matter might be compounded, or elſe ſo to handle it, that it might take no end.

Duke. Here the Duke took advantage of that Mr. Serjeant had ſaid, That the Duke underſtood at Lyth; for the Duke then proteſted, that at that time he had never been at Lyth. Whereupon the Lord Burleigh diſſolv'd that Knot, and ſaid on the Duke's behalf to Mr. Serjeant:

Burleigh. You were beſt proceed with your Evidence; you may miſtake: my Lord Norfolk had not then been at Lyth, otherwiſe than he and I were there once ſecretly in a Morning The Cauſe of this Error roſe thus: In one Scottiſh Paper produc'd for that Matter, was contain'd, how the Duke underſtood at Lyth, which in Scotch is as much as at length; which Mr. Serjeant, in peruſing the Matters for Evidence deliver'd unto him, took for Lyth, as the Clerk of the Crown alſo afterwards did in reading the ſame Paper.

Then was produc'd an Examination of the Biſhop of Roſſe, taken at the Tower, Nov. 5. 1571. as followeth:

The Scottiſh Queen told the Biſhop of Roſſe, that the Conference at York was to make the Earl of Murray, and other her diſobedient Subjects, to anſwer before the Queen's Majeſty of England's Commiſſioners, for their unnatural and unjuſt Proceedings againſt her; and that after their Offences acknowledg'd for the Queen of England's Pleaſure, they ſhould be remitted, and receiv'd into Favour again, and ſo all Matters compounded.

The Biſhop's Anſwer to this was, That he was ſorry ſhe had agreed to any Conference wherein they ſhould be accus'd; for he was aſſur'd in that Caſe, they would utter all that they could for their Defences, altho it were for her Diſhonour, and of the whole Realm: for they would be loth to confeſs openly that they were evil Subjects, and ſhe a good Princeſs; and therefore he wiſh'd that the Matter might be treated by way of Concord, before any entry to Accuſations: And to that end he counſelled her to travel with her Friends at Court to York. To this ſhe reply'd, that there was no ſuch Danger in the Matter as I ſuppos'd; for ſhe truſted I would find the Judges favourable, principally the Duke of Norfolk, who was firſt in Commiſſion; and doubted not but the Earl of Suſſex would be rul'd by him as his tender Friend, and Sir Ralph Sadler would not gainſtand their Advice; and that Liggons had been at Bolton, by whoſe Meſſage, told by him to the Lord Scroope, he underſtood of the Duke's good Will towards her, and the Bruite was alſo ſpread abroad of a Marriage between the Duke and her; and beſides, that ſhe had many good Friends in the Country that did favour her, and ſeek to her, ſuch as the Earl of Northumberland and his Lady, by whom ſhe had many Intelligences and Meſſages; the Nortons, Markenfield and others, who would all be with the Duke at York, and would perſuade him to favour her Caſe. In the mean time, before our Paſſage to York, Robert Melvin came to Bolton with Letters, ſent by Ledington from Fauly Caſtle to the Queen my Miſtreſs, to advertiſe her, that the Earl of Murray was wholly bent to utter all that he could againſt her, and to that effect had carried with him all the Letters which he had to produce againſt her, for proof of the Murder, whereof he had recover'd the Copies, and had caus'd his Wife to write them, which he ſent to the Queen; and that he had not come into England in the Earl of Murray's Company, unleſs it had been to do her Service, and to travel for Mitigation of thoſe Rigors intended, deſiring to be certified by Robert Melvin, that ſhe wiſh'd to ſtay thoſe rigorous Accuſations: and becauſe he was well acquainted with the Duke of Norfolk, deſired him to travel with the Duke in his favour, and that he would confer with the Biſhop of Roſſe, by whom he ſhould underſtand his whole Mind particularly from time to time. After this, Robert Melvin at York did bring me to Ledington's Lodging, where we talk'd almoſt a whole Night; where he told, That he had confer'd with the Duke, who ſeem'd to bear great good Will to the Queen my Miſtreſs, and had willed him to counſel the Earl of Murray, and others, to abſtain from uttering any diſhoneſt Matter againſt the Queen, but to grant to ſome Compoſitions amongſt themſelves; ſo that Ledington ſaid, it appear'd to him, that the Duke had ſome Intention to marry with the Queen, as the Bruite was; and that he did verily believe, that if it were follow'd, the Marriage would take effect, which would be moſt of all other things for the Queen's Honour and Weal: and will'd me to ſpeak with the Duke ſecretly alone, without the Commiſſioners, and Ledington ſhould advertiſe the Duke to appoint the time convenient, as he did one day in the Morning by ſeven of the Clock, before the meeting of the Commiſſioners: I talk'd with the Duke alone in a Gallery, where he utter'd to me, That he bore good Will to the Queen my Miſtreſs, and that he had talk'd with the Earl Murray at * length, and had ſeen the Letters which they had to produce againſt the Queen my Miſtreſs, and other Defences, whereby there would ſuch Matter be proved againſt her, that would diſhonour her for ever; and if it were once publiſh'd, the Queen's Majeſty of England would get Counſel by ſuch as lov'd not the Queen my Miſtreſs, to publiſh the ſame to the World, and to ſend Embaſſadors to all other Princes, to make the ſame known to them; ſo that they ſhould make no further Suit for her Delivery; and perhaps greater Rigour might enſue to her Perſon: Therefore he adviſ'd me to confer with Ledington; and that betwixt him and me, we might find ſome Means to ſtay the Rigour intended; and promiſed all that he could do to that effect, by Ledington's Advertiſement he would do. I reply'd that Ledington would have her to ratify the Dimiſſion made at Lochlevin for a time for he had aſſur'd her it could hurt her no more, being kept Priſoner in England, than that which was done in Lochlevin: for ſo ſhould ſhe ſtay the uttering of any matter againſt her, and within ſix Months ſhe ſhould be reſtor'd to her Country with Honour; and ſo might revoke all done by her.

To this the Duke: What if that were done, to be quit of the preſent Infamy and Slander, and let him work out the reſt? I told him we were come to that Conference for to make an Agreement, and not to anſwer to Accuſations: and therefore wiſh'd him to further the Agreement amongſt us. He anſwer'd, That their Commiſſions was only to hear the Differences amongſt us; and if I would propound any thing, he would like well of it, and ſhould advertiſe the Queen's Majeſty, his Miſtreſs, thereof, and get her Anſwer. In this Conference, the Duke did oftentimes inſinuate the good Will that he did bear to the Queen my Miſtreſs, but ſpoke nothing to me particularly of the Marriage at that time; but referr'd all to Ledington. Upon this I did confer with Ledington divers times, by whoſe Advice I rode to Bolton, to ſpeak with my Miſtreſs, in the time of my Conference; and during my remaining there, the Conference was broken up, and the whole Commiſſioners for our part, came to Bolton. And ſo my Lord Harris and I were ſent to London. In the mean time, Robert Melvin came to Bolton to the Queen, with Meſſages of Ledington's, of ſuch Conference as he had with the Duke at the Hunting in the Fields, where I believe Ledington did well encourage the Duke to attempt the Marriage, as he told me afterwards; declaring her Properties, and the Honour and Commodities that might enſue to them both thereby; and that the Duke did give good Ear thereto, wiſhing to the Queen to follow that Courſe. In the mean time, the Duke had Liggons, and others, going between them and the Lady Scroope, who did entertain the Matter betwixt them. After this, the Duke coming to Hampton-Court, Ledington made the mean with the Duke, to cauſe him to ſend Liggons to deal with me upon this behalf, and to give me ſome favourable Advertiſement of the Weal for our Cauſe. And likewiſe the Duke caus'd the Lord Lumley ſometimes to ſpeak with me, to adviſe me what was beſt to be done, and eſpecially when the Spaniſh Embaſſador had ſpoken to me of the Marriage of one of the Houſe of Auſtria; the Duke, by my Lord Lumley, counſelled me to open the Matter to the Queen's Majeſty, by my Lord of Arundel, which might be an occaſion to move her to like better of the Match with him, than with any Foreigner. And then he ſent me word by Liggons, that the Queen's Majeſty was inform'd of ſuch a like Bruite, of his Marriage with the Queen of Scots; but he had ſatisfy'd her well enough, and ſo ſtill did follow the Matter, and did treat thereupon with the Earl of Murray and Ledington at Hampton-Court; by whoſe Advice Robert Melvin was ſent to the Queen, my Miſtreſs, at Rippon, to move the Matter upon the Earl of Murray's behalf, with a full Determination, that the Earl of Murray lik'd of it: Which Meſſage I heard afterward that Murray alledg'd he did ſend it, for fear of ſome Enterprize againſt him at Northallerton, in his Return to Scotland. And ſo after this manner the Matter had been entertain'd betwixt the Queen and the Duke from time to time, as is at length declar'd in the former Examinations.

Serj. The Effect of all, is the Duke's partial and untrue Dealing; for that before the Biſhop of Roſſe's going to York, the Scottiſh Queen declar'd to the Biſhop of Roſſe, That ſhe doubted not of the Favour of the Duke of Norfolk; for ſhe told him that my Lady Scroope had by Motions and Means aſſur'd her of his good Will, and ſhe doubted not of my Lord of Suſſex's, for the great Friendſhip and tender Love he bear to the Duke; and ſhe made account that Mr. Sadler would be friendly, for that he alone would not ſtand to them both. It appeareth alſo, for further proof of his partial Dealing, that tho he were ſworn, both as a Counſellor to the Queen's Majeſty, and alſo ſpecially for the Matter of this Commiſſion; yet he indirectly, ſecretly, and underhand, dealt with Ledington, and told him, how that the Earl of Murray and his Side intended to utter ſharp Matter againſt the Scottiſh Queen. The Duke gave his Advice how to ſtay it, and ſo dealt partially, and againſt the Queen's Majeſty's ſpecial Truſt and Commandment, and againſt his own Oath and Promiſe. Next after that, in Conference had with the Duke of Norfolk on the Scottiſh Queen's part, the Duke declar'd his good Will that he bear to the Scottiſh Queen: He ſhewed how, that if the ſame matter of Evidence againſt her, were once utter'd by the Earl Murray, ſome of the Queen's Majeſty's Counſellors of England would procure her Majeſty to publiſh them. He adviſed that the matter ſhould be compounded with the Earl Murray; and that ſhe ſhould not ſtick, being here in England, and not at her own liberty, for the preſent time, to be content to ratify the Dimiſſion of the Crown of Scotland, which ſhe made at Lochleven; and ſo ſhe might be reſtor'd into her own Country, and then ſhe might undo all again at her pleaſure: and upon pretence of Conſtraint and Fear, as well revoke that which ſhe ſhould do in England, as ſhe before revoked that which ſhe had done at Lochleven in Scotland. Alſo the Duke at that time was privy to the Device, that Ledington accompany'd the Earl Murray only to underſtand his Secrets, and to betray him; and that Ledington ſtole away the Letters, and kept them one Night, and caus'd his Wife to write them out. Howbeit, the ſame were but Copies tranſlated out of French into Scotch; which, when Ledington's Wife had written out, he caus'd them to be ſent to the Scottiſh Queen: She labour'd to tranſlate them again into French, as near as ſhe could to the Originals wherein ſhe wrote them; but that was not poſſible to do, but there was ſome Variance in the Phraſe; by which Variance, as God would, the Subtilty of that Practice came to light.

Duke. What if all this be true? What is this to the Matter? Any dealing of mine with the Scottiſh Queen by my Siſter Scroope's Means, I utterly deny. As for Ledington, and the Biſhop of Roſſe, what their Speeches were to me, I care not; I am to anſwer but for mine own Speeches.

Serj. The Biſhop of Roſſe accuſeth you of your own Speeches, and this he doth, being examin'd freely, and without any Compulſion.

Duke. He is a Scot.

Serj. A Scot is a Chriſtian Man.

Duke. At my being at York in Commiſſion, Ledington broke with me himſelf to have the Matter compounded between the Scottiſh Queen and the Earl Murray. I told him that our Commiſſion was only to hear indifferently what ſhould be alledg'd on both parts, and thereof truly to make report. What hurt is this? The Biſhop of Roſſe afterwards ſent for me, that he might ſpeak with me: when we met, he moved me for the compounding of the Matter, as Ledington had done. I told him, that our Commiſſion was but to hear and report, as I had told Ledington before; and therefore if they would fall to compounding, I will'd them to deviſe the Means themſelves, and to make Offers; and thereupon we would advertiſe the Queen's Majeſty thereof, as we would of all the Matters alledg'd. If it be otherwiſe, and as you ſay, let my Letters be look'd on, and ſee if they contain any ſuch Matter. If the Biſhop of Roſſe, for Fear or for Malice, have ſaid untruly; if being a Scot, he care not how many Engliſh Men, by his falſe Teſtimony, he bring to deſtruction; I beſeech you let not that hurt me.

Serj. You made the firſt Motion of compounding the Matter to Ledington your ſelf; and another time to the Biſhop of Roſſe, you offer'd to further it all that you could.

Duke. I never ſaw the Biſhop of Roſſe before I came to York, and would I, think you, deal ſo dangerouſly with a Scot that I never ſaw before? Alſo, I did by my Letters ſignify to the Queen's Majeſty our Proceeding, and my miſliking of the Scottiſh Queen's part: Let that Letter be ſeen; which Letter was written after my Talk with Ledington. I wrote it when I went from York, and I never ſaw the Biſhop of Roſſe afterward, till I came to London.

Serj. The writing of your Letters to the Queen's Majeſty, wherein you advertis'd againſt the Scottiſh Queen, and tho the ſame were written after your Conference with Ledington and the Biſhop of Roſſe, is no proof but that you dealt partially for the Scottiſh Queen; for thoſe Letters were written by other, as well as your ſelf, namely, by my Lord of Suſſex, and Mr. Chancellor of the Dutchy: and you could not otherwiſe do, but ſo ſignify, notwithſtanding your partial ſecret Dealing; for elſe you ſhould have too openly bewray'd your Intention.

Duke. When Ledington mov'd me of the Marriage of the Scottiſh Queen, I utterly refus'd it.

Serj. That is not ſo: And for proof, as well of your partial Dealing in the Commiſſion for the Marriage, there ſhall be brought forth ſufficient Evidence.

Here was alledg'd how a Letter had been written to the Earl of Murray, requiring to be advertis'd by him of ſo much as he knew concerning the Doings of the Duke of Norfolk, both for the Matter of the Commiſſion, and the Practice of his Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen: and the Earl Murray's Anſwer to the ſame Letter was produc'd, and read, as followeth.

Note, That the Beginning and Ending of this Letter was not read; but ſo much only as pertained to the matter, viz.

'IN York, at the meeting of all the Commiſ-
'ſioners, I found very honourable and neutral
'Dealing with the Duke and others her High-
'neſs's Commiſſioners, in the beginning of the
'Cauſe, as in the making of the Oaths to pro'ceed ſincerely, &c. During which time, I only
'entred into general Speech, ſticking at our
'juſt Defence in the Matters that were objected
'againſt us by the ſaid Queen's Commiſſioners;
'looking certainly for none other thing but a ſum-
'mary Cognition in the Cauſes of Controverſy,
'with a ſmall Declaratory to have follow'd. Upon
'a certain Day, the Lord Ledington's Secretary
'rid with the Duke to Cawood; what purpoſe
'they held, I cannot ſay: but that night, Le-
'dington returning, and entring in Conference
'with me upon the State of our Action, I was
'adviſed by him to paſs to the Duke, and to 'require familiar Conference; by the which I 'might have ſome feeling to what Iſſue our Mat'ters would tend. According to which Advice,
'having gotten Time and Place convenient in the 'Gallery of the Houſe where the Duke was
'lodg'd; after renewing of our firſt Acquain-
'tance made at Berwick, the time before the Siege
'of Lyth, and ſome Speeches paſſed betwixt us,
'he began to ſay to me how he in England had 'Favour and Credit, and I in Scotland Good-will
'and Friendſhip of many. It was thought there 'could be none more fit Inſtruments to travel for
'the Continuance of the Amity betwixt the two 'Realms, than we two. And from that Diſcourſe
'upon the State of both, and how I was entred
'in that Action tending ſo far to the Queen's diſ-
'honour, I was will'd by him to conſider how 'Matters ſtood in this Iſle, what Honour I had
'receiv'd of the Queen, and what Inconveniences
'her Defamation in the matters laid to her
'charge, might breed to her Poſterity, whoſe
'Reſpect was not little to the Crown of England.
'There was but one Babe, the Hamelton's, my Un-
'friend, had the next Reſpect; and that I ſhould,
'the Iſſue of her Body would be the more af'fectionate to me and mine, than any other that 'could attain to that Room: and ſo it ſhould be
'meeteſt that ſhe affirmed her Dimiſſion made 'in Lochleven, and we to abſtract the Letters of 'her Hand writ, that ſhe ſhould not be defamed
'in England. My Reply to that was, how the 'matter had paſs'd in Parliament, and the Letters
'ſeen to many; ſo that the abſtracting of the 'ſame could not then ſerve her to any purpoſe:
'and yet ſhould we in that Doing bring the 'Ignominy upon us, affirming it could not be
'ſure for us that way to proceed, ſeeing the 'Queen's Majeſty of England was not made privy
'to the matter, as ſhe behoved to be, in reſpect
'we were purpoſely come into England for that 'End, and for the juſtifying of the Grounds of 'our Cauſe. The Duke's Anſwer was, he would 'take in hand to handle matters well enough
'at the Court. After this, at the occaſion of 'certain Articles that were required to be re-
'ſolved in, before we entred directly in the De'claration of the very Ground of our Action,
'we came up to the Court; where ſome new 'Commiſſioners were adjoined to the former,
'and the hearing of the Matter ordain'd to be 'in the Parliament-Houſe at Weſtminſter. In pre-
'ſence of which Commiſſioners for the ſaid Queen,
'and partly through the ſharp rebuking of the 'Queen's Majeſty of England's Commiſſioners,
'we utter'd the Grounds of the Action, and
'produc'd ſuch Evidences, Letters, and Proba-
'tions as we had, which might move the Queen's
'Majeſty to think well of our Cauſe. Where'upon expecting her Highneſs's Declaration, and 'ſeeing no likelihood of the ſame to be ſud-
'denly given, but daily Motions made to come 'to an accord with the ſaid Queen, our Mat'ters at home in Scotland in the mean ſeaſon
'ſtanding in hazard and danger; we were put 'to the uttermoſt point of our Wit to imagine
'whereunto the matters would tend: for albeit
'we had left nothing undone for Juſtification of 'our Cauſe, it appeared yet no End, but conti-
'nual Motions made, to come to ſome accord 'with the Queen, and reſtore her to whole or 'half Reign. I had no other Anſwer to give 'them, but that I could neither do againſt
'Conſcience nor Honour in that matter. Not-
'withſtanding, ſeeing this my plain Anſwer
'wrought no End nor Diſpatch to us, and that 'I was informed that the Duke began to miſ-
'like of me, and to ſpeak of me as that I had 'reported of the ſaid Queen irreverently, calling
'her Whore and Murderer; I was adviſed to 'paſs to him, and to give him good Words, and
'to purge my ſelf of the things objected to me;
'that I ſhould not upon the ſudden enter in his
'evil Grace, nor have him to our Enemy, conſi-
'dering his Greatneſs: it being therewithal whiſ-
'per'd and ſhew'd to me, that if I departed, he
'ſtanding diſcontented and not ſatisfy'd, I might 'peradventure find ſuch trouble in my way, as
'my Throat might be cut before I came to Ber-
'wick. And therefore ſince it might well enough
'appear that he aſpired to her Marriage, I ſhould
'not put him in utter deſpair that my Good-will
'cannot be had therein. So, few days before my
'departing, I came to the Park at Hampton-Court,
'where the Duke and I met together; and there I
'declared, that it was come to my ears how
'ſome Miſreport ſhould be made of me to him,
'as that I ſhould ſpeak irreverently and raſhly
'of the ſaid Queen, my Sovereign's Mother, ſuch
'words as before expreſs'd, that he might per'ceive my Affection to be ſo alienated from her,
'as I could not love her, nor be content of 'her Preferment. Howbeit, he might perſuade
'himſelf of the contrary; for as ſhe once was
'the Creature in the Earth that I loved beſt,
'having that Honour to be ſo near unto her, and
'having received ſuch Advancement and Honour
'by her, I was not ſo unnatural ever to wiſh her
'Body harm, or to ſpeak of her as was untruly
'reported of me, howſoever the Truth were in
'it ſelf. And as the Preſervation of her Son, now
'my Sovereign, had moved me to enter in this
'Cauſe, and that her own preſſing was the occa-
'ſion of that which was uttered to her Infamy;
'ſo whenſoever God ſhall move her Heart to re-
'pent of her by-paſt Behaviour and Life, and after 'her known Repentance, that ſhe ſhould be ſe-
'parate from that ungodly and unlawful Marriage
'that ſhe was entred in, and then after were
'join'd with ſuch a godly and honourable Per-
'ſonage, as were affectioned to the true Religion,
'and whom we might truſt; I could find in my 'heart to love her, and to ſhew her as great Plea-
'ſure, Favour, and Good-will, as ever I did in 'my

'my Life. And in caſe he ſhould be that Perſonage, there was none whom I ſhould better like of, the Queen's Majeſty of England being made privy to the matter, and ſhe allowing thereof; which being done, I ſhould labour in all things that I could, to her Honour and Pleaſure, that were not prejudicial to the King my Sovereign's Eſtate: and pray'd him not to think otherwiſe of me, for my Affection was rather bury'd and hid within me, waiting until God ſhould direct her to know her ſelf, than utterly alienate and abſtracted from her. Which he ſeem'd to accept in very good part, ſaying, Earl of Murray, thou knoweſt of me that thing whereunto I will make none in England nor Scotland privy, and thou haſt Norfolk's Life in thy hands. So departing, I came to my Lodging, &c.

'Thus have I plainly declared how I have been dealt withal for this Marriage, and how juſt Neceſſity moved me not to repugn directly that which the Duke appear'd ſo bent unto. And for my Threatnings to aſſent to the ſame, I have expreſs'd the manner. The Perſons that laid the Terror before me, were of mine own Company, and the Duke ſince hath ſpoken, that it was his writing which ſaved my Life at that time. In concluſion, I pray you perſuade her Majeſty, that ſhe let no Speeches, nor any other thing paſs'd and objected to my prejudice, move her Majeſty to alter her Favour towards me, or any ways to doubt of my aſſured Conſtancy towards her Highneſs: for in any thing that may tend to her Honour and Surety, I will, while I live, beſtow my ſelf, and all that will do for me, notwithſtanding any Hazard or Danger; as proof ſhall declare, when her Majeſty finds time to employ me.'

Serj. Thus appeareth it, that the Duke of Norfolk firſt travel'd with Ledington for ſtay and compounding the matter, and afterward likewiſe with the Biſhop of Roſſe, and at both times firſt moved it of himſelf: ſo now the Earl of Murray alſo by his Letters doth teſtify, that in Conference with him, it came firſt of the Duke to move the ſtay of the Contention, and to what end the Duke did it, namely, for that he aſpired to the Marriage of the Scottiſh Queen, and therein made account of her Reſpect to the Crown of England; and that without the Queen's Majeſty's Aſſent or Knowledge. Now ſhall you alſo ſee, for further proof thereof, the Biſhop of Roſſe's Letter to the Scottiſh Queen: For the Biſhop of Roſſe went from York to Bolton, as you have before heard in his Examination. On the way, before he came to Bolton to the Scottiſh Queen, from his Lodging he wrote a Letter to her, which Letter was loſt by his Servant; but as good hap was, he reſerv'd a Copy thereof, and negligently left it behind him in his Lodging at Newcaſtle, where the Earl of Murray half a year after being lodg'd in the ſame Chamber, found it, and ſent it to the Queen's Majeſty's Council; and here it is all written with the Biſhop's own Hand, as himſelf, being examin'd thereof, hath confeſs'd. Here he ſetteth out the Conference between the Duke of Norfolk, and Ledington, and himſelf. He ſheweth the Duke of Norfolk's Advice to the Scottiſh Queen, for a Letter by her to be written to the Queen's Majeſty; and alſo he openeth the Duke's Advice, how to work for the Scottiſh Queen, with diſcloſing the Queen's Majeſty's Secrets.

Here was the ſaid Letter produced, and read as followeth.

Copy of the Letter ſent from York by the Biſhop of Roſſe to the Queen-Mother, to the King our Sovereign Lord, then remaining at Bolton.

'PLeaſe your Majeſty, I confer'd at great length with A. one great part of the Night; who aſſured me he had reaſon'd with B. this Saturday, as yeſterday on the Fields C. who determined to him, that it was D. the Queen's determinate Purpoſe not to end your Cauſe at this time, but to hold the ſame in ſuſpenſe; and did what was in her power to cauſe us: E. purſued extremely, to the effect F. and his Adherents might utter all that they could to your diſhonour; to the effect, as was ſuppos'd, to cauſe you come in diſdain with the whole Subjects of this Realm, that you may be the more unable to attempt any thing to her diſadvantage; and to this effect is all her Intention. And when they have produced all they can againſt you, the Queen will not appoint the matter inſtantly, but tranſport you up in the Country, and reſerve you there till ſhe think time to ſhew you Favour; which is not able to be haſtily, becauſe of your Uncles in France, and the fear ſhe hath of your ſelf to be her Unfriend. And therefore their Counſel is, that you write a Writing to the Queen, meaning that you are informed concerning your Subjects, which have offended you, this in effect; That your Majeſty hearing the Eſtate of your Affairs, as they proceed in York, was inform'd that her Majeſty was inform'd of you, that you could not godly remit your Subjects in ſuch ſort, as they might credit you hereafter: which was one great cauſe of the ſtay of this Controverſy to be ended. And therefore perſuading her Grace effectuouſly not to truſt any who made ſuch Narration; but like as you had rendred you in her hands, as moſt tender to you of any living, ſo pray'd her Grace to take no Opinion of you: but you would uſe her Counſel in all your Affairs, and would prefer her Friendſhip to all others, as well Uncles as others, and aſſure her to keep that thing you would promiſe to your Subjects by her Advice. And if her Grace diſcredit you, you would be glad to ſatisfy her in that point, to be removed within her Realm in ſecret and quiet manner, where her Grace pleaſed, unto the time her Grace were fully ſatisfy'd, and all occaſion of Diſcredit removed from her; ſo that in the mean time your Realm were holden in quietneſs, and your true Subjects reſtored and maintained in your own Eſtate, and ſuch other things tending to this effect. And affirms, that they believe that this may be occaſion to cauſe her credit you better, that you offer ſafer, and may come that within two or three Months ſhe may become better minded toward your Grace; for now-while ſhe is not well minded, and will not ſhew you any pleaſure, for the cauſes aforeſaid.'

A. Ledington.

B. The Duke of Norfolk.

C. The Day he rode to Cawood.

D. The Queen's Majeſty.

E. The Scottiſh Queen's Commiſſioners.

F. The Lord Regent of Scotland.

Duke. Here be many things and many parts very hard for me to remember; and here be produced three Witneſſes againſt me, Ledington, the Biſhop of Roſſe, and the Earl of Murray. Hereunto unto I will anſwer, as my Memory will ſerve me: Ledington, becauſe he and I were acquainted at Lyth, came to me and practiſed to ſearch at my hands, and to feel how the Queen's Majeſty was ſatisfy'd. I told him, that till I heard what the Queen's Majeſty would reſolve, I could tell him nothing: And ſo time ſpent away. And in the mean ſeaſon, upon a Saturday, I being at Dinner with the Lord of Suſſex, Ledington came in; and after Dinner talking with me, he brake more earneſtly for me with the Scottiſh Queen, and for a Marriage between her and me, which I utterly refus'd, as by my Letters from York to the Queen's Majeſty it may appear; wherein I ſignify'd my Opinion of the Scottiſh Queen, or elſe they muſt be maintain'd by the Queen of England. I ſaid to him again, that the Queen's Majeſty ſought the Quietneſs of that Realm; but for any Advice of reſtoring the Scottiſh Queen into her Country, I could not ſee how it might be conſider'd: and ſo I advis'd him to ſubmit the whole Matter to the Queen's Majeſty's Judgment. Otherwiſe he and I never talk'd. Of thoſe other doings, between Ledington and the Scottiſh Queen, I know nothing. The Biſhop of Roſſe ſhortly after ſaid to me, and intreated to have my help for compounding of the Matter, as you know well he can ſpeak fair. I told him I could do nothing without my Fellows, and only in ſuch manner as was preſcrib'd by our Commiſſion. I told him alſo, that we were but to hear and certify; and for the Matter of compounding, they were beſt to make Offers themſelves; for we were but to receive ſuch Devices as they ſhould chuſe, and to give Advertiſement of the ſame. To what end ſhould I need to utter the Matters of the Earl of Murray's part to the other ſide, when Ledington himſelf was preſent, and privy to all? I ſpake not with the Biſhop of Roſſe, but at that time only. And as for that Advice, to avoid the diſcovering of thoſe vigorous Matters by the Earl, and the publiſhing thereof to the Queen's Majeſty, to the Scottiſh Queen's Infamy; I never diſclos'd any ſuch Secrets, nor gave any ſuch Advice: Only I did adviſe the Biſhop of Roſſe, that he and that ſide ſhould hold themſelves contented with the Queen's Majeſty's dealing, and with the Determination taken at Hampton-Court, which was ſuch as might content them, and ſuch as my Lord Burleigh then miſlik'd. As for the Earl Murray, he began with me, and not I with him: He came to me at Cawood, and pray'd me to tell him what end would come of the Matter. I ſaid, I knew not; for it muſt come from the Queen's Majeſty: We knew not of the differing of the Commiſſion at that time, nor till ſuch time as Mr. Sadler was ſent for. How could I tell him, and knew it not my ſelf? I never yielded to the Marriage between the Scottiſh Queen and me: I cannot gather ſuch Matter of Looks alone, and I never dealt more therein, but only that Ledington broke it. Have I not anſwer'd all theſe Matters? If I have not, put me in any thing I have omitted, and I will anſwer it.

Serj. Your Anſwer is but only Denial; Ledington and the reſt write otherwiſe, that you made the firſt Motion to them: and therefore Ledington, by Practice between you and him, ſent the Earl of Murray to you, under pretence of ſearching to learn the State of their own Cauſe, to be mov'd by you for the Marriage; upon your Anſwer, it is but yea and nay between you. If you meant directly, then needed you not to have dealt ſo ſecretly in Conference with Ledington, without the reſt of the Commiſſioners; and beſides Ledington's Conference with you, both the Biſhop of Roſſe and the Earl Murray affirm your practiſing with them to the ſame intent: which is ſufficient Proof againſt your own bare Denial.

Duke. The Earl Murray ſought my Life, the other are not of Credit; yet all theſe prove not that I dealt in the matter of the Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen, in any reſpect of her Claim to the Crown of England. If the Biſhop of Roſſe, or any other, can ſay otherwiſe, let them be brought before me face to face. I have often ſo deſir'd it, but I could not obtain it.

Serj. The Biſhop of Roſſe confeſſeth it; this is his own hand; and here you ſhall have, by Witneſſes, prov'd the Duke's Aſſent to the Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen: and to practiſe the furtherance thereof, you ſhall ſee how that afterwards he was privy to a Device, that the Earl Murray ſhould have been murder'd at Northallerton, in his way homeward, by the Nortons, Markenfield, and other Rebels; and afterwards, being ſatisfy'd at the Earl Murray's hands, a Letter was written to ſtay that Device: containing alſo a Device of compounding the Matter, and how the Earl Murray had aſſented to the Marriage.

Here was contain'd the Biſhop of Roſſe's Confeſſion, in Article the ninth; wherein appeareth,

That the Earl Murray ſhould have been murder'd by the way, going home into Scotland; and that the Biſhop of Roſſe wrote to the Scottiſh Queen, that the Duke of Norfolk advis'd her to ſtay that Murder, becauſe the Earl Murray had yielded his good Will to the Marriage as followeth:

Out of the Biſhop of Roſſe*'s Examination, taken the 6th of* November, 1571.

To the 9th he ſaith, That the Earl of Murray was in fear to have been murder'd by the way, in his Return to Scotland; whereupon this Examinate, by the Duke's Advice, did write to the Queen of Scots, that the Attempt might be ſtaid, for that Murray had yielded to the Duke to be favourable; and the Murder ſhould have been executed about Northallerton, by the Nortons, Markenfield, and others, as this Examinate was advertis'd by the Scottiſh Queen's Servants that came from Bolton.

Serj. Thus it appeareth, that the Duke ſo far aſſented to the Marriage, that rather than it ſhould not have taken effect, he was contented that the Earl of Murray ſhould have been murder'd.

Duke. The Unkindneſs between the Earl Murray and me, was not about this Matter of his Miſtreſs the Scottiſh Queen, but for another cauſe; it was becauſe the Earl Murray had reported that I ſought the Marriage of the Scottiſh Queen. I charg'd him therewith by Meſſage, he excus'd himſelf thereof, and laid it upon the Earl Moreton and the Biſhop of Orkney; and for the Device of murdering him, I was never privy to it. And where the Article ſaith, that I heard it by the Scottiſh Queen's Servants that came from Bolton, it is not true. I never heard of it till Whitſuntide after, when John Wood came, and then I heard it not but by the Biſhop of Roſſe; neither did I hear that it ſhould have been done by the Nortons, but by my Brother of Weſtmoreland being an hunting, when the Earl Murray eſpying a great Company on the Hill-ſide, imagin'd that he ſhould have been ſlain.

Serj.

Serj. You ſhall alſo underſtand, that the Duke himſelf wrote to the Earl of Murray, wherein is plainly declar'd his Practice and Aſſent to the Marriage: which very Letter we have not, but the Copy thereof, under the Regent's own hand, which the Regent ſent to the Queen's Majeſty, whereby the Matter moſt plainly appeareth.

My good Lord,

'I Have receiv'd your courteous Letter, whereby I do not only perceive you well affected for the Advancement of your common Weal, and the uniting of this Iſland, but alſo your good Mind towards me; which two Points I cannot but note to your ſpecial Commendation, and my great Comfort. As you ſhall prove me induſtrious to aſſiſt you with all my Power in the one, ſo ſhall you not find me ungrateful in the other, but really to requite you to my uttermoſt for your Friendſhip ſo frankly offer'd; the rather I ſhall have occaſion to imploy my ſelf for the juſt Reward of your Deſerts, the ſooner I ſhall think my ſelf in Nature, Friendſhip, and Conſcience diſcharg'd of my Obligation. In the mean time, good my Lord, aſſure your ſelf, that you have not only purchas'd a faithful Friend, but alſo natural Brother, who is not, nor will not be leſs careful for your Weal and Surety, than his own Honour and Credit; whereof I am fully perſuaded you doubt not: and therefore in that Point I need not to be over-tedious, but briefly to return to that you deſire to be ſatisfy'd of, which is, for my Marriage with all Sincerity with your Siſter; wherein I muſt deal plainly with your Lordſhip, as my only Friend, that I have ſo far proceeded herein, as I, with Conſcience, can neither revoke that that I have done, nor never do mean, while I do live, to go back from this that is done, nor with Honour proceed further, until ſuch time as you there ſhall remove ſuch Stumbling-blocks, as be Impeachment to our more apparent Proceeding; which when by me it ſhall be finiſh'd, upon mine Honour the reſt ſhall follow to your Contentment and Comfort. Wherefore my earneſt Requeſt, at this preſent, to my good Lord, is, that you will proceed herein with ſuch Expedition, as the Enemies of this good Purpoſe, which will be no ſmall number, againſt the uniting of this Land into one Kingdom in time coming, and the Maintenance of God's true Religion, may not have Opportunity, thro the Delay given them, to hinder our pretended Determination; againſt the which, I am of opinion, there will be no Practices by foreign Princes omitted. This I hope will be ſufficient to reſolve you, my Lord, of your Deſire, touching the Marriage; referring my ſelf wholly, for your more ample Inſtruction and Satisfaction in all Points, to my Lord Boid, who hath Commiſſion both by the Queen of Scotland, your Siſter, and alſo by me, to reſolve you of all Doubts, whom I wiſh you to credit as my ſelf. You ſhall not want the furtherance in this Enterprize of the moſt part of the Noblemen of this Realm; whoſe faithful Friendſhip in this Caſe, and all other my Actions, I have to my Contentment ſufficiently prov'd. Thus being perſuaded that your Lordſhip's Endeavour is for the Maintenance of God's Glory, and the Advancement of the common Weal of this Iſland, I have adventur'd to impart my ſecret Determination, as to one whom I make account to be aſſur'd of, and unto whom I wiſh long Life and proſperous Health, to his Heart's Deſire. So with my hearty Commendations at this preſent, without further Moleſtation, I am,

From my Houſe in London, July 1.

My good Lord,

Your faithful and moſt aſſur'd Friend.

'I have heard you have been in the North of Scotland, and doubt not but you have ſatisfy'd the Requeſt I made for the Biſhop of Roſſe, and have caus'd his Servants to be obey'd of his Benefices; and what is left undone, I pray you cauſe it to be effectually further'd. He hath the Queen of Scots Letter, directed to you for that effect; but truſting that my Requeſt ſhall make him to be obey'd, e'er the other come to your hands, wherein you ſhall do me ſingular Pleaſure.'

James, Regent.

Duke. All theſe are Letters, and anſwer'd two years ago, when Mr. Sadler and Mr. Attorny were ſent to examine me upon Interrogatories. Indeed I muſt confeſs my Folly; it is an ill Cook that cannot lick his own Fingers. The Biſhop of Roſſe wrote the Letter, and he lick'd his own Fingers. The Earl of Murray wrote to me very humbly, and that he was at my Commandment, with ſuch like words. I having no leiſure to write Anſwer to him, drew Articles to give him thanks: but that the Noblemen lik'd of that Marriage, and that I wiſh'd no Man's Friendſhip more than his in it, the Biſhop of Roſſe added of his own, and put it in Cypher in this Form, which Cypher I had not then.

Serj. This is the very Copy of your own Letter.

Duke. See my Anſwer made in my firſt Troubles, two years paſt.

Serj. The Queen's Majeſty underſtanding the Duke's Intention to marry with the Scottiſh Queen, the Duke himſelf, by way of Prevention, complain'd to her Majeſty of the Rumour that was ſpread againſt him, That he ſought the Scottiſh Queen's Marriage, and pray'd it might be examin'd. In which her Complaint, as I have heard her Majeſty her ſelf declare it, and ſome here of my Lords have likewiſe heard it, he ſaid, among other things, To what end ſhould I ſeek to marry her, being ſo wicked a Woman, ſuch a notorious Adultereſs and Murderer? I love to ſleep upon a ſafe Pillow: I account my ſelf, to your Majeſty's good Favour, as good a Prince at home in my Bowling-Alley at Norwick, as ſhe is, tho ſhe were in the middle of her Kingdom. The Revenues of the Crown of Scotland (all the ordinary Charges deducted) about the neceſſary Affairs of the Realm, are not comparable to mine own that I enjoy by your Goodneſs, as I have heard of the chief Officers of that Realm; conſidering alſo that her Kingdom is not in her hand, but poſſeſs'd by another; if I ſhould ſeek to match with her, knowing, as I do know, that ſhe pretendeth a Title to the preſent poſſeſſion of your Crown, your Majeſty might juſtly charge me with ſeeking your own Crown from your Head. This the Duke ſpake to the Queen's Majeſty, in his Excuſe, when the Fame went of his Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen, when yet, beſide that time, he had dealt earneſtly in it.

Duke. I may not nor will not ſtand againſt her Majeſty's Teſtimony, I muſt give place unto it; but but hereof I was examin'd two years ago, and then I declar'd, as I now do, that at that time I intended not the Marriage. And true it is, that I have at ſundry times, ſome at one time, and ſome at another, us'd ſome of thoſe kinds of Speeches; but at that time I dealt not with that Marriage, nor minded it.

Serj. Your own Confeſſion is otherwiſe; for your ſelf have ſince confeſs'd, that you conceal'd from the Queen your Conferences with Ledington and Roſſe about the Marriage, both the Conferences had at York, and at Hampton-Court.

Duke. I never conſented to the Marriage at thoſe times of their Conferences, and ſo I might well uſe their Speeches.

Then was produc'd his own Examination the 6th of November, 1571. and it was read, and he confeſs'd his Concealment of thoſe Speeches and Conferences before uſed about the Marriage, and that it had indeed been mov'd, but not concluded on; He remembreth that the Queen charg'd him ſtraitly not to proceed in that Marriage; but he remembreth not that ſhe charg'd him upon his Allegiance.

The Duke of Norfolk, the 6th of November, 1571.

To the firſt and ſecond, he ſaith, That he remembreth that at Hampton-Court, upon a Report made by Robert Melvin, ſo declared by Woolcock, that this Examinant had gone about a matter of Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen for himſelf, wherein he took himſelf to be much wrong'd, and deſir'd to have the Matter examin'd; for that he had not dealt in that Matter, and doth not remember what the Queen's Majeſty ſaid unto him at that time: at which time he ſaid for himſelf, That he intended no ſuch thing, nor meant any ſuch thing; and yet he confeſſeth, That he did not declare to the Queen's Majeſty, at that time, of any Speech that had been uſed unto him by Ledington at York, and the Earl of Murray at Hampton-Court, touching the ſaid Marriage. Being at Titchfield, the Queen's Majeſty call'd him to her Gallery, asking of him, Whether he had dealt any wiſe for the Marriage of the Queen of Scots, as it was reported? Whereunto he anſwer'd, He thought her Majeſty had heard by others. But ſhe willed him to declare the Truth, becauſe ſhe had rather hear it of himſelf: And ſo he declar'd, That he had receiv'd Letters from her; that the Matter had been mov'd and written unto her; but he had not made any Concluſion in that Matter with her. Whereupon her Majeſty ſhewing her ſelf to miſlike thereof, commanded and charg'd him that he ſhould not deal any further therein with the Queen of Scots, nor any other Perſon in that Matter: But that he was charg'd upon his Allegiance, he doth not certainly remember; but that he was ſtraitly commanded, he doth well remember.

At length he confeſs'd, that he was charg'd upon his Allegiance.

Serj. At Titchfield the Queen's Majeſty expreſly commanded the Duke of Norfolk upon his Allegiance, as himſelf hath now confeſs'd, not to proceed in that Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen: Now, if we prove that this Commandment notwithſtanding, and againſt his own Promiſe, he afterward ſtill proceeded, and that much more earneſtly than before; and yet nevertheleſs, that he had all the while conceiv'd an evil Opinion againſt the Scottiſh Queen, and upon the ſight of her Letters, and other Evidences, ſhew'd he thought her plainly guilty of abominable Whoredom, of the Murder of her Husband, and ſignify'd it by Letters, and declar'd the ſame his Opinion to Banniſter: And alſo, That he made no account of her Kingdom of Scotland, which ſhe had not in Poſſeſſion; or if ſhe would have it, yet he counted it not comparable to his own Dukedom. He (I ſay) ſo doing, and ſo conceiving, and ſo declaring, and yet ſtill more and more proſecuting the Marriage, cannot be ſaid to have proſecuted it, in reſpect of her Perſon, but of ſome other thing (forſooth the Crown of England) which he hop'd to attain under her pretended Title. You never ſaw her, you could not then be carried with Love of her Perſon; you conceiv'd ill Opinion of her, ſo could you not be led with Love of her Conditions; the Fame of her good Qualities and vertuous Conditions you never heard much of, except it were by her ſelf, or the Biſhop of Roſſe, or ſome of her Miniſters; her Kingdom of Scotland you eſteemed not, both becauſe ſhe had it not in Poſſeſſion, but it was in Poſſeſſion of her Son, by her own Dimiſſe ratify'd by Parliament, and for that it was not of ſo good value as your own Poſſeſſions were. To what end then purſued you the Marriage? To no other End ſurely, but to advance and maintain the falſe and pretended Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England; and for the attaining thereof, to practiſe the Deprivation, Death and Deſtruction of the Queen's Majeſty. If further, we ſhall plainly prove that after your departing from the Court, you meant not only to proſecute the Marriage, but alſo to proſecute it with Force, againſt the Queen in her own Realm; then it muſt needs be with intent of her Majeſty's Deprivation and Deſtruction, and ſo High Treaſon, within Compaſs of the Statute of 25 of Edward the Third. For whoſo ſhall take upon him to proſecute and maintain a Title to the Crown by force againſt the Queen, and within her own Realm, muſt needs make account that the Queen muſt and will reſiſt that Force; if then that Force may overcome the Prince's Force, what is the likelihood then to enſue? There muſt needs follow Deprivation of the Queen, and thereupon her Death and Deſtruction; for the Jealouſy of an Uſurper by Force, can in no wiſe ſuffer a rightful Prince to live. Now to prove your Intention to purſue the Marriage with Force againſt the Queen: In your Journey towards London, you entred into Conference and Device between another and you, for taking the Tower of London, with all the Queen's Ordnance, Ammunition and Treaſure therein, and to have kept the Tower by Force againſt the Queen, and ſo to have brought the Marriage to paſs by Force, whether the Queen would or no. But it took not effect; for the Queen's Majeſty having Underſtanding thereof before, provided for enforcing the Place with new Supply; and Mr. Pelham, Lieutenant of the Ordnance, was, for that purpoſe, put in with ſufficient Power. Afterward being at your own Houſe, the Charter-Houſe, the Queen's Majeſty underſtanding of theſe Attempts, ſent for you, whereunto you make a feigned Excuſe of doubt of Sickneſs, and that you had taken Phyſick, ſick, ſo that for four or five Days you could not journey; promiſing after thoſe four or five Days, to wait on her Majeſty, according to your Duty. And immediately after this Excuſe ſent, without tarrying four or five Days, or any more Days, the ſame Night, you by and by ſtole away into Norfolk, and there intended to have levied Force; but that the Queen's Majeſty and her Council ſuſpecting your Purpoſe, had ſecretly ſent into thoſe Parts before, and taken Order for impeaching of your Intention. If this then be prov'd true, That you ſtill proſecuted the Marriage, without liking of her Perſon, without Eſtimation of her Poſſeſſions, with only reſpect to her falſe Title to the Crown of England, and with Force; and ſithence it cannot be purſued with Force againſt the Queen, nor Force levied againſt her Majeſty, without Purpoſe to ſuppreſs her Majeſty's Force, and to depoſe her from her Crown and Dignity; and he that ſo ſeeketh to depoſe her, muſt needs be thought that he will not ſuffer her to live: All theſe Matters conſider'd, the ſeeking of this Marriage in this Form, muſt needs be High Treaſon, within Compaſs of the Statute of 25 of Edward the Third.

Here was produc'd the Duke's own Letter, and the other Commiſſioners, from York to the Queen's Majeſty; wherein is ſignified the great Abomination of the Scottiſh Queen, appearing in her own Letters, and the Certainty of the Truth of thoſe Letters, both by offer of Oath of thoſe that exhibited them, and by Diſcourſes of ſome Matters there; which could not be written but by herſelf, being known to none other, as followeth.

" AFterwards they ſhew'd unto us an horrible " and long Letter of her own Hand (as they " ſay) containing foul Matter, and abominable to
" be either thought of, or to be written by a Prin-
" ceſs, with divers fond Ballads of her own Hand;
" which Letters, Ballads, and other Writings be" fore ſpecify'd, were clos'd in a little Coffer of " Silver, and gilt, heretofore given to her by " Bothwell. The ſaid Letters and Ballads did diſ-
" cover ſuch inordinate and filthy Love, between " her and Bothwell, her Loathſomneſs and Abhor-
" ring of her Husband that was murder'd, and the " Conſpiracy of his Death, in ſuch ſort as every " good and godly Man cannot but deteſt and
" abhor the ſame. And thoſe Men here do con-
" ſtantly affirm the ſaid Letters and other Wri-
" tings, which they produce of her own Hand,
" to be her own Hand indeed, and do offer to " ſwear, and to take their Oath thereupon; as " indeed the Matter contain'd in them being ſuch
" as could hardly be invented or devis'd by any " other than by her ſelf; for that the Diſcourſe
" of ſome things, which were unknown to any " other than to her ſelf and Bothwell, doth the ra" ther perſuade us to believe that they be in" deed of her own Hand-writing. And as it is " hard to counterfeit ſo many and ſo long Let" ters; ſo the Matters of them, and the Manner
" how theſe Men came by them, is ſuch, as it
" ſeemeth that God, in whoſe ſight the Murder
" and Blood of the Innocent is abominable, would " not permit the ſame to be hid or conceal'd.
" In a Paper herein inclos'd, we have noted to " your Majeſty the chief and principal Points of " their Letters, written (as they ſay) with her " own Hand, to the intent it may pleaſe your
" Majeſty to conſider of them, and ſo to judge
" whether the ſame be ſufficient to convince her
" of the deteſtable Crime of the Murder of her " Husband; which, in our Opinion and Conſci-
" ences, if the ſaid Letters be written with her " own Hand (as we believe they be) is very hard
" to be avoided."

Duke. This maketh for me; for this proveth that I ſo much miſliking her, and ſignifying by my Letter ſo much againſt her, dealt not on that ſide when I was at York, where this Letter was written.

Serj. There were others join'd with you in the Letter, ſo that you could not otherwiſe write, however you otherwiſe dealt: but this maketh much againſt you, for it prov'd you had an evil Opinion of her, and ſo could not ſeek the Marriage in reſpect of her Perſon, but only in reſpect of her falſe Title; and that not to the Kingdom of Scotland, which ſhe had not, and which you deſpis'd, but to the Crown of England. Now you ſhall, to the ſame end, hear your own Report againſt her to Banniſter.

Duke. Banniſter was ſhrewdly cramp'd, when he told that Tale. I beſeech you, let me have him brought Face to Face.

Serj. No more than you were.

Then was read Banniſter's Confeſſion, in October, 12 Eliz.

This ſheweth that you had an evil Opinion of her, and ſo no Affection to the Perſon; therefore your ſeeking of that Marriage was for another reſpect; and therefore Ledington, Roſſe, and you practis'd the Matter at York.

Duke. They broke it to me, What is this to me? Did I conſent?

Serj. You conſented.

Duke. No.

Serj. They ſay plainly, that you practis'd to withdraw the things that might charge her.

Wilbraham. You have ſaid, that the Biſhop of Roſſe hath accus'd you of Malice; but you anſwer nothing to that which the Biſhop of Roſſe wrote to his Miſtreſs, the Scottiſh Queen, in Secrecy, wherein could be no Malice.

Duke. Ledington broke it to me, and the Earl Murray broke it to me. I pray you, let them be brought face to face to me: I have oft requir'd it, and the Law I truſt is ſo.

Serj. The Law was ſo for a time, in ſome Caſes of Treaſon; but ſince, the Law hath been found too hard and dangerous for the Prince, and it hath been repeal'd. You intended to have proceeded with the Marriage by Force, and for proof thereof, you have heard of the Device for taking of the Tower. Now to prove further your Purpoſe to purſue your Enterprize by Force, let be read the Confeſſion of the Biſhop of Roſſe to the ſecond Article.

The Biſhop of Roſſe's Confeſſion the 3*d of* November, 1571.

To the ſecond Article. The Duke being after conferr'd with the Biſhop of Roſſe, from his Miſtreſs, to know what he would do in the Matter of the Marriage, if the Queen would not aſſent, ſaid, he knew ſhe would, tho not at the firſt; becauſe moſt of the Council and Noblemen thought it meet; and that he had known the Minds of moſt of the Noblemen. And after, when the Queen was offended with him coming from Southampton, he told the Biſhop, he would depart into his own Country, and ſo was reſolv'd, by the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke, who would do the like; and there would take purpoſe, by the Advice of his Countrymen and Friends, and do that was likelieſt for the Advancement of the Cauſe. The Biſhop ſaid, The Queen's Majeſty would by Force fetch him out of his Country. He anſwer'd, That no Nobleman in England would accept that Charge at her Commandment; for he knew their Minds, ſpecially for thoſe in the North, who would aſſiſt. And if that he might once have that open Quarrel againſt her, that ſhe would firſt purſue him, he would have Friends enough to aſſiſt him, and that the Scottiſh Queen ſhould be ſafely enough provided for; for that was the principal Mark he ſhot at, and would do what he could to have her in his hands. And the Earls of Arundel and Pembroke had promis'd to do as he did; and they in the North had promis'd the like. Item, Leggons told the Biſhop, that the Duke was reſolv'd to go through with the Matter by Force, if the Queen would not aſſent to it. At this time common Meſſages paſt between the Scottiſh Queen and the Duke, and them of the North.

Duke. All is falſe, ſaving that the Biſhop of Roſſe once ſpake with me, and then underſtanding him to be a ſuſpected Man, I deſir'd him to forbear to come to me; nevertheleſs, by his great Earneſtneſs and Importunity, that I would but once admit him to come to me, at length he came, and then he mov'd me for certain Money of the Scottiſh Queen's, about 2000 l. remaining in my keeping: One Letter he brought me, and no more Letters, till after my firſt Trouble. As for my going into Norfolk, I can bring good Witneſs, that I meant not to go into Norfolk, four Hours before I went, and that I ſpake not with him in two days before. It is of good ground that I have prayed to have the Biſhop of Roſſe brought to me in private Examination face to face, whereby I might have put him in remembrance of Truth; but I have not had him face to face, nor have been ſuffer'd to bring forth Witneſſes, Proofs, and Arguments, as might have made for my Purgation. As for ſending of Letters to my Lord of Northumberland, or my Brother of Weſtmoreland, all is falſe; I never receiv'd Letters from them in all my time. If ever I ſent to them, or receiv'd from them any Letters in three Quarters of a Year before, let me never be credited.

Serj. You ſhall have Proofs that the Biſhop of Roſſe hath ſaid it. You ſtand much upon your own Credit: Now therefore to your Credit, I will ſay ſomewhat againſt your Oath ſpecially taken, when you were appointed Commiſſioner for the Matter at York; and againſt your Oath of a Counſellor to the Queen's Majeſty, you dealt indirectly and partially; you deceiv'd the Queen's Majeſty's Truſt, and diſclos'd her Secrets.

Duke. I deny it.

Serj. It is well prov'd, that at Hampton-Court, being examin'd of the Matter by the Queen's Majeſty, you diſſembled it: Being examin'd of Money lent by you to the Scottiſh Queen, you deny'd it: Being charg'd upon your Allegiance, you promis'd not to proceed further in the Matter. Notwithſtanding that expreſs Commandment of her Majeſty; yet, againſt your Duty, againſt your Promiſe and Faith, you ſtill proceeded.

Duke. I confeſs this was mine Error; but I have already made humble Petition to my Peers, not to confound my Faults together, nor to mingle my inferior Offences with this great Cauſe.

Serj. Sithence the Commandment given to you at Titchfield, not to proceed in Dealing with the Scottiſh Queen in any wiſe, you have continually dealt with her: You have lent her Money; you have maintain'd Liggons, your Man and your Sollicitor, continually to advertiſe you, from the Biſhop of Glaſgow, and the Pope's Nuncio; and you have advertis'd him from hence. He hath had Money of you, and you have receiv'd Letters from him four times in Coffers.

Duke. Liggons is not my Sollicitor.

Serj. He is your Sollicitor, and ſo your ſelf have expounded him; for where the Scottiſh Queen, in her Letters, ſpeaketh of your Sollicitor, being ask'd whom ſhe meant thereby, you have anſwer'd, Liggons.

Duke. At the firſt indeed ſhe ſo called him; but Sollicitor is no Name of uſe. He hath not been ſo ſince my firſt Trouble; and ſo for her calling, it is no matter, ſhe once called me Legiſta.

Serj. He is your Sollicitor; for ſhe ſo taketh him, and your ſelf do ſo expound it.

Then was read his own Confeſſion, of Money lent 2000 l. and receiv'd, &c.

The Duke confeſs'd this Receiving and Lending of Money.

Then was read the Biſhop of Roſſe's Confeſſion, concerning Money ſent by Barthwick, and of Money deliver'd to Francis Biſhop.

Duke. This I deny not.

Serj. Francis Biſhop was a Traitor.

Duke. I knew him not.

Serj. Now for the matter of taking the Tower.

Duke. I deny it.

Serj. Was it not mention'd unto you in the way, when you came from Titchfield, by one that came to you, and moved you a Device between you and another, for taking the Tower?

Duke. I have confeſs'd that ſuch a Motion was made to me, but I never aſſented to it.

Serj. You concealed it: And to what end ſhould you have taken the Tower, but to have kept it againſt the Queen by Force? But you ſay you lik'd not the Motion, you ask'd advice of it.

Duke. Indeed I told one of it: Owen met me by the way from Titchfield, and told me how we were all in danger; and ſaid, That ſome of our Friends thought it was beſt to take the Tower. I refus'd to do it, and ſaid, Take the Tower! that were a proper Device indeed! And thence I went to my Lord of Pembroke's, and there din'd; and then I told my Lord of Pembroke of that Device; whereunto he anſwer'd, We are well, and ſafe enough: Let them that be faulty take the Tower, if they will. And to what end ſhould I have taken the Tower?

Serj. To maintain by Force that which you had practis'd againſt the Queen's Majeſty's Commandment, which was the Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen.

Duke. I had not then dealt with it.

Serj.

Serj. It is well prov'd that you had; and afterward, at your Houſe at Charter-houſe, you receiv'd Letters, Meſſages, and Tokens from the Scottiſh Queen; you receiv'd from her a Brooch, with a hand cutting down a Vine, and this Poſy upon it, Vireſcit vulnere Virtus. But, my Lord, do green Vines grow when they be cut? and a green Vine it was.

Wilbraham. My Lord, you ſtill ſay you dealt not at this time, or that time, againſt her Majeſty's Commandment; I pray you at what time, ſince her Majeſty's Commandment upon your Allegiance, did you forbear to deal with the Scottiſh Queen?

Serj. Beſide this, you have given Advice as a Counſellor to the Scottiſh Queen, againſt the Queen's Majeſty: namely, when in Treaty againſt the Queen's Majeſty and her, there were three Articles propounded on the Queen's Majeſty's part: the one for the Delivery of her Son into the Queen's Majeſty's Cuſtody; the other for delivering the Engliſh Rebels that were fled into Scotland; the third for delivering of certain Holds in Scotland into Engliſh Mens Poſſeſſion: He gave Advice herein as a Counſellor, againſt the Queen his Sovereign Lady. The Articles were expreſly ſent to the Duke to have his Advice, before that the Scottiſh Queen would reſolve of any Anſwer; and ſhe reſpited her Anſwer to be made according to his Direction. He gave Advice, that ſhe ſhould in no wiſe deliver her Son, for it was againſt her own Safety, not knowing whether ſhe deliver'd him into her Friends hands or no. As for the Rebels, ſhe ſhould in no wiſe deliver them, for it were againſt her Honour: And as for the Holds, ſhe ſhould not deliver any; for it were againſt the Safety of her Friends in Scotland.

Duke. For adviſing not to deliver the Rebels, I deny that ever I gave any ſuch Advice. As for Delivery of her Son, I advis'd her no otherwiſe but thus, that I wiſh'd her to beſtow him there, where ſhe might have ſure Friends.

Serj. Thus, contrary to your Oath, Allegiance, and Fidelity, and againſt the Credit that you would fain be thought of, you became, by your own Confeſſion, a Counſellor to a foreign Prince againſt your own Sovereign Lady.

Burleigh. My Lord, did you ever deſire to have any Proofs or Witneſſes produc'd for your part, to prove any thing that might make for you? And were you deny'd?

Duke. I have divers times pray'd, that if any thing were deny'd to be true which I ſaid, I might be driven to my Proof of it.

Burleigh. I ask it, becauſe I have not heard it reported to her Majeſty that you made any ſuch Requeſt, to have any ſpecial Witneſſes examin'd, or Proofs heard, on your part.

Here was produc'd and read the Confeſſion of Hickford to the 3d Article.

Duke. I adviſ'd her, touching her Son, that ſhe ſhould firſt be well aſſur'd that he ſhould be beſtow'd among her Friends. For her Caſtles, I adviſ'd her, that ſhe ſhould in any wiſe take heed, that they might not after come into the hands of her Enemies; for ſo if ſhe deliver'd Edinburgh-Caſtle, ſhe ſhould not be ſafe in Holyrood-Houſe.

Serj. How ſtandeth this with the Duty and Oath of a Counſellor, to give Advice to a foreign Prince againſt the Queen's Majeſty?

Duke. I excuſe it not, herein I confeſs my Error; I beſeech you call not theſe my inferiour Faults, which I have confeſs'd, among the greater wherewith I am charg'd.

Serj. Thus appeareth how he hath given Advice againſt the Queen to the Scottiſh Queen. Now it ſhall be further prov'd unto you, that where the Scottiſh Queen is here in Cuſtody as the Queen's Priſoner, he hath alſo been privy to Devices for conveying her away.

Here was produc'd the Confeſſion of Barker, October 5. 1571. Article 13.

Duke. This is not true, ſaving that indeed Advice was broken to me of conveying her away at a Window, at a Gallery's end, in one of my Lord of Shrewsbury's Houſes, of the which Window the Biſhop of Roſſe had taken a meaſure; but this Device was overthrown at ſuch time as it was told me. As for that which Barker hath here confeſs'd, it is utterly falſe.

Serj. Now ſhall you hear the Duke's own Confeſſion.

Here was read the Duke's Examination, 13 Octobris.

Serj. Beſides this, the Duke being in Priſon in the Tower, made a Submiſſion to the Queen's Majeſty, confeſs'd his Error in dealing with the Scottiſh Queen, and promis'd, upon his Faith and Allegiance, never to deal with that Marriage, nor with any other Matter touching the Scottiſh Queen.

Duke. I confeſs I did ſo.

Serj. Before his ſubſcribing his ſaid Submiſſion, he firſt made the Scottiſh Queen privy to it, and ſent her a Double of it.

Duke. I ſent it to the Biſhop of Roſſe.

Serj. All is one.

Duke. I confeſs it.

Serj. What ſhould move my Lord of Norfolk now ſo earneſtly ſtill to purſue this Marriage? You ſee he lik'd not the Perſon, ſhe was not of good Fame, he ſo ſignify'd to the Queen, he ſo reported to Banniſter. The Kingdom of Scotland he eſteem'd not, and alſo it was out of her poſſeſſion, in the hands of the King her Son, by her own Dimiſſion ratify'd by Parliament. Forſooth he had an old blind Prophecy lying by him: In exaltatione Lunæ Leo ſuccumbet, & Leo cum Leone conjungetur, & catuli eorum regnabunt; which belike is thus to be expounded, At the Exaltation of the Moon (which was the Riſing of the Earl of Northumberland, that giveth the Moon) the Lion, (which is the Queen's Majeſty) ſhall be overthrown; then ſhall the Lion be join'd with a Lion (which is the Duke of Norfolk with the Scottiſh Queen, for they both bear Lions in their Arms) and their Whelps ſhall reign, (that is, their Poſterity ſhall have the Kingdom.)

Duke I do not remember any ſuch Prophecy.

Serj. It was in your own keeping.

Duke. What ſhould I do with it?

Serj. Such blind Prophecies have oft deceiv'd Noblemen.

Duke. This is nothing to the purpoſe; I kept it not to any ſuch end.

Serj. You utter'd it to your Servant Hickford.

Here was produc'd and read Hickford's Teſtimony.

Duke. A Toy! You ſee I call it a fooliſh Prophecy.

Serj. Where had you it?

Duke. I remember it not.

Serj. Hitherto have you heard the Evidence to prove the Duke's Imagination, Compaſſing, and Conſpiracy, to deprive the Queen's Majeſty of the Crown and her Royal Eſtate, and ſo to bring her Highneſs to Death and Deſtruction. For proving this his Intent, you have heard their Matters prov'd, his Practice to join himſelf in Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen, whom he then well knew falſly to claim and pretend Title to the preſent poſſeſſion of the Crown of England: alſo his proſecuting the ſame Marriage without the Queen's Majeſty's Knowledge, againſt her Highneſs's expreſs Commandment upon his Allegiance, againſt his Faith, Promiſe, and Submiſſion; yea, and to purſue that with force, and to uſe the Advice and Strength of his Friends, to maintain the ſame force againſt the Queen; his hearkning to blind Prophecies, Mony by him lent to the Scottiſh Queen, and againſt the Queen his Sovereign Lady. If then his Purpoſe ſo were to purſue it with force, it muſt needs follow, that the ſame muſt be of Intent, Imagination, and Compaſſing, to deprive and depoſe the Queen's Majeſty from her Crown, Royal Eſtate, and Dignity, and to advance and maintain that falſe and uſurp'd Title of the Scottiſh Queen unto the preſent poſſeſſion of the Crown of England, and ſo conſequently, for maintenance of his Imagination and Purpoſe, to compaſs the Queen's Majeſty's Death and Deſtruction. Now ſhall you further hear Proof of his own words, declaring the ſame intent to purſue the Marriage by force, and rather ro loſe his Life than to give it over.

Cavendiſh's Depoſition.

That at his ſeveral Journies unto the Places of the Queen of Scots Abode, the Duke procur'd him to labour the Cauſe of his Marriage with her with all diligence. Item, That her Majeſty being at Southampton, Richard Candiſh, a certain Night walking in his Chamber, and perſuading him by all means to labour for the Queen's Favour concerning that Marriage; the Duke affirm'd, that before he loſt that Marriage he would loſe his Life: and ſaid moreover, that if ever he handled thing wiſely or cunningly, I would ſay it was the Matter of that Marriage, if I knew it from the beginning. Item, That the Monday at night, after the Duke's Departure from Southampton, Richard Candiſh being at Hayward-houſe with him, in the Company of the Lord Lumley, the Duke and the ſaid Lord Lumley talking ſecretly together, ſuddenly the Duke brake out into this Speech: Candiſh, quoth he, is able to accuſe me of no diſloyal Practices. Whereat the Lord Lumley, as it were wondring, Can he not indeed, quoth he? No indeed, quoth the Duke; and turning to Candiſh, ſaid, Candiſh, I in this Caſe defy thee, ſay thy worſt. To which Candiſh anſwer'd, Beſides the Practice of this Marriage, I truly can accuſe you of none. Item, The Duke, at another time, in the ſaid Houſe, ask'd Candiſh, If God take away the Queen's Majeſty, whether he could aſſure him of his Brother Candiſh, and procure his ſaid Brother to promiſe unto him Sir Robert Ningfield? Item, At his laſt being at Remming-hall, among many others talking, he had this Speech; Candiſh (quoth he) nothing will undo us but the Riſing of the Northern Lords. To whom I anſwer'd, God forbid that any ſuch thing ſhould be, for it will undo us all; whereat he replying, ſaid, I fear they will riſe.

Duke. The Duke looking upon Cavendiſh with a ſcornful and ſmiling Countenance, ſaid, You are an honeſt Man! That which he ſaith of the Talk between him and me at Southampton, is utterly falſe: At that time you were moſt earneſt on my part, and came to me as for Succour, for that as you ſaid your Couſin Chriſtmas was fallen out with you. When we rode to my Lord of Pembroke's, you came to me and told me, my Lord Burleigh findeth me well, I will ride with him and find his Humour, and I will face that Fellow thorowly; ſo from Salisbury you ſaid you would ride to Leiceſter, ſo and home with my Lord Burleigh, and you doubted not to bring me ſuch word from him as ſhould ſatisfy me. You told me how my Lord of Leiceſter was firm, and Sir Nicholas Throgmorton my ſure Friend, and that they would both join to deal with the Queen for me; and how Sir Nicholas Throgmorton ſent me word, That he doubted not the Queen would take order to my Contentation at her next Coming to a ſtaid Houſe. Then came you to London, and tho I had no great Liking of you, yet becauſe you were loth to lie at Arundel's, and were ſomewhat ill at Eaſe, I let you lie in my Houſe. I never made great account of you; my Lord of Leiceſter made us firſt acquainted, your Brother you know was not my Friend, I then took you as I now find you. While you could hold on, you ſhew'd your Letters that you did write on my behalf; then you came to me and ſaid, you had need, and borrow'd Mony of me; I had none at that time, but I ſent it you by Bowes. I was warn'd by divers of my Friends to take heed of you; you dealt with Dier and with Stranuge very maliciouſly. As for the Speech at Remminghall, that you ſpeak of me, it is untrue; I dealt not with you there about any ſuch matter; I left you at London, I look'd not for you; when you came, I was glad to be rid of you; you ſaid you were going to Norwich, and I was glad you were going, and will'd you to look at my Houſe at Norwich and tell me how you liked it: Out of the North I heard nothing in ſix Weeks before. You ſuddenly ſlipp'd away from me, and then came I up to London ward; you are an honeſt Man indeed, it is all falſe that he hath ſaid. Then Cavendiſh began to report and juſtify what he had ſaid, and to put the Duke in remembrance, when the Duke gave him reproachful words of Diſcredit.

Serj. He is ſworn, there needeth no more proving; you ſent Havers to the Earl of Weſtmoreland.

Then was alledg'd the Examination of one Haveling touching Havers, whom the Duke ſent to the Earl of Northumberland, with this Meſſage, That if the two Earls ſhould riſe, he were undone.

Duke. This may be ſeen of two years old, and by me fully declar'd and anſwer'd.

Then was read the Confeſſion of Havers.

Then was alledg'd a Letter of the Scottiſh Queen's in Cypher to the Duke, containing, that the Lord of Shrewsbury had told her, that the Earl of Northumberland was deliver'd to the Earl of Suſſex; for which ſhe was very ſorrowful three days together, for fear of cumbring of Friends if he were taken.

Serj. What Friends was ſhe ſo careful for, that ſhe wrote to the Duke, unleſs ſhe thought it ſhould light upon the Duke himſelf?

Duke. That Letter never came to my hands.

Serj. It was found in the Bag which you will'd to be burn'd.

Then the ſaid Letter was read.

Duke. All this is nothing to me.

Serj.

Serj. This proveth in you a Practice to the Rebellion; for all her Sorrow of the yielding of the Earl of Northumberland was, for fear he ſhould bewray and cumber her Friends.

Duke. That toucheth not me; for I am ſure the Earl of Northumberland hath been ſought for me, and yet he cannot accuſe me.

Serjeant. Had it not concern'd you, it had not been written to you.

Duke. Some Letters never came to my hands: ſometime they came to the Biſhop of Roſſe, ſometime to Banniſter, ſometime not all decipher'd; as Stranuge and Bowes, and other that have been Meſſengers for me, can tell.

Here Mr. Attorney began to proſecute the ſecond part, and ſpeak firſt to this effect.

Attorney. Now you have heard enough of the firſt matter. In this Indictment are contain'd three principal Treaſons, whereof the firſt is imagining and conſpiring the Deprivation, Death, and Deſtruction of the Queen's Majeſty: for proof hereof, it hath been truly ſaid, That to imagine, compaſs, or procure the Depoſing or Death of the Prince, is High Treaſon by the Statute of 25 Edward III. and at the Common Law; for the Statute is but a Declaration what was Treaſon at Common Law: which Imagination, when it appeareth by Overt-fact, muſt needs be judg'd Treaſon; for Overt-fact is but a ſhewing of a Man's mind, which when a Man by outward Speech or Deed hath utter'd, it muſt needs be judg'd that ſo was his meaning; which muſt be gather'd by ſuch means, as it may be made to appear. For no Traitor is ſo bold, to ſay expreſly, he will depoſe or kill the King; but often it hath been ſeen, that they go about indirectly, and by Means that tend to that End: and therefore he that goeth about to ſtir the People to Rebellion, or to levy War within the Realm, to aſſail or withſtand the Prince by Force, is taken to ſeek the Death of the Prince. Now therefore to prove that the Duke of Norfolk hath imagin'd and compaſs'd the Depoſing and Death of the Queen's Majeſty, this hath been ſhew'd you, firſt, by ſecret and indirect means: he ſought to join himſelf in Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen, who pretendeth Title to the Queen's Crown. This he did without the Queen's Majeſty's privity, againſt her Highneſs's expreſs Commandment upon his Allegiance, againſt his own Promiſe and Submiſſion. Firſt, being at York, a Commiſſioner appointed by the Queen, contrary to his Oath and Charge, he dealt undirectly and partially, and play'd an untrue part with the Queen; he ſecretly practis'd for the Marriage. This being objected againſt him, he hath deny'd it: you have heard it teſtify'd by three Witneſſes, the Earl of Murray, Ledington, and the Biſhop of Roſſe. So appeareth, that all that Practice and indirect Dealing was to this end, to compaſs the Deprivation and Death of the Queen's Majeſty; for he well knew that the Scottiſh Queen made Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England; that ſhe deny'd the Queen's Majeſty to be lawful Queen of this Realm; that ſhe uſurp'd the Royal Stile; that ſhe quarter'd the Arms of England without any difference: all this he knew, he was of the Queen's Majeſty's Privy Council at the ſame time; he knew that ſhe made no Renunciation of her unjuſt Claim, though it were required of her. It was alſo one Article in the Commiſſion where he himſelf was Commiſſioner, To require the Recognition of her Error, and of the Queen's Majeſty's preſent Right: he knew well it was not done. If the Scottiſh Queen claim'd ſuch preſent Title, then was ſhe no Friend to the Queen's Majeſty, but a Seeker of her Highneſs's Overthrow and Deſtruction: and yet the Duke of Norfolk knowing this, practiſed to compaſs this Marriage. Wherefore, I pray you, ſought he that Marriage? yea, and ſought it as he meant to atchieve it with Force? It was not in reſpect of her Perſon, for he knew her not; it could not be for any good Report of her virtuous Conditions, for he had an evil Opinion of her: he did by his writing certify againſt her, he declar'd to Banniſter that he thought very ill of her. It was not for her Title to the Kingdom of Scotland, for neither was ſhe poſſeſs'd of it, neither did he eſteem it though ſhe had it. Wherefore ſought he her then? Surely in reſpect of that unjuſt Claim and Title that ſhe pretended to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown of England; which Title cannot be maintain'd without evident purpoſe to depoſe the Queen's Majeſty, and to bring her to Death and Deſtruction, which is plain Treaſon by the Statute of 25 Edward III. for no more can England bear two Queens, than the World can bear two Suns. And how ſhould he have maintain'd it, but with Force? And how could that have been, without depriving of the Queen's Majeſty from the Royal Eſtate? And how could that have been done, without compaſſing her Highneſs's Death and Deſtruction? For the Jealouſy of an Uſurper cannot ſuffer the juſt Prince to live. This your Honours are to ſearch and conſider, and to your Judgments we refer it. Now my Lord of Norfolk's chief and only Anſwer is but his bare Denial, which is no ſufficient Anſwer; ſpecially ſith he himſelf hath fallen into ſo great diſcredit, by doing againſt his Word, his Hand, his Oath. He promis'd, being commanded upon his Allegiance, never to deal in that matter; he promis'd, by his Submiſſion under his own Hand, utterly to forſake it, and to deal no more with the Scottiſh Queen for that Marriage, nor any other matter: He promis'd by Oath ſpecially taken when he was Commiſſioner for hearing the matter at York, to do therein directly and indifferently without partiality. All theſe Oaths and Promiſes he hath brokon, beſide the Oath of a Counſellor which he hath alſo broken, in diſcloſing the Queen's Secrets, and in ſecret practiſing againſt her expreſs Commandment. Now alſo, ſince he was laſt apprehended and committed, he hath deny'd certain things, which he hath afterward, being conſtrain'd with ſtrength of proof, confeſs'd; yea, he hath deny'd thoſe things upon his Oath, which he hath afterward granted to be true: ſo is he not to be believ'd upon his Word, if his own Word diſcredit him, how great ſoever he be in Degree.

Duke. Upon the Statute of 25 Edward III. he inferreth, that it is Treaſon to imagine or compaſs the Deprivation and Death of the Queen's Majeſty; as the Lord forbid, and I pray God I may ſooner be bury'd in the Earth, than I ſhould ſeek or attempt any thing to the Deſtruction of her Majeſty's Perſon. There is a Maxim in Law, that penal Statutes muſt be conſtru'd ſtrictly, and no penal Statute ought to be extended further than the very words: Now in all that my Acouſers have depos'd or ſaid againſt me, there is not one word, how falſe ſoever they be, that ſay that I went about any hurt to her Majeſty's Perſon, or that I levy'd or practis'd to levy any Power againſt her, or to do any of thoſe things that are contain'd for Treaſons within the words of the Statute. Is the Biſhop of Roſſe a ſufficient Witneſs againſt me? There be Points enough in the Law to prove him no ſufficient Witneſs: He is a Stranger and a Scot; a Stranger can be no ſufficient Witneſs, much leſs a Scot: for whereas when there is Peace between the Queen's Majeſty and a foreign Realm, the People of that foreign Realm may freely come and traffick in this Realm; yet though there be a Peace between England and Scotland, if a Scot come into England without a Paſſport, he may be a lawful Priſoner. Again, I cannot tell what he may for fear. Bracton ſaith, That Witneſſes muſt be Liberi Homines, Free Men, of full Age, Honeſt, and of Good Report: the Biſhop of Roſſe is none ſuch. So is nothing prov'd of any Overt-fact againſt me, neither am I accus'd by any but the Biſhop of Roſſe, who can be no ſufficient Witneſs againſt me. What care I what Hamlin ſays? it toucheth me not. As for Havers, I never ſent him with any ſuch Meſſage: indeed I ask'd him what Company he found with my Brother of Weſtmoreland. He told me, he found none but my Brother Weſtmoreland. But as for my Lord of Northumberland, I ſent not to him. If I might have brought forth my Proofs, I could have brought forth Proofs of good fame, that I ſent no ſuch Meſſage; I could have prov'd it by Confeſſions, and not by Hearſay. So is only the Biſhop of Roſſe Witneſs againſt me, and what he is, all you perceive. I never heard of the Rebellion, till Sir Henry Nevill told me of it. If I had had ſuch a mind when I was in Norfolk, I needed not to have come hither; I could have made a ſhift well enough. If I had intended any ſuch Rebellion or Treaſon, I would not have put my Lord of Northumberland in truſt withal, nor yet my Brother of Weſtmoreland, nor would have come hither to put my Head in the Halter in the Tower: but being, as I was, in ſuch place where I might have ſhifted, I would have kept me from coming here well enough. If Fear had moved me, and that I doubted of mine own Caſe, I could eaſily have avoided. So, I ſay, to prove me guilty of Treaſon, you muſt ſhew ſome Overt-fact that I have done againſt her Majeſty's Perſon: And to the Witneſſes, I think I have ſaid ſufficiently. As touching my dealing with the Scottiſh Queen, ſo far as I dealt without compaſs of Treaſon, this I ſay for my meaner Faults, inferiour to Treaſon, I have with all Repentance and Humility ſubmitted my ſelf to the Queen's Majeſty, I beſeech you confound not thoſe with this Caſe: but in my dealing with her about Marriage, I pray you draw it not to ſuch Intention, to advance her Title againſt the Queen; becauſe, though ſhe once made ſuch Claim, yet conſidering what Amity hath ſince been between the Queen and her, to make her now an Enemy, is hard; and ſurely to marry her, though I treated of it, I never concluded, minded, nor intended. Where it's ſaid I was privy to the Device of her taking away, I utterly deny it. If I had been ſo, I would not have been againſt her, nor would have certified againſt her; I ever advis'd her to ſubmit her ſelf to the Queen's Majeſty: but when no Overt-fact of Treaſon can be prov'd againſt me, to bring me in thus by Arguments and Circumſtances, I think it very hard. If I ſhould have ſtolen her away, I could not do it alone; was I ſo deſtitute of Friends, that I could not make any Man privy to it? And who is there that accuſeth me of it, that may ſpend five Marks a year? Now ſith nothing is proved againſt me by any Witneſs ſufficient, I beſeech you conſider favourably of me. Indeed my Brother of Weſtmoreland ſent me his Man with Recommendations; and I ſent him, by his Man, a Ring which my Siſter had ſent me before; and alſo Havers with this Meſſage, Commend me to my Brother of Weſtmoreland, and tell him that I am well, mine Innocency ſhall deliver me: but nothing touching any Riſing at all. If ever I were privy to that Rebellion, then condemn me of all the Treaſons that you lay againſt me.

Attorney. My Lord and I are now at iſſue upon this point; I affirm it with Proofs, and his Lordſhip barely denieth it. If his Intent were to compaſs the Marriage, knowing her to pretend Title to the preſent Poſſeſſion of the Crown; then muſt this grow to an Imagining to depoſe the Queen, and then it is Treaſon. An Overt-fact is a Declaration of the Mind; Letters, Tokens, Speeches, Meſſages, and ſuch-like, be Overt-facts. Now if you had marry'd her, you muſt have maintain'd her pretended Title, which you could not have done without manifeſt Purpoſe and Compaſſing to depoſe the Queen, and to bring her to Death, which is High Treaſon. Now beſide, there is one other Fact, which I will give you in evidence; which moſt evidently proveth the Duke of Norfolk's Imagination and Compaſſing to depoſe and deſtroy the Queen. It is well known that Pius V. the Biſhop of Rome, is the Queen's Majeſty's notorious Enemy, he hath been ſo publiſh'd; he hath ſo ſhew'd himſelf in his Proceedings; he hath ſhew'd it in his Bulls, they have been brought into this Realm, and ſome have ſuffer'd for them. The Duke of Norfolk knowing it to be ſo, hath practis'd with his Factor, hath ſent unto the Pope for Aid and Force againſt the Queen; he confer'd with one Rodolphe a Merchant Stranger, to go over Sea to the Duke of Alva and to the Pope, in the name of the Scottiſh Queen and the Duke of Norfolk, to procure Power to invade this Realm, for the Advancement of the Scottiſh Queen's falſe Title to the Crown of this Realm of England; and in the mean time, the Duke promis'd to move her Friends to levy ſuch Power as they were able, to aſſiſt the Strangers when they came in. If this be proved unto you, then is it flat Treaſon. To uſe Force againſt her Majeſty in her own Realm, muſt needs be done with intent to depoſe her, which Force ſhe muſt needs reſiſt; which if ſhe be not able to do, then followeth her Death and Deſtruction. My Lords, here goeth ſtill all to one manner of purpoſe, his own bare Denial and Allowing of no ſufficient Witneſs; but here God, him ſhall be Witneſs: this is a matter open'd by God himſelf. It was known, that a Treaſon was in hand; many Searches were made to underſtand it, no Man could by any Travel find it out, till God himſelf open'd it; ſo as the Saying is fulfill'd, What is done in ſecret ſhall be made open. The Treaſons my Lords of the Council knew of; it appear'd in April laſt, that ſuch a Treaſon was; but whom it toucheth was not known to them, no not to him that open'd it. So as God hath open'd it, to affirm theſe mean Men to be of credit. The Treaſon being known to the Privy Council half a year together, yet could they not underſtand the Party, till God diſcloſed it by marvellous chance. In Auguſt laſt, there was ſix hundred Pound of Mony prepared to be ſent with Letters into Scotland to the Queen's Enemies, for their Relief and Maintenance, and by the Duke of Norfolk's appointment to be convey'd to his Man Banniſter, and ſo into Scotland. This Mony was deliver'd to one Browne of Shrewsbury, by one of the Duke's Servants, one Hickford; who ſaid to Browne, Here is 50 l. I pray you help that it be convey'd to Mr. Banniſter's Dwelling near Shrewsbury. Browne having receiv'd the Mony, though the Bulk was ſomewhat like the proportion of 50 l. in Silver, yet the Weight, by reaſon it was Gold, made him ſuſpect it: whereupon he went to one of the Queen's Privy Council, and diſclos'd his Suſpicion, that ſo he might learn what he carried. This Bag being open'd, there was found 600 l. in Gold, and certain Letters withal, to the Queen's Enemies, and to Banniſter: Whereupon, the Duke's Man, that ſent the Mony, was apprehended; and then, by God's good Providence, was it found that this Treaſon touch'd the Duke of Norfolk, under the Name and Cypher of Guarante 40, and another Nobleman was ſignify'd by the Cypher of 3 Trente. Then fell out new Matters: Certain of the Duke's Servants examin'd, whether they knew of any Cypher us'd to any Man by the Name Guarante, they confeſs'd that Guarante was the Duke of Norfolk; they ne'er were in ſeveral Places, the Biſhop alſo a Priſoner in a place ſeveral from them all, and yet they all agreed in one. So God's Work hath enforc'd their Credit by their Agreement, being ſeverally kept. Thus came it to light by God's own Work. Now ſee what the Cauſe was: The great Treaſon was contain'd in Letters written in Cypher, to one ſignify'd by the Number Guarante; this Guarante was for the Duke, and ſo the Duke confeſſeth. What Cauſe had they to ſuſpect him? Letters from Rodolph made mention of great Treaſon, and of Proviſion of Men from beyond the Seas, to invade this Realm, according to his Order and Requeſt, which was Men by Guarante. If then we ſhall prove unto you that Rodolph had this Meſſage and Commiſſion from the Scottiſh Queen and the Duke of Norfolk, to treat with the Pope, King Philip, and the Duke of Alva, for the bringing in of ten thouſand Men to invade England, and to make War againſt the Queen in her own Realm; there muſt needs be compaſſing to depoſe the Queen, and to bring her to Death, and ſo High Treaſon: For he that will levy Force to invade or make War in a Prince's Realm, and that in Maintenance of a Title to the preſent enjoying of the Crown, doth what he can to depoſe the Prince, and conſequently alſo doth what he can to deſtroy the Prince. Now to prove that the Duke of Norfolk dealt in this manner, ſent this Meſſage, and practis'd to bring in this Force of Strangers, and to levy War againſt the Queen within the Realm, it ſhall be good firſt to ſhew what manner of Man this Rodolph was: He was one that liv'd divers Years here in this Realm, a notable Traitor and Enemy to the Queen and Realm of England, and of long time the Pope's Factor. In the Duke's firſt Trouble, this Rodolph was ſuſpected of ſuch Practices, and therefore by the Council committed to the Cuſtody of Mr. Walſingham till October was Twelve-months; and for that no evident Matter appear'd, he was deliver'd again in the November following: So ſoon as he was deliver'd, he by and by open'd to the Biſhop of Roſſe, That he was Factor for the Pope; he ſhew'd him his Commiſſion, and ſundry Letters written to him by the Pope's Nuncio in France, about Matters of the Practice a long time. This Rodolph was well known to the Scottiſh Queen, the Pope himſelf and his Nuncio recommending him to the Scottiſh Queen: The Duke was made privy of it, and made him privy to his Dealings, and kept it ſecret from the Queen and her Council. When the Bull was brought over, that Felton dy'd for, this Rodolph had ſix Copies of it, and diſpers'd them; whereof he gave one to the Biſhop of Roſſe, one other to the Spaniſh Embaſſador, and the third to the French Embaſſador, and the reſt we know not what he did with them. Now the Duke knowing him to be ſuch a one, he was a fit Man to deal with. That he was ſuch a one, and that the Duke well knew it, and ſent him in Meſſage to the Duke of Alva, and to the Pope, you ſhall ſee plainly prov'd. Then what his Meſſage was, you ſhall ſee alſo diſclos'd, and how things hidden will, by God's Providence, come to light. The Letters were written in Cypher, and decypher'd, and the Cypher hid in the Tiles, and found by chance; ſo as it may appear God's own Work to open theſe Treaſons.

Here the Duke took exception to his ſaying, that the Cypher was found in the Tiles; and ſaid, it was not the Cypher that was found there, but the Alphabet: ſo the Duke always in his Speech call'd the Letters or Matter written in ſtrange Characters, the Cypher; and the Paper of the Characters themſelves he call'd the Alphabet, which Mr. Attorney uſually call'd the Cypher.

Then was read the Biſhop of Roſſe's Confeſſion the 3d of November, to the 5th Article.

Alſo Roſſe's Confeſſion ad 7 Article, litera 6.

Alſo his Confeſſion the laſt of October, Article 23.

All this the Duke deny'd, and ſaid, I never ſaw any Letters from the Pope, but one, which I will ſpeak of anon.

Then was read the Biſhop of Roſſe to the 6th, 7th, and 8th, making mention of a Pacquet, wherein was one Letter to the Duke, by the Title of Guarante.

Then was read the Biſhop of Roſſe's Confeſſion, 26th of October, Fo. 2. concerning Andrew Beton's coming.

Attorney. The Duke had theſe decypher'd, and read them.

Then was read Barker's Confeſſion, 6th of November, Article 3.

Attorney. Thus plainly appeareth, that the Duke was privy to theſe Meſſages to the Pope, and Conference with his Factor: Now it reſteth to underſtand what followeth of this Courſe begun with Rodolph the Pope's Factor; what Meſſages were ſent; what Practices deviſ'd; and what enſued. Upon this Letter, the Scottiſh Queen wrote a Letter to the Biſhop of Roſſe, wherein ſhe wrote back a Diſcourſe of her Eſtate and Device, what ſhe thought beſt to be done, referring all to the Direction of the Duke of Norfolk. Here is the Letter itſelf to be ſeen.

This Letter came to the Biſhop of Roſſe; he ſent it over to the Duke, with a Letter from the Scottiſh Queen to the Duke. This Letter was decypher'd, and found hidden in the Duke's Houſe under the Matts in an Entry, in the Way as the the Duke went to his Bed-chamber; the Cypher it ſelf was found in the Tiles of the Houſe. This plainly declareth, how the Duke in dealing with the Scottiſh Queen and the Pope, purſued his Purpoſe of advancing the Scottiſh Queen to the Crown of England: That the Scottiſh Queen was in practice for it with the Pope, and referr'd the Diſpatch of Rodolph to the Duke; and the Receipt of thoſe Letters is confeſs'd by Hickford, and by the Duke himſelf.

Here was read the Letter of the Scottiſh Queen to the Biſhop of Roſſe.

Attorney. By this Letter appeareth, how the Scottiſh Queen hath ſet out the whole Plot of the Treaſon: A Meſſage ſhould be ſent for Aid from foreign parts; Rodolph the fitteſt Man to be the Meſſenger; and that Rodolph ſhould be diſpatch'd to go about it, when the Duke of Norfolk would. The Device was to move King Philip for Aid, upon a Conſideration of her State here, to enter into Deliberation of the Time and Opportunities to ſet her Friends to Field, and to ſeize themſelves of her. This is confeſs'd by Hickford; and this Letter is alſo confeſs'd by the Duke himſelf, that he receiv'd it about January was Twelve-month, and it was hid under the Matts.

Duke. I bid that the Letter ſhould be burnt.

Attorney. God would not have it ſo; but that it ſhould remain for diſcloſing the Matter.

Duke. As touching Rodolph, what manner of Man he was, is no matter to me: I know of no more, nor am to be charg'd with no more than I my ſelf am privy to. I never dealt with him about any Cauſe of mine. I receiv'd no ſuch Letter, but that which Barker ſaid came from him, which was not that January that you ſpeak of, about two Years ago; and as for Inſtructions and Letters about that January was Twelve-month, I receiv'd none.

Burleigh. Here the Lord Burleigh ſaid to Mr. Attorney, You may miſtake, it was this time Twelve-Month, for now we are in January. And ſo Mr. Attorney remembring this preſent Month to be January, referr'd the Letter to January now a Year paſt; and ſaid, This Letter that I now charg'd you with, came to your hands at this January was Twelve-month: It came firſt to the Scottiſh Queen's hand; ſhe took occaſion, upon conſidering her own Caſe here in England, in France, and in her own Country, that it was beſt for her to cleave unto Spain. She wrote to the Biſhop of Roſſe her Diſcourſe to that end: She counted Rodolph the fitteſt Meſſenger; Matter was deviſ'd for his Inſtructions; ſhe referr'd the Diſpatch wholly to the Duke of Norfolk: the Duke dealt in it, his Meſſage appeareth. And thus it continued till March; and then, according to the Plot before laid, Rodolph was diſpatch'd, and went over indeed.

Duke. What was deliver'd to Barker, I know not; that is nothing to me: I am ſure they will not ſay they deliver'd it me, nor that I receiv'd any ſuch Letters or Inſtructions. This I ſay, the Biſhop ſent me a Letter of the Scottiſh Queen's, together with a Letter of his own: In her Letter ſhe complaineth of her own Subjects, and ſaith, ſhe will ſeek other Means for her Relief. This Letter was decypher'd; I miſlik'd the Device, and bad that the Letter ſhould be burn'd; ſo the Letter in Cypher was burn'd, and the Alphabet was ſav'd. I ſent word that I miſlik'd all thoſe Devices, and I adviſ'd the Scottiſh Queen to depend only upon the Queen's Majeſty, or elſe, if ſhe would take any other Cauſe, both I, and all other her Friends in England, would give her over; and thereupon it was that I ſaid, that the Queen, if ſhe fell to ſuch Practices, would publiſh her Letters and Doings to her Infamy. Upon which my Words, the Biſhop of Roſſe excus'd himſelf, and laid all this Matter, of this new Device, to Beyton and Rewley. It is not true that Barker made me privy to any ſuch Meſſage or Inſtructions, as hath been alledg'd. Alſo he is not to be allow'd for a Witneſs againſt me, for he hath confeſs'd Treaſon againſt himſelf; and Perſons out-law'd, or attainted of Treaſon, are no ſufficient Witneſſes.

Catlin. My Lord, there is none of thoſe Witneſſes, that have declar'd Matter againſt you, outlaw'd, or attainted of Treaſon, or yet indicted.

Duke. They are worſe; for they have confeſs'd Treaſon.

Attorney. The Biſhop of Roſſe, at this time, was in Cuſtody, and theſe Men alſo that have confeſs'd againſt you, were alſo kept in Cuſtody, kept aſunder in ſeveral Places, and ſeverally examin'd, agreed all in one, and your own Confeſſions agree with them; How can this be imagin'd and falſe? All theſe do teſtify it with one Conſent. The Biſhop of Roſſe, when he firſt came to the City, was examin'd of theſe things, he deny'd all, he ſtood in it earneſtly; when Queſtions were ask'd him, he ſaid, He was an Embaſſador, and not ſo to be dealt with, but to be referr'd to his own Miſtreſs the Scottiſh Queen. When he was committed to the Tower, and there again examin'd, ſeeing things confeſs'd already; and by the manner of the Queſtions that were ask'd, perceiving ſome Light that the Truth was known; then he confeſſed alſo, and in his Confeſſions doth agree fully with Barker and the reſt: which Conſent could not poſſibly be, if the Matter were not true; beſides that, he hath in his Confeſſion touch'd himſelf.

Duke. They have not agreed in Confeſſion againſt me, that I told them any ſuch thing, but one of them told another, and ſo from hand to hand it went among them.

Attorney. Well you ſee what is confeſs'd, and with what Conſent we are at Iſſue; here is but your Lordſhip's Denial; I leave it to my Lords here to conſider of the Proofs. If you had been a good Subject, being then a Priſoner in your own Houſe, when ſuch dangerous Matter came to your Underſtanding, you would have open'd it, that the Queen's Majeſty and her Council might have provided to withſtand them, but you did it not. The Duke of Norfolk found flat Treaſon intended; Rodolph was the Meſſenger that procured it; the Duke knew it; Rodolph was referr'd to the Duke's Diſpatch, upon the Conference of the Biſhop of Roſſe and Rodolph about the Matter, and the Scottiſh Queen's Willingneſs to have him ſent about the Matter. Thus it proceeded: It was agreed that Rodolph ſhould have his Meſſage in Writing; and at the ſame Conference, Barker being alſo among them, it was agreed, and ſet down in his Inſtructions, that his Meſſage ſhould be this: He ſhould go to the Pope and the King of Spain, in the Name of the Scottiſh Queen and of the Duke of Norfolk, to require of them Money and Men for the Enterprize. Rodolph requir'd to ſpeak with the Duke; Barker brought him to the Duke at Howard-houſe; there they talk'd together, the Duke and Rodolph a whole Hour, till it was nine of the Clock at Night. After this Talk, the Duke deliver'd to Barker a Paper, ſaying, that Rodolph left it with him; which Paper contain'd the Sum of the Treaſon, and therein was alſo a Paper of the Names of divers Noblemen, Knights, and Gentlemen in Cypher, whom they counted that they would take the Duke's part, but they counted without their Hoſt; ſo that there was for every Name a Cypher, of the which 40 was for the Duke, and 30 for the Lord Lumley. Barker receiv'd it of the Duke, and deliver'd it again to Rodolph. Upon this Cypher of 40, fell out the Underſtanding of the Treaſon.

Here was read Barker's Depoſition, 10 October, Interr. 8.

Item, Barker to the 22 Interr.

Attorney. In this Bill the Duke is proved to be 40, the Duke himſelf hath alſo confeſs'd that 40 ſtandeth for his own Name. Barker brought Rodolph to the Duke, which the Duke alſo confeſs'd, and that Barker brought him Inſtructions for Rodolph's Money.

Here Mr. Treaſurer and Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, ſworn, did teſtify that Barker made all theſe Confeſſions freely, without Compulſion.

Alſo Mr. Wilſon, ſworn, did teſtify the ſame; and that Barker was never offer'd Torture, nor was once in the Priſon where the Rack was: but the Duke ſaid Barker ſaw where his Fellow had been.

Attorney. Did not Barker bring Rodolph to you at nine of the Clock at Night? Did he not leave with you Inſtructions in French?

Duke. I confeſs it.

Then was read Barker to the 16th.

Attorney. Rodolph came alſo the ſecond time to the Duke; after he was come from the Duke, he ſaid to Barker, That the Duke and he were agreed of his Journey, and that the Duke pray'd him to depart with ſpeed.

This Meſſage was to procure Men and Money for the Enterprize of the Treaſon; and on this Meſſage the Duke diſpatch'd him.

Duke. Touching Rodolph's coming, I have indeed confeſs'd that he came to me. I was in Summer was Twelve-Month bound in Recognizance for 1800 l. to Rodolph, for my Lord of Arundel, and for my Brother Lumley; the Day was paſs'd whereby I ſtood in danger of my Recognizance. I ſent to Rodolph to intreat him to cancel my Recognizance, and I offer'd to give him Twenty Yards of Velvet; Rodolph would not be perſuaded, but deſired to ſpeak with me himſelf, which Barker reported to me. I was very loth that he ſhould come to me, for he was in Trouble at my laſt Trouble, and ſo I thought his coming to me would be ſuſpicious. Barker promis'd that he would bring him to me ſecretly, and at ſuch a time as it ſhould not be known to make any Suſpicion. So Rodolph came to me, and I did what I could to intreat him about my Recognizance, and I could not perſuade him more, than to promiſe that he would not ſue me. He told me of his Trouble and of his Impriſonment at Mr. Walſingham's, and what Words Mr. Walſingham gave unto him, alſo of the Scottiſh Queen; and that he ſhould deal with the Duke of Alva for Money for her to her own Uſe, and for Neceſſaries, as he had done before. He pray'd alſo my Letters in the Scottiſh Queen's Favour to the Duke of Alva: I began to miſlike him, and was loth to write; I ſought ways to ſhift me from him; I ſaid I was not well at eaſe; I could not write, and it was late, and ſo I would not deal. As for the Bill of Names, I ſaw none ſuch, nor underſtood of any ſuch, till the Letter that came over from Rodolph about Eaſter. I deliver'd a Writing to Barker: I confeſs it; but it was about that Matter which I have confeſs'd already for my Recognizance; and ſo I dealt not with any ſuch Matter as is alledg'd againſt me, nor receiv'd any other Inſtructions, but only as I have ſaid, about my own Matters.

Attorney. My Lord, this is but your own ſaying, and it carrieth no Likelihood: But Barker goeth nearer to you; he telleth you plainly what the Inſtructions were: It was to King Philip for Men, and to the Pope for Money.

Duke. Barker hath confeſs'd himſelf a Traitor, and therefore is no ſufficient Witneſs againſt me. I never knew of any ſuch Bill of Names, nor ſuch Inſtruction in French.

Attorney. It is ſufficiently prov'd. Now Rodolph came to you again the ſecond time.

Duke. I deny it: He came no more to me.

Attorney. That is not ſo: for Barker telleth plainly, not only the Time, but alſo the ſeveral Ways by which he himſelf brought Rodolph to you.

Duke. There be Ways enough, he might have devis'd alſo a dozen Ways more, if he would, in that Houſe.

Here was read Barker ad 11.

Attorney. Lo! he telleth you which way Rodolph came to you.

Duke. So he may deviſe more Ways when he will.

Attorney. Now you ſhall alſo hear it confeſs'd by the Biſhop of Roſſe, who at the time of his Confeſſion was in Priſon, not knowing what Barker had ſaid.

Here was read Roſſe's Confeſſion of that Matter.
Here was alſo read Roſſe, the ſixth of November.

Attorney. Here you ſee how the Duke agreeth with Barker. And there was read Roſſe more, the ſixth of November; how Rodolph made account of his Time, and of his Return before the Parliament ended.

Then Mr. Attorney made a brief Rehearſal of the Matters contain'd in theſe Confeſſions, and ſhew'd the Agreement of Roſſe and Barker; and then was read Roſſe, Fol. 3. touching Rodolph's Account of his old Soldiers, that he could bring againſt the Engliſh, of the Duke of Medmay's coming, of 7000 Spaniards to be ſpar'd. Now the Duke had ſatisfy'd Rodolph for his Credit, and tho the Duke ſubſcribed not, yet if the Duke were a Chriſtian Man, he was aſſur'd of him, and ſo would aſſure foreign Princes on the Duke's part.

Then was read the Confeſſion of ths Biſhop of Roſſe, to the 18th.

Now ſhall you hear further: Rodolph, before his Voyage, mov'd to have Letters of Credit, that he might deal with foreign Princes; whereupon three Letters were devis'd, to commend Rodolph to the Pope, the King of Spain, and the Duke of Alva, and to give him Credit in his Meſſage, that he might be able to procure Aid for the Scottiſh Queen, and for the Advancement of the Catholick Faith. The Duke anſwer'd, I am loth to write; for if I write, the Queen's Majeſty hath great Intelligence, and ſo if my Writing ſhould come to light, all were marr'd; and ſo he would not write. Then the Biſhop of Roſſe, and Barker, travailed earneſtly with him to ſubſcribe the Letters; but he would not. Then, at length, it was adviſ'd and agreed among them, that if the Duke ſhould ſend one to the Spaniſh Embaſſador, to declare his Aſſent to affirm the Letters, it ſhould ſatisfy Rodolph and the foreign Princes, tho he ſubſcribed not: wherewith the Duke was content, and ſent Barker with the Biſhop of Roſſe, and Rodolph, to declare to the Spaniſh Embaſſador, that the Duke was content to affirm the Letter, and to let it paſs in his Name. And ſo the Spaniſh Embaſſador recommended Rodolph's Meſſage in the Duke's Name, without the Duke's Subſcription.

Here was read the Biſhop of Roſſe, ult. Octob. ad 20.

Alſo Barker was read of the ſame Matter.

Attorney. Thus it is plainly prov'd: and if they ſay true, as it cannot be that they can ſo agree, if it were not true; then can it not be deny'd that the Duke is guilty of all this Treaſon.

Duke. Here is too much at once for me to anſwer without Book; my Memory is not ſo good, to run through every thing, as they do that have their Books and their Notes lying before them: Therefore, I pray you, if I forgot to anſwer to any thing, remember me of it.

It is ſaid, That there are two or three Witneſſes againſt me; all this two or three are but one Witneſs: for Rodolph ſaid it to the Biſhop of Roſſe, and of his Mouth the Biſhop of Roſſe told it to Barker, and ſo from Mouth to Mouth; they are all but one Witneſs. Beſides that they have confeſs'd themſelves wholly in Treaſon, and now they would bring me in with them too; and ſo are no ſufficient Witneſſes againſt me. Note, I pray you, the Advices, and ſee how likely they are: Ten thouſand Men muſt be landed, whereof three or four thouſand muſt be Horſemen; they muſt land at Harwich, and a Port in my Country; neither is Harwich a Port in my Country: And I am not of ſo little Skill, that I would have three or four thouſand Horſemen land in Eſſex, the unfitteſt Place for Horſemen to land in all England, a Country beſt inhabited of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and other Ability to reſiſt them: And who would land Horſemen in Eſſex, a Country all full of Lanes, Woods, Ditches, and Marſhes? I would have choſen ſome other Country rather, if I had been ſo minded. Again, in reſpect of Religion, I would not have landed them in Eſſex, that came to deſtroy Religion, and ſo ſhould have found but little Aſſiſtance? And would I have brought in Power, or join'd with them to the Overthrow of Religion? It hath lately been ſaid by that ſide, that I could not be recover'd from my Religion: I would not be chang'd from my Religion; I had rather be torn with wild Horſes. Beſides that, the County of Eſſex, adjoining to the County of Suffolk, is moſt unfit for that purpoſe; no County in England more repleniſh'd with Proteſtants, nor of better Ability, and none more likely to withſtand Papiſts. As for moving of Friends, I never dealt to move any Perſon in the Matter; I never made Proviſion for it; I provided no Armour, Shot, Powder, nor Money; I made no Friends privy to any ſuch Intent. Some Preſumption it is, that if I had intended any ſuch matter, I would have made ſome privy to it. I was not otherwiſe ſo deſtitute of Friends, I would have provided Armour, Shot, and Powder; I would have provided Money; I am ſure there was not much Money found. For Armour, I had not at my houſe here paſt eight Armours which were of Proof, and a hundred Harquebuſies; and beſides this, I beſtow'd not 10 l. in Armour theſe ten Years: Powder I have not two Barrels; yea, not above a Barrel in all. So ſee the likelihood of their Devices; no Conference of Friends to take part; no Proviſion of Furniture; a Country, both in Religion and Situation, unapt for the Matter.

Where they ſay Rodolph told Barker, and Barker told me; and Barker came from Roſſe and from Rodolph to me, and from me to Roſſe, to declare that I was content to affirm the Letters of Credit: I deny it. As for my Conſent, that the Spaniſh Embaſſador ſhould affirm the Letters in my Name, how unlikely a thing it is, that I was content to affirm them, but not to ſubſcribe them; as if I knew not how ſmall is the Difference between ſubſcribing and affirming; and as if I had ſuch ſlender Wit. Rodolph never came to me but once; indeed I heard that Rodolph would fain have came to me again the ſecond time, but I would not; Barker earneſtly urg'd it, but I refus'd. To pleaſe the curious Italian Head of Rodolph, they devis'd it among them to deal with the Spaniſh Embaſſador. As for me, I never heard from the Spaniſh Embaſſador in the matter; I never ſaw him but once at my Lord Treaſurer's. I was angry with Barker for going to him in my Name; and he excus'd it, and ſaid, he could not otherwiſe content the Biſhop of Roſſe and Rodolph: and ſo that affirming of the Letters was Barker's own Doing, and not mine. I would they might, in our private Examinations, have been brought face to face with me. I could have put them in mind of things they have confeſs'd, Treaſon of themſelves, and they would bring me in with them, and lay it on my ſhoulders. I am hardly handled, I have been eighteen Weeks committed, I can ſpeak with no body; if I might have had them face to face, and been allow'd to bring forth my Proofs, I would have brought forth direct Matter and Proofs, and therewith made them remember themſelves. Conſider, I beſeech you, what they be that accuſe me; the Preſumptions be in all likelihood, that I ſhould not ſo do as they accuſe me; and as for them, they be Perſons that have accus'd themſelves of Treaſon, and ſo be of no Credit. As for mine own Examinations, they wholly agree in ſuch ſort as I have here declar'd in mine Anſwer.

Attorney. Your Anſwer is nothing but bare Denial; and here are three Witneſſes againſt you, and all three ſeverally examin'd, have agreed in one; and Barker hath directly confeſſed; and if you doubt of Impulſion, you ſhall hear how willingly and how freely he confeſs'd it: becauſe the ſame Examination was taken before Sir Thomas Smith, and ſubſcrib'd with his Hand, Mr. Wilſon upon his Oath declar'd the ſame to be Sir Thomas Smith's Hand.

Duke. Where it is ſaid, that I ſhould bid them to write, or ſhould affirm their Writing, it is not true. Indeed Banniſter ſpake to me to write for Money for the Scottiſh Queen, and I refuſed to do it. If I ſhould have dealt in any ſuch matter, I would have truſted One Banniſter afore Fifteen Barkers. And as for your number of Witneſſes in this manner by Hands one from another, twenty Witneſſes may prove but one Witneſs.

Attorney. You ſhall hear your own Confeſſion agreeing with them; you were content Rodolph ſhould uſe your Name to the Duke of Alva, and that that he ſhould aſſure the Duke you were a Catholick, and that he ſhould ſhew Tokens to prove it, for that you kept Papiſts in your Houſe, and were a Friend to Papiſts.

Here was read the Duke's Confeſſion, 10 October, ad interr. 58.

Here his own Hand confeſſeth the Matter.

Duke. I ſaw the Inſtructions indeed, and this Matter was in it. They ſought to have it thought I was a Catholick, to ſerve their Purpoſe, and did put it in of themſelves; but I allowed it not, I would rather be torn with wild Horſes, than forſake my Religion.

Attorney. Theſe Inſtructions remained ſtill in your cuſtody: Why did you not burn theſe, as well as you ſay that you commanded the Letter to be burned?

Duke. Becauſe it was their Writing, and not mine.

Wilb. You are content it ſhould be extant; to what purpoſe was that, if you miſliked it?

Attorney. Your Lordſhip ſhall yet ſee further a Letter of the Biſhop of Roſſe, written to the Scottiſh Queen, wherein the whole Plot and Courſe of the Treaſon is plainly ſet out at large; the Letter came to the Scottiſh Queen's hands while my Lord Steward was there, which my Lord Steward affirmed. So the Letter was read.

Duke. The Biſhop of Roſſe is no ſufficient Witneſs againſt me, for the Cauſes that I have declared.

Attorney. I leave his Credit to my Lords here to conſider, let them weigh it as they ſee cauſe. Now come to conſider your own Doings: ſince your laſt Impriſonment, Letters have been conveyed unto you, and you have ſent Letters abroad, by many ſubtle and ſecret Ways of Conveyance. One Letter you ſent out, written with Red-Ocre, wherein plainly appeareth that you feared the Matter, and that ſomething was confeſſed, and that you were afraid of more; you willed the Biſhop of Roſſe ſhould take all upon him, becauſe he was an Embaſſador, and that a Bag of Writings ſhould be ſought out and burned.

Here the Letter written in Red-Ocre was read, which the Duke confeſſed to be his own.

Attorney. This Letter gave occaſion to ſeek the Bag, and ſo were the Writings found under Boards faſt nailed, and thereby was underſtood that Guarante was the Duke, and ſo by God's Work broke out the whole Practice of the Treaſon. This Letter was directed to no body.

Duke. It was written to Bayly, and Bayly received it. I can anſwer this Letter well enough. Here I am charged with two Matters, for matter of my Confeſſions, and for burning the Bags of Letters. As for that which is there ſaid, that I confeſſed nothing but what I ſaw confeſſed by other, the truth is, I received a Letter, wherein I was charged, that I had accuſed ſome falſly. I wrote to ſatisfy, that I had not accuſed any of any matter of Treaſon, nor could if I would; and this was the meaning of that Part of my Letter.

Attorney. Where is the Letter whereby you were charged that you had accuſed falſly?

Duke. I kept it not; think you I would keep Letters? Burned Letters do no hurt. As for burning the Writings in the Bag, it maketh nothing againſt me in this Caſe; for they were nothing but private Letters of the Scottiſh Queen's, written before, and when I was laſt in Trouble long before this Matter. At Banniſter's coming up at Eaſter laſt, he brought them to me, and I willed Barker to lay them up: What needeth ſuch ſearching for elder Matters? I bad them be made away, for they were but private Matters between the Scottiſh Queen and me.

Attorney. There was the Letter that diſcloſed you to be Guarante, whereby the Treaſon was known: now here is alſo another Letter of your own, which you ſecretly ſent out of the Tower, which ſheweth your Guiltineſs in the matter of the great Treaſon with Rodolph.

Here the Duke's other Letter was read.

Duke. This was only, as I have declared before, for my Conference with Rodolph, for the matter of Money, both touching mine own Recognizance, and procuring of Money for the Scottiſh Queen, for her Neceſſity.

Attorney. By the whole courſe of the Matter that goeth before, it is for the Treaſon, and not for the Money.

Here is alſo another Letter of your own, which carrieth manifeſt Preſumptions of the Treaſon, where, among other things you will Barker to confeſs no further, if he love his Life; beſides other moſt manifeſt ſuſpicious Matters.

Duke. I wrote it not in reſpect of any fear that Barker could hurt me, when I willed that Barker ſhould confeſs no more, as he loved his Life: For indeed he might touch himſelf in Treaſon, (as he hath done) but not me, for I never conſented to it.

Attorney. Now ſhall you ſee how the Matter proceeded further: After the diſpatch of Rodolph, in Lent laſt, as he had made ſhew before, that he intended to go over Sea, and was all this while practiſing about this Treaſon; at length being frighted with theſe Meſſages, he came to ſue to the Queen's Majeſty for a Paſs-port, which was granted him, and he carried over two Geldings with him, which is evident Proof that he went over. Now ſhall you ſee what effect it took, and by the Anſwer you ſhall diſcern the Meſſage and Practice: Being beyond the Sea, and having done his Meſſage, he ſent advertiſement to the Duke how he ſped, and likewiſe from the Pope; which plainly diſcloſeth the whole Purpoſe and Plot of the Treaſon, as ſhall be declared unto your Lordſhips.

Here began Mr. Sollicitor.

Sollicitor. For that the time is ſpent, and your Lordſhips, I think, are weary, I will not now make any Collection what hath been gathered of the attempt of Marriage with the Scottiſh Queen, only I will deal with the Matter of Rodolph's Meſſage, and the effect thereof: And the Duke's adhering to the Queen's Enemies and Rebels, ſhall be another part. In this Matter of Rodolph, hath been laid before you a plain Plot for a Rebellion, and for Invaſion of the Realm, ſet forth in the Scottiſh Queen's Letter, which was decyphered by Hickford, by the Duke's Commandment, as hath been ſaid unto you; the effect whereof was as hath been declared.

And here he repeated the Effect of that Letter, containing the Device of putting Men into the Field, and to ſeize the Scottiſh Queen. Now if the Device were follow'd, and if the Duke were a Doer in it, if he were a Conſenter unto it, if Rodolph were practiſed with for the Journey, if he received his Meſſage to that end, if he went and purſu'd it, if he ſent Anſwer accordingly; then it muſt needs be that here is matter of High Treaſon, and the Duke of Norfolk guilty of it. It hath been ſhewed by the Declaration of Barker, and of the Biſhop of Roſſe, how Rodolph was the Pope's Factor, was commended by the Scottiſh Queen for a fit Meſſenger in this Matter, was conferred with about it, Articles were deviſed, they were ſhewed the Duke, and the Duke himſelf hath confeſſed that he ſpake with Rodolph, and that he ſaw the Inſtructions. Now is the queſtion, How far the Inſtructions extended, whether to matter of High-Treaſon, as hath been alledged, or no? The Duke ſaith for his excuſe, That the Inſtructions were but for a private cauſe of Money, and that when Rodolph required him to write his Letters, the Duke refuſed and caſt him off. See how this accordeth: If it were but a private Cauſe, whereto ſerved that refuſal to write? As well he might by Letters, as by Inſtructions, purſu'd a private Cauſe. What needeth that ſecret coming in the Night-time about a private Cauſe? The Duke himſelf confeſſeth, that the Inſtructions were ſhewed him before Rodolph came to him; he confeſſeth alſo that Rodolph was commended by the Scottiſh Queen, the Inſtructions have here been ſhewed, containing the Matter of his Journey, and extending to the Treaſon: He came to confer with the Duke. Now let your Lordſhips judge why, and about what Matters they conferred.

The Biſhop of Roſſe and Barker do, of their own knowledge, declare, how, for Furniture of this Meſſage, there were Letters of Credit deviſed in the name of the Scottiſh Queen and the Duke of Norfolk, to the Pope, the Spaniſh King, and the Duke of Alva; the Duke refuſed to ſubſcribe them, for fear, if he ſhould deal too openly, the Treaſon might perhaps to ſome appear: therefore a Device was found out how to ſalve the matter, That he ſhould, by his Servant, affirm the Letters to the Spaniſh Embaſſador, and ſo they ſhould, by the Spaniſh Embaſſador's commendation, paſs with as good credit as if they had been ſubſcribed. This Device was performed, his Aſſent was witneſſed, and the Letters of credit confirm'd accordingly. Rodolph went over to the Duke of Alva, and from thence to the Pope; he return'd anſwer of his Meſſage, and gave advertiſement to the Duke. Did not he ſend his anſwer concerning the very Inſtructions that have been alledg'd, and the matter of Treaſon, and not of a private Cauſe? And to whom? Sent he not anſwer to the Duke, by the name of Guarante? Would Rodolph make anſwer to, and advertiſe him that never ſent him, and of a Matter that he never ſent him about? By this you may ſee the intent of the Meſſage. Now ſhall you ſee what Anſwer was return'd.

The Biſhop of Roſſe, after this, ſent over a Servant of his, one Charles Bayly, to fetch certain Books that were printed in thoſe Parts; Books containing very ſeditious Matter, whereof I have ſeen ſome, by permiſſion, tending to theſe ends. Firſt, therein is conveyed to the Scottiſh Queen a Title to the Crown of England, a Deſcent above the Conqueſt, and ſo labouring to impair the Intereſt of all our Kings that have reigned ſince the Conqueſt. Then the Judgment of the Right of the Crown of this Realm is reduc'd to an univerſal Law, which they call Jus Gentium, and the diſcerning thereof exempted from the Laws of this Realm. And of that univerſal Law they eſtabliſh one univerſal Judge, whom they inſinuate to be the Pope, whoſe Bulls you ſee have paſs'd in prejudice of the Queen's Majeſty's undoubted Right. This Charles Bayly being in thoſe parts for this occaſion of the Books, met with Rodolph at Bruſſels, after that Rodolph had had his diſpatch from the Duke of Alva, and was haſting to the Pope; and therefore having haſte of his Journey, and much to write, and ſmall leiſure, he deſired Charles Bayly to write for him two Letters for two Noblemen of this Realm, both in Cypher: but to whom the Letters were directed, Charles himſelf could not tell; for Rodolph ſubſcrib'd the Letters himſelf, one to Guarante, the other to Trente. Charles Bayly bringing their Books and Letters, was taken at Dover, the Books were brought to the Council, the Pacquet of Letters were convey'd away to the Biſhop of Roſſe: And daily more and more grew the Suſpicion, by reaſon of the repair of the Biſhop of Roſſe's Servants to the Marſhalſea, where Charles was. At length there were Letters taken between the Biſhop of Roſſe and Charles, mentioning the recovery of Rodolph's Pacquet. In this Pacquet was the Advertiſement of the Succeſs of the Voyage, from Rodolph to the Duke, by the name of 40. This Letter of Rodolph's was ſent to the Duke from the Biſhop of Roſſe by Barker; Barker deliver'd it to the Duke, from whence it was ſent back again to the Biſhop of Roſſe by Gutbert, and by Gutbert it was decyphered, and carried again to the Duke by Barker: Upon this occaſion Gutbert was ſought for, the Duke convey'd him away, and this conveying away of Gutbert, the Duke hath confeſſed. If this be thus, then muſt it needs be that Rodolph was ſent by him, and to ſuch end as the Letter bringeth anſwer of. In the Letter, this was contain'd, That Rodolph had ſpoken with the Duke of Alva; That he had very good and loving Audience; That the Duke of Alva lovingly promis'd all the help that he could; and that he would commend the Cauſe to the King of Spain his Maſter: And he adviſed Rodolph to go forward to the Pope, and that he ſaid, he could not do further without more Warrant, which he would ſeek to procure. Alſo certain queſtions ask'd by the Duke of Alva; as what Fort was between the Haven where they ſhould land and London? How near London it was? So the nearneſs of London was reſpected, how incommodious ſoever your Lordſhip ſaith the place was for Horſemen. Theſe Queſtions belike depended upon the Matter propounded, which touch the Plot of the Treaſon, and not a private Cauſe, as your Lordſhip pretendeth. The Duke of Norfolk confeſſeth the receipt of theſe Letters, and the decyphering of them. So Charles Bayly, by Rodolph's Requeſt, wrote the two Letters in Cyphers; Rodolph himſelf directed them to 40 and 30. Charles being taken, and confeſſing the writing, and bringing of theſe Letters, and the Matter contain'd in them in April laſt, yet knew not who was 40 nor 30. This was ſtrangely convey'd, Treaſon known in Matter, and yet the Perſon not known to himſelf that wrote it.

Here was read Charles Bayly's Letter.

Theſe Letters of Rodolph were convey'd to the Biſhop of Roſſe to deliver to 30 and 40, referring the reſt to his Diſpatch at Rome. And this falleth out alſo very likely for the Time; for Rodolph departed home about Eaſter before.

Here was read Charles Bayly's Confeſſion, ad 3. Sollic. Now you ſee to what End the Effect of the Meſſage tended; you ſee what it was, and how it was done; you ſee how it was receiv'd, and the Duke of Alva's Queſtions upon it: now you ſhall ſee the Contents of the Anſwer, by the Examinations of the Biſhop of Roſſe, and Barker; the receipt of the Letters of anſwer the Duke himſelf hath confeſſed.

Duke. Where they ſay this Meſſage was ſent by my Privity, by reaſon that I was meant by 40, I deny it; I never wrote by Rodolph, I refus'd to do it, I knew not his Letters were to me, but as Barker ſaid: And it was not likely they ſhould be to me; for it was a Matter which I was not privy of, and in a Cypher which I had not; Rodolph left no Cypher with me. As for the taking of the Pacquet, I knew nothing of it; the Letter I never ſaw in Cypher; Barker brought me a Decypher, telling me, That 40 was for me, and 30 for the Queen of Scots. When he told me firſt he had the Cypher, I ask'd what I ſhould do with it, and how I ſhould read it, having no Cypher? Barker anſwered, that it was left with Gutbert; for Rodolph, at his departure, had told him, That he would write anſwer of the Money for the Scottiſh Queen, and that he would leave the Cypher with Gutbert; and that he had ſo done, and in the Letters decyphered did appear, that the Duke of Alva had promiſed aid of Money for the Scottiſh Queen for her Neceſſities; but he could not yet do it for want of Commiſſion, but as ſoon as he had Commiſſion he would. When I heard of this, I miſlik'd this dealing with the Duke of Alva, having before refus'd to write to him in the Matter at Rodolph's Requeſt; and I threatned Barker if he ſo dealt any more with me. The Letters might be to me, as Barker ſaid; but I knew not ſo much.

Sollic. This your Anſwer is in all no more than a bare denying, and ſo be all your Speeches, all upon your own Credit only.

Here was read Barker's Confeſſion, ad 2. & 3. concerning Rodolph's Letters in Cypher, and the Decyphering by Gutbert, and the Port where the Walloons ſhould have landed, &c.

Then was read the Biſhop of Roſſe's to the 12 and 13, to the ſame effect.

Then Mr. Sollicitor recited again the Effect of the Letters, and the ſaid Confeſſions of Roſſe and Barker, and proceeded further thus:

You ſee all theſe agree in one concerning the Contents of the Letter; now the Letter being decyphered by Gutbert, and Gutbert being able to diſcover the whole, this Gutbert, when he was ſent for by the Council, was convey'd away by the Duke's means, as the Duke himſelf hath confeſſed.

Duke. It may be that Barker received this Letter as you ſpake of, and that Gutbert decyphered it, and that it contain'd the Matters that you alledge; it may be that they kept that Letter ſtill to themſelves, and might bring me another Letter, containing only ſuch Matter as I was content with, containing the private Cauſe.

Sollic. An unlikely matter; but thus you ſee the Duke confeſſeth the receipt of the Letter, he only denieth that it was to this effect. It was confeſſed, that a Letter to this effect was written to 40; he alſo confeſſeth, that 40 was for the Duke himſelf.

The Duke of Alva's Queſtions prov'd the form of the matter; the Duke read that Letter.

Duke. I read not that Letter, but of another Matter, and you bring but one Witneſs to prove it.

Sollic. There be two Witneſſes, Barker and the Biſhop of Roſſe, ſeverally examined, who agreed directly, expreſſing it. And Bayly alſo wrote the Letter himſelf containing the Treaſon, and not knowing to whom the Letter was directed, accordeth with them.

Duke. Barker and Gutbert might make the Letter themſelves, and put in and out what they liſt.

Sollic. Why did Rodolph write you any Letter at all?

Duke. I know not. Barker preſented me the Letters out of Cypher, and I had not the Cypher, nor ſaw any ſuch Letter as you alledge.

Sollic. It appeareth further, how after this diſpatch with the Duke of Alva, Rodolph went forward on his Meſſage to the Pope, and having alſo good Succeſs there, he ſo advertis'd again. The Pope ſent Letters to the Duke and the Scottiſh Queen, to this effect, That he liked well of their Enterprize, &c.

Would Rodolph have gone to the Pope and procur'd Letters, if he had not had Inſtructions accordingly? The Duke himſelf hath confeſſed ſuch a Letter, conceived there came two Letters, both of one Tenure; the one by the way of France, the other by the way of Flanders; the effect you have heard, and the receipt is confeſſed.

Duke. Barker indeed brought me about ſix or ſeven Lines, written in a Roman Hand in Latin, beginning thus, Delecte fili ſalutem. I asked what it was? And Barker told me, it was a Letter from the Pope to me: Wherewith I was offended, and ſaid, A Letter to me from the Pope! What have I to do with him, that is Enemy to my Religion and Country? How cometh this to paſs? So I received it, and not otherwiſe; and Barker excus'd it, and ſaid, That Rodolph had procur'd it for his own Credit.

Here was read Barker, ad 29.

Sollic. Thus you ſee the Effect of this Letter, and how this was directed to the Duke from Rodolph, alſo by the name of 40, decyphered by Gutbert, and delivered to the Duke by Barker. The Duke received it and read it, and ſaid, Rodolph hath been at Rome, I perceive there will nothing be done this year. By this it appeareth, that he reproved not Barker at all for bringing it unto him, for Barker brought it him twice: Would he have brought it him the ſecond time, if the Duke had been angry with him for it at the firſt?

Duke. I knew not at the firſt time what it was for, it was in Cypher.

Then was read Barker's Confeſſion to the 8th.

Duke. Barker is not of Credit, he accuſeth me falſly.

Sollic. He was your Servant, and of near Place and Credit about you; why ſhould he accuſe you wrongfully?

Duke. He was not of Credit about me; for I us'd him not this fourteen years.

Sollic. That is not ſo, as hath well appeared. beſides this, the conveying away of Gutbert, which was done by your means, and who decyphered this Letter, and could have diſcloſed the Matter, proveth a great Guiltineſs in you.

Duke. He was convey'd away at his own requeſt made, and not for my Safety.

Sollic. You cauſed him to be convey'd away, and were privy to his Conveying.

Duke. Barker removed him; indeed I was not privy.

Sollic.

Sollic. You moved Bowes to join with Barker to do it.

Then Mr. Sollicitor ſaid further to the Peers, I have alſo, my Lords, one thing more to ſay to you from the Queen's Majeſty's own Mouth, the Lords that be here of the Privy Council do know it very well, not meet here in open Preſence to be uttered, becauſe it toucheth others that are not here now to be named; but by her Highneſs's Order, we pray that their Lordſhips will impart it unto you more particularly. In Flanders, by the Embaſſador of a foreign Prince, there the whole Plot of this Treaſon was diſcovered, and by a Servant of his brought to her Majeſty's Intelligence; the Miniſter not meaning to conceal ſo foul and diſhonourable a Practice, gave Intelligence hither by Letters, and hath therein diſcloſed the whole Treaſon in ſuch Form as hath here been proved unto you: Wherefore I refer the more particular Declaration thereof to the Peers of the Privy-Council.

Then began Mr. Wilbraham, Attorney of the Wards, and ſaid to this effect.

Wilbraham. There is yet ſomething unſpoken, it conſiſteth in two Points, I will be ſhort in both. The Matters are plain, and eaſy to underſtand. Let my Lord anſwer, and your Lordſhips ſhall eaſily judge of them. Here have been ſet forth before you the imagining and practiſing of the Deprivation and Death of the Queen's Majeſty, with bringing in of Strangers into the Realm to invade, and levy War, with the Appurtenances both miſerable and many. This Requeſt I am now to make, that for proof of theſe Treaſons, that I will intreat you to have in memory what hath before been ſaid; for though the Proofs of theſe Treaſons we divide to ſeveral Parts, for Eaſe and Shortneſs, as the ſeeking of the Marriage, Rodolph's Voyage, the Succeſs thereof, and the Reſidence that remaineth, ought all to be compared together; any one appearing plainly true, giveth Credit to the reſt. The Queen's Majeſty's Proceeding in this Tryal is very honourable, mild and gracious; the Confeſſions have been made by the Parties freely, without Torture or Conſtraint. You ſhall ſee each of them, and each part ſo prove the other, as the whole ſhall be clearly out of doubt. Where the Earl of Northumberland and his Wife, the Earl of Weſtmoreland, Richard Norton, and others in the North Parts raiſed Rebellion, and levy'd open War againſt the Queen's Majeſty within her Realm; and being overthrown by the Queen's Power, fled into Scotland, and there were received by the Duke of Chaſtelleroy, the Lord Harris, the Lord Hume, the Lord Buccleugh, and others, and by them were comforted and detained againſt the Queen's Majeſty, requiring to have them delivered. Her Majeſty being denied to have them reſtored, publiſhed and proclaim'd open War againſt thoſe Detainers of her Rebels, and appointed the Earl of Suſſex, her Lieutenant-General, with an Army to invade Scotland, and there to purſue thoſe her Enemies, ſparing the reſt. He entred into the Land, made open War upon them, blew up their Houſes with Powder, waſted their Countries, and drove the Rebels out of Scotland. The one Matter now that I am to diſcloſe, is, That the Duke of Norfolk knowing all this, yet did adhere unto, comforted and relieved the ſaid Rebels; he procured Money to be diſtributed to the Earl of Weſtmoreland, the Counteſs of Northumberland, and other of them; and this is manifeſt Treaſon. The other Matter is, That the Duke of Norfolk knowing all this to be true, adhered unto, comforted and relieved the ſaid Lords of Scotland, the Queen's Enemies, Receivers and Detainers of her Rebels; and this is alſo Treaſon. And firſt for the aiding of the Rebels: After this Rebellion, and their Overthrow by the Queen's Power, they fled into Scotland, (a very bare Country) where they were driven to hard Shifts, ſo were they enforced to ſue to the Pope for help; they wrote to him, the Scottiſh Queen wrote in their favour to the Pope's Nuncio, the Matter was purſued for them by one D. Morton: this Morton was he that was the Procurer of the Bull that was ſent over againſt the Queen's Majeſty; this Morton was he that reconciled the Earl of Northumberland to the Romiſh Church, by a Bull of Abſolution: he went to the Pope on their Meſſage; the Pope granted them Relief, and wrote Letters in the mean time to comfort them, which were directed thus; Thomæ & Charolo Northumbriæ & Weſtmorlandiæ Comitibus, reliquiſq; Nobilibus Catholicis partium Borealium Regni Angliæ: To Thomas and Charles, Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland, and other of the Catholick Noblemen of the North Parts of the Realm of England. Belike, ſo calling them Noble in the fulfilling of D. Story's Promiſe, that by their rebellious Enterprize they were now of Worſhipful become Honourable.

Here was read the Effect of the Pope's Letters to the Rebels.

The Letters hereof came to the Biſhop of Roſſe; the Money was aſſigned in Flanders; the Biſhop of Roſſe ſent to the Duke of Norfolk for his Advice, and for his Help to convey the Money to them. The Biſhop thought it beſt to have the Money ſent by the Weſt-Borderers, where the Lord Harris was, and with him Leonard Davis: the Duke, for their ſpecial Diſpleaſures to Leonard Davis, was not willing that Leonard Davis ſhould have part of it; but had more mind to have his Brother of Weſtmoreland relieved, and to that end he deviſed with Banniſter for the ſending of the Money. In the mean time, behold how that courſe was interrupted: The Queen's Majeſty had a Treaty with the Queen of Scots, wherein one ſpecial Article was, That the Rebels ſhould be delivered. This the Scottiſh Queen was loth and liked not to do; ſhe asked the Duke of Norfolk's Counſel in it, he adviſed that in no wiſe they ſhould be delivered, for that were too much againſt her Honour: nevertheleſs, for that he feared that the Article concerning the delivery of the Rebels might be ſome ſtay to ſuch concluſion, as otherwiſe they might have liked of; he gave advice that the Rebels ſhould depart out of Scotland. Roſſe wrote to them to that end, and therewith ſent them the Pope's Letters, and ſo they all departed out of Scotland into Flanders, except only Leonard Davis, who remained with the Lord Harris and the Earl of Northumberland, who would alſo fain have been gone if he might; and ſo by this occaſion, and by Banniſter's means, was this ſending of the Money into Scotland diſappointed. Then was there another Device taken, to diſtribute it in Flanders; and becauſe it ſhould not all be ſuddenly waſted, it was agreed by the Biſhop of Roſſe, that it ſhould be diſtributed monthly.

This Order was opened to the Duke by Barker, the Duke liked well of it, and willed it to be done accordingly. A Man was ſent over for this purpoſe, and the Money diſtributed. The Counteſs of Northumberland wrote over to the Biſhop of Roſſe Roſſe a Letter of Thanks. Hereupon report was made to the Duke, that it was done as he had appointed. Now the Duke will ask us, What proof we have hereof? we ſay, The Confeſſions of Roſſe and Barker. Againſt this he taketh Exception; his only anſwer is his bare denial, and his defacing of their Credit. He ſaith they are Traytors, and have confeſſed Treaſon againſt themſelves, and not to be received for ſufficient Witneſſes againſt him. This hath been well anſwered already by my Lords the Juſtices, that by the Law they are ſufficient Witneſſes. You may not ſtand upon your Honour and Difference of Degree, and thereby limit how far they are to be credited. But now let us examine their Credit, and their likelineſs to tell Truth, and how meet in this Caſe they are to be believed. Firſt, For the Biſhop of Roſſe, he is a wiſe Man, he is Learned, he is a Biſhop, he is an Embaſſador, a great Friend to the Duke of Norfolk; ſo far in Credit with the Scottiſh Queen, that he hath been the principal Doer of all her Affairs; ſo the fitteſt Man for this Treaſon, the meeteſt Man to be uſed in it, ſince the Scottiſh Queen's Title is the ground of the Title. Who then but ſuch a Man was fit to be uſed? Who meeter to be heard in ſuch a matter than he? A Scot, a wiſe Man, well acquainted with the matters, well able to deal in them, ever at hand, and every way the meeteſt Man. He was a Scot, ſay you; the more to blame the Duke of Norfolk to deal ſo with him, againſt the expreſs Commandment of his Sovereign upon his Allegiance, and againſt his own Faith, Submiſſion and Promiſe, and ſo himſelf unworthier Man to be believed than the Scottiſh Witneſs. Why ſhould the Biſhop of Roſſe accuſe him falſly? What ſhould move him to it? He accuſeth you, he alſo proveth it againſt you; he is the apteſt Man to know it, the apteſt of all other to repeat it. And why will you ſay he is ſo oft produced for every matter againſt you? Surely great Cauſe, great Difference between him and all other; he knew all, he dealt in all, and where the reſt had every one but his Part to play, the Biſhop of Roſſe continually kept the Stage; he had a long Part, he anſwered all Men, when every Man brought forth their Tallies, he kept the Stocks of all; he ſpeaketh of that he underſtandeth, he ſpeaketh credibly, he carrieth Proof and Conſent of other. Speaketh he of Malice againſt the Duke? That cannot be, the Duke never offended him; the Duke was ever his greateſt Friend, and he the greateſt Friend to the Duke, and the chief Advancer of the Marriage that the Duke ſo earneſtly ſought, as moſt beneficial; he hath in his Confeſſion touched his own Miſtreſs upon whom he depended, to whom he ought no Malice; he hath diſcloſed the Treacheries of the Pope, him he hath offended, he gets no more Benefices at his hand; he hath offended the King of Spain and the Duke of Alva, he is faln out with all his Friends, he is faln from all his commodious Hopes by his Confeſſion: Beſides that, How hath he told it? Not at the firſt as of Malice, and deſirous to do the Duke a ſhrewd turn; but with leiſure, after others former Confeſſions. He held off, and diſcloſed nothing, till his Face (tho it were a Face of Braſs) could no longer withſtand apparent Truth diſcloſed by others; except he had been mad and a ſtark Fool, as he is very Wiſe, he would not have thruſt himſelf into all thoſe Hardineſſes, to tell an untruth of his own ſo great Loſs and Hindrance. Would he, being Wiſe, for Malice to the Duke of Norfolk, undo his own Miſtreſs the Scottiſh Queen; and bring upon himſelf the hatred of the Duke of Alva, the Spaniſh King, and the Pope; and ſo loſe all his Friends, and make them his Foes, and indanger himſelf, and undo himſelf, with confeſſing Treaſon againſt himſelf, for only Malice of the Duke of Norfolk? It cannot be true; I muſt needs believe him, becauſe it is Treaſon that he ſpeaketh of the Man's own Faculty: He is a credible Traitor. If he had told us a matter of Virtue, good Life, and true Religion, it had been a Vanity to hear the Biſhop of Roſſe ſpeak; but ſpeaking of Treaſon, he is the skilfulleſt Man, and meeteſt to be heard. As for Hickford and Baniſter, they be both ſtill in Credit, the Duke excepteth not againſt them, and yet they accuſe him deeply. For compariſon of their Values and Credit, the Duke is Noble, and theſe are ſaid not able to ſpend five Marks. What then? Indeed their Honour is leſs, but their Underſtanding is great, and their Credit ſufficient. Barker is miſliked, and counted by the Duke not worthy to be believed. It is miſliked that he is ſtill brought forth, he is as the baſe Inſtrument ſtill play'd on. There is good cauſe why the Duke ſo continually uſed him: You muſt underſtand that things muſt be done by Means and Inſtruments: The Heads need the Service of inferior Members; the Heads do deviſe, the Hands and the Feet do put in execution. If the Duke of Norfolk ſhould, for every Meſſage and Matter to be treated with the Biſhop of Roſſe, Rodolph, and the Spaniſh Embaſſador, or other, have himſelf trotted through dirty Smithfield, and the Streets of London, unto Thames-ſtreet, and other Places, it muſt needs have been wondred at, and would not have been without notable Suſpicion. But Barker, a ſly Fellow, ſufficient for Skill, exerciſed in the Matters, acquainted with the Practices, might well go dreaming to all Places without Suſpicion. Sometimes upon a Robbery or a ſhrewd Turn done, the length of a Foot in the Snow, or in the Mire, hath betrayed the Doer; ſo the Foot may ſometime accuſe the Head. Barker was one of the Duke's Secretaries, privy to his greateſt Affairs, the Writer of his Cyphers, the common Carrier of cyphered and decyphered Letters, the common Conveyer and Sender of his Meſſages and Letters between him and the Queen of Scots: The Duke himſelf agreeth with them in confeſſing of ſundry Circumſtances of the Matters, which he calleth his Errors and inferior Faults; with theſe Men he dealt in them himſelf, gave them Credit, therefore it is no reaſon himſelf ſhould take from them the Credit of their Confeſſions.

But he ſaith there are but two of them; the fault is in the Duke of Norfolk there are no more, for there are more if they were here, and by the Duke's means they are abſent: Liggons, Gutbert and Rodolph could tell it alſo. The one of them, Liggons, he hath ſent away, and findeth him in France. Gutbert, as the Duke himſelf hath confeſſed, the Duke hath cauſed to be carried away. Rodolph is, by the Duke himſelf, ſent out of the Realm on his Meſſage, and not return'd (it is no reaſon that their abſence excuſe him) for it is not reaſon that he ſhould take advantage of his own Wrong, that hath made them be abſent; ſo their abſence muſt ſtand for great Teſtimony againſt him, and be judged to concur with them that are preſent, and have confeſſed.

Rodolph, the greateſt Teſtimony of all is in Perſon withdrawn; but his Letters ſpeak lively. He hath teſtified by his Letters againſt the Duke, and of a matter that himſelf well knew, not conſtrained, not examined, but with the Terror and Courſe of the Proceeding of the Treaſon, advertiſing the Duke of the anſwer of his Meſſage. You ſay he dealt for you in other private Matters, not in the Treaſon: If that were ſo, then the Pope had not given him charge to deal with the Scottiſh Queen and you; the Scottiſh Queen had not commended him to you; the Inſtructions had not been ſo penned; the Anſwer had not been ſo return'd. But ſaith the Duke, It is true, Rodolph talked with me indeed, he required my Letters to the Duke of Alva, for the Scottiſh Queen; he moved me about theſe matters; but I was angry with him, I would not write by him, I departed from him in anger, and thus in anger away he went. And whither went he? Even ſtrait to the Duke of Alva, and from thence to the Pope, even to the ſame Places and Perſons to whom he ſhould have gone for the Duke, if the Duke had been without anger, beſt pleaſed and contented with his Journy. To what Intent, and of what Meſſage went he thither? Even the ſame that the Duke ſaid he was angry to be moved of, and refuſed to write in. What effect hath it? Gentle Audience, great Promiſes and Agreement to the Requeſts, as if he had travailed not for a Man angry with the matter, but moſt deſirous. What anſwer return'd he? Even the ſame that accordeth with the Inſtructions concerning the Treaſon, the very Plat and Ground of his Meſſage. He reporteth Queſtions asked by the Duke of Alva, agreeing only with the matter of the Treaſon, and no private Caſe. Would he have written anſwer to him that ſent him not? Would he have written as to pleaſe him with good News of a good Audience that ſent him not? From whence departed he in anger? He writeth of the Courſe to be kept in Execution of the Treaſon, which he would not have done to him that was angry to hear of it. He braggeth of his 10000 Walloons, old beaten Soldiers. If the Duke of Norfolk had been a true Man, and angry with the matter, as he now ſaith, and done his Duty; tho they had come, his Walloons, his old beaten Soldiers, might have been ſo new beaten of the old Engliſh Faſhion, as they were never ſo ſwinged in their Lives.

This Point Mr. Attorney ſpake with ſuch a Grace, ſuch Chearfulneſs of Heart and Voice, as if he had been ready to be one at the doing of it; like a hearty true Engliſhman, a good Chriſtian, a good Subject, a Man enough for his Religion, Prince and Country.

If the Duke ſays it was the Scottiſh Queen's Meſſage only, and not his (for advancement of her wrongful Claim by force) he knowing this, Why ſought he to marry her againſt the Queen's Majeſty's will, and to purſue it by force? If he ſay it was Barker's ſingle Device, to ſend theſe Meſſages, to procure theſe Treaſons, and work all theſe Miſchiefs of his own head; to what end I pray you ſhould Barker do it, but to advance the Marriage of the Duke his Maſter, and the Scottiſh Queen? And was this without the Duke's privity? Could Barker compel the Duke to take a Wife at his pleaſure? Examine now all theſe Witneſſes, and weigh their Credits together; conſider them ſeverally, their Credits are great; join them all together, they be much greater; but ſeverally examin'd, and all according in one, they be greateſt of all, and not poſſible to be falſe. Add to that the Duke's own Confeſſions of Circumſtances concerning himſelf, and their uttering of matters of Treaſon againſt themſelves; conſider the difference of dangers in telling truly or falſly: for if they utter'd it, and it were true, then ſtood they but in danger of their bodily Life; if they ſhould falſly accuſe, yet that Accuſation ſuffering againſt themſelves for Treaſons, they loſt both Body and Soul, in falſly accuſing others. The Duke was their Maſter, they his Servants, and his true Servants, and ſuch as were to gain by his Proſperity; would they untruly accuſe him, the ſtay of their Preferment? For tho they be Traitors, and howſoever they be otherwiſe without Credit, yet againſt the Duke of Norfolk they are well to be believ'd.

Now on the other ſide, conſider the Duke's own Credit, which he hath by his own doings impaired, and made inferior to theſe of lower degree: You have heard of this Oath eſpecially taken for the Commiſſion at York, to deal truly and ſincerely; he kept it not, he ſo dealt as if an Oath were of no great weight with him. His Oath of a Counſellor he hath broken, both in diſcloſing of Secrets, and in giving advice to a foreign Prince, and a Competitor of the Queen's Crown, againſt the Queen's Majeſty his Sovereign Lady. Now may it not be that theſe Men of mean degree and value, againſt whom it is not alledg'd that they have been at any time perjured, may be produced and credited againſt him that hath ſo little eſteem'd his Oath? I have heard alſo, that there was an Oath wilfully taken upon a Bible, in denying of things laid to his charge, and yet the matter found true, and by himſelf within a ſhort ſpace confeſſed: ſo that his Oath, his Hand, and his Word, bear no ſway with him.

He ſubmitted himſelf, he ſubſcribed his Submiſſion, and ſeal'd it; he added ſolemn Promiſes upon his Faith and Allegiance, not to proceed in the Marriage between the Scottiſh Queen and himſelf: but he kept not touch, he broke Promiſe alſo, and yet he ſaith his Hand, Mouth and Heart go together. If they go together in the right way, it is well; but when they go together in Untruth, it is evil and dangerous: therefore it is not for my Lord of Norfolk to ſtand ſo much upon the diſcrediting of the Witneſſes, and advancing of his own Credit, which himſelf hath ſo much decayed. Now I will go to the Proof.

Duke. I ſhall hardly come, after ſo ſmooth a Tale as Mr. Attorney of the Wards can tell; yet one good Proof I have to my Comfort, that they be as pleaſe your Lordſhips to weigh them. If you would not have dealt thus untruly with me, I would not have taken exception againſt them, tho I chiefly challenge none but Barker, in whom you may ſee what Fear may do; beſides that they have confeſſed themſelves Traitors, and ſo Men of no Conſcience or Credit. It is well known that Barker's Stomach is nothing; he hath been known well enough, Fear hath done much in him. The Biſhop of Roſſe is alſo a fearful Man. As touching Barker and the Biſhop of Roſſe, Bracton hath a ſaying, That Witneſſes muſt be Freemen and not Traitors, neither outlawed nor attainted.

Catlyn. None of them be outlaw'd, attainted, or indicted.

Duke. I mean not that they were indicted, but they be in as ill Caſe; for they have confeſſed themſelves Traitors. He ſaith alſo, they muſt be Legales, lawful Men, and ſo cannot Strangers be, as the Biſhop of Roſſe and Rodolph; it is theſe Strangers that charge me only, the other having dealt ſo diſloyally, and confeſſed it againſt themſelves, are not to be believ'd. As for Barker, I have not us'd him for my Secretary these thirteen years: he entred with the Bishop of Rosse, and dealt with him in these Matters against my knowledge.

are

Catlin. Bracton indeed is an old Writer of our Law, and by Bracton he may be a Witness; a Stranger, a Bondman may be a Witness: Ask you all the Judges here. And the Judges affirm'd that he may.

Duke. If a Stranger be to give Evidence whereby Lands should be recovered, you shall not recover upon that Evidence given by a Stranger.

Wilbraham. This were a strange Device, that Scots might not be Witnesses; for so, if a Man would commit Treason, and make none privy but Scots, the Treason were unpunishable; and so were a kind of Men found out, with whom a Man might freely conspire Treason.

Duke. You say my Indictment is only upon the Statute of 25 Edward III. that Statute standeth upon three points, compassing the Death of the Prince's Person, levying of War against the Prince, and aiding of the Prince's Enemies; and all these must be prov'd Overt-fact. If by any way, by any Overt-fact, you can prove that I have directly touch'd the Prince's Person, or done any of the said things that the Statute extendeth to, I will yield my self guilty. If any thing be doubtful, the Statute referreth it to the judgment of the Parliament.

Catlin. Usage is the best Expounder of the Law, that is, the common use how the Statute hath been taken and expounded; and the same Statute is but the declaration of the common Law.

Duke. The Preamble of the Statute is to bring the Laws of Treason to a certainty, that Men may certainly know what is Treason.

Attorney-Gen. You complained of your close keeping, that you had no Books to provide for your Answer; it seemeth you have had Books and Counsel, you alledge Books, Statutes, and Bracton; I am sure the study of such Books is not your Profession.

Duke. I have been in Trouble these two Years, think you that in all this time I have not had cause to look for my self?

Attorney-Gen. But if you stand still upon proof, whether you have done any thing to the Destruction of the Prince's Person, if the Lords, upon the Evidence already produc'd, do think the Matters true in Fact that are already alledg'd against you, surely the same must needs be construed a compassing of the Queen's Death; for the Law of Treason hath even been largely construed for the Prince's Safety. Think you that practising to levy War within the Realm is not Treason? Yes indeed is it; and a compassing of the Prince's Death. Sir William Stanley's Case was this: He did but send Clifford over Sea, to hearken and send him word what Perkin Warbeck was; that if he thought Perkin was such a Man as he was said to be, he would take his part. This was Stanley's Case, and this was judged Treason, and a compassing of the King's Death.

Here was read Barker's Confession the 6th of November.

Duke. I never dealt with that Money, nor heard of it; I dealt not at that time with Barker, nor heard any thing of the Rebels, since they went into Flanders.

Then was read the Bishop of Rosse's Confession of the same Matter, 6 November, ad 5.

And again Rosse, 6 November, Fo.

Also Rosse 29, of 1700 Crowns sent by Moreton's means, and what Moreton was.

Wilbraham. You hear how the Money was procured; how it was distributed by the Duke's Order, and Thanks written by the Countess of Northumberland for the receipt of it, which was also declared to the Duke. You shall hear, that after the Practice of the Marriage, it was a general Rule between the Scottish Queen and the Duke, That the Bishop of Rosse should never propone to the Queen's Majesty's Council, nor deal in any great Matter, but by the advice and directions of the Duke of Norfolk.

Here was read, for the proof thereof, the Bishop of Rosse.

Wilbraham. This is a plain Course.

Duke. What doth this make against me?

Wilbraham. That he follow'd his Commission, that he kept his manner of Conference continually, and that according to that use, the Money was distributed by your Directions.

Duke. He dealt not with me in a great time, and I can tell when he broke off and dealt no more with me; I was never privy to the distribution of the Money, nor I never spake with Barker about it; I was in the Tower at that time.

Wilbraham. That was when you were not in the Tower; they lurked in Flanders a while in great necessity, without Apparel, and suddenly, with this Money, they were waxed gay; and these Men have confessed that it is distributed by your Order and Direction.

Duke. None accuse me but three, one absent, a Stranger, and a Traitor.

Wilbraham. And if every one that is privy to Treason must be refus'd for Witnesses, then should no Treason be proved; for none can tell it but they that be privy, and all such are guilty.

Now to the second point, That you adhered to, and aided the Scottish Lords, the Queen's Majesty's Enemies, and Maintainers of her Rebels. The Rebels, after their flying into Scotland, were there received by the Duke of Chastelleroy, the Lord Harris, the Lord Hume, the Lord of Buccleugh and others; and being there, they entred again of new into the Realm, and made new Roads, and burned and wasted England with Fire and Sword. These Scots that thus assisted the Rebels, the Nobles of Scotland that remain'd in Amity with the Queen's Majesty, went about to suppress. The Queen's Majesty proclaim'd open War against them; she appointed my Lord of Sussex her Lieutenant, with a strong Army to invade them, and to pursue both the Rebels and the said Scots that were her Enemies. This my Lord of Sussex pursu'd, made open War upon them, burned their Towns, Houses, Corn and Goods, blew up their Castles with Powder, and kept good Peace with the rest: So were they publish'd the Queen's Enemies, both by Proclamation, which is here ready to be shewed, and by open War it self, the best Proclamation of all. The Queen's Power there tarried a great while, some came home, some remain'd still in Hume-Castle, and other Places. These thus known the Queen's Enemies, and so publish'd, the Scots that were the Queen's Friends did still pursue so far, that the said Scottish Queen hearing thereof, complain'd to the Duke of Norfolk, viz. How she had no Aid from France, and if none came at all, her Friends in Scotland must of force be conſtrained to yield: She prayed the Duke of Norfolk's Advice. The Duke made anſwer, and Hickford wrote it to the Scottiſh Queen; That ſhe ſhould procure the French Embaſſador's Letters to them in Scotland, to put them in ſome good hope, that they might hold out a while till Aid come. The Scottiſh Queen accordingly wrote to the French Embaſſador Monſieur de la Mot; he by and by wrote ſix Letters to the Lord Harris, and other Lords of Scotland, with fair and comfortable Promiſes. The Pacquet of theſe Letters were ſent to the Duke, he had it, he cauſed it to be ſent with a Letter to Banniſter, to convey it to London, upon the Weſt Borders of Scotland, and that Lowther ſhould convey it over to the Lord Harris. Hickford, the Duke's Secretary, delivered this French Pacquet, and the other Letter, to Henry the Duke's Footman, who carry'd it to Banniſter, and Banniſter ſent it to Lowther, by Colborn his Servant: and to diſſemble the Cauſe of his Servant's going, and to know ſome certainty, whether it came to Lowther's hand or no; Hill feigned a privy Token between him and Lowther, about the gathering of the Rent of the Lord Dacre's Lands. Lowther ſent over the Pacquet, and returned anſwer to Banniſter, That he had ſent it to the Lord Harris, and willed Colborn to tell him which was their privy Token, that tho it were troubleſome, yet he would gather up the Rents for him.

Here was read Barker's Confeſſion, 14 September, That in July laſt he receiv'd the Pacquet, &c.

All Hickford's Confeſſion the ſame day, with a great Proteſtation why he confeſſed not at the firſt, but tarried till Barker had diſcloſed; becauſe he would not be counted a Betrayer of his Maſter.

Wilbraham. You hear how Barker bewrayeth it; you hear alſo how Hickford himſelf confeſſeth it: And in what manner, I pray you, do they diſcloſe it? They make no haſte to accuſe the Duke, but all by leiſure; and Hickford maketh it a matter of great Conſcience, to utter it againſt his Maſter: And here is a Leſſon meet to be learned of all Servants. Many ſuppoſed it a Treaſon and foul Offence to utter their Maſter's Treaſons; they muſt otherwiſe think it is a dangerous Opinion.

Duke. I challenge not this Man.

Then was read Hickford's Examination, 11 October.

Alſo Bamiſter, 17. September 1.

The ſame Banniſter, 29. November pa.

Alſo Banniſter, 28. and 29. Septemb. ante 5. and 6.

Wilbraham. Thus it appeareth, that thoſe the Scottiſh Queen's Friends in Scotland, for whom ſhe ſorrowed and feared their yielding, were the Queen's Majeſty's Enemies; and how to thoſe the Duke adhered, thoſe he comforted, for thoſe he procured the comfortable Letters to be ſent, as you have heared.

Duke. I confeſs it, that I cauſed the Letters to be ſent, but that I procured the Letters to be written, I remember not; but therein I truſt Banniſter's Memory.

Wilbraham. Now for ſending Money to relieve the Queen's Majeſty's Enemies, and touching the 6000 l. the French Embaſſador had 14 hundred Crowns ready to relieve them, which he ſent to the Scottiſh Queen, to know how it ſhould be beſtowed. She would have had the Duke to make it up three thouſand Crowns; ſhe ſent one thouſand more her ſelf, and referred the Direction of all to the Duke himſelf. The Duke having the chief Charge of all, willed two thouſand Crowns to be conveyed to the Queen's Majeſty's Enemies in Scotland. The Biſhop of Roſſe had deviſed, that it ſhould be ſent ſewed in Panton's Doublet. The Duke was made privy to it on the Sunday after Bartholomew-Day, becauſe Panton was a Scot, and like to be ſearched: this Device was miſliked, ſo was the Money delivered to Brown of Shrewsbury; and ſo he rehearſed the manner of the delivery to Brown, and the Letters in Cypher, as it was afore rehearſed by Mr. Attorney-General.

Duke. I received the Money at Thambour's hands; I was not by at the writing of the Letter in Cypher.

Wilbraham. I ſaid not ſo.

Then was read the Letter to Banniſter: You ſhall receive in a Bag by this Bearer, &c.

Duke. I do not deny the conveying of the Money; but it never came to the Queen's Enemies hands.

Wilbraham. It was out of your Poſſeſſion; Panton was ſent before to receive the Money.

Duke. Not of my knowledge. And as for Grange and Ledington, I have not heard they were the Queen's Enemies.

Wilbraham. That is no matter; for the Indictment is generally of the Queen's Enemies, and you know the Money went to the Lord Harris.

Duke. Lord Harris was not appointed to have any part of it.

Wilbraham. That is no matter, it was a comfort to him, being the Queen's Enemy, to be the Factor, and to have the Countenance and Diſtribution of it at his pleaſure: Beſide that, you may be ſure he would not let all paſs without ſome ſhare to himſelf.

Duke. May a Subject be the Queen's Majeſty's Enemy, and the Prince being her Friend, and in Amity with her?

Catlin. In ſome caſes it may be ſo: As in France, if the Dukedom of Britany ſhould rebel againſt the French King, and ſhould (during the Amity between the French and Queen's Majeſty) invade England, thoſe Britons were the French King's Subjects, and the Queen's Enemies, though the French King remaineth in Amity; and ſo in your Caſe.

Duke. Where was the Proclamation made?

Wilbraham. The Proclamation was made in England, and here it is to be ſhewed; but the War it ſelf is ſufficient Proclamation. The Queen's Army was ſent againſt him, and the Queen is not otherwiſe bound to proclaim.

Duke. I truſt my Lords the Peers will have Conſideration of me, who they be that accuſe me, the Biſhop of Roſſe and Strangers; and the reſt over-reach'd in Treaſon themſelves.

The Lord Steward ask'd if they had ought elſe to ſay.

The Duke ſaid, I truſt to God and my Truth.

Then the Priſoner was withdrawn.

Then the Serjeant made an O Yes, ſaying, My Lord Grace, the Queen's Commiſſioner, High-Steward of England, chargeth all Men to keep ſilence upon peril of Impriſonment.

Then the Lord Steward ſpake to the Lords, and willed them to go together as followeth.

Note, That the Money was taken up by the way.

Then

Then the Lords withdrew themſelves into a Place prepar'd in the Chancery-Court for Conſultation, and the Priſoner was withdrawn.

The Lords continu'd in Conſultation ſtill an hour and a quarter; the Lord Steward ſtill remain'd in his Seat.

After an hour and a quarter, which was immediately after eight of the Clock at night, the Lords came again upon the Scaffold, and took their Places as they were afore; and then the Lord Steward demanded of every of them ſeverally, ſitting in their Places, beginning at the youngeſt Baron, in this manner:

My Lord De la Ware, What ſay you, Is the Priſoner guilty of theſe Treaſons or not? And they all ſeverally anſwer'd in Order and Form following:

L. La Ware,	Burleigh,	Guilty.
Buckhurſt,	Howard,
St. John of Bletſhoe,	Hereford,
North,	Leiceſter,
Kich,	Hertford,
St. John,	Pembroke,
Mordant,	Bedford,
Burghe,	Warwick,
Wentworth,	Huntington,
Sandes,	Suſſex,
Mountjoy,	Worceſter,
Grey of Wilton,	Kent.

Then the Lieutenant was, by the Serjeant, commanded to bring again the Priſoner to the Bar, which he did.

Then the Lord Steward ſaid thus: Thomas Duke of Norfolk, thou haſt been heretofore indicted of High Treaſon, and haſt been arraign'd upon the ſame, and haſt pleaded Not Guilty, and haſt put thy ſelf upon thy Peers; the Lords, thy Peers, have found thee Guilty: what haſt thou to ſay, why I may not proceed to Judgment? The Duke anſwer'd, The Lord's Will be done, God be Judge between me and my falſe Accuſers. Then the Axe turn'd the Edge towards him.

Then ſtood up Mr. Serjeant Barrham, and ſaid, It appeareth that Thomas Duke of Norfolk hath heretofore been indicted of High Treaſon, and now hath been arraign'd upon the ſame, and hath pleaded Not Guilty, and hath put himſelf upon his Peers; now the Lords, his Peers, upon Conſideration of the Evidence ſhew'd forth to prove the Indictment, have found him guilty. I am moſt humbly to pray of your Grace Judgment againſt him for the Queen's Majeſty, according to the Verdict.

Then ſaid the Lord Steward; Thomas Duke of Norfolk, whereas thou haſt heretofore been indicted of High Treaſon, and haſt been arraign'd upon the ſame, and haſt pleaded Not Guilty, and haſt put thy ſelf upon thy Peers, and the Lords thy Peers have found thee Guilty: Wherefore thou ſhalt be had from hence to the Tower of London, from thence thou ſhalt be drawn thro the midſt of the Streets of London to Tyburn, the Place of Execution; there thou ſhalt be hang'd, and being alive thou ſhalt be cut down quick, thy Bowels ſhall be taken forth of thy Body, and burnt before thy Face, thy Head ſhall be ſmitten off, thy Body ſhall be divided into four Parts or Quarters; thy Head and thy Quarters to be ſet up where it ſhall pleaſe the Queen's Majeſty to appoint; and the Lord have mercy upon thee.

Then the Duke ſaid, This is the Judgment of a Traitor, and I ſhall die as true a Man to the Queen as any liveth: knocking himſelf hard upon the Breaſt, he ſaid, I will not deſire any of you all to make any petition for my Life; I will not deſire to live, I am at a point. And, my Lords, ſeeing you have put me out of your Company, I truſt ſhortly to be in better Company: Only I beſeech you, my Lords, to be humble Suitors to the Queen's Majeſty for my poor Orphan Children, that it will pleaſe her Majeſty to be good to my poor Orphan Children, and to take Order for the Payment of my Debts, and ſome Conſideration of my poor Servants; for I am at a point. God doth know how true a Heart I bear to her Majeſty, and how true a Heart to my Country, whatſoever this Day hath been falſly objected againſt me. Farewel, my Lords.

Then the Lieutenant was commanded to avoid his Priſoner; which thing was done.

Then the Serjeant made an O Yes, and proclaim'd thus: My Lord's Grace, the Queen's Commiſſioner, High Steward of England, chargeth all Perſons to depart in God's Peace and the Queen's, and hath diſſolv'd his Commiſſion.

And therewith the Lord Steward ſtanding up afore his Chair, broke his Rod in the midſt, and the People cry'd,

God ſave the Queen. Amen.

The Tryal of Mr. Robert Hickford, Saturni, 9 Februarii, 1571.

AFTER the reading of the Indictment, being ask'd by the Clerk of the Crown, If he were Guilty or Not Guilty? He anſwer'd to this effect; being admoniſh'd to ſpeak higher, whereunto he excus'd himſelf by the Lowneſs of his Voice.

Hickford. I am here indicted of divers Points of High Treaſon, part whereof I deny, for that I was never privy to the ſame: My Fact, ſuch as it is, I am ready to confeſs, and declare as I have already confeſs'd it. I am not learned in the Law, I know not in what Form to anſwer unto it. This only I require to be heard to declare the Truth, ſo far as the Matter toucheth me: I here proteſt before your Honours, and in the Preſence of God, that I bring a Conſcience untouch'd with any intent of hurt, ever conceiv'd by me againſt the Queen's Majeſty's Perſon, or my Country; I never meant any ſuch thing in my Heart: I know the Law hath not Intent to the Conſcience, or Intent of Men; but is to judge only of the Mind, according to the appearing of outward Facts, ſo the Law cannot accept my Intent for my Purgation. Therefore I ſhall declare the Truth of my Doing, and upon that further open unto you at large my Dealing in the Matters contain'd in the Indictment. Firſt, For the Matter of moving of Sedition, I did never know that any ſuch thing was meant by my Lord, or any other; and whatſoever was by him, or any other intended, I was not privy unto it. I do confeſs indeed, that the Articles mention'd in the Indictment were ſent to my Lord, my late Maſter, which by his Commandment I decypher'd, for they were brought in Cypher. Then my Lord read them, and folded them up, and put them in the Pocket of his Hoſe, and ſaid, The Biſhop of Roſſe will never be quiet, and then he went to Supper; and from that time I never ſaw that Writing till it was ſhew'd me in the Tower. What Anſwer my Lord made to them, or whether he anſwer'd them or no, I know not.

Catlin. Hickford, you ſeem a Man of Knowledge and Learning, you have been indicted, and are now arraign'd according to Order of Law; you muſt follow Order, you muſt anſwer to the Indictment, confeſs or deny it, you ſhall be heard after to ſay your Mind. You muſt plead unto it Guilty or not Guilty.

Hickford. I do confeſs the Law hath not reſpect to Man's Intent, but judgeth according to his Fact. I confeſs I ſaw theſe Articles and decypher'd them, I ſhew'd them to my Lord; I revok'd them not, as in Duty I ought to have done, and therefore I think my ſelf Guilty.

Catlin. The Indictment containeth divers Clauſes of Treaſon, therefore anſwer, if you be guilty, to any ſpecial Matters contain'd in the Indictment, or that you will confeſs your ſelf Guilty of the whole.

Hickford. I may not confeſs of my ſelf that whereof my Conſcience doth not accuſe me, ſome Parts I am not privy to; the firſt Point, concerning ſtirring of Sedition, I do not know that ever any ſuch thing was meant by my Lord. What Intention he had, God and his own Conſcience knoweth it. As touching the Matter of Rodolph's going over to the King of Spain, to the Pope, and the Duke of Alva, and the Inſtructions of that Voyage contain'd in the thing, that by my Lord's Commandment I decypher'd: I anſwer, as I have before ſaid, that I never knew of any Proceeding, nor dealt therein afterward; and my Lord, when he read it decypher'd, he anſwer'd as I ſaid before, The Biſhop of Roſſe will never be in quiet. I thought he had burnt that Paper, as a thing that he lik'd not; but what he did with it, or in the Matter afterward, I cannot tell.

Catlin. You muſt anſwer more roundly and directly to the Matter; for theſe Circumſtances and Points, you ſhall be heard afterward. In the mean time anſwer plainly, if you be Guilty or not Guilty.

Southcote. Mr. Southcote ſpake to the ſame effect, and told him, That if he pleaded Not Guilty, theſe his Declarations ſhould be heard at large upon the Evidence.

Hickford. To part of the Indictment I confeſs my ſelf Guilty, which concerneth the decyphering of the Letters by my Lord's Procurement and Commandment; after which time I never dealt in it.

Southcote. You were beſt to plead Not Guilty to the whole Indictment; and for ſuch Matters and Parts of the Indictment as you can clear your ſelf, the Jury may find you Not Guilty, and find you Guilty for the reſt.

The Lord Chief Juſtice and Mr. Attorney adviſ'd to the ſame effect.

Hickford. I am Guilty. I know under how merciful a Queen I live; I ſubmit my ſelf wholly to her Majeſty's Mercy. I will not ſtand long upon that, whereof mine own Conſcience condemneth me.

Catlin. Confeſs you Guilty to the whole Indictment?

Hickford. Yea.

Attorney. Are you Guilty of adhering to, and comforting the Queen's Enemies, and the conveying of the French Packet and Mony that was ſent to relieve them?

Hickford. I confeſs my ſelf Guilty;

Serj. Then, after ſome pauſe, Mr. Serjeant Barham ſpake to this effect: Foraſmuch as Robert Hickford hath been indicted of High Treaſon, and, among other things, that he hath adher'd to and comforted the Queen's Enemies, and the ſame Indictment hath been read unto him, and he hath confeſs'd the Treaſons; I am to pray your Lordſhips, on the Queen's Majeſty's behalf, that his Confeſſion may be entred, and Judgment given for the Queen againſt him, according to the Law.

Hickford. May I now declare to what Points I am not Guilty?

Attorney. There are two Points in the Indictment that concern your ſelf; the Dealing in the Matter about Rodolph's Voyage, and the Inſtruction for the ſame; and the adhering to and comforting of the Queen's Enemies: Are you not Guilty of theſe?

Hickford. I am Guilty.

Catlin. If you will yet wave and forſake your Confeſſion, we are content to admit you to do ſo, and you may yet plead Not Guilty, and you ſhall have your Trial.

Hickford. No, I will ſubmit me wholly to her Majeſty's Mercy: I know under how merciful a Prince I live, tho my Deſerts be far unworthy, by my Maſter's Means and Procurement. I know I bring, as I ſaid, a Conſcience untouch'd with any Intent or Meaning of Hurt to her Majeſty's Perſon, or to my Country. And this I ſay before God, and in the Preſence and Witneſs of you all; howbeit the Law accepteth not, nor judgeth by ſecret Intents, for ſo might every Man clear himſelf.

Catlin. Hickford, thou haſt heard the Indictment read, where by the Oaths of a Jury thou art found and preſented guilty of divers High Treaſons: Thou haſt been arraign'd thereof, and confeſs'd thy ſelf guilty, and ſubmitted thy ſelf to her Majeſty's Mercy. The Queen's Majeſty's Serjeant hath, on her behalf, requir'd Confeſſion to be entred, and Judgment to be given againſt thee, according to the Order of the Laws; ſo nothing reſteth now but Judgment to be given againſt thee, and that thou hear thy Judgment. A few words for good Admonition ſhall ſerve; thou art a Gentleman, wiſe, and well-learned, I would to God there had been in thee as much Loyalty and Truth, as there is Learning, and other good Qualities and Gifts of God, then hadſt thou not fallen into this great Fault and Miſery. But there have been evil Inticers, evil Schoolmaſters, evil Seedſmen, as one call'd them here laſt day; they have brought thee from Truth and good Eſtate, to Untruth, Treaſon, and Wretchedneſs; where before thou and others were of good

Name and Fame, they have brought you to Infamy; of loyal, good, and true Subjects, they brought you to the Name and State of diſloyal Traitors: A great Blot to be a Traitor, and the greateſt Infamy that can be. It is the chiefeſt Point of the Duty of every natural and reaſonable Man, which by the Gift of Reaſon differeth from a Beaſt, to know his Prince and Head, to be true to his Head and Prince. All the Members are bound to obey the Head; every Man is bound to repair Life, to lay out and expend Goods, Lands, and Poſſeſſions, to forſake Father, Mother, Kindred, Wife, and Children, in reſpect of preſerving the Prince; for in defending the Prince, they preſerve Father, Mother, Kindred, Wife, Children, and all. It was well and wiſely ſpoken here the laſt day, by one that ſtood at the Bar, that was learned and as wiſe as you are, upon his confeſſing of himſelf guilty of Treaſon againſt his Prince; I would he had had as much Truth and Loyalty, as he had of Learning and Underſtanding: in few words, he comprehended a great heap of Matter concerning the Duty of the Subject to the Prince. All the Duties, ſaid he, to Father, Mother, Friends, Kindred, Children, yea to a Man's Wife that is his own Fleſh, are all inferior to the Duty that a Subject oweth to his Prince; for this Duty comprehendeth them all. In reſpect of Duty to the Prince, and preſerving the Prince, neither Wife, Parent, nor other are to be regarded, they muſt all ſtand behind. If in any Caſe, any reſpect ſhall allure a Man from Loyalty and Truth to his Prince, they muſt be forſaken, they muſt come behind; it muſt be ſaid, Vade poſt me Satana. We muſt firſt look unto God the high Prince of all Princes, and then to the Queen's Majeſty the ſecond Prince, and God's Deputy, and our Sovereign Prince on Earth; in theſe few words he comprehended much Matter, he ſatisfy'd the Hearers for their Duty to the Queen's Majeſty. You are wiſe and learned as he was, and for knowledge of Duty and Underſtanding as much bound to God as he; but the evil Seedſmen, the evil Inticers and Seducers have wrought evil Effect in you both: the great good Seedſman hath ſow'd in you good Gifts, Learning, Knowledge, and good Quality, to ſerve him, your Prince, and your Country withal, as it is ſaid in the Goſpel, Bonus Seminator ſeminavit ſemen bonum; but ſupervenit Inimicus & ſeminavit Zizania: The good Seedſman ſow'd good Seed; but there came the Enemy, the evil Seedſman, and he ſow'd Darnel, Cockle, and noiſome Weeds. Such wicked Seedſmen have been in England; if they had ſown the right Seed for their own uſe, the Seed of Hemp, and felt of it, they had receiv'd according to their Deſerving. God hath ſown in you good Gifts and Qualities, meet to have ſerv'd any Prince in Chriſtendom; but ſupervenit Inimicus, the Devil and his Miniſters, wicked Seedſmen, ſow'd in you Darnel and Cockle, Treaſon and Diſloyalty; they have made you forget your Duty to your natural Prince and Country. If theſe had been handled as they have deſerv'd, they ſhould long ago have had of their own due Seed, Hemp beſtow'd upon them, meet Seed for ſuch Seedſmen; ſuch miſchievous Seedſmen they be, that corrupt Men, otherwiſe well indu'd, that ſow Treaſon ſo abundantly in this Realm. O ſtrange matter! that ſuch Treaſons ſhould be, and ſo ripe in this Realm; a common Slander to this Realm of England, the Treaſons of England are every where talk'd of among ſtrange Nations: For proof of it they refer us to our Hiſtories of H. 2. E. 2. Ric. 2. E. 5. and ſo prove the oft Practices in this Realm to murder and depoſe our Princes, to the great Infamy and Slander of our Country. The very regard of our Country's Fame, that this great Slander of Treaſon ſhould not by your Fault have been renew'd and increas'd againſt us, if nothing elſe would, it ſhould have ſtaid you from ſo foul dealing in Treaſon. But is this ſowing of Treaſon lawful for any? May Embaſſadors be ſuch Seedſmen? Be theſe the Parts of Embaſſadors? They have their Articles in Law, by which they are bound, let them do as Law will let them. If they will tranſgreſs theſe, and fall to Treaſon, and procure the Danger of Princes, let them feel as Law will. I can ſhew you a Precedent and Hiſtory for it within memory, about twenty ſeven or twenty eight Years ago, about the 25th year of King Henry VIII. it was done by the Duke of Millan. The French King, that then was Francis, Grandfather to the French King that now is, ſent one Monſieur de Merveilles to the Duke of Millan as his Embaſſador: This Monſieur de Merveilles, the French King's Embaſſador, conſpir'd Treaſon againſt the State and the Duke of Millan; the Duke underſtood it, he caus'd him to be arraign'd after the Order of their Law, and being found guilty, he beheaded him: and this Jure Gentium was lawfully done. May Meſſengers conſpire Treaſon againſt Princes to whom they be ſent? Treaſon to Princes is not their Meſſage, it is no lawful Cauſe of their ſending; if of their own Heads they preſume it, they muſt by Law be touch'd and taught to keep them within their Duties. As for them that ſeek Fame by Treaſon, and by procuring the Deſtruction of Princes, where ſhall found that Fame? Shall the golden Trump of Fame and good Report, that Chaucer ſpeaketh of? No; but the black Trump of Shame ſhall blow out their Infamy for ever. Again, theſe that follow ſuch heinous Treaſons, that bring forth the Fruit of ſuch Seeds as ſuch wicked Seedſmen have ſown, are in foul fault, and juſtly to be condemn'd, and worthy extremely to feel it. For that you are in Miſery, Men may have Pity and Compaſſion of your Miſery, and ſo forbear to grieve you with due Rehearſal; elſe Men might aggravate your Offence, with ſetting out the Particulars of it at length, and as they ſhould have fallen out, if you had ſtood in Tryal: But you have confeſs'd it, and yielded your ſelf guilty, and ſubmitted your ſelf to the Queen's Majeſty's Mercy. Therefore I will leave to aggravate your Faults, and will proceed, as the Order of Law requireth, to Judgment. I pray God to give you Grace to make a good end. I need not give you long Exhortation, I am no Doctor of Divinity; you are learned your ſelf, your Knowledge is great, I would your Loyalty and Truth had been as great. But becauſe we are to do with Law, we muſt follow the Order of Law; one muſt ſpeak for all, and ſo I, for all the reſt, ſhall proceed to Judgment.

Then my Lord Chief Juſtice granted the Judgment uſual in Treaſon, concluding it in theſe words; God be merciful unto you, and give you Grace to make a good End.

Then Hickford anſwer'd to this effect: I humbly thank your Lordſhip for your good Admonition; I know and confeſs, that I ought unto the Queen's Majeſty a much greater and higher Duty than than to my Master. And as it is said of your Lordships to have been wisely spoken, so was it truly said, that the Duty of all Subjects to the Prince, is a much greater Duty than a Man oweth to his Master, or to any other; yea, or to those that bear him into the World. I confess I have neglected that Duty to my Prince, howbeit I did it by my Lord, my late Master's Procurement and Commandment, and for good Intent, as my Master bare me in hand and persuaded me, whereof I pray your Lordships I may declare the Truth. When first my Lord made choice of me to wait on him in the Tower, as I would to God he had rather made choice of any other, within short time he receiv'd a Letter from the Scottish Queen in Cypher. He made me privy to it, and will'd me to acquaint my self with that Cypher, for the decyphering of the like hereafter. At that first time I said little unto it: Within three Weeks after there came another Letter to him from the Scottish Queen, and then I began to mislike the Matter. Then my Lord walking on the Leads, (having so much liberty granted him) Sir Henry Nevil and Mr. Lieutenant being present upon the Leads, and departing a little aside, my Lord call'd me to him, and after other Matters, entred into Talk of the Scottish Queen. I said unto him, I would ask a Question of you, if I might without offending you. He ask'd me what? I said I would shew him, so that he would not be offended, for otherwise I durst not. After he had assur'd me he would not be offended, I said unto him, My Lord, I marvel much at your Doings; you are here, as you know, committed upon high Displeasure of the Queen's Majesty, for dealing with the Scottish Queen without the Queen's Majesty's Consent. Now in proceeding further by Letters between you, the Contrivance of this Dealing must much aggravate her Highness's Displeasure against you. He answer'd me, Tush Fool, thou art a Fool, thou understandest not the Matter. I answer'd, I presum'd to say this unto you, upon your Assurance that you would not be offended, and that maketh me ask, why you continue this Dealing with the Scottish Queen? He answer'd me again, thou art a Fool, thou seest not my Case; I hold a Wolf by the Ears, I can neither let go without danger, nor hold without peril. Unhappy Man I was when I was first committed; for if I could then have come to the Speech of the Prince, I would have laid it all at her Feet, and I trust I should have found Grace to have obtain'd Favour: But now, on the one side, I am entred into my Prince's high Displeasure; on the other side*, if I should pull the Scottish Queen, and all her Friends upon me, and make them mine Enemies, then were I in worse Case than ever I was. If I could once recover my Prince's Favour, then would I soon shake off all Dealing with the Scottish Queen. In the mean time, till her Majesty's Favour may be recover'd, I am driven to this Hardness that you see. I answer'd him again, You are your self much wiser than I am; but, in my poor Opinion, the sooner you rid your self of this Dealing the better. Then because I was persuaded that he trusted to recover the Queen's Majesty's Favour, I was in the mean time contented to decypher the Letters from time to time, as they pass'd between them. Shortly after he had so much Favour and Liberty, that his Men had recourse unto him freely into the Tower; whereupon we conceiv'd hope of his short Delivery, but it fell contrary, and so continu'd till Midsummer. Then was he advis'd to make submission to the Queen's Majesty, and promis'd, that if he would submit himself, and renounce all Dealing with the Scottish Queen, there was hope that the Queen's Majesty would receive him to Grace. Whereupon he wrote a Submission, he sent it, it was deliver'd, and, as we heard, it was very well lik'd of. Within a fortnight after, he had the liberty of the Tower, and comfortable Letters came. I look'd, and had hope that he should have been deliver'd presently; it came not so to pass, the cause God knoweth.

* Behold an evident Entry into a Resolution to leave the Queen, and seek to the Scot and her Friends.

Catlin. Here the Lord Chief Justice offer'd to interrupt and end this course of Speech as impertinent, when he yet proceeded further, and said:

Hickford. I beseech you, my Lord, let me use a few words, to declare the Course of my Doing. My Lord was not then deliver'd: Shortly after it happen'd, that by occasion of a Sickness, and being sick of the Plague in the Tower, my Lord was remov'd to his own House at the Charter-house; then we had great hope that we should shortly be receiv'd into her Majesty's Favour, and come to the Court again, and so continu'd till the Cypher came from the Bishop of Rosse, before which time and since I was never privy to that Matter. The Cause why I was never afterward made privy, was this; My Lord being at home at his House at Charter-house, I told him, I lik'd not this Doing, it would not have good end.

Attorney. Why did you then still follow? Why left you him not?

Hickford. He answer'd me, thou art a Fool, thou understandest not.

Catlin. He told you Truth, that you were a Fool, for you play'd the Fool indeed.

Hickford. I would then have gone from him, and I sought to depart; he would never give me leave, as Mr. Bannister well knoweth.

Catlin. Why? he was not your Prince, you were not so bound that he could compel you to tarry with him.

Hickford. Otherwise I dealt not with the Bishop of Rosse.

Catlin. In following him, the Hurt was yours; if you had been a good Subject, and had regard of your Duty, you might and should have taken other Course; but you had a higher Hope, to have seen your Master in higher State to advance you; you had more Respect to your Master than to your Mistress.

But this is nothing to the matter.

So his purpos'd longer Speech was cut off, and then he said shortly thus:

Hickford. I humbly thank your Lordship again for your good Admonition; and as your Lordship hath rehears'd the History of the French Embassador to the Duke of Millan, so I would and pray God, that he that hath brought my Lord to this, may have the like Success. I humbly submit my self to the Queen's Majesty's Mercy. I know I have liv'd under a most gracious and merciful Queen. I wish God long to preserve her Majesty, and this little time that I have left I will spend in Prayer for her Preservation; and I beseech God have Mercy upon me.

Whereunto

Whereunto the Court, and all that were preſent, ſaid, Amen; and ſome ſaid ſecretly, he had then ſhew'd himſelf a wiſer Man than his Maſter.

And ſo the Lieutenant was commanded to avoid the Priſoner.

God ſave Queen Elizabeth.

The Tryal of William Parry, the 25th of Feb. 1584. in the 26th Year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, at Weſtminſter, by virtue of her Majeſty's Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, before Henry Lord Hunſdon, Governor of Berwick; Sir Francis Knolles Knight, Treaſurer of the Queen's Majeſty's Houſhold; Sir James Croft Knight, Comptroller of the ſame Houſhold; Sir Chriſtopher Hatton Knight, Vice-Chamberlain to her Majeſty; Sir Chriſtopher Wray Knight, Chief Juſtice of England; Sir Gilbert Gerrard Knight, Maſter of the Rolls; Sir Edmund Anderſon Knight, Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas; Sir Roger Manwood Knight, Chief Baron of the Exchequer; and Sir Thomas Hennage Knight, Treaſurer of the Chamber.

FIRST, three Proclamations for Silence were made, according to the uſual Courſe in ſuch Caſes. Then the Lieutenant was commanded to return his Precept; which he did, and brought the Priſoner to the Bar: to whom Miles Sandes Eſq; Clerk of the Crown, ſaid, William Parry, hold up thy Hand; and he did ſo. Then ſaid the Clerk of the Crown, Thou art here indicted by the Oaths of twelve good and lawful Men of the County of Middleſex, before Sir Chriſt. Wray Knight, and others, who took the Indictment by the name of William Parry, late of London Gentleman, otherwiſe call'd William Parry, late of London Doctor of the Law; for that thou, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Noble and Chriſtian Prince Queen Elizabeth, thy moſt gracious Sovereign and Liege Lady, not having the Fear of God before thine Eyes, nor regarding thy due Allegiance, but being ſeduc'd by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and intending to withdraw and extinguiſh the hearty Love and due Obedience which true and faithful Subjects ſhould bear unto the ſame our Sovereign Lady, didſt at Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, on the 1ſt day of February, in the 26th year of her Highneſs's Reign, and at divers other Times and Places in the ſame County, maliciouſly and traitorouſly conſpire and compaſs, not only to deprive and depoſe the ſame our Sovereign Lady of her Royal Eſtate, Title, and Dignity, but alſo to bring her Highneſs to Death and final Deſtruction, and Sedition in the Realm to make, and the Government thereof to ſubvert, and the ſincere Religion of God eſtabliſh'd in her Highneſs's Dominions to alter and ſubvert. And that whereas thou William Parry, by thy Letters ſent unto Gregory Biſhop of Rome, didſt ſignify unto the ſame Biſhop thy Purpoſes and Intentions aforeſaid, and thereby didſt pray and require the ſame Biſhop to give thee Abſolution; that thou afterwards, that is to ſay, the laſt day of March, in the 26th year aforeſaid, didſt traitorouſly receive Letters from one call'd Cardinal de Como, directed unto thee William Parry, whereby the ſame Cardinal did ſignify unto thee, that the Biſhop of Rome had perus'd thy Letters, and allow'd of thine Intent; and that to that end he had abſolv'd thee of all thy Sins, and by the ſame Letter did animate and ſtir thee to proceed with thine Enterprize; and that thereupon thou, the laſt day of Auguſt, in the 26th year aforeſaid, at St. Giles in the Fields, in the ſame County of Middleſex, didſt traitorouſly confer with one Edmund Nevill Eſq; uttering to him all thy wicked and traitorous Devices, and then and there didſt move him to aſſiſt thee therein, and to join with thee in thoſe wicked Treaſons aforeſaid, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity. What ſaiſt thou, William Parry, Art thou guilty of theſe Treaſons whereof thou ſtandeſt here indicted, or Not Guilty?

Then Parry ſaid, Before I plead Not Guilty, or confeſs my ſelf Guilty, I pray you give me leave to ſpeak a few words; and with humbling himſelf, began in this manner: God ſave Queen Elizabeth, and God ſend me Grace to diſcharge my Duty to her, and to ſend you home in Charity. But touching the Matters that I am indicted of, ſome were in one place, and ſome in another, and done ſo ſecretly as none can ſee into them, except that they had Eyes like unto God; wherefore I will not lay my Blood upon the Jury, but do mind to confeſs the Indictment. It containeth but the Parts that have been openly read, read, I pray you tell me? Whereunto it was answer'd, that the Indictment contain'd the Parts he had heard read, and no other: Whereupon the Clerk of the Crown said unto Parry; Parry, thou must answer directly to the Indictment, whether thou be Guilty or not.

Then said Parry, I do confess that I am Guilty of all that is therein contain'd; and further too, I desire not Life, but desire to die. Unto which the Clerk of the Crown said, If you confess it, you must confess it in manner and form as it is compris'd in the Indictment. Whereunto he said, I do confess it in manner and form as the same is set down, and all the Circumstances thereof. Then the Confession being recorded, the Queen's learned Council being ready to pray Judgment upon the same Confession, Mr. Vice-Chamberlain said, These Matters contain'd in this Indictment, and confess'd by this Man, are of great Importance; they touch the Person of the Queen's most excellent Majesty in the highest Degree, the very State and Well-doing of the whole Commonwealth, and the Truth of God's Word establish'd in these her Majesty's Dominions, and the open Demonstration of that capital Envy of the Man of Rome, that hath set himself against God and all Godliness, all good Princes and good Government, and against good Men. Wherefore, I pray you, for the satisfaction of this great Multitude, let the whole Matter appear, that every one may see that the Matter of it self is as bad as the Indictment purporteth, and as he hath confess'd. Whereto in respect that the Justice of the Realm hath been of late very impudently slander'd, all yielded as a thing necessary to satisfy the World in particular, of that which was but summarily compris'd in the Indictment, tho in the Law his Confession serv'd sufficiently to have proceeded thereupon unto Judgment. Whereupon the Lords and others the Commissioners, her Majesty's learned Counsel, and Parry himself agreed, that Parry's Confession, (taken the 11th and 13th of February, 1584. before the Lord of Hunsdon, Master Vice-Chamberlain, and Master Secretary) and Cardinal de Como's Letters, and Parry's Letters to the Lord Treasurer and Lord Steward, should be openly read.

And Parry, for the better satisfying of the People and Standers by, offered to read them himself; but being told that the Order was, the Clerk of the Crown should read them, it was so resolved of all parts. And then Master Vice-Chamberlain caused to be shewed to Parry his said Confession, the Cardinal's Letter, and his own Letter aforesaid; which after he had particularly viewed every Leaf thereof, he confessed, and said openly they were the same.

Then said Master Vice-Chamberlain; Before we proceed to shew what he hath confessed, what say you, said he to Parry, is that which you have confessed here true? and did you confess it freely and willingly of your self, or was then any extort means used to draw it from you?

Surely, said Parry, I made that Confession freely without any Constraint, and that is all true, and more too; for there is no Treason that hath been sithence the first Year of the Queen, any way touching Religion, saving receipt of Agnus Dei, and persuading of others, wherein I have not much dealt, but I have offended in it. And I have also delivered mine opinion in Writing, who ought to be Successor to the Crown, which he said to be Treason also.

Then his Confession of the eleventh and thirteenth of February, all of his own Hand-writing, and hereafter particularly set down, was openly and distinctly read by the Clerk of the Crown.

The voluntary Confession of William Parry Doctor of the Laws, (now Prisoner in the Tower) and accused of Treason by Edmund Nevil Esq; promised by him (with all Faith and Humility) to the Queen's Majesty, in discharge of his Conscience, and Duty towards God and her: Before the Lord Hunsdon, Lord Governour of Berwick; Sir Christopher Hatton Knight, Vice-Chamberlain; Sir Francis Walsingham Knight, principal Secretary; the 13th of February, 1584.

IN the Year 1570, I was sworn her Majesty's Servant, from which time until the Year 1580, I served, honoured, and loved her with as great Readiness, Devotion and Assurance as any poor Subject in England. In the end of that Year, and until Midsummer 1582, I had some Trouble for the hurting of a Gentleman of the Temple. In which Action I was so disgraced and oppressed by two great Men (to whom I have of late been beholden) that I never had contented Thought since. There began my Misfortune, and here followeth my woful Fall.

In July after, I laboured for Licence to travel for three Years, which (upon some Consideration) was easily obtain'd. And so in August, I went over with doubtful mind of return; for that being suspected in Religion, and not having received the Communion in twenty two Years, I began to mistrust my advancement in England. In September I came to Paris, where I was reconciled to the Church, and advised to live without Scandal; the rather, for that it was mistrusted by the English Catholicks, that I had Intelligence with the greatest Counsellor of England. I staid not long there, but removed to Lions (a place of great Traffick) where, because it was the ordinary Passage of our Nation to and fro, between Paris and Rome, I was also suspected.

To put all Men out of doubt of me, and for some other cause, I went to Millan, from whence, as a place of some danger (tho I found favour there) after I had clear'd my Conscience, and justified my self in Religion before the Inquisitor, I went to Venice. There I came acquainted with Father Benedicto Palmio, a grave and learned Jesuit. By Conference with him of the hard state of the Catholicks in England, and by reading of the Book De Persecutione Anglicana, and other Discourses of like Argument;

1. I conceived a possible mean to relieve the afflicted state of our Catholicks, if the same might be well warranted in Religion and Conscience by the Pope, or some learned Divines. I asked his Opinion; he made it clear, commended my Devotion, comforted me in it, and after a while made me known to the Nuncio Campeggio, Resident there for his Holiness. By his means I wrote to the Pope, presented the Service, and sued for a Passport to go to Rome, and to return safely into France. Answer came from Cardinal Como, that I might come, and should be welcome. I misliked the Warrant, sued for a better, which I was promised:

miſed: but it came not before my departure to Lyons, where I promiſed to ſtay ſome time for it. And being indeed deſirous to go to Rome, and loth to go without Countenance; I deſired Chriſtofero de Salazar, Secretary to the Catholick King in Venice, who had ſome underſtanding by Conference of my Devotion to the afflicted Catholicks at home and abroad, to commend me to the Duke di Nova Terra, Governour of Millan, and to the Count of Olivaris Embi, then Reſident for the King his Maſter in Rome: which he promiſed to do effectually for the one, and did for the other. And ſo I took my Journy towards Lyons, whither came for me an ample Paſſport (but ſomewhat too late) that I might come and go, in verbo Pontificis per omnes Juriſdictiones Eccleſiaſticas, abſque impedimento. I acquainted ſome good Fathers there, of my neceſſity to depart towards Paris by Promiſe, and prayed their advices upon divers Points; wherein I was well ſatisfied. And ſo aſſuring them that his Holineſs ſhould hear from me ſhortly, it was undertaken that I ſhould be excuſed for that time.

In October I came to Paris, where (upon better Opinion conceived of me amongſt my Catholick Countrymen) I found my Credit well ſettled, and ſuch as miſtruſted me before, ready to truſt and imbrace me. And being one day at the Chamber of Thomas Morgan a Catholick Gentleman (greatly beloved and truſted on that ſide) amongſt other Gentlemen, talking (but in very good ſort) of England, I was deſired by Morgan to go up with him to another Chamber; where he brake with me, and told me that it was hoped and looked for, that I ſhould do ſome Service for God and his Church. I anſwered him, I would do it, if it were to kill the greateſt Subject in England; whom I named, and in truth then hated. No, no, ſaid he, let him live to his greater Fall and Ruin of his Houſe.

2. It is the Queen I mean. I had him as I wiſhed, and told him it were ſoon done, if it might be lawfully done, and warranted in the opinion of ſome learned Divines. And ſo the Doubt once reſolved, (tho as you have heard I was before reaſonably well ſatisfied) I vowed to undertake the Enterprize, for the reſtitution of England to the antient Obedience of the See Apoſtolick. Divers Divines were named: Dr. Allein I deſired, Parſons I refuſed; and by chance came Maſter Watres a learned Prieſt, with whom I conferred, and was over-ruled.

3. For he plainly pronounced (the Caſe only altered in name) that it was utterly unlawful; with whom many Engliſh Prieſts did agree, as I have heard, if it be not altered ſince the Book made in anſwer of the Execution of the Engliſh Juſtice was publiſhed, which I muſt confeſs hath taken hard hold in me, and (I fear me) will do in others, if it be not prevented by more gracious handling of the quiet and obedient Catholick Subjects, whereof there is good and greater ſtore in England, than this Age will extinguiſh. Well, notwithſtanding all theſe doubts, I was gone ſo far by Letters and Conference in Italy, that I could not go back, but promiſed faithfully to perform the Enterprize, if his Holineſs upon my Offer and Letters would allow it, and grant me full Remiſſion of my Sins.

4. I wrote my Letters the firſt of January, 1584. by their Computation; took Advice upon them in Confeſſion of Father Anibal à Codreto, a learned Jeſuit in Paris; was lovingly embraced, commended, confeſſed, and communicated at the Jeſuit's at one Altar with the Cardinals of Vandoſmi and Narbone, whereof I prayed Certificate, and encloſed the ſame in my Letter to his Holineſs, to lead him the rather to abſolve me; which I required by my Letters, in Conſideration of ſo great an Enterprize undertaken without Promiſe or Reward.

5. I went with Morgan to the Nuncio Ragazzoni, to whom I read the Letter and Certificate encloſed, ſealed it, and left it with him to ſend to Rome; he promiſed great Care of it, and to procure Anſwer: And ſo lovingly imbraced me, wiſhed me good ſpeed, and promiſed that I ſhould be remembred at the Altar.

6. After this I deſired Morgan, that ſome ſpecial Man might be made privy to this matter, leſt he dying, and I miſcarrying in the Execution, and my intent never truly diſcovered, it might ſtick for an everlaſting ſpot in my Race. Divers were named, but none agreed upon, for fear of betraying.

7. This being done, Morgan aſſured me, that ſhortly after my departure, the Lord Fernehurſt (then in Paris) ſhould go into Scotland, and be ready upon the firſt News of the Queen's Fall to enter into England with 20 or 30000 Men to defend the Queen of Scotland, (whom, and the King her Son, I do in my Conſcience acquit of any privity, liking, or conſent to this, or any other bad Action, for any thing that ever I did know.) I ſhortly departed for England, and arrived at Rye in January, 1583. from whence I wrote to the Court, advertiſed ſome, that I had a ſpecial Service to diſcover to the Queen's Majeſty.

8. Which I did more to prepare Acceſs and Credit, than for any Care I had of her Perſon, tho I were fully reſolved never to touch her (notwithſtanding any Warrant) if by any Device, Perſuaſion, or Policy ſhe might be wrought to deal more graciouſly with the Catholicks than ſhe doth, or by our manner of proceeding in Parliament meaneth to do, or any thing yet ſeen. I came to the Court (then at Whitehall) prayed Audience, had it at large, and very privately diſcovered to her Majeſty this Conſpiracy, much to this effect, tho covered with all the skill I had. She took it doubtfully, I departed with Fear. And amongſt other things, I cannot forget her Majeſty's gracious Speech then uttered touching the Catholicks, which of late, after a ſort I avowed in Parliament: She ſaid to me, that never a Catholick ſhould be troubled for Religion or Supremacy, ſo long as they lived like good Subjects. Whereby I miſtruſted that her Majeſty is borne in hand, that none is troubled for the one or the other. It may be truly ſaid, that it is better than it hath been, tho it be not yet as it ſhould be.

In March laſt, while I was at Greenwich (as I remember) ſuing for St. Katherines, came Letters to me from Cardinal Como, dated at Rome, the laſt of January before; whereby I found the Enterprize commended and allowed, and my ſelf abſolved (in his Holineſs name) of all my Sins, and willed to go forward in the name of God. That Letter I ſhewed to ſome in Court, who imparted it to the Queen; what it wrought, or may work in her Majeſty, God knoweth; only this I know,

9. That it confirmed my Reſolution to kill her, and made it clear in my Conſcience, that it was Lawful and Meritorious. And yet was I determined never to do it, if either Policy, Practice, Perſuaſion, or Motion in Parliament could prevail. I feared to be tempted, and therefore always when I came near her, I left my Dagger at home.

10. When I looked upon her Majesty, and remembred her many Excellencies, I was greatly troubled: and yet I saw no Remedy, for my Vows were in Heaven, my Letters and Promises in Earth; and the Case of the Catholick Recusants, and others, little bettered. Sometimes I said to my self, Why should I care for her? What hath she done for me? Have I not spent 10000 Marks since I knew her Service, and never had Penny by her? It may be said, she gave me my Life. But I say (as my Case stood) it had been Tyranny to take it; and I fear me it is little less yet. If it please her graciously to look into my Discontentments, I would to Jesus Christ she had it, for I am weary of it. And now to come to an end of this Tragical Discourse; In July I left the Court, utterly rejected, discontented, and as her Majesty might perceive by my passionate Letters, careless of my self. I came to London; Dr. Allein's Book was sent me out of France.

11. It redoubled my former Conceits; every word in it was a Warrant to a prepared Mind: It taught that Kings may be excommunicated, deprived, and violently handled: It proveth that all Wars Civil or Foreign undertaken for Religion, are honourable. Her Majesty may do well to read it, and to be out of doubt (if things be not amended) that it is a Warning, and a Doctrine full dangerous. This is the Book I shewed, in some places read, and lent it to my Cousin Nevil (the Accuser) who came often to mine House, put his Finger in my Dish, his Hand in my Purse; and the Night wherein he accused me, was wrapped in my Gown, six Months at least after we had entred into this Conspiracy: In which space her Majesty, and ten Princes in several Provinces, might have been killed. God bless her Majesty from him; for before Almighty God, I joy and am glad in my Soul, that it was his hap to discover me in time, tho there were no danger near.

And now to the Manner of our Meetings. He came to me in the beginning of August, and spake to me in this or like sort. Cousin, let us do somewhat, sithens we can have nothing. I offered to join with him, and gladly heard him, hoping because I knew him to be a Catholick, that he would hit upon that I had in my head; but it fell not out so. He thought the delivery of the Queen of Scotland easy, presuming upon his Credit and Kindred in the North: I thought it dangerous to her, and impossible to Men of our Fortunes: He fell from that to the taking of Berwick. I spake of Quinborough and the Navy, rather to entertain him with Discourse, than that I cared for those Motions, my Head being full of a greater matter.

12. I told him that I had another manner of Enterprize, more honourable and profitable to us, and the Catholicks Commonwealth, than all these, if he would join in it with me, as he presently vowed to do: He pressed to know it; I willed him to sleep upon the Motion: He did so, and (belike overtaken) came to me the next Morning to my Lodging in London, offered to join with me, and took his Oath upon a Bible, to conceal and constantly to pursue the Enterprize for the advancement of Religion; which I also did, and meant to perform; the killing of the Queen was the matter.

The Manner and Place, to be on horseback, with eight or ten Horses, when she should ride abroad about St. James's, or some other like place. It was once thought fit in a Garden, and that the escape would be easiest by Water into Shepey, or some other part; but we resolved upon the first.

This continued as agreed upon many Months, until he heard of the Death of Westmoreland, whose Land and Dignity (whereof he assured himself) bred belike this Conscience in him to discover a Treason in February, contrived and agreed upon in August. If it cost him not an ambitious Head at last, let him never trust me. He brought a tall Gentleman (whom he commended for an excellent Pistolier) to me to Chanon-Row, to make one in the Match: but I refused to deal with him, being loth to lay my Head upon so many Hands.

Master Nevil hath (I think) forgotten, that he did swear to me at divers times, that all the advancement she could give, should serve but for her Scourge, if ever time and occasion should serve; and that tho he would not lay hand upon her in a Corner, his Heart served him to strike off her Head in the Field. Now leaving him to himself, this much (to make an end) I must confess of my self, I did mean to try what might be done in Parliament, to do my best to hinder all hard Courses, to have prayed hearing of the Queen's Majesty, to move her (if I could) to take Compassion upon her Catholick Subjects; and when all had failed, to do as I intended. If her Majesty by this Course would have eased them, tho she had never preferred me, I had with all Comfort and Patience borne it.

13. But if she had preferred me without Ease or Care of them, the Enterprize had held.

Parry.

God preserve the Queen, and incline her merciful Heart to forgive me this desperate Purpose; and to take my Head (with all my Heart) for her better Satisfaction.

After which, for the better manifesting of his Treasons, on the 14th of February last, there was a Letter written by him to her Majesty, very voluntarily, all of his own Hand, without any Motion made to him: the Tenor whereof, for that which concerneth these his traitorous Dealings, is as followeth.

A Letter written by Parry to her Majesty.

'YOUR Majesty may see by my voluntary 'Confession, the dangerous Fruits of a dis-'contented Mind; and how constantly I pursued 'my first conceived purpose in Venice, for the re-'lief of the afflicted Catholicks; continued it in 'Lions, and resolved in Paris to put it in adventure 'for the Restitution of England to the antient Obe-'dience of the See Apostolick. You may see 'withal, how it is commended, allowed, and 'warranted in Conscience, Divinity, and Policy, 'by the Pope and some great Divines: Tho it be 'true or likely, that most of our English Divines '(less practised in matters of this weight) do ut-'terly mislike and condemn it.

'The Enterprize is prevented, and Conspiracy 'discovered by an honourable Gentleman, my 'Kinsman and late familiar Friend, Master Ed-'mund Nevil, privy and by solemn Oath (taken 'upon the Bible) Party to the matter, whereof 'I am hardly glad, but now sorry (in my very 'Soul) that ever I conceived or intended it, how ‘ commendable or meritorious ſoever I thought it. ‘ God thank him, and forgive me, who would ‘ not now (before God) attempt it (if I had ‘ liberty and opportunity to do it) to gain ‘ your Kingdom. I beſeech Chriſt, that my ‘ Death and Example may as well ſatisfy your ‘ Majeſty and the World, as it ſhall glad and content me.

‘ The Queen of Scotland is your Priſoner; let her ‘ be honourably entreated, but yet ſurely guarded.

‘ The French King is French, you know it well ‘ enough, you will find him occupied when he ‘ ſhould do you good; he will not loſe a Pilgrimage ‘ to ſave you a Crown. I have no more to ſay at ‘ this time, but that with my Heart and Soul I ‘ do now honour and love you; am inwardly ‘ ſorry for mine Offence, and ready to make you ‘ amends by my Death and Patience. Diſcharge ‘ me à culpâ, but not à pœnâ, good Lady. And ſo ‘ farewel, moſt gracious, and the beſt-natured and ‘ qualified Queen that ever lived in England. From ‘ the Tower, the 14th of February, 1584.

W. Parry.

This done, the Cardinal di Como his Letter in Italian was delivered unto Parry's hand, by the direction of Mr. Vicechamberlain, which Parry there peruſed, and openly affirmed to be wholly of the Cardinal's own Hand-writing, and the Seal to be his own alſo, and to be with a Cardinal's Hat on it: And himſelf did openly read it in Italian.

A mon Signore, mon Signore Guglielmo Parry.

MON Signore, la Santita di N. S. ha veduto le Lettere di V. S. del primo con la fede incluſa, & non puo ſe non laudare la buona diſpoſitione & riſolutione che ſcrive di tenere verſo il ſervitio & beneficio publico, nel che la Santita ſua leſſorta di perſeverare, con farne riuſcire li effetti che V. S. promette: Et acciochè tanto maggiormente V. S. ſia ajutata da quel buon Spirito che l'ha moſſo, le concede ſua Beneditione, plenaria Indulgenza & Remiſſione di tutti li peccati, ſecondo che V. S. ha chieſto, aſſicurandoſi che oltre il merito, che n'havera in cielo, vuole anco ſua Santita conſtituirſi debitore a riconoſcere li meriti di V. S. in ogni miglior modo che potra, & cio tanto piu, quanto che V. S. uſa maggior modeſtia in non pretender niente. Metta dunq; ad effetto li ſuoi ſanti & honorati penſieri, & attenda aſtar ſano. Che per fine io me le offero di core, & le deſidero ogni buono & felice ſucceſſo. Di Roma a 30 di Gennaro, M.D.LXXXIV.

Al piacer di V. S.
N. Cardinale di Como.
Al Sig. Guglielmo Parry.

The Words bearing Senſe as it were written to a Biſhop, or to a Man of ſuch degree, it was demanded of him by Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, Whether he had not taken the Degree of a Biſhop? He ſaid, No: But ſaid at firſt, thoſe Terms were proper to the Degree he had taken. And after ſaid, That the Cardinal did vouchſafe, as of a favour, to write ſo to him. Then the Copy of that Letter in Engliſh was in like manner openly read by the Clerk of the Crown; which Parry then acknowledged to be truly tranſlated.

Cardinal de Como's Letter to Will. Parry, January 30, 5484. by account of Rome.

‘ MOnſignor, the Holineſs of our Lord hath ‘ ſeen the Letter of your Signory of the ‘ firſt, with the aſſurance included, and cannot ‘ but commend the good Diſpoſition and Reſolution, which you write to hold towards the Service and Benefit publick: Wherein his Holineſs ‘ doth exhort you to perſevere, with cauſing to ‘ bring forth the effects which your Signory promiſeth. And to the end you may be ſo much the ‘ more holpen by that good Spirit which hath moved you thereunto, his Bleſſedneſs doth grant to ‘ you plenary Indulgence and Remiſſion of all your ‘ Sins, according to your requeſt; aſſuring you, ‘ that beſides the Merit that you ſhall receive ‘ therefore in Heaven, his Holineſs will further ‘ make himſelf Debtor, to re-acknowledge the ‘ Deſervings of your Signory in the beſt manner that he can. And that ſo much the more, ‘ in that your Signory uſeth the greater Modeſty, ‘ in not pretending any thing. Put therefore to ‘ effect your holy and honourable Thoughts, and ‘ attend your Health. And to conclude, I offer my ‘ ſelf unto you heartily, and do deſire all good and ‘ happy Succeſs.

From Rome the 30*th of* January, 1584.

At the pleaſure of your Signory,
N. Card. of Como.

And thereupon was ſhewed unto Parry his Letter of the 18th of February, written to the Lord Treaſurer, and the Lord Steward: which he confeſſed to be all of his own Hand-writing, and which was read accordingly.

William Parry's Letter to the Lord Treaſurer, and the Earl of Leiceſter.

‘ MY Lords, now that the Conſpiracy is ‘ diſcovered, the Fault confeſſed, my Conſcience cleared, and Mind prepared patiently to ‘ ſuffer the Pains due for ſo heinous a Crime; I ‘ hope it ſhall not offend you, if crying Miſerere ‘ with the poor Publican, I leave to deſpair with ‘ curſed Cain. My Caſe is rare and ſtrange, and, ‘ for any thing I can remember, ſingular: A natural Subject ſolemnly to vow the Death of his ‘ natural Queen (ſo born, ſo known, and ſo taken ‘ by all Men) for the Relief of the afflicted Catholicks, and Reſtitution of Religion. The ‘ Matter firſt conceived in Venice, the Service ‘ (in general words) preſented to the Pope, ‘ continued and undertaken in Paris; and laſtly, ‘ commended and warranted by his Holineſs, digeſted and reſolved in England, if it had not ‘ been prevented by Accuſation, or by her Majeſty's greater Lenity, and more gracious Uſage of ‘ her Catholick Subjects. This is my firſt and laſt ‘ Offence conceived againſt my Prince or Country, ‘ and doth (I cannot deny) contain all other ‘ Faults whatſoever. It is now to be puniſhed by ‘ Death, or moſt graciouſly (beyond all common ‘ Expectation) to be pardoned. Death I do confeſs to have deſerved; Life I do (with all Humility) crave, if it may ſtand with the Queen's ‘ Honour, and Policy of the Time. To leave ſo ‘ great a Treaſon unpuniſhed, were ſtrange: To ‘ draw it by my Death in example, were dangerous. A ſworn Servant to take upon him ſuch an ‘ Enterprize, upon ſuch a Ground, and by ſuch a ‘ War-

'Warrant, hath not been ſeen in England: To 'indict him, arraign him, bring him to the Scaf-'fold, and to publiſh his Offence, can do no good: 'To hope that he hath more to diſcover than is 'confeſſed, or that at his Execution he will un-'ſay any thing he hath written, is in vain: To 'conclude, that it is impoſſible for him in time to 'make ſome part of amends, were very hard, and 'againſt former Experiences. The Queſtion then 'is, Whether it be better to kill him, or (leſt the 'matter be miſtaken) upon hope of his Amend-'ment to pardon him. For mine own Opinion '(though partial) I will deliver you my Con-'ſcience. The Caſe is good Queen Elizabeth's, 'the Offence is committed againſt her Sacred Per-'ſon, and ſhe may (of her Mercy) pardon it with-'out prejudice to any. Then this I ſay, in few 'words, as a Man more deſirous to diſcharge his 'troubled Conſcience, than to live. Pardon poor 'Parry, and relieve him; for Life without living 'is not fit for him. If this may not be, or be 'thought dangerous, or diſhonourable to the 'Queen's Majeſty (as by your favours, I think it 'full of Honour and Mercy) then I beſeech your 'Lordſhips (and no other) once to hear me be-'fore I be indicted, and afterwards (if I muſt die) 'humbly to intreat the Queen's Majeſty to haſten 'my Tryal and Execution, which I pray God '(with all my heart) may prove as honourable to 'her, as I hope it ſhall be happy to me; who will 'while I live (as I have done always) pray to Je-'ſus Chriſt for her Majeſty's long and proſperous 'Reign. From the Tower, the 18th of February, 1584.

W. Parry.

Theſe Matters being read openly, for manifeſtation of the matter, Parry prayed leave to ſpeak: Whereto Mr. Vice-Chamberlain ſaid, If you will ſay any thing for the better opening to the World of thoſe your foul and horrible Facts, ſpeak on; but if you mean to make any excuſe of that which you have confeſſed, which elſe would have been and do ſtand proved againſt you, for my part, I will not ſit to hear you.

Then her Majeſty's Attorney-General Popham ſtood up and ſaid, It appeareth before you, my Lords, that this Man hath been indicted and arraigned of ſeveral moſt heinous and horrible Treaſons, and hath confeſſed them, which is before you of Record; wherefore there reſteth no more to be done, but for the Court to give Judgment accordingly, which here I require in the behalf of the Queen's Majeſty.

Then ſaid Parry, I pray you hear me for diſcharging of my Conſcience. I will not go about to excuſe my ſelf, nor to ſeek to ſave my Life, I care not for it; you have my Confeſſion of Record, that is enough for my Life: And I mean to utter more, for which I were worthy to die. And ſaid, I pray you hear me, in that I am to ſpeak to diſcharge my Conſcience.

Then ſaid Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, Parry, then do thy Duty according to Conſcience, and utter all that thou canſt ſay concerning thoſe thy moſt wicked Facts.

Then ſaid Parry, My Cauſe is rare, ſingular, and unnatural, conceiv'd at Venice, preſented in general words to the Pope, undertaken at Paris, commended and allow'd of by his Holineſs, and was to have been executed in England, if it had not been prevented. Yea, I have committed many Treaſons, for I have committed Treaſon in being reconcil'd, and Treaſon in taking Abſolution. There hath been no Treaſon ſithens the firſt year of the Queen's Reign touching Religion, but that I am guilty of (except for receiving of Agnus Dei, and perſuading, as I have ſaid) and yet never intended to kill Queen Elizabeth: I appeal to her own Knowledge, and to my Lord Treaſurer's, and Maſter Secretary's.

Then ſaid my Lord Hunſdon, Haſt thou acknowledg'd it ſo often, and ſo plainly in Writing under thy Hand, and here of Record; and now, when thou ſhouldſt have thy Judgment according to that which thou haſt confeſs'd thy ſelf guilty of, doſt thou go back again, and deny the Effect of all? How can we believe that thou now ſaiſt?

Then ſaid Maſter Vice-Chamberlain, This is abſurd; thou haſt not only confeſs'd generally, that thou wert Guilty, according to the Indictment, which ſummarily, and yet in expreſs words, doth contain, that thou hadſt traitorouſly compaſs'd and intended the Death and Deſtruction of her Majeſty; but thou alſo ſaidſt particularly, that thou wert guilty of every of the Treaſons contain'd therein, whereof the ſame was one, in plain and expreſs Letter ſet down, and read unto thee. Yea, thou ſaidſt that thou wert Guilty of more Treaſons too beſides theſe. And didſt thou not, upon thy Examination, voluntarily confeſs, how thou waſt mov'd firſt thereunto by Miſlike of thy State after thy Departure out of the Realm, and that thou didſt miſlike her Majeſty, for that ſhe had done nothing for thee; how by wicked Papiſts and Popiſh Books thou wert perſuaded that it was lawful to kill her Majeſty; how thou wert by Reconciliation become one of that wicked ſort, that held her Majeſty for neither lawful Queen nor Chriſtian, and that it was meritorious to kill her? And didſt thou not ſignify that thy Purpoſe to the Pope by Letters, and receivedſt Letters from the Cardinal, how he allow'd of thine Intent, and excited thee to perform it, and thereupon didſt receive Abſolution? And didſt thou not conceive it, promiſe it, vow it, ſwear it, and receive the Sacrament that thou wouldſt do it? And didſt not thou thereupon affirm, that thy Vows were in Heaven, and thy Letters and Promiſes on Earth to bind thee to do it? And that whatſoever her Majeſty would have done for thee, could not have remov'd thee from that Intention or Purpoſe, unleſs ſhe would have deſiſted from dealing, as ſhe hath done, with the Catholicks, as thou calleſt them? All this thou haſt plainly confeſs'd; and I proteſt before this Great Aſſembly, thou haſt confeſs'd it more plainly and in better ſort than my Memory will ſerve me to utter: and ſaiſt thou now, that thou never meant'ſt it?

Ah, ſaid Parry, your Honours know how my Confeſſion, upon mine Examination, was extorted.

Then both the Lord Hunſdon and Maſter Vice-Chamberlain affirm'd, that there was no Torture or threatning Words offer'd him.

But Parry then ſaid, that they told him, that if he would not confeſs willingly, he ſhould have Torture: Whereunto their Honours anſwer'd, That they us'd not any Speech or Word of Torture to him.

You ſaid, ſaid Parry, that you would proceed with Rigour againſt me, if I would not confeſs it of my ſelf.

But their Honours expreſly affirm'd, that they us'd no ſuch words: But I will tell thee, ſaid Maſter Vice-Chamberlain, what we ſaid. I ſpake theſe words: If you will willingly utter the Truth of your your ſelf, it may do you good, and I wiſh you to do ſo; if you will not, we muſt then proceed in ordinary Courſe to take your Examination. Whereunto you anſwer'd, that you would tell the Truth of your ſelf: Was not this true? Which then he yielded unto.

And hereunto her Majeſty's Attorney-General put Parry in remembrance what Speeches he us'd to the Lieutenant of the Tower, the Queen's Majeſty's Serjeant at Law, Maſter Gaudie, and the ſame Attorney, on Saturday the 20th of February laſt, at the Tower, upon that he was by them then examin'd by Order from the Lords; which was, that he acknowledg'd he was moſt mildly and favourably dealt with in all his Examinations; which he alſo at the Bar then acknowledg'd to be true.

Then Mr. Vice-Chamberlain ſaid, That it was a wonder to ſee the Magnanimity of her Majeſty, which after that thou hadſt opened thoſe Traitorous Practices in ſort as thou haſt laid it down in thy Confeſſion, was nevertheleſs ſuch, and ſo far from all fear, as that ſhe would not ſo much as acquaint any one of her Highneſs's Privy-Council with it, to his knowledge, no not until after this thine Enterprize diſcovered and made manifeſt. And beſides that which thou haſt ſet down under thine own hand, thou didſt confeſs, that thou hadſt prepared two Scottiſh Daggers, fit for ſuch a purpoſe; and thoſe being diſpoſed away by thee, thou didſt ſay, that another would ſerve thy turn. And withal, Parry, didſt thou not alſo confeſs before us, how wonderfully thou wert appalled and perplexed upon a ſudden, at the Preſence of her Majeſty at Hampton-Court this laſt Summer, ſaying, that thou didſt think, thou then ſaweſt in her the very Likeneſs and Image of King Henry VII? And that therewith, and upon ſome Speeches uſed by her Majeſty, thou didſt turn about and weep bitterly to thy ſelf? And yet didſt call to mind that thy Vows were in Heaven, thy Letters and Promiſes on Earth; and that therefore thou didſt ſay with thy ſelf, that there was no remedy but to do it? Didſt thou not confeſs this? The which he acknowledged.

Then ſaid the Lord Hunſdon, Sayeſt thou now, that thou didſt never mean to kill the Queen? Didſt thou not confeſs, that when thou didſt utter this practice of Treachery to her Majeſty, that thou didſt cover it with all the skill thou hadſt, and that it was done by thee, rather to get Credit and Acceſs thereby, than for any regard thou hadſt of her Perſon? But in truth thou didſt it, that thereby thou mighteſt have better opportunity to perform thy wicked Enterprize. And wouldſt thou have run into ſuch fear as thou didſt confeſs that thou wert in, when thou didſt utter it, if thou hadſt never meant it? What reaſon canſt thou ſhew for thy ſelf?

With that he cried out in a furious manner, I never meant to kill her: I will lay my Blood upon Queen Elizabeth and you, before God and the World. And thereupon fell into a rage and evil words with the Queen's Majeſty's Attorney-General.

Then ſaid the Lord Hunſdon, This is but thy Popiſh Pride and Oſtentation, which thou wouldſt have to be told to thy fellows of that Faction, to make them believe that thou dieſt for Popery, when thou dieſt for moſt horrible and dangerous Treaſons againſt her Majeſty, and thy whole Country. For thy laying of thy Blood, it muſt lie on thine own head, as a juſt Reward of thy Wickedneſs. The Laws of the Realm moſt juſtly condemn thee to die, out of thine own mouth, for the conſpiring the Deſtruction both of her Majeſty, and of us all: Therefore thy Blood be upon thee; neither her Majeſty nor we at any time ſought it, thy ſelf haſt ſpilt it.

Then he was asked, What he could ſay, why Judgment of Death ought not to be awarded againſt him.

Whereto he ſaid, he did ſee that he muſt die, becauſe he was not ſettled.

What meaneſt thou by that, ſaid Mr. Vice-Chamberlain Said he, Look into your Study, and into your new Books, and you ſhall find what I mean.

I proteſt (ſaid his Honour) I know not what thou meaneſt: thou doſt not well to uſe ſuch dark Speeches, unleſs thou wouldſt plainly utter what thou meaneſt thereby. But he ſaid, he cared not for Death, and that he would lay his Blood amongſt them.

Then ſpake the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, being required to give the Judgment, and ſaid, Parry, you have been much heard, and what you mean by being ſettled, I know not; but I ſee you are ſo ſettled in Popery, that you cannot ſettle your ſelf to be a good Subject. But touching that you ſhould ſay, to ſtay Judgment from being given againſt you, your Speeches muſt be of one of theſe kinds, either to prove the Indictment (which you have confeſs'd to be true) to be inſufficient in Law; or elſe to plead ſomewhat touching her Majeſty's Mercy, why Juſtice ſhould not be done of you. All other Speeches, wherein you have us'd great liberty, is more than by Law you can ask. Theſe be the Matters you muſt look to, what ſay you to them? Whereto he ſaid nothing.

Then ſaid the Lord Chief Juſtice; Parry, thou haſt been before this time indicted of divers moſt horrible and hateful Treaſons, committed againſt thy moſt Gracious Sovereign and native Country: The Matter moſt deteſtable, the Manner moſt ſubtle and dangerous, and the Occaſions and Means that led thee thereunto moſt ungodly and villanous. That thou didſt intend it, it is moſt evident by thy ſelf. The Matter was the Deſtruction of a moſt ſacred and an anointed Queen, thy Sovereign and Miſtreſs, who hath ſhew'd thee ſuch Favour, as ſome thy Betters have not obtain'd; yea, the Overthrow of thy Country wherein thou wert born, and of a moſt happy Commonwealth whereof thou art a Member, and of ſuch a Queen, as hath beſtow'd on thee the Benefit of all Benefits in this World, that is, thy Life, heretofore granted thee by her Mercy, when thou hadſt loſt it by Juſtice and Deſert. Yet thou her Servant, ſworn to defend her, meant'ſt with thy bloody hand to have taken away her Life, that mercifully gave thee thine when it was yielded into her hands: This is the Matter wherein thou haſt offended. The Manner was moſt ſubtle and dangerous, beyond all that before thee have committed any Wickedneſs againſt her Majeſty: For thou making ſhew as if thou wouldſt ſimply have utter'd for her Safety the Evil that others had contriv'd, didſt but ſeek thereby Credit and Acceſs, that thou mighteſt take the apter Opportunity for her Deſtruction. And for the Occaſions and Means that drew thee on, they were moſt ungodly and villanous, as the Perſuaſions of the Pope, of Papiſts, and Popiſh Books. The Pope pretendeth that he is a Paſtor, whenas in truth he is far from feeding of the Flock of Chriſt, but rather as a Wolf, ſeeketh but to feed on, and to ſuck out the Blood of true Chriſtians, and as it were thirſteth after the Blood of our moſt gracious and Chriſtian Queen. And theſe Papiſts and Popiſh Books, while they pretend to ſet forth Divinity, they do indeed moſt ungodly teach and perſuade that which is quite contrary both to God and his Word: For the Word teaches Obedience of Subjects towards Princes, and forbiddeth any private Man to kill; but they teach Subjects to diſobey Princes, and that a private wicked Perſon may kill; yea, and whom? A moſt godly Queen, and their own natural and moſt gracious Sovereign. Let all Men therefore take heed how they receive any thing from him, hear or read any of their Books, and how they confer with any Papiſts. God grant her Majeſty, that ſhe may know by thee how ever ſhe truſt ſuch like to come ſo near her Perſon: But ſee the end, and why thou didſt it, and it will appear to be a moſt miſerable, fearful, and fooliſh thing; for thou didſt imagine that it was to relieve thoſe that thou calleſt Catholicks, who were moſt likely amongſt all others to have felt the worſt of it, if thy deviliſh Practice had taken effect. But ſith thou haſt been indicted of the Treaſons compris'd in the Indictment, and thereupon arraign'd, and haſt confeſs'd thy ſelf guilty of them, the Court doth award, that thou ſhalt be had from hence to the Place whence thou didſt come, and ſo drawn thro the open City of London, upon an Hurdle, to the Place of Execution, and there to be hang'd and let down alive, and thy Privy Parts cut off, and thy Entrails taken out and burnt in thy ſight; then thy Head to be cut off, and thy Body to be divided in four Parts, and to be diſpos'd at her Majeſty's Pleaſure: And God have Mercy on thy Soul.

The Arraignment of Anthony Babington, Chidiock Titchburne, Thomas Salisbury, Robert Barnewell, John Savage, Henry Donn, and John Ballard, in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Tueſday and Wedneſday being the 13*th and* 14*th of* September, Anno 28 Reginæ Elizabethæ, 1586.

THE Commiſſion of Oyer and Determiner of all manner of Treaſons, Rebellions, Felonies, Offences, Routs, Riots, &c. was directed to William Lord Cobham, Lord Warden of the Cinque-Ports; Thomas Lord Buckhurſt; Sir Francis Knowles; Sir James a Croft; Sir Chriſtopher Hatton; Sir Francis Walſingham; Sir Chriſtopher Wray, Lord Chief Juſtice of England; Sir Edmund Anderſon, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; Sir Roger Manwood, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Mr. Doctor Dale; Mr. Rugby, Maſter of the Requeſts; Sergeant Fleetwood, Recorder of London; Mr. Brograve Attorney of the Dutchy; Mr. Randal; Mr. Cooke; Mr. Wrathe. By force whereof was a Precept directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower, commanding him to have the Bodies of Anthony Babington Eſq; Chidiock Titchburne Eſq; Thomas Saliſbury Eſq; Robert Barnewell Gent. John Savage Gent. Henry Donn Gent. and John Ballard Clerk, before the ſaid Commiſſioners, the Day and Year aforeſaid. At which Day, before the Commiſſioners aboveſaid, (excepting Sir Francis Knowles, Sir Francis Walſingham, and Sir Chriſtopher Wray) Sir Owen Hopton, Lieutenant of the Tower, return'd his Precept in effect, That the ſaid Priſoners were committed to his Cuſtody by Commandment of the Privy-Council, there to be ſafely kept; whereupon Mr. Vice-Chamberlain demanded of the Queen's learned Counſel, what Order they would take in arraigning the Priſoners; and Anſwer was by them given, that they would proceed to the Arraignment of Savage firſt, foraſmuch as he meddled firſt in theſe Matters.

Savage's Arraignment, Indictment and Confeſſion.

Then Savage being brought to the Bar, and the other Priſoners removed, the Clerk of the Crown ſaid;

Sands, Clerk of the Crown. John Savage Gent. hold up thy Hand: Thou haſt been before this time indicted by virtue of Commiſſion, directed to Sir Edmund Anderſon, Knight, &c. (and ſo read his Indictment) which in effect was, That William Gifford, Doctor of Divinity, maliciouſly moved him at Rhemes in the Country of Champaigne, traitorouſly and wickedly to kill and murder the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, his liege Sovereign and natural Prince; affirming to the ſaid Savage, that the killing of her Majeſty was an Action lawful, honourable and meritorious: and that thereupon the ſaid John Savage did traitorouſly agree, conſpire and ſwear to murder the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, his own natural Prince. And afterwards, that is to ſay, the firſt day of April, 1586. at St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, did falſly conſpire to murder her ſaid Majeſty, to diſinherit her of her Kingdom, to ſtir up Sedition in the Realm, and to ſubvert the true Chriſtian Religion: and that to perform this malicious Practice, deviſed with John Ballard how to bring the ſame to paſs; and afterwards, the laſt day of May, did receive Letters from Morgan, William Gifford, and Gilbert Gifford, whereby they did perſuade and provoke the ſaid Savage to execute and fulfil his ſaid Purpoſe and Determination. How ſayeſt thou, Savage, art thou Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Savage.

Savage. For conſpiring at St. Giles's, I am Guilty; that I received Letters, whereby they did provoke me to kill her Majeſty, I am Guilty; that I did aſſent to kill her Majeſty, I am not Guilty.

Anderſon. Whether thou didſt conſpire at St. Giles's, or not, is not the ſubſtance of the Indictment; but, whether thou didſt conſpire or no, is the Matter, and the reſt is but Circumſtance: Moreover thou muſt ſay either, that thou art Guilty or not Guilty, for ſo hath the Law ordained every one to anſwer; and if thou anſwer not, ſo thou refuſeſt to be tried by the Law, and ſo ſhalt be cauſer of thy own Death.

Manwood. Whoſoever refuſeth to anſwer directly, the Law pronounceth grievous Puniſhment to ſuch, and they are Murderers of themſelves, which is abominable before God.

Hatton. To ſay, that thou art Guilty to that, and not to this, is no Plea; for thou muſt either confeſs it generally, or deny it generally: Wherefore delay not the time, but ſay either Guilty, or not; and if thou ſay Guilty, then ſhalt thou hear further; if not Guilty, her Majeſty's learned Counſel is ready to give evidence againſt thee.

Savage. Then, Sir, I am Guilty.

Then her Majeſty's Counſel ſaid, Albeit there were nothing now further to be done, but to proceed to Judgment upon his own Confeſſion; yet foraſmuch as they deſired that the Hearers ſhould be ſatisfied, and all the World know, how juſtly he was to be condemned, they crave licence to give ſuch Evidence as would ſufficiently and fully prove the Indictment. Which being granted, the Clerk of the Crown did read Savage's own Confeſſion, taken before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treaſurer, Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, and Mr. Secretary; which particularly in ſubſtance was,

That the ſaid John Savage ſerved in the Camp of the Prince of Parma, and from thence he departed towars Rhemes, where falling acquainted with one Hodgſon, and talking with him about Exploits of Services, it chanced Doctor Gifford over-heard them, and coming to them, ſaid, But a better Service could I tell you than all this (moving the Murder of the Queen of England:) But Savage ſeemed to object how dangerous and difficult it was. So they went to Supper, and after Supper ended, Gifford declaring unto them, how neceſſary, how juſt, and merritorious, the committing of the Murder ſhould be, ſaid, That peradventure he ſticked to do the Fact, foraſmuch as he, percaſe, was not reſolved whether the killing of a Prince were lawful or not. Whereupon he deſired him to adviſe himſelf, and to ask Opinions of others: And Savage having heard others affirm, that the Murder was lawful, foraſmuch as in their pretence ſhe was an Heretick, an Enemy to true Religion, and a Schiſmatick Perſon; at laſt, after three weeks, wherein he had not ſeen Gifford, he anſwered, That he was contented to do any thing for his Country's Good. Then ſaid Gifford, aſſure yourſelf you cannot do a greater Good unto your Country, nor whereby the Country ſhould be more beholden, eſpecially all the Throckmortons and Giffords. At laſt Savage, overcome with their Perſuaſions, gave his Aſſent and Oath, that he would put the ſame in practice. When he had given his Oath to murder her, Gifford declared unto him how, and in what Place her Majeſty might be ſlain: And therefore Gifford charged him to forbear no Time nor Place, but to murder her; and therefore, as her Majeſty ſhould go into her Chappel to hear Divine Service, Savage might lurk in the Gallery, and ſtab her with his Dagger: or if her Majeſty ſhould walk into her Garden, he might then ſhoot her through with his Dagg; or if her Majeſty did walk abroad to take the Air, as ſhe would often do, rather (as Gifford ſaid) accompanied with Women than Men, and thoſe few Men but ſlenderly weapon'd, Savage might then aſſault her with his arming Sword, and ſo make ſure Work; albeit in all theſe Caſes Savage ſhould be in extreme Hazard of his own Life, foraſmuch as the Thing itſelf was ſo lawful, honourable and meritorious, and he ſure to gain Heaven thereby. Thereupon came Savage over into England with this Intent and Purpoſe, for to kill the Queen: But not doing the ſame ſo ſoon as was looked for, he received Letters from Morgan and Gifford from beyond the Seas, perſuading him to execute the ſame. But then he fell acquainted with the moſt notorious Conſpiracy of Babington, whereby was another Plot deviſed, That there ſhould be Six which ſhould kill the Queen: Savage would not aſſent thereto, foraſmuch as he thought, except he did it himſelf, his Conſcience could not be ſatisfied, becauſe he had promiſed and vowed to do that himſelf. But Babington told him, he ſhould be one. In the mean ſeaſon was Ballard the Prieſt apprehended, the 4th of Auguſt laſt. Then came Babington to Savage, ſaying, Ballard is taken, all will be bewrayed, what Remedy now? Then ſaid Savage, no Remedy now, but to kill her preſently. Very well, ſaid Babington; then go you unto the Court to-morrow, and there execute the Fact. Nay, ſaid Savage, I cannot go to-morrow, for my Apparel is not ready, and in this Apparel ſhall I never come near the Queen. Go to, quoth Babington, here is my Ring, and all the Money I have, get thee Apparel and diſpatch it. But the ſame Night, Babington fearing leſt Savage alone ſhould fail to do it, continued his other Plot, that Six ſhould ride to the Court and do it: But the next day, Babington ſuſpecting ſomewhat, fled, and all was diſcovered. Alſo it appeared by Savage's own Confeſſion, how, between Midſummer and Alhallontide, 1585. he was ſollicited by Gifford to kill the Queen and the Earl of Leiceſter. Furthermore, divers other Proofs were ſhewed forth by Confeſſion of others, all agreeing to Savage's Confeſſion.

Attorney. Now I hope, is Savage's Indictment ſufficiently and fully proved.

Hatton. Savage, I muſt ask thee one Queſtion: Was not all this willingly and voluntarily confeſſed by thy ſelf, without Menacing, without Torture, or without offer of any Torture?

Savage ſaid, Yes.

Then ſpake her Majeſty's learned Counſel, deſiring to adjourn the Court until the morrow.

Hatton. Foraſmuch as if we ſhould now proceed with the other Priſoners which be here put, it would ask time till three of the Clock in the Morning, and the Day is already far ſpent; alſo her Majeſty's Counſel having prayed that Savage's Judgment be deferred till to-morrow by ſeven of the Clock: Therefore it is neceſſary that the Court ſhould be adjourned. Whereupon the Cryer made an O yes, that all ſhould keep their Day to-morrow Morning by ſeven of the Clock, and ſo the Court aroſe.

Wedneſday 14 Septembris, 1586.

The next Day being Wedneſday, the ſame Priſoners were brought unto the Bar, and the Commiſſioners miſſioners being ſet, the Cryer commanded every Man to hold his peace, and keep ſilence; and then ſpake Sandes the Clerk of the Crown, in ſort enſuing.

Sandes. John Ballard, Anthony Babington, John Savage, Robert Barnewell, Chidiock Titchburne, Thomas Salisbury, and Henry Donn, hold up your Hands; which being done, he ſaid, Before this time you were indicted before Sir Edmund Anderſon Knight, and others, &c. by virtue of her Majeſty's Commiſſion, &c. That where Barnardino de Mendoza a Spaniard, and Charles Pagget, the 26th Day of April, 1586. at Paris in France, did maliciouſly and wickedly deviſe, by what ways and means this Realm of England might be invaded, and by what ways and means Mary Queen of Scots might be delivered: it was concluded then, that thou the ſaid John Ballard ſhould go into this Realm of England, to underſtand and know what Ports and Landings might be procured and provided for the Enemies Invaſion, and for to learn by what means and ways the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots might be delivered from the Cuſtody wherein ſhe was. And that thou the ſaid John Ballard, coming into this Realm of England; you the ſaid Anthony Babington, John Savage, Robert Barnewell, Chidiock Titchburne, Thomas Salisbury, and Henry Donn, as falſe Traitors againſt the Crown, and the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, your true and natural Sovereign; intending to put away the Love of her Majeſty's moſt loving Subjects, the 5th Day of June, in the 28th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lady Queen Elizabeth, by the Grace of God, &c. at St. Giles's in the Fields, within the County of Middleſex, did falſly, horribly, traitorouſly and deviliſhly, conſpire, conclude and agree, the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty not only from her Royal Crown and Dignity to depoſe, but alſo her to kill and ſlay; and Sedition, Inſurrection and Rebellion to ſtir up and procure, and the Government of this Realm, and the true and Chriſtian Religion therein planted to ſubvert, and the whole State thereof for to deſtroy; and for to raiſe and levy War within the Realm. And thou the ſaid John Ballard, the 17th Day of June, in the 28th Year aforeſaid, at St. Giles's aforeſaid in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, didſt go to have Speech, and confer with thee the ſaid Anthony Babington, by what means and ways your falſe traitorous imagined Practices might be brought to paſs. And that thou the ſaid John Ballard didſt oftentimes declare of an Army of the Pope, and the King of Spain, for to invade this Realm; and didſt alſo declare that Pagget and Mendoza required them the ſaid Babington, Savage, &c. to procure means how this Realm of England might be invaded. And that there thou the ſaid Anthony Babington didſt ſay the ſame could not be brought to paſs, without the Murder of the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty; and afterwards, that is to ſay, the 7th Day of June, at St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, thou the ſaid Anthony Babington, didſt falſly, horribly, traitorouſly, and deviliſhly conſpire to kill the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, and for to deliver the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots out of the Cuſtody wherein ſhe was, and how to bring foreign Enemies for to invade this Realm. And that thou Thomas Salisbury, went to St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; traitorouſly to confer by what means and ways thy traitorous imagined Practices might be brought to paſs; and that thou didſt there conclude falſly and traitorouſly to go into thy Country, in the County of Denbigh, there to move and ſtir up Sedition and Rebellion; and for to perſuade the Subjects to conjoin with thee, for the delivery of the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots from the Cuſtody wherein ſhe was; and for to aid and aſſiſt the foreign Enemies which ſhould invade this Realm. And afterwards the 9th Day of June, that you the ſaid Anthony Babington, and John Savage, went to St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, traitorouſly to confer how, and by what means your traitorous imagined Practices might be brought to paſs; and afterwards, the 10th of June, you the ſaid Anthony Babington, and John Savage, maliciouſly between your ſelves, did appoint and conclude that thou the ſaid John Savage traitorouſly the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty ſhouldſt kill and ſlay, and her to final Deſtruction for to bring. And that thou the ſaid Babington and Savage ſhould join and aſſiſt the foreign Enemies which ſhould invade this Realm. And that thou the ſaid Anthony Babington, Chidiock Titchburne, and Robert Barnewell; afterwards, that is to ſay, the 11th Day of June, in the Year aforeſaid, went to St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, to confer by what ways and means your Treaſons might be fulfilled and brought to paſs. And thereupon the 12th Day of June, you the ſaid Babington, Titchburne and Barnewell, with divers other falſe Traitors, moſt horribly, deviliſhly, wickedly and traitorouſly did conclude and agree, that you the ſaid Robert Barnewell, Chidiock Titchburne, with divers other horrible Traitors, the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty would kill and ſlay, and the foreign Invaders would aid and aſſiſt. And furthermore, that thou the ſaid Thomas Salisbury, together with Edward Jones Eſq; and other falſe Traitors, to bring to paſs your traitorous imagined Practices, the 13th Day of June, in the Year aforeſaid, did go to St. Giles's-Field aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, to confer how your Treaſons might be brought to paſs: And the ſame 13th Day did confer, and had Speech by what means your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be performed. And afterwards, that is to ſay, the 15th Day of June, at St. Giles's-Field aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, thou the ſaid Thomas Salisbury, and the ſaid Edward Jones, did conclude, and agree, that the ſaid Edward Jones ſhould conjoin with thee for the delivery of the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots, and for to aid and aſſiſt the foreign Enemies which ſhould invade this Realm. And furthermore, that John Travers Gent. another falſe Traitor in this Conſpiracy, went to Clerkenwell in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, traitorouſly to confer with thee the ſaid Thomas Salisbury, how your traitorous compaſſed Imagination might be brought to paſs. And the ſame 15th Day of June, at Clerkenwell aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, the ſaid John Travers did traitorouſly conſpire, and agree, for the delivery of Mary Queen of Scots, and to aſſiſt the foreign Invaders of this Realm. And furthermore, that thou the ſaid Henry Donn, for the compaſſing of thy traitorous Practices, the 22d of June, in the Year aforeſaid, traitorouſly didſt repair, and go to have Speech, and confer with the ſaid Anthony Babington, and John Ballard, how your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs. And the ſame 22d of June, as well in St. Giles's aforeſaid, as in other places, didſt confer, and had Speech how your Treaſons might be brought to paſs. And that thou the ſaid Henry Donn, the 24th Day of June, at St. Giles's-Fields aforeſaid, didſt conclude, and agree with the ſaid Ballard and Babington, to perform the beſt they could for the compaſſing of your Treaſons. And furthermore, that thou the ſaid Anthony Babington, the 8th Day of July, in the Year aforeſaid, received Letters dated the 25th of June, from Mary Queen of Scots, by which ſhe ſignified unto thee, that ſhe would not be unmindful of thy Affection towards her; and required thee to ſend her Letters from Friends in France and Scotland. And the ſame Day, thou the ſaid Anthony Babington didſt write unto the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots, declaring the Plot of thy Treaſons, and requiring from her, as from thy Sovereign and Prince, Authority and Commiſſion to proceed in thy Practices; and the 25th of July received Letters of anſwer, by which the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots willingly allowed of theſe Treaſons; and alſo by her ſaid Letters, did animate, comfort and provoke thee to fulfill the ſame effectually. And furthermore, that Sir Thomas Gerrard, another falſe Traitor, and thou the ſaid John Ballard as falſe Traitors, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, the 27th of July, in the 28th Year aforeſaid, at St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid; did conſpire traitorouſly to deprive and depoſe the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty from her Royal Crown and Dignity, and her to final Death and Deſtruction for to bring; and Sedition and Rebellion to ſtir up and procure, and to alter the Government of the Realm, and the true Religion to ſubvert. And that thou the ſaid Anthony Babington, and the ſaid Sir Thomas Gerrard, the 29th of July, in the Year aforeſaid, went to St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, traitorouſly to conſpire how and by what means your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs. And thereupon the laſt Day of July, at St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid; you the ſaid Anthony Babington, and the ſaid Sir Thomas Gerrard did agree, that thou the ſaid Sir Thomas Gerrard ſhould join with thee the ſaid Anthony Babington, for the delivery of the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots from the Cuſtody wherein ſhe was, and for the aiding and aſſiſting of the foreign Enemies which ſhould invade this Realm. And furthermore, that thou the ſaid John Ballard didſt traitorouſly go to Southampton-Houſe in Holborne, within the County of Middleſex, traitorouſly to confer with John Charnock Gent. and other falſe Traitors in this Conſpiracy, how your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs; and there didſt confer and had Speech, by what means your Treaſons might be performed, and afterwards the 2d Day of Auguſt at Southampton-Houſe aforeſaid, the ſaid John Charnock did traitorouſly aſſent to perform the beſt he could in fulfilling of your Treaſons, contrary to your Allegiances you owe to the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, her Crown and Dignity, and contrary to divers Statutes in ſuch Caſe provided.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou John Ballard, art thou Guilty of theſe Treaſons whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not?

Ballard. That I practiſed the delivery of the Queen of Scots, I am Guilty; and that I went about to alter the Religion, I am Guilty; but that I intended to ſlay her Majeſty, I am not Guilty.

Sandes. Anſwer directly, art thou Guilty according to the purport of the Indictment?

Ballard. I anſwer as my Caſe is.

Anderſon. Either deny the Indictment generally, or confeſs it generally.

Hatton. Ballard, under thine own Hand are all things confeſſed; therefore now it is much vanity to ſtand vain-glorioufly in denying it.

Ballard. Then Sir, I confeſs I am Guilty.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, Anthony Babington, art thou Guilty of the Treaſons contained in the Indictment?

Babington. Then began Babington with a mild Countenance, a ſober Geſture, and a wonderful good Grace, to declare the Beginnings and Proceedings of his Treaſons, which was according as he was indicted, and according to Savage's Confeſſion, and Ballard's Indictment. In the end he laid all the blame upon Ballard, for bringing him to his Deſtruction.

Hatton. A very fit Author for ſo bad a Fact!

Babington. Very true Sir, for from ſo bad a Ground never proceeds any better Fruits; he was he that perſuaded me to kill the Qeeen, and to commit the other Treaſons, whereof now I confeſs my ſelf Guilty.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, John Savage, art thou Guilty of the Treaſons contained in the Indictment?

Savage. I am Guilty.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, Robert Barnewell, art thou Guilty? &c.

Barnewell. I never intended harm to her Majeſty's Perſon, but I confeſs I knew thereof, and I held it not lawful to kill the Queen: Howbeit, for my other Actions, foraſmuch as I know I am within the danger of the Law, I plead Guilty.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, Chidiock Titchburne, art thou Guilty of the Treaſons contained in the Indictment?

Titchborne. That I knew of theſe Treaſons and concealed them, I muſt confeſs that I am Guilty; but unto the reſt, I am not Guilty.

Sandes. You muſt either anſwer Guilty, or not Guilty.

Titchborne. What I am Guilty of, I plead Guilty, and I will confeſs no more.

Hatton. Then you may plead not Guilty.

Titchborne. Then Sir, I ſay, that I am not Guilty.

Hatton. Very well, ſtay then till we have asked as much of Salisbury and Donn, and then you ſhall be tried.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, Henry Donn, art thou Guilty of the Treaſons, &c?

Donn. When I was moved, and made privy to theſe Treaſons, I always ſaid that I prayed unto God, that that might be done, which was to his Honour and Glory.

Hatton. Then it was thus, that they ſaid the Queen ſhould be killed, and thou ſaidſt, God's Will be done.

Donn. Yea, Sir.

Hatton. O Wretch, Wretch! thy Conſcience and own Confeſſion ſhew that thou art Guilty.

Donn. Well Sir, then I confeſs I am Guilty.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, Thomas Salisbury, art thou Guilty? &c.

Salisbury. For killing of the Queen's Majeſty, I proteſt I always ſaid I would not do it for a Kingdom.

Sandes. You are indicted, that you practiſed the Delivery of the Queen of Scots, the Invaſion of this Land with foreign Forces, and of ſtirring up Rebellion and Sedition in this Realm; are you Guilty of that?

Salisbury. Then I am Guilty of that I ſtand indicted of.

Sandes. Chidiock Titchborne, thou haſt pleaded not Guilty, how wilt thou be tried?

Titchborne. I beſeech you, my Lords, give me leave to ſpeak.

Hatton. Say what you will.

Titchborne. I thank your Honours: My good Lords, in the beginning of this Broil had I ſent for my Horſes to ride into the Country; and the occaſion of my longer abode in London, was for that I had a lame Leg. Then what probability may it be, that I went to kill the Queen here hard by London; when had it not been for my lame Leg, I had been in Hampſhire?

Anderſon. Well then, if you plead not Guilty, we will proceed to your Tryal.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou, art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Titchborne. I will confeſs a Truth, and then I muſt confeſs that I am Guilty.

The Queen's Counſel. Then albeit nothing were to be done but Judgment to be given; yet for ſatisfying all the People, her Majeſty's learned Counſel gave in ſuch Evidence, as would ſufficiently prove the Indictment: Firſt, Savage's own Confeſſion according to his former Arraignment, how that Gifford hearing them talk of Services at Rhemes, ſaid I know not what Service you mean. But what ſay you to ſuch a Service, meaning the cutting of the Throat of the Queen of England, and of the Earl of Leiceſter? ſaying, he ſhould never do more good than kill an excommunicate Perſon, and that to do the ſame were a far better Service than to ſtudy Divinity. And Gifford ſaid moreover, that if Savage failed to do it, others ſhould do it. And how that Ballard going over into France at Lent laſt, did meet with one Grateley, who brought him to Charles Paggett, who told him that the Pope would reform the State here in England; and how that Bernardino de Mendoza ſaid the King of Spain his Maſter would invade this Realm. And that thereupon Ballard ſhould be ſent into England, to know what Friends they could make, and thereupon Ballard took an Oath to perform the ſame, and how that he had in mind to move Babington in that behalf before he came, and that he came over about Whitſontide laſt. And breaking the ſame with Babington, who thereupon ſaid that the Invaſion would never come to effect during her Majeſty's Life; whereupon Ballard ſaid that would eaſily be removed, and then made him privy to Savage's practice: and that thereupon Ballard ſent to Savage to ſpeak with him on Lambeth ſide, and there told Savage of Babington's Practice, and brought him to Babington, who was not friends with Savage before. Then Ballard went into the North to ſollicite the People, and at his coming up, ſaid he had made 500 ſure more than he knew of before. Furthermore, it was declared that during Ballard's abode in the North, Babington did write Letters to the Queen of Scots, a true Copy of which Letters written with Babington's own Hand were read in the Court: wherein he began, 'Moſt high and mighty Princeſs, his 'true and Sovereign Liege, to whom alone he ow-'eth Fidelity; declaring how he was her Servant, 'and that he ſtudied to deviſe her one good day's 'Service; and how himſelf with ten Gentlemen, 'and an hundred Horſe, would work her delivery 'from the Cuſtody wherein ſhe was, being in the 'Guard of a Puritan Knight, a mere Leiceſtrian. 'And how that he had appointed ſix noble Gen-'tlemen for diſpatch of the wicked Competitors, 'declaring alſo at large the remainder of his Trea-'ſons, and what means he had invented to com-'paſs the ſame.' And then Ballard returned from the North; and before it was determined that Savage ſhould have gone to the North, but he could not go, becauſe he had ſworn to kill the Queen. And therefore when Babington had deviſed that ſix ſhould kill the Queen, Savage would not agree, except himſelf were one: And how in the mean ſeaſon, Ballard on Thurſday the 4th of Auguſt, about 11 of the Clock was apprehended. Then Babington went to Titchborne's Lodging, where not finding him, he went to a Barber's without Biſhopſgate, where were his own, Titchborne's and Savage's Pictures; and on Babington's Picture was written:

Hi mihi ſunt Comites, quos ipſa pericula jungunt.

But then miſliking that, was written;

Quorſum hæc alio properantibus.

Then Babington went to Smithfield, and there walked with Titchborne, and there ſaid unto him, I had rather than 500 l. thy Leg were whole, for then this matter ſhould be diſpatched. Alſo Salisbury confeſſed how Babington, Titchborne, and he had communication as concerning the ſacking of the City of London. Alſo it was proved by their Confeſſion, how that to provide themſelves of Mony for this Practice, they had deviſed to rob all the richeſt Men in England, and to ſet fire on the Ships (although Babington miſliked to fire the Ships) and to cloy all the great Ordnance. And all the Indictment was ſufficiently and moſt plainly proved by their Confeſſions, accordingly as they were intended.

Sandes. John Ballard, thou haſt been indicted of High-Treaſon, and thereupon arraigned, and haſt pleaded Guilty; what haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, wherefore Judgment and Execution of Death ſhould not be given againſt thee?

Ballard. Ballard ſpake ſomething, but not to any effect.

Sandes. Then Sandes demanded of Babington in like manner.

Babington. Who ſaid he was Guilty of the Treaſons, according to his Confeſſion, for killing of the Queen, and the reſt by Ballard's Perſuaſion.

Hatton. O Ballard, Ballard, what haſt thou done? A ſort of brave Youths otherwiſe endued with good Gifts, by thy inducement haſt thou brought to their utter Deſtruction and Confuſion.

Babington. Yea, I proteſt before I met with this Ballard, I never meant nor intended for to kill the Queen; but by his Perſuaſions I was induced to believe that ſhe was excommunicate, and therefore lawful to murder her.

Ballard. Yea, Mr. Babington, lay all the blame upon me, but I wiſh the ſhedding of my Blood might be the ſaving of your Life: Howbeit, ſay what you will, I will ſay no more.

Hatton. Nay, Ballard, you muſt ſay more, and ſhall ſay more, for you muſt not commit High-Treaſons and then huddle them up; but is this thy Religio Catholica? Nay rather, it is Diabolica.

Sandes. John Savage, thou haſt been indicted of High-Treaſon, &c. (ut ſupra, to Ballard.)

Savage and Titchborne. Savage anſwered nothing, neither did Titchborne, being demanded in like ſort alſo.

Sandes. So Sandes demanded of Robert Barnewell in like manner.

Barne-

Barnewell. Foraſmuch as I have offended againſt the Law, I am contented to ſuffer Puniſhment according to the Law; howbeit, I here proteſt what I have done, was only for my Conſcience-ſake, neither did I ever intend Violence to her Majeſty's Perſon.

Hatton. O Barnewell, Barnewell, didſt not thou come to Richmond, and when her Majeſty walked abroad, didſt not thou there view her and all her Company, what Weapons they had, how ſhe walked alone? and didſt traverſe the Ground, and thereupon coming back to London, didſt make relation to Babington, how it was a moſt eaſy matter to kill her Majeſty, and what thou hadſt ſeen and done at the Court; yes, I know thou didſt ſo: How canſt thou then ſay, that thou never didſt intend to lay violent hands on her Majeſty? Nay, I can aſſure thee moreover, and it is moſt true which I ſay, that her Majeſty did know that thou didſt come to that end, and ſhe did ſee and mark thee how thou didſt view her and her Company; but had it been known to ſome there, as well as unto her, thou hadſt never brought news to Babington. Such is the Magnanimity of our Sovereign, which God grant be not overmuch, in not fearing ſuch Traitors as thou art.

Barnewell. What I did was only for my Conſcience ſake, and not for any Malice or Hatred to her Majeſty's Perſon.

Hatton. Then wouldſt thou have killed the Queen for Conſcience. Fie on ſuch a deviliſh Conſcience!

Sandes. Henry Donn, thou haſt been indicted of High-Treaſon, &c. ut ſupra to Ballard; What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf wherefore Judgment and Execution of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt thee?

Donn. What I have done herein, was for my Religion and Conſcience ſake; and ſince it is counted Treaſon, I muſt abide the Puniſhment, and therefore Fiat voluntas Dei.

Sandes. Salisbury, What canſt thou ſay wherefore Judgment, &c. (ut ſupra to Ballard.)

Salisbury. I beſeech her Majeſty's moſt merciful Pardon for my Offence.

Then Mr. Attorney began to declare at large the Sum of their Treaſons: How they had conſpired her Majeſty's Death, and to make the Queen of Scots Queen of England; and if peradventure ſhe miſcarried in theſe Hurliburlies as to be ſlain, then would they ſet up the King of Scots, if he were a Catholick; if he were not a Catholick, then would they enforce the King of Spain to take the Crown and ſet it on his Head, and derive him a Title from the Houſe of Clarence. But becauſe that Title would be but ſlender, the Pope ſhould diſpenſe, and ſo make it clear without queſtion. Furthermore he declared, how Prieſts continually had been the beginning of all the Treaſons committed againſt her Majeſty; he began at the Rebellion in the North, and ſo proceeded till the Treaſons of Throckmorton and Parry, and ſo ended.

Then began Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, and made an excellent good Speech, in opening and ſetting forth their Treaſons, and how they all proceeded from the wicked Prieſts the Miniſters of the Pope. And firſt he ſhewed; How theſe wicked and deviliſh Youths had conſpired to murder the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty; Secondly, To bring in foreign Invaſion; Thirdly, To deliver the Queen of Scots, and make her Queen; Fourthly, To ſack the City of London; Fifthly, To rob and deſtroy all the wealthy Subjects of this Realm; Sixthly, To kill divers of the Privy-Council, as the Earl of Leiceſter, the Lord Treaſurer, Mr. Secretary, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Amias Paulett; Seventhly, To ſet fire on all the Queen's Ships; Eighthly, To cloy all the great Ordnance; Ninthly and laſtly, To ſubvert Religion, and the whole State of Government. The Inventers and Beginners whereof, were theſe deviliſh Prieſts and Seminaries, againſt whom he doubted the Parliament had not yet ſufficiently provided, who, now-a-days, do not go about to ſeduce the antient and diſcreet Men, for they (as the Prieſts ſay) be too cold; but they aſſail, with their Perſuaſions, the younger Sort, and of thoſe, the moſt ripe Wits, whoſe high Hearts and ambitious Minds do carry them headlong to all Wickedneſs. In the end, he concluded with Remorſe for the Youth of ſome of theſe unhappy Men, and with Deteſtation of the Facts of Ballard; and alſo ſhewed forth a notable Proof of the Falſhood of theſe lying Papiſts, which was a Book printed at Rome, and made by the Papiſts, wherein they affirm, That the Engliſh Catholicks which ſuffer for Religion, be lapped in Bear-Skins, and baited to death with Dogs; a moſt monſtrous Lye, and manifeſt Falſhood.

Then ſpake my Lord Anderſon to the like effect, almoſt in every Point, in abhorring the Abomination of the Jeſuits and Seminaries; and in the end concluded with an Exhortation for the Health of their Souls; and laſt of all, pronounced the terrible Sentence of their Condemnation.

The Tryal of Edward Abington, Charles Tilney, Edward Jones, John Travers, John Charnock, Jerome Bellamy, and Robert Gage, in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Thurſday being the 15*th Day of* September, Anno 28 Reginæ Elizabethæ, 1586.

ON Thurſday the 15th of September, the Commiſſioners came, and the Cryer commanded Silence, and the Lieutenant of the Tower was commanded to bring forth the Priſoners, which were Edward Abington, Charles Tilney, and Edward Jones, Eſquires; John Travers, John Charnock, Jerome Bellamy and Robert Gage, Gentlemen; and Elizabeth Bellamy Widow. All which the Lieutenant of the Tower had ready at the Bar, and there informed the Court, the Woman's name was Katherine, and not Elizabeth: whereupon the Lieutenant was commanded to take her from the Bar, and bring her to ſome other place.

Whereupon Sandes, Clerk of the Crown, began in ſort enſuing; Edward Abington, Charles Tilney, Edward Jones, John Travers, John Charnock, Jerome Bellamy and Robert Gage, hold up your Hands: which being done, he proceeded, ſaying, Before this time ye were indicted, that where Bernardyne de Mendoza a Spaniard, Charles Paget and John Ballard, the 2d day of April, in the 28th year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lady the Queen's Majeſty, that now is, at Paris in France, did confer in what Place this Realm of England moſt aptly might be invaded, and what Aid and Aſſiſtance might be procured for the ſame, and how and by what Ways and Means Mary Queen of Scots might be deliver'd from the Cuſtody wherein ſhe was. And that thereupon it was reſolved by the Counſel of Morgan, a moſt notorious Traitor, that the ſaid Ballard ſhould paſs into this Realm of England to underſtand what Help might be procured, and to prepare Ports to land the Enemies, for to invade the Realm, and to prepare Ways and Means how Mary Queen of Scots might be delivered; and thereupon the ſaid John Ballard, coming into England, you the ſaid Edward Abington, Charles Tilney, Edward Jones and John Travers, together with Anthony Babington, John Ballard, John Savage, Henry Donn, Thomas Salisbury, Chidiock Titchburne and Robert Barnewell, as falſe Traitors, the 8th day of June, in the 28th year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lady the Queen's Majeſty, that now is, at St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, did conſpire the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty, not only from her Crown and Dignity to depoſe, but alſo her to kill and ſlay, and to ſtir up Sedition and Rebellion in the Realm, and Slaughter among the Subjects for to make, and the Government and Religion to ſubvert, and the whole Eſtate for to deſtroy, and divers Strangers, her Majeſty's Enemies, to invade the Realm, did procure and ſtir up. And afterwards, the twelfth day of June, in the year aforeſaid, thou the ſaid Charles Tilney and Anthony Babington, Robert Barnewell, and Chidiock Titchburne, went to St. Giles's aforeſaid, to confer by what Ways and Means, your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs; and there, the ſame day, had Speech, and did confer how your Treaſons might be performed: And on the ſaid 12th day of June, in the year aforeſaid, at St. Giles's aforeſaid, did conclude, that thou the ſaid Charles Tilney, and Robert Barnewell, and Chidiock Titchburne, would kill the Queen, and aid the foreign Enemies that ſhould invade the Realm; and that thou Edward Jones, with Thomas Salisbury, to perform your traitorous Imaginations, the 13th day of June, in the 28th year aforeſaid, went to St. Giles's aforeſaid, to confer how your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs. And thereupon thou the ſaid Edward Jones, with the ſaid Thomas Salisbury, the 15th day of June, in the year aforeſaid, at St. Giles's aforeſaid, did conclude and agree traitorouſly to join with the ſaid Thomas Salisbury, for the Delivery of the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots, and for to aid and aſſiſt the foreign Enemies, which ſhould invade this Realm: And that thou the ſaid John Travers, to fulfil thy traitorous compaſſed Imaginations, the 15th day of June, in the 28th year aforeſaid, traitorouſly diddeſt go to Clerkenwell, within the County of Middleſex, to confer by what Means your Treaſons might be brought to paſs: And the ſame 15th day of June, at Clerkenwell aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, had Speech, and did confer how your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs. And the 16th of June, at Clerkenwell aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, didſt appoint and conclude, with the ſaid Thomas Salisbury, to join with him for the delivery of Mary Queen of Scots, and in aiding and aſſiſting the foreign Enemies which ſhould invade this Realm. And further, that thou John Charnock, with Thomas Gerrard Knight, John Ballard and Anthony Babington, the 27th of July, at St. Giles's aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, didſt conſpire the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty, not only from her Crown and Dignity to depoſe, but alſo her to murder and ſlay, and to make Sedition and Rebellion, and Slaughter of her Majeſty's Subjects, and the True and Chriſtian Religion to ſubvert, and the whole Eſtate and Government to alter. And that thou John Charnock traitorouſly didſt go to Southampton-Houſe in Holbourn, within the ſaid County of Middleſex, the laſt day of July; and the ſame laſt day didſt confer there with John Ballard, how your traitorous compaſſed Imaginations might be brought to paſs; and thereupon, the 2d day of Auguſt, at Southampton-Houſe in Holbourn aforeſaid, didſt conclude and agree to do the beſt thou couldſt for Performance of the Treaſons aforeſaid. And that thou Jerome Bellamy and Robert Gage, knowing that the ſaid Anthony Babington, Robert Barnewell and Henry Donn, had committed High-Treaſon at Harrow on the Hill, in the County of Middleſex, did receive and aid, contrary to your Allegiance you owe to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, and contrary to divers Statutes in ſuch Caſe provided. How ſayeſt thou Edward Abington, art thou Guilty of theſe Treaſons whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Abington. Not Guilty.

Sandes. How wilt thou be tried?

Abington. By God and my good Country.

Sandes. Thou muſt ſay, by God and my Country.

Abington. Yea Sir, by God and my Country.

Sandes. How ſayſt thou Charles Tilney, art thou Guilty of theſe Treaſons whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Tilney. In no ſort Guilty, no more guilty than you are.

Sandes. Anſwer me directly, art thou Guilty or Not Guilty?

Tilney. No Sir, I am not Guilty; and that I am ready to anſwer and prove.

Sandes. How wilt thou be tried?

Tilney. By God and honeſt Men.

Hatton. What Anſwers are theſe? Abington ſays, By God and my good Country; and thou ſayſt, By God and honeſt Men. Thou muſt ſay, by God and my Country.

Tilney. Yea Sir, ſo I ſay.

In like manner Jones, Travers, Charnock, Bellamy and Gage pleaded Not Guilty.

Thereupon was an Inqueſt of Middleſex called, who appeared at the Bar, and their Names were, Richard Martin, William Fleetwood, Jaſper Cholmeley, William Kempton, Robert Loſhe and John Barnes, Eſquires; John Hill, Robert Wood, Thomas Hargrave, Thomas Clark, John Chawkellett and John Draper, Gentlemen.

Then ſaid Sandes to the Priſoners, Have you any Challenge?

Tilney. No not I; for I know them not.

Anderſon. Lieutenant of the Tower, take away Gage and Bellamy to ſome other place out of the hearing of the Court.

So the Lieutenant did.

Abington's Tryal.

Then ſaid Abington, I beſeech your Honours I may have a pair of Writing-Tables to ſet down what is laid againſt me, that I may yield a ſufficient Anſwer thereunto.

Sandes. It was never the Courſe here.

Hatton. When you hear any thing you are deſirous to anſwer, you ſhall ſpeak an anſwer at full, which is better than a pair of Tables.

Puckering. Well Sir, then will we give Evidence. And firſt, becauſe it falls out that Abington and Tilney were acquainted with Savage's Conſpiracy, we will ſhew a little that which yeſterday was opened at full; and therefore, by Ballard's Confeſſion, this Summer was Twelve-month, Ballard went into Scotland to underſtand of the Willingneſs of the People, and Tilney offered to go with him.

Tilney. Yea Sir, ſo I did; What can you prove by that?

Puckering. Soft, I will tell you when I come to give Evidence againſt you. After Chriſtmas, Ballard went into the North, and afterwards had Speech with Tilney to go over beyond the Seas, and Tilney agreed and was contented. Ballard went over, and ſent Letters to Tilney, deſiring to ſtay till Ballard came over back, and he would tell him more. When Ballard came over, Tilney was acquainted with Savage's Purpoſe, and Abington too: But then Ballard fell acquainted with Babington, and ſo came a greater Conſpiracy. And Abington put forth a Propoſition to ſurprize the Queen, and Tilney was privy: And it is under Babington's hand, that Tilney, Titchburne, Barnewell and Savage undertook to kill the Queen. Jones, at London, talked with Salisbury, and ſtay'd for him, and was privy to a Writing that was ſent for Salisbury's Apprehenſion. And Jones repaired unto Salisbury at Midnight, being in Jones's Houſe, and told him, That he had undone them all, and lent him his own Horſe, and his Man's Cloak. Charnock, the ſame day that Ballard was taken, was moved by Babington to be one of the ſix to kill the Queen; and he aſſented, and afterwards lent Babington Apparel to fly in. Whereupon was Ballard's Confeſſion read, which was, that he confeſſed, That he conferred with Pagett about the State of our Country; and that Ballard ſaid, It is now more eaſy to invade the Realm than before, becauſe the Earl of Leiceſter, with the beſt of our Captains, were in Flanders: and that they two talked with Mendoza; who asked them, what armed Men they could make, and what Ports they could yield to the Invaders for to land in; and Mendoza told them, his Maſter had a greater Preparation than ever he had by Sea, but he knew not for what Matter; but he ſaid, He cared not whether they have any Help of them or no: but ſaid, If you will not aſſiſt us herein, we will be as Conquerors when we come, and uſe him alſo like Enemies. For when it came to the brunt, they always ſhrunk, only he had a great care for the Delivery of the Queen of Scots, and ſo ſent Ballard into England; and ſaid, His Maſter, the King of Spain, had vowed to loſe his Crown, and the Pope his Life, but they would convert England, and deliver the Queen of Scots. After Ballard arrived, he talked with Babington, and he ſeemed willing: Alſo he confeſſeth the killing of the Queen.

Attorney. Edward Abington, upon his Examination, denieth he knew Ballard; which we will prove to be falſe: Therefore read firſt his Denial, which was, That he denied the Surprizing of her Majeſty; he denieth the knowledge of Ballard, Forteſcue, or Brown; he denieth the Delivery of the Queen of Scots; and being told, that the Frenchmen would invade this Land, he ſaid, He would ſpend his Life in her Majeſty's Defence: He confeſſeth, that on Sunday was ſevennight, he and his Brother lay on a Hay-mow.

Sollicitor. Whoſo is guiltleſs will ſpeak truly and directly, but the Counterfeit muſt ſpeak Untruths. Thereupon was another Examination of his read, which was, That Ballard being brought to his face, ſaid, That Ballard was not with him ſince Whitſuntide; but he confeſſeth, he knew him ſome years ago at Chertſey. Abington's Brother confeſſeth, That Ballard was twice at Edward Abington's Lodging at Charing-Croſs; and at one of the times his Brother Ballard talked ſecretly in one end of the Chamber: And Ballard was firſt acquainted with Thomas Abington at Rhemes; and Ballard ſaith, That he made Edward Abington acquainted with theſe Treaſons, and he gave his Conſent. And Babington ſaith, That Abington moved firſt the Surprize of the Queen. Then was read the Confeſſion of Babington, which was, that Edward Abington moved firſt the Surprize of the Queen to ſome ſtrong Place, and there to move her for Reformation or Toleration of Religion. Tilney confeſſeth, That at the Three-Tonns in Newgate-Market Babington moved a Propoſition for removing of the Lord-Treaſurer and Mr. Secretary; and that Abington ſpake broad

Speeches

Speeches concerning that Matter; and that Tilney did reprove him for the ſame.

Tilney. I deny it, I never ſaid ſo.

Puckering. Here is your own Hand, and read it.

Tilney. It is mine own Hand, but what did I mean? When I ſaid concerning that Matter, I muſt interpret mine own Meaning, I meant to ſpeak broad Words concerning Religion.

Attorney. Then belike you reproved Abington for Religion.

Tilney. Yea, I reproved him for ſpeaking broad Words concerning Religion.

Attorney. What Matter did you talk of then but Treaſon? It is well the Jury doth hear your Anſwers.

Manwood. Tilney, you are too hot, this Evidence is againſt Abington, you ſhall anſwer your ſelf when it comes to you.

Sollicitor. Tilney confeſſeth that there was ſpeech between him and Abington concerning a Surprize of the Queen; and that Abington ſaid, he would ride to Thomas Salisbury into the Country.

Then ſaid the Queen's Attorney unto the Jury, You perceive how that Abington is found falſe for his Acquaintance with Ballard.

Then was read Babington's Confeſſion, that Abington and Tilney were diſpoſed to kill the Queen.

Attorney. Salisbury confeſſeth, that Abington deſired him to make haſte to his Country; and ſaid, He underſtood by Babington of certain Matters, and that he would come to Salisbury's Country for Things to be done ſhortly.

Sollicitor. He confeſſeth himſelf, that he was privy unto it, and concealed it.

Then was read Babington's Confeſſion before the Lords, which was, That when certain Seminaries in Rome came to take leave of the Pope, and to kiſs his Foot, the Pope asked, what they were; and it was told him, that they were Engliſhmen, which went to ſpend their Lives for Reformation of Religion in their Country. The Pope ſaid, it was a good ſlow Way; but ſaid, that he would make a Bridge over that Ditch into England e'er it were long. Alſo he confeſſeth, That he and Babington heard Edward Abington uſe ſpeech to the ſame effect.

So you hear how Babington ſets down Abington to be one of the Six to kill the Queen.

Alſo here is Ballard's own Hand, that Babington appointed Six to kill the Queen, Abington, Titchburne, Tilney, and others.

Abington. It is very well, if I be at Babington's Commandment; I proteſt I never knew thereof.

Sollicitor. Here is Babington's Letter to the Queen of Scots, which proveth you to be one.

The Letter was read, among other, this Sentence was in; There be ſix noble Gentlemen which have undertaken the Tragical Execution, meaning the murdering of the Queen of England, only it reſteth, that their Attempt be honourably rewarded.

Abington. I proteſt before Heaven and Earth, as I am a true Chriſtian, I never knew thereof.

The Letter went further, and contained this; All the Actors have vowed, either to die, or elſe to perform their Purpoſe.

Abington. This is Babington's Brag, to get Credit with the Queen of Scots.

Attorney. We will prove, Abington, that thou didſt provide Armour of proof too for your Brother and your ſelf, and one for another Perſon.

Then was Foſter's Examination, an Armourer in Holborn, read, which proved ſo much directly.

Attorney, to Hatton. Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, you deſired Abington to ſet down the Truth of theſe Things, thereupon he ſet down a great deal in Writing, and yeſterday he tore it in a hundred pieces; and here Mr. Lieutenant of the Tower hath given me the pieces, and here they be.

Hatton. Abington, you be very obſtinate, and ſeem indurate in theſe Treaſons.

Abington. I will anſwer what is laid againſt me: My firſt acquaintance was with Savage, by reaſon that my Brother and he were both of Bernard's-Inn, and by him came I acquainted with Savage, who talking with me, he told me of a Book written at Rhemes, which inveighed againſt the Earl of Northumberland, Throckmorton and Parry, for that they intended Violence againſt her Majeſty's Perſon, which Book I liked; yea but, ſaid Savage, it may be but for a Colour. Then he told me, that it was written but for to blind the Counſellors in England, and make them ſecure and careleſs, when in very deed they at Rhemes deſire nothing more than the Murder of the Queen of England. Then I anſwered, He that allows of Parry's Actions, ſavours not of Divinity. And this I proteſt is true. For Ballard's Acquaintance, true it is, he came unto my Chamber, and I knew him not; and then he told me, he had ſeen me four years ago at Chertſey. So then I asked, What News? And he told me of an Invaſion intended againſt this Country. Whereunto I gave ſuch cold Anſwers, and ſuch cold Entertainment, as I never ſaw him ſince. For my Doings with Babington, his Lodging was right in my way to go from Charing-Croſs, through the Fields to London; and true it is, he made me privy to his Treaſons, and that I concealed them: And when he told me Strangers would invade this Realm to reform Religion, I proteſted to Babington, I had rather be drawn to Tyburn by the Heels for my Religion, than to have it reform'd by Strangers. And for Babington's Accuſation, what force can it be of? for he having committed and confeſſed Treaſon in the moſt high degree, there was no hope for him but to accuſe.

Hatton. For Babington's Hope thereof, I am perſuaded he hath no Hope at all; and my Lords here can aſſure there is no Hope at all of his Life; but he confeſſed what he knew for diſcharge of his Conſcience; and what he did, he did it willingly and voluntarily; for had not Babington voluntarily named Abington, who could have named Abington? And had he not alſo willingly accuſed Tilney, who could have accuſed Tilney?

Abington. Well then Sir, to you my Lords the Judges, I do now ſpeak: There is a Statute in the 1ſt and 13th of this Queen made, That who ſhall conſpire, &c. it ſhall be Treaſon, &c. provided, that he ſhall have two lawful Witneſſes, face to face, to avow it, &c. Now may it pleaſe your Honours to have two lawful Witneſſes to teſtify againſt me. As for Babington, what Witneſs can he be, a condemned Man, Savage a condemned Man alſo, and Ballard a condemned Man likewiſe? So then there is no Witneſs againſt me; but I ſtand not upon this point, I ſtand upon mine own not Guiltineſs. Furthermore, it is not proved that Babington and I would be one to kill the Queen; but that he had appointed me to be one, and it is not proved that I knew thereof; and that I ſaid to Salisbury, I would come into the Country to underſtand of Things to be done, I proteſt I remember not; for what needed any coming into the Country to underſtand, when as Salisbury and Babington did ride to St. Albans in Babington's Coach?

Manwood. You anſwer by Arguments, and not by Anſwers.

Abington. If it be true, that they rode together, as it is moſt true, what needed thoſe Speeches?

Manwood. That only anſwereth that Babington might confer; but it doth not anſwer, that you needed not to go into the Country to underſtand of things to bedone, for you rode not in the Coach with them.

Abington. I proteſt before God, I remember not that ever I ſaid ſo.

Manwood. Let the Jury conſider of this Anſwer.

Anderſon. For Anſwer to you, Abington, for the point of the Statute, true it is, had you been indicted on the Statute of the 1ſt and 13th of this Queen, two Witneſſes ought to have been produced; but you ſtand indicted by the Common Law, and the Statute of 25 Eliz. 3. which is, who ſhall intend the Death of the King, &c. and in that Statute is not contained any ſuch Proof.

Tilney. The Statute of 25 Eliz. 3. is, who ſhall compaſs or imagine, &c.

Anderſon. Very well, and not contained to prove by Witneſſes, as you would have it.

Sollicitor. See how they would acquit themſelves for want of Witneſs, and if it ſhould be as they would have it, then could never any Treaſon be ſufficiently proved. The Statute of primo is ſo, the Overt-act muſt be proved by two Witneſſes; but the Statute of 25 Eliz. 3. is, who ſhall imagine; how then can that be proved by honeſt Men, being a ſecret Cogitation which lieth in the Minds of Traitors? And ſuch Traitors will never reveal their Cogitations unto honeſt men, but unto ſuch as themſelves, and they I hope be no honeſt Men; ſo then they would have their Treaſons never revealed.

Abington. For anſwer that I lay in a Hay-mow, it is moſt true I was in Hertfordſhire, when my Houſe in Worceſterſhire was in ſearching, and there I heard how my Houſe was ſearch'd; and coming to Worceſterſhire, the Country hearing of the horribleneſs of the Things wherewith I was charged, I knew none would receive me nor entertain me; and ſo I was conſtrained to lie in a Hay-mow. And for preparing mine Armour, I proteſt I had the ſame in Shoe-Lane, and would have had it ready againſt the going over of the Earl of Leiceſter; and hearing him in Holbourn to be commended for the moſt ſingular Man in England in his Trade, I ſent to him to have it finiſhed.

Then ſaid the Attorney to the Jury, You have heard how Babington confeſſeth Abington would be one to kill the Queen, and you have heard his Anſwer thereunto.

Abington. If Babington ever moved it to me, let me die for it.

Attorney. It is Babington's own Confeſſion, that Six, whereof Abington was one, diſpoſed to kill the Queen.

Abington. If ever I imagined, or any part thought, of the Indictment which you have alledged, I beſeech God I ſink as I ſtand in this Place.

Anderſon. You had a Seminary Prieſt in your Houſe.

Abington. He was only with me, but not in mine Houſe.

Hatton. Before Babington was taken, Ballard did voluntarily declare, that you two, Abington and Tilney, were diſpoſed to kill the Queen.

Anderſon. The Jury hath heard the Indictment and your Anſwers, let them conſider thereof in their Conſciences.

Tilney's Tryal.

Firſt was read his Confeſſion, wherein he deny'd Ballard's Acquaintance, and he denied that ever he heard Ballard ſay, we ſhould have a new World ſhortly. Then was read Ballard's Confeſſion, which was, That before Chriſtmas laſt, Ballard did confeſs Gage and Tilney at a Houſe in Holbourn.

Tilney. I denied Ballard's Acquaintance, becauſe, by the laſt Statute, he is a Traitor, and not for my Guilt or Crime. And for that I was confeſſed by him, it was no otherwiſe than all the Subjects of the Realm of England were confeſſed in the days of King Henry VII.

Sollicitor. But now is the ſtate of this Realm quite other than it was in the days of Henry VII. For now the Pope is the greateſt Enemy her Majeſty hath, but it was not ſo then.

Tilney. How know I the Pope is her greateſt Enemy?

Hatton. Know not you how he invaded the Realm of Ireland?

Attorney. Know not you how he induced Mary?

Tilney. No Sir, in my Conſcience wherein I ſhall die, I never conſpired any Treaſon.

Manwood. Were not you ſworn when you were made a Penſioner? How far different is it to theſe Actions, to be confeſſed, and to conceal Traitors?

Tilney. Yea Sir, but I was not then a Catholick, but now I am; for which I thank God moſt heartily.

Puckering. Did not you ſay, if her Majeſty would forgive you this, you would never deal more with any Seminary Prieſt; but if there were any old Prieſt in England, you would have him, if he were to be gotten for Money?

Tilney. But what is this? This only concerneth my Religion, which I was promiſed I ſhould not be charged withal.

Attorney. No more you are for Lands nor Goods, this is only an Introduction to the Treaſon.

Then was read Tilney's own Confeſſion, wherein he confeſſed (which alſo was given in evidence againſt Abington) that Abington ſaid, Why might not her Majeſty be as well ſurprized as the Queen of Scots? Which Words he ſpake at the Three-Tuns in Newgate-Market. He confeſſed, Ballard came to his Chamber in Weſtminſter, in his Withdrawing-Chamber (as it was termed) where Ballard told him, He had provided a Penſion for Windſor in France, and would do ſo for him; and told him of an Invaſion intended againſt this Realm: He confeſſeth, he would have gone to Scotland to have liv'd there among the Catholicks, when Ballard went thither; and ſaid, that Windſor made him acquainted with Ballard.

Tilney. Theſe things I confeſs, but yet 'tis no Treaſon to hear Treaſon talked of by others; as for my ſelf, what Preſumptions may there be if I ſhould be Guilty, being her Majeſty's ſworn Servant, (whoſe Highneſs God grant long to reign) a young Man of ſmall Ability, neither in Lands nor Goods, able to make any Power at all: for Religion, I confeſs I am a Catholick, which I thank God for it, but that I am not now to be charged withall. As for Ballard's coming to me, I do confeſs it, but it was in ſuch publick manner, as no Man in the World could judge his coming for any ſuch intent as Treaſon: For he came openly in the Day-time, not in the Night, and never came diſguiſed.

Sollicitor. Tilney, you ſay true, he came not diſguiſed, but I will tell you how he came; being a Popiſh Prieſt, he came in a grey Cloak laid on with Gold Lace, in Velvet Heſe, a cut Sattin Doublet, a fair Hat of the neweſt Faſhion, the Band being ſet with Silver Buttons; a Man and a Boy after him, and his Name Captain Forteſcue.

Tilney. All this concerneth my Religion only.

Sollicitor. You confeſs that you were privy to theſe Treaſons; then we will prove directly that you did aſſent thereunto.

Then was read Ballard's Confeſſion, wherein Ballard thinketh that Tilney did aſſent to kill the Queen, for he ſaw him not diſſent when he told him theſe Treaſons: likewiſe Tilney requeſted him for ſome Penſion in France when he came over.

Tilney. I ſtand upon the Aſſent.

Sollicitor. Ballard affirmeth it; Babington ſaid that you Tilney were one of the ſix.

Tilney. Babington told him ſo, that proves that Babington forſooth will be a Stateſman, when God knows he is a Man of no Gravity.

Sollicitor. Babington's Confeſſion is, that Tilney and Abington were diſpoſed to kill the Queen.

Puckering. Babington heard yeſterday at the Bar, that Tilney would have had her Majeſty ſet upon in her Coach.

Tilney. No, I ſaid not ſo, only at the Three Tunns in Newgate-Market, I ſaid it might be her Majeſty might be ſet upon in her Coach, and I ſaid no more. But that proves not I did conſent.

Attorney. You have ſaid enough, if we had no other Evidence againſt you.

Tilney. How ſo?

Attorney. Becauſe you have confeſſed High-Treaſon.

Tilney. I tell you no, there is no ſuch matter intended in my words.

Manwood. Your Cenſure was your Aſſent, and your Cenſure was to kill the Queen in her Coach.

Hatton. Your Words prove that you were concluded upon the Matter, and were deviſing on the Manner.

Attorney. Babington and Ballard reckoned Tilney for one of the ſix to kill the Queen, as by their Confeſſion appeareth.

Tilney. The firſt time that I knew Babington, was, that he came to my Chamber in Weſtminſter, to crave mine Acquaintance; I uſed him courteouſly, as appertained to a Gentleman. The ſecond time was at the Three Tunns in Newgate-Market. And the third time was in the Fields, and I never ſaw him elſe: that I ſhould truſt him in ſo high a matter for three times Acquaintance, is altogether improbable. As for Babington himſelf, albeit he be very wiſe, yet is he altogether vain.

Hatton. Babington declared all this voluntarily, for who could accuſe Tilney before Babington named Tilney?

Tilney. I will tell you how I meant my words in Newgate-Market. If a Servant which is faithful, knowing where his Maſter's Mony is, do ſay, if I would be a Thief, I could rob my Maſter, for in ſuch a place his Mony is; this proves not that he would rob his Maſter, albeit he uſed ſuch words. And ſo, although I ſaid ſhe might be ſet upon in her Coach, it proveth not that I aſſented to the ſame; for I proteſt before God, I never intended any Treaſon in my Life.

Anderſon. But if a Servant knowing where his Maſter's Mony is among Thieves, which are deviſing to take away the Maſter's Mony, do ſay, This way my Maſter's Mony may be taken, and be in view when it is taken; I ſay that he is acceſſary. And you Tilney being amongſt Traitors, that were deviſing how to kill her Majeſty, to ſhew by what means her Majeſty might be ſlain, it manifeſtly proveth your Aſſent. Therefore let the Jury conſider of their Evidence.

Tilney. Then ſaid Tilney unto the Jury, My very good Friends and Countrymen of the Jury, foraſmuch as I am charged highly to have offended againſt the Law, I am now to be tried according to the Law by you. And therefore if you ſhall find this Evidence ſufficient to prove my Guilt, you ought to find me Guilty; but if you ſee in your Conſcience that I have anſwered fully each Objection laid unto my Charge, I charge you to find me not Guilty, as you will anſwer me at the dreadful Day of Judgment.

The Arraignment of Jones.

Firſt was read his Confeſſion, That he ſaid to John Travers at Jones's Houſe in Denbighſhire, Salisbury hath brought us all to Deſtruction; what remedy, ſaid Travers, it is then time for us to be packing. But Jones lent Salisbury his Horſe to ride away with. Salisbury confeſſed he acquainted Jones with the foreign Invaſion, and Delivery of the Queen of Scots, deſiring his aid, which he promiſed him in Lincolns-Inn-Fields: And how that Salisbury fled upon Jones's relation of Babington's Apprehenſion. Alſo Salisbury confeſſed that he cauſed Jones to proteſt he would not diſcover him. Jones ſaith in his Examination, that Salisbury never asked his Aſſent, becauſe he always thought himſelf aſſured of him. Alſo Jones ſaid to Saliſbury, what have you don? you have undone us all. This was the effect of the Evidence which was given againſt him.

Jones. For concealing of the Treaſon, I put me to her Majeſty's Mercy; I confeſs I haſtened Salisbury away.

Manwood. Then you deny not but that you horſed him away.

Jones. Then ſaid Jones to the Jury, I confeſs this, and put me to her Majeſty's Mercy; my Caſe was hard and lamentable, either to betray my deareſt Friend, whom I loved as my own ſelf; and to diſcover Thomas Salisbury, the beſt Man in my Country, of whom I only made choice; or elſe to break my Allegiance to my Sovereign, and ſo undo my ſelf and my Poſterity for ever. And this was my Caſe.

Travers's Arraignment.

Salisbury confeſſed he acquainted John Travers with his Treaſons, and that he conſented unto him. And Travers ſaid unto him, he would go beyond the Seas with him. Salisbury confeſſeth he exacted no Oath of Jones and Travers when he acquainted them, but that they proteſted they would not diſcover him. Alſo it was proved that when Jones intended to have gone to Ireland, now lately when it was to have been inhabited by the Engliſhmen, Travers asked him what he meant to go now, when his preſence was neceſſary; and ſaid, if Mr. Salisbury came home, he would ſurely ſtay him.

Then was read Culey's Confeſſion, that Travers and Salisbury fled, and Travers called his own Name Lacon, and Salisbury called his Name John- ſon, ſon, and that Culey would not change his Name, becauſe he had changed it before.

Travers. I fled and changed my Name, becauſe I was a Catholick, and doubted to be troubled for my Religion and Conſcience.

Sollicitor. Nay Travers, thou didſt fly for Treaſon, for when Jones told you Salisbury had undone you all, thou ſaidſt what remedy, and that it was time to be packing; and you had your Chaplain with you, Culey I mean.

Travers. If he be a Prieſt, I honour him for his Prieſthood. And ſaid little elſe, as one that ſeemed not to care what Evidence came againſt him, but was reſolute to be hanged.

He confeſſed nothing in his Examination, he denieth he had any Speech with Babington, ſaving Salutations. He confeſſed he ſerved in the Spaniſh Camp, and there was acquainted with Savage, and it was proved againſt him, that he ſaid Savage's ſudden Bravery would bewray all their matters.

Charnock. I confeſs that Ballard did make me acquainted with the Invaſion of the Realm, and the other Treaſons, and thereupon I ſounded Savage, who anſwered he was not his own Man, but ſaid there was one in the Court who ſhould have done that long ſince, and that he was a Morganiſt.

Then was read Babington's Confeſſion, that Charnock promiſed him to be at his Commandment, and Babington told him the Queen of Scots liked of their Actions.

And Ballard's Confeſſion was read, that he told Charnock at large, and Charnock liked very well, and ſaid he would do the beſt he could herein.

And Savage's Confeſſion was read, which was, that Babington moved Charnock to be one of the ſix, and Charnock told Savage that Babington moved him alſo.

Charnock. That I ſaid to Babington I would be at his Commandment, it is very true; for Babington was my good Friend in divers reſpects, and therefore I thought it pertained to Courteſy, to ſay I remained at his Commandment.

Sollicitor. Nay, thou didſt offer to be at Babington's Commandment in this Action of Treaſon.

Then was Babington's Confeſſion read, which was, that he talking in Pauls with Charnock of the Queen's Death, Charnock promiſed to be diſpoſed by him in this Action, and that he offered to ſpend his Life, wherein Babington ſhould direct him.

Then was read Charnock's own Confeſſion, wherein he confeſſed he lent Apparel to Savage to fly in, and that he fled into the Woods himſelf.

Charnock. Savage and I were acquainted when he was of Barnard's-Inn, and I of Fiernival's-Inn, and we both ſerved in the Spaniſh Camp together, and Savage brought me acquainted with Ballard. As for Savage, becauſe I knew he was an excellent Soldier, a Man skilful in Languages, and learned beſides; when I met him here in England, I was glad to renew old Acquaintance with him. That I ſhould conſent to Ballard the 2d Day of Auguſt, ſee (if you pleaſe) what probability there is to the contrary: For on the 4th of Auguſt Ballard was apprehended, and before his Apprehenſion Ballard ſent a Letter to Mr. Secretary, offering to diſcover all; my ſelf was the Bearer of the Letter, and delivered it to one of Mr. Secretary's Men: what likelihood is it then, that I knowing of this Letter after that Ballard was taken, would conſent to Babington to kill the Queen, or that I conſented to Ballard the 2d of Auguſt; Ballard being apprehended the 4th of Auguſt, and before that time had written to Mr. Secretary, and my ſelf was the Meſſenger.

Hatton. Savage confronted thee to thy face, and avouched theſe things to thy face.

Charnock. For flying away with my Friend, I fulfilled the part of a Friend therein.

Hatton. To perform thy Friendſhip, thou didſt break thy Allegiance to thy Sovereign.

Charnock. Therein have I offended.

Anderſon. You of the Jury, you have now heard their ſeveral Anſwers at large; go together and conſider thereof in your Conſciences.

Then the Jury upon this Evidence and their Anſwers, went up to a Houſe to agree upon their Verdict; and theſe five Priſoners were ſent away from the Bar.

Then Bellamy and Gage were called to the Bar, and a new Inqueſt were called and appeared at the Bar, and Evidence was given againſt the two Priſoners in ſort enſuing.

The Arraignment of Gage.

Firſt, was given in Evidence that Gage knew Ballard to be a Prieſt, and was reconciled, and gave Lodging unto Ballard, and attended Ballard as his Man when he went into the North to provoke the People to Rebellion: Alſo when all the matter was diſcovered, he lent Savage a Horſe to fly to Croyden, and directed him to one of Savage's Father's Men, who ſhould help him away: Alſo that he lent Babington his Apparel to fly in. Then was ſhewed forth his own Confeſſion, which was, that Ballard told him we ſhould have a new World ſhortly, and that he lodged Ballard for his Safety: Alſo he confeſſed, that during his flight he lodged in a Barn: Alſo he confeſſed that he was reconciled by Ballard.

Alſo Charnock's Confeſſion was read, that Gage borrowed Apparel of him to fly in.

Then Gage was asked by the Lord Chief Baron Manwood, wherefore he fled into the Woods.

Gage ſtoutly and friendly anſwered, for Company.

Bellamy's Tryal.

He confeſſed that the noiſe of the Country was, that they (that is to ſay) Babington, Barnewell and Donn, had conſpired the Queen's Death, and how that after that he brought them Meat into the Woods, and lodged them in his Houſe. Alſo Evidence was given, that one coming to Bellamy's Houſe to ſeek for the Traitors, telling him they conſpired the Queen's Death, he denied he knew whom they were; whereas at the ſame time he had them in his Houſe. Bellamy ſpake very little for himſelf, only he ſeemed to be a very clowniſh, blunt, wilfull and obſtinate Papiſt.

Then this other Jury went up to a Houſe to agree upon their Verdict, and by that time was the firſt Jury agreed, which came to the Bar; and Alderman Martin being their Foreman, ſpake for them, and ſaid that they found all the five Priſoners Guilty; and further, that they knew not what Lands, Tenements, Goods or Chattels the Priſoners had, &c. So the Clerk of the Crown ſet down the Verdict, and diſcharged the Inqueſt of that Service.

Forthwith was the other Inqueſt agreed of their Verdict, and found Gage and Bellamy alſo Guilty of the Treaſons they were indicted of.

Puckering. Then Puckering, the Queen's Serjeant, craved Judgment of Death againſt the Priſoners.

Sandes. Then ſaid Sandes, the Clerk of the Crown; Edward Abbington, thou haſt been indicted of High-Treaſon, and thereupon arraigned, and haſt pleaded not Guilty, thy Country hath found thee Guilty; what haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, wherefore Judgment and Execution of Death ſhould not be given againſt thee?

Abbington. My good Lords, ſithence I have been tried by the Law, and am found Guilty of Offence againſt the Law, I am contented to abide the Puniſhment due unto my Guilt. The Inqueſt I cannot accuſe, foraſmuch as they thought in their Conſciences the Evidence ſufficient to condemn me; howbeit that brainleſs Youth Babington, whoſe proud Stomach, and ambitious Mind incenſing him to commit moſt abominable Treaſons, hath been the cauſe to ſhed the Blood of others guiltleſs in his Actions. But I cry not Vengeance againſt him, for I am contented to die, being condemned to die. Only this one Petition to you, my good Lords, I make: I have one Siſter whoſe Preferment alſo hath miſcarried, wherefore if it might pleaſe her Majeſty, with the Revenues of my Lands in ſome ſort to provide for her; if I live I will endeavour to be thankful, and if I die, I will pray for her.

Then the Clerk of the Crown demanded the like of Tilney; who ſaid, Tilney. And I my good Lords am able to ſay nothing in deferring of my Judgment. This humble ſuit muſt I make to your Honours; I owe in London about two or three hundred Pounds, and I beſeech your Honours to procure my Friends to pay it for diſcharge of my Conſcience.

Then the Clerk of the Crown demanded the like of Jones; who ſaid,

Jones. I beſeech your Honours to be a means to her Majeſty for Mercy, for I deſiring to be counted a faithful Friend, am now condemned for a falſe Traitor. The Love of Thomas Salisbury hath made me hate my ſelf, but God knows how far I was from intending any Treaſon. But if Mercy be not to be had, I beſeech your Honours this; I owe ſome Sums of Mony, but not very much, and I have more owing me; I beſeech that my Debts may be paid with that which is owing me. Moreover, my good Lords, the Lands I have, I had by deſcent from my Father, at the Marriage of the Gentlewoman which is now my Wife, were intailed unto me, and the Heirs Male of my Body; I beſeech you ſome Conſideration may be had of my Poſterity.

Hatton. Jones, did not you tell me that your Lands were Fee-ſimple, for an Argument of your Innocency?

Jones. Yea, Sir, ſo my Lands are, but at the time of my Marriage they were intailed as I tell you.

Sandes. Then the Clerk of the Crown demanded the like of Travers; who ſaid, Travers. I never committed any Treaſon, but for my Religion, I will die in it; only I owe 4 l. or ſuch a matter, I beſeech you it may be paid out of the Profits of my Lands.

Then the Clerk of the Crown demanded the like of Charnock; who ſaid, Charnock. I beſeech your Honour, Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, to get her Majeſty to pardon me.

Hatton. Charnock, thy Offence is too high for me to be an Obtainer of thy Pardon, but I am ſorry for thee; if thou hadſt applied thy ſelf the beſt way, thou mighteſt have done thy Country good Service.

Charnock. I beſeech you then, that ſix Angels, which ſuch a one hath of mine, may be delivered unto my Brother to pay my Debts.

Hatton. How much is thy Debt?

Charnock. The ſame ſix Angels would diſcharge it.

Hatton. Then I promiſe thee it ſhall be paid.

Then the Clerk of the Crown demanded the like of the reſt, who anſwered little; whereupon they all received Judgment of Death, according to their demerits.

PROCEEDINGS againſt MARY Queen of Scots, at Fotheringay-Caſtle, the 12*th of* October, 1586. for being concerned in a Conſpiracy againſt Queen Elizabeth; with ſome things previous thereto, and neceſſary to introduce and explain thoſe Proceedings.

THE Subjects of England finding the Kingdom in danger of an Invaſion from abroad, and the Life of the Queen attempted by various Plots at home, carried on by the Papiſts, in proſpect of a Popiſh Succeſſor; voluntarily entered into an Aſſociation for the Queen's Safety, ſolemnly engaging and obliging themſelves to each other, to revenge her Death on thoſe who ſhou'd be the occaſion of it: which Aſſociation was as follows.

'FORASMUCH as Almighty God hath 'ordain'd Kings, Queens, and Princes to 'have Dominion and Rule over all their Subjects, 'and to preſerve them in the Poſſeſſion and Ob'ſervation of the true Chriſtian Religion, accord'ing to his holy Word and Commandment; and 'in like ſort, that all Subjects ſhould love, fear, 'and obey their Sovereign Princes, being Kings 'or Queens, to the utmoſt of their power; at all 'times to withſtand, purſue, and ſuppreſs all 'manner

' manner of Perſons, that ſhall by any means in' tend and attempt any thing dangerous or hurt-
' ful to the Honour, State, or Perſons of their ' Sovereigns.

' Therefore we whoſe Names are or ſhall be ' ſubſcrib'd to this Writing, being natural-born
' Subjects of this Realm of England; and having
' ſo gracious a Lady, our Sovereign Elizabeth, by
' the Ordinance of God, our moſt rightful Queen,
' reigning over us theſe many years with great
' Felicity, to our ineſtimable Comfort: And ' finding lately by divers Depoſitions, Confeſſions,
' and ſundry Advertiſements out of foreign Parts,
' from credible Perſons, well known to her Ma-
' jeſty's Council, and to divers others, that for ' the Furtherance and Advancement of ſome pre-
' tended Title to the Crown, it hath been mani-
' feſted, that the Life of our gracious Sovereign
' Queen Elizabeth hath been moſt dangerouſly de-
' ſigned againſt, to the Peril of her Perſon, if Al-
' mighty God her perpetual Defender of his Mer' cy had not revealed and withſtood the ſame; by
' whoſe Life, we, and all other her Majeſty's true
' and loyal Subjects, do enjoy all ineſtimable bene' fit of Peace in this Land: Do for the Reaſons
' and Cauſes before alledged, not only acknow' ledge our ſelves moſt juſtly bound with our Lives
' and Goods for her defence, and in her ſafety to
' perſecute, ſuppreſs and withſtand all ſuch Inten-
' ders, and all other her Enemies, of what Na' tion, Condition or Degree whatſoever they ſhall
' be, or by what Counſel or Title they ſhall pre-
' tend to be her Enemies, or to attempt any harm
' upon her Perſon; but do further think it our ' bounden Duties, for the great benefit of Peace,
' Wealth, and godly Government, we have more
' plentifully received theſe many Years under her
' Majeſty's Government, than any of our Fore' fathers have done in any longer time of any ' other Progenitors, Kings of this Realm; to de' clare, and by this Writing make manifeſt our ' bounden Duties to our Sovereign Lady for her
' Safety.

' And to that end, we and every of us, firſt
' calling to witneſs the Name of Almighty God,
' do voluntarily and moſt willingly bind our ſelves,
' every one of us to the other, jointly and ſeve-
' rally in the Band of one firm and loyal Society;
' and do hereby vow and promiſe by the Majeſty
' of Almighty God, that with our whole Pow' ers, Bodies, Lives and Goods, and with our ' Children and Servants, we and every of us, will
' faithfully ſerve, and humbly obey our ſaid So-
' vereign Lady Queen Elizabeth, againſt all States,
' Dignities and earthly Powers whatſoever; and ' will as well with our joint and particular Forces
' during our Lives withſtand, purſue and offend,
' as well by force of Arms, as by all other means
' of Revenge, all manner of Perſons, of what-
' ſoever ſtate they ſhall be, and their Abettors,
' that ſhall attempt any Act, or Counſel, or con-
' ſent to any thing that ſhall tend to the harm of ' her Majeſty's Royal Perſon, and will never de-
' ſiſt from all manner of forcible purſuit againſt
' ſuch Perſons, to the utter extermination of them,
' their Counſellors, Aiders and Abettors.

' And that any ſuch wicked Attempt againſt her
' moſt Royal Perſon ſhall be taken in hand, or ' procured, whereby any that have, may or ſhall
' pretend Title to come to this Crown by the un-
' timely Death of her Majeſty ſo wickedly pro-
' cured (which God of his Mercy forbid) may ' be avenged; we do not only bind our ſelves
' both jointly and ſeverally never to allow, ac' cept or favour any ſuch pretended Succeſſor, by ' whom, or for whom any ſuch deteſtable Act
' ſhall be attempted or commited, as unworthy of ' all Government in any Chriſtian Realm or Civil
' State:

' But do alſo further vow and proteſt, as we are
' moſt bound, and that in the preſence of the eter' nal and everlaſting God, to proſecute ſuch Per-
' ſon or Perſons to death, with our joint and ' particular Forces, and to act the utmoſt Revenge
' upon them, that by any means we or any of us
' c[illegible] deviſe and do, or cauſe to be deviſed and
' done for their utter Overthrow and Extirpation.

' And to the better Corroboration of this our ' Loyal Band and Aſſociation, we do alſo teſtify
' by this Writing, that we do confirm the Con-
' tents hereof by our Oaths corporally taken upon
' the Holy Evangeliſts, with this expreſs Condi-
' tion, That no one of us ſhall for any reſpect of
' Perſon or Cauſes, or for Fear or Reward, ſepa-
' rate our ſelves from this Aſſociation, or fail in
' the Proſecution thereof during our Lives, upon
' pain of being by the reſt of us proſecuted and
' ſuppreſt as perjur'd Perſons, and as publick Ene-
' mies to God, our Queen, and to our Native
' Country; to which Puniſhment and Pains we ' do voluntarily ſubmit our ſelves, and every of us,
' without benefit of any Colour and Pretence.

' In witneſs of all which Premiſes to be inviola-
' bly kept, we do to this Writing put our Hands
' and Seals; and ſhall be moſt ready to accept
' and admit any others hereafter to this Society
' and Aſſociation.

This Aſſociation, although entred into voluntarily by Perſons in their private Capacities, was confirm'd and eſtabliſh'd by a Statute made 27 Elizabeth 1585. entitled; An Act for the Security of the Queen's Royal Perſon, and the Continuance of the Realm in Peace; and is as follows:

' FOraſmuch as the good Felicity and Com-
' fort of the whole Eſtate of this Realm con-
' ſiſteth only (next under God) in the Surety and
' Preſervation of the Queen's moſt Excellent Ma-
' jeſty; and for that it hath manifeſtly appeared,
' that ſundry wicked Plots and Means have of late
' been deviſed and laid, as well in foreign Parts
' beyond the Seas, as alſo within this Realm, to
' the great endangering of her Highneſs's moſt
' Royal Perſon, and to the utter Ruin of the whole
' Commonweal, if by God's merciful Providence,
' the ſame had not been revealed: Therefore for
' the preventing of ſuch great Perils as might ' hereafter otherwiſe grow by the like deteſtable
' and deviliſh Practices, at the humble Suit and
' earneſt Petition of the Lords Spiritual and Tem-
' poral, and the Commons in this Parliament aſ-
' ſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame Par' liament; Be it enacted and ordained, If at any ' time after the end of this preſent Seſſion of Par' liament, any open Invaſion or Rebellion ſhall be ' had or made, into or within any of her Majeſty's
' Realms or Dominions, or any Act attempted,
' tending to the hurt of her Majeſty's moſt Royal
' Perſon, by or for any Perſon that ſhall or may ' pretend Title to the Crown of this Realm after ' her Majeſty's deceaſe; or if any thing that be ' compaſſed or imagined, tending to the hurt of ' her Majeſty's Royal Perſon, by any Perſon, or
' with the privity of any Perſon that ſhall or may ' pretend Title to the Crown of this Realm:

'That then by her Majeſty's Commiſſion under 'her Great Seal, the Lords and other of her 'Highneſs's Privy Council, and ſuch other Lords 'of Parliament to be named by her Majeſty, as 'with the ſaid Privy Council ſhall come up to the 'number of four and twenty at the leaſt, having 'with them for their aſſiſtance in that behalf 'ſuch of the Judges of the Courts of Record at 'Weſtminſter, as her Highneſs ſhall for that pur-'poſe aſſign and appoint, or the more part of the 'ſame Council, Lords and Judges, ſhall by vir-'tue of this Act, have Authority to examine all 'and every the Offences aforeſaid, and all Cir-'cumſtances thereof, and thereupon to give Sen-'tence or Judgment, as upon good Proof the mat-'ter ſhall appear unto them. And that after ſuch 'Sentence or Judgment given, and Declaration 'thereof made and publiſh'd by her Majeſty's Pro-'clamation under the Great Seal of England, all 'Perſons againſt whom ſuch Sentence or Judg-'ment ſhall be ſo given and publiſhed, ſhall be ex-'cluded and diſabled for ever to have or claim, or 'to pretend to have or claim the Crown of this 'Realm, or of any her Majeſty's Dominions; 'any former Law, or Statute whatſoever to the 'contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And 'that thereupon all her Highneſs's Subjects ſhall 'and may lawfully by virtue of this Act, and her 'Majeſty's Direction in that behalf, by all forci-'ble and poſſible means purſue to death every 'ſuch wicked Perſon, by whom or by whoſe 'means, aſſent, or privity, any ſuch Invaſion or 'Rebellion ſhall be in form aforeſaid denounced 'to have been made, or ſuch wicked Act at-'tempted, or other thing compaſſed or imagined 'againſt her Majeſty's Perſon, and all their Aiders, 'Comforters and Abetters.

'And if any ſuch deteſtable Act ſhall be execu-'ted againſt her Highneſs's moſt Royal Perſon, 'whereby her Majeſty's Life ſhall be taken away '(which God of his great Mercy forbid) that 'then every ſuch Perſon, by or for whom any ſuch 'Act ſhall be executed, and their Iſſues being any 'wiſe aſſenting or privy to the ſame, ſhall by vir-'tue of this Act be excluded and diſabled for ever 'to have or claim, or pretend to have or claim the 'ſaid Crown of this Realm, or any other her 'Highneſs's Dominions, any former Law or Sta-'tute to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtand-'ing. And that all the Subjects of this Realm, 'and all other her Majeſty's Dominions, ſhall and 'may lawfully by virtue of this Act, by all forci-'ble and poſſible means purſue to the death eve-'ry ſuch wicked Perſon, by whom or by whoſe 'means any ſuch deteſtable Fact ſhall be in form 'hereafter expreſſed, denounced to have been 'committed, and alſo their Iſſues being any wiſe 'aſſenting or privy to the ſame, and all their 'Aiders, Comforters and Abettors in that be-'half.

'And to the end that the Intention of this Law 'may be effectually executed, if her Majeſty's 'Life be taken away by any violent or unnatural 'means (which God defend) Be it further e-'nacted by the Authority aforeſaid, that the 'Lords and others, which ſhall be of her Majeſty's 'Privy-Council at the time of ſuch her Deceaſe, 'or the more part of the ſame Council, joining 'unto them for their aſſiſtance five other Earls, 'and ſeven other Lords of Parliament at the leaſt '(foreſeeing, that none of the ſaid Earls, Lords 'or Council be known to be Perſons that may 'make any Title to the Crown) thoſe Perſons 'which were Chief Juſtices of either Bench, 'Maſter of the Rolls, and Chief Baron of the 'Exchequer at the time of her Majeſty's Death, 'or in default of the ſaid Juſtices, Maſter of the 'Rolls, and Chief Baron, ſome other of thoſe 'which were Juſtices of ſome of the Courts of 'Records at Weſtminſter at the time of her High-'neſs's deceaſe, to ſupply their Places; or any 'four and twenty, or more of them, whereof eight 'to be Lords of the Parliament, not being of 'the Privy-Council, ſhall to the uttermoſt of their 'power and ſkill examine the cauſe and manner 'of ſuch her Majeſty's Death, and what Perſons 'ſhall be any way guilty thereof, and all Cir-'cumſtances concerning the ſame, according to 'the true meaning of this Act; and thereupon 'ſhall by open Proclamation publiſh the ſame, 'and without any delay by all forcible and poſ-'ſible means, proſecute to Death all their Aiders 'and Abettors; for the doing thereof, and for 'the withſtanding and ſuppreſſing all ſuch Power 'and Force, as ſhall be any way levied or ſtirred 'in diſturbance of the due Execution of this Law, 'ſhall by virtue of this Act, have Power and Au-'thority, not only to raiſe, and uſe ſuch Forces, 'as ſhall in that behalf be needful and convenient, 'but alſo to uſe all other means and things poſſible 'and neceſſary for the maintenance of the ſame 'Forces, and Proſecution of the ſaid Offenders. 'And if any ſuch Power and Force ſhall be levied 'and ſtirred in diſturbance of the due Execution 'of this Law, by any Perſon that ſhall, or may 'pretend any Title to the Crown of this Realm, 'whereby this Law may not in all things be 'fully executed, according to the effect and true 'meaning of the ſame; that then every ſuch Per-'ſon ſhall by virtue of this Act be therefore ex-'cluded, and diſabled for ever to have, or claim, 'or pretend to have or claim the Crown of this 'Realm, or of any other her Highneſs's Domini-'ons, any former Law or Statute whatſoever to 'the contrary notwithſtanding.

'And be it further enacted by the Authority 'aforeſaid, That all, and every the Subjects of all 'her Majeſty's Realms and Dominions, ſhall to 'the uttermoſt of their power aid and aſſiſt the 'ſaid Council, and all other the Lords and other 'Perſons, to be adjoined to them for aſſiſtance, 'as is aforeſaid, in all things to be done and 'executed according to the effect and intention of 'this Law; and that no Subject of this Realm ſhall 'in any wiſe be impeached in Body, Land or 'Goods, at any time hereafter, for any thing to 'be done or executed according to the Tenor 'hereof, any Law or Statute heretofore made to 'the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

'And whereas of late many of her Majeſty's 'good and faithful Subjects have in the Name of 'God, and with the Teſtimonies of good Con-'ſciences, by one uniform manner of writing under 'their Hands and Seals, and by their ſeveral 'Oaths voluntarily taken, joined themſelves to-'gether in one Bond and Aſſociation, to with-'ſtand and revenge to the uttermoſt all ſuch 'malicious Actions and Attempts againſt her 'Majeſty's moſt Royal Perſon: Now for the full 'explaining of all ſuch Ambiguities and Queſtions, 'as otherwiſe might happen to grow by reaſon of 'any ſiniſter or wrong Conſtruction or Interpreta-'tion to be made or inferred of, or upon the 'words or meaning thereof; Be it declared and 'enacted by the Authority of this preſent Parlia-'ment, that the ſame Aſſociation, and every Ar-

'ticle and Sentence therein contained, as well 'concerning the diſallowing, excluding, or diſ-'abling any Perſon that may, or ſhall pretend 'any Title to come to the Crown of this Realm, 'as alſo for the purſuing, and taking revenge of 'any ſuch wicked Act or Attempt as is mentioned 'in the ſame Aſſociation, ſhall, and ought to be 'in all things expounded and adjudged according 'to the true intent and meaning of this Act, and 'not otherwiſe, nor againſt any other Perſon or 'Perſons.

The following Year, 1586. Babington and others being convicted of a Conſpiracy to aſſaſſinate Queen Elizabeth; and the Queen of Scots being charg'd with countenancing and encouraging that Conſpiracy, a Commiſſion was iſſued out, founded upon the aboveſaid Statute for the Examination and Tryal of the ſaid Queen of Scots, to the effect following.

ELIZABETH by the Grace of God, of England, France, and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c. To the moſt Reverend Father in Chriſt, John Archbiſhop of Camerbury, Primate and Metropolitan of all England, and one of our Privy Council; and to our truſty and well-beloved Sir Thomas Bromley Kt. Chancellor of England, and one of our Privy Council; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved William Lord Burghley, Lord Treaſurer of England, another of our Privy Council; and alſo to our moſt dear Couſin William Lord Marquiſs of Winchester, one of the Lords of the Parliament; to our moſt dear Couſin Edward Earl of Oxford, Great Chamberlain of England, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our moſt dear Couſin George Earl of Shrewsbury, Earl Marſhal of England, another of our Privy Council; and to our moſt dear Couſin Henry Earl of Kent, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our moſt dear Couſin Henry Earl of Derby, another of our Privy Council; and to our moſt dear Couſin William Earl of Worceſter, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our moſt dear Couſin Edward Earl of Rutland, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and to our moſt dear Couſin Ambroſe Earl of Warwick, Maſter of our Ordnance, another of our Privy Council; and to our moſt dear Couſin Henry Earl of Pembroke, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our moſt dear Couſin Robert Earl of Leiceſter, Maſter of our Horſe, another of our Privy Council; and to our moſt dear Couſin Henry Earl of Lincoln, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our moſt dear Couſin Anthony Viſcount Montague, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and to our truſty and well-beloved Charles Lord Howard, our great Admiral of England, another of our Privy Council; and to our truſty and well-beloved Henry Lord of Hunſdon, our Lord Chamberlain, another of our Privy Council; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Henry Lord Abergavenny, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and to our truſty and well-beloved Edward Lord Zouch, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Edward Lord Morley, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and to our truſty and well-beloved William Lord Cobham, Lord Warden of our Cinque-Ports, another of our Privy-Council; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Edward Lord Stafford, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Arthur Lord Grey of Wilton, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved John Lord Lumley, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved John Lord Sturton, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and to our truſty and well-beloved William Lord Sandes, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Henry Lord Wentworth, another of the Lords of the Parliament; to our truſty and well-beloved Lewis Lord Mordant, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and to our truſty and well-beloved John Lord St. John of Bletſho, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Thomas Lord Buckhurſt, another of our Privy Council; and to our truſty and well-beloved Henry Lord Compton, another of the Lords of the Parliament; and alſo to our truſty and well-beloved Henry Lord Cheiney, another of the Lords of the Parliament; to our truſty and beloved Sir Francis Knolles Kt. 'Whereas ſince the end of the Seſſion of Par-'liament; namely, ſince the firſt Day of June, 'in the 27th Year of our Reign, divers matters 'have been compaſſed and imagined, tending to 'the hurt of our Royal Perſon, as well by Mary 'Daughter and Heir of James V. King of Scots, 'and commonly called Queen of Scots, and Dowa-'ger of France, pretending Title to the Crown of 'this Realm of England; as by divers other 'Perſons, cum ſcientia, in Engliſh, with the privity 'of the ſame Mary, as we are given to underſtand. 'And whereas we do intend and determine, that 'the Act aforeſaid be in all and every part thereof, 'duly and effectually executed, according to the 'Tenor of the ſame, and that all Offences above-'ſaid, in the Act aboveſaid mentioned, as afore-'ſaid, and the Circumſtances of the ſame, be ex-'amined, and Sentence or Judgment thereupon 'given, according to the Tenor and Effect of the 'ſaid Act: To you, and the greater part of you 'we do give full and abſolute Power, Facul-'ty and Authority according to the Tenor 'of the ſaid Act, to examine all and ſingu-'lar matters compaſſed and imagined, tending to

'the hurt of our Royal Perſon, as well by the 'aforeſaid Mary, as by any other Perſon or Per-'ſons whatſoever, cum ſcientia, in Engliſh, with 'the privity of the ſame Mary, and all Circumſtan-'ces of the ſame, and all other Offences aboveſaid, 'in the Act aboveſaid (as aforeſaid) mentioned 'whatſoever, and all Circumſtances of the ſame, 'and of every of them. And thereupon, according 'to the tenor of the Act aforeſaid, to give Sen-'tence or Judgement, as upon good proof Matter 'ſhall appear unto you. And therefore we do 'command you, that you do at certain Days and 'Places, which you, or the greater part of you, 'ſhall thereunto fore-appoint, diligently proceed 'upon the Premiſes in form aforeſaid, &c.

The moſt part of theſe Commiſſioners came the 11th of October to Fotheringay-Caſtle in the County of Northampton, ſeated upon the Bank of the River Nen, where the Queen of Scots was then kept. The next day the Commiſſioners ſent to her Sir Walter Mildmay, Powlet, and Edward Barker, Publick Notary; who delivered into her hands Queen Elizabeth's Letter: which when ſhe had read, ſhe, with a Countenance compoſed to Royal Dignity, and with a Mind untroubled, ſaid, It grieveth me that the Queen, my moſt dear Siſter, is miſinform'd of me; and that I having been ſo many years ſtraitly kept in Priſon, and grown lame of my Limbs, have lien neglected, after I have offered ſo many reaſonable Conditions for my Liberty. Though I have throughly forewarned her of many Dangers, yet hath no credit been given unto me, but I have been always contemned, though moſt nearly allied unto her in Blood. When the Aſſociation was enter'd into, and the Act of Parliament thereupon made, I foreſaw that whatſoever Danger ſhould happen, either from foreign Princes abroad, or from ill-diſpoſed People at home, or for Religion's ſake, I muſt bear the whole blame, having many mortal Enemies in the Court. Certainly I might take it hardly, and not without cauſe, that a Confederacy hath been made with my Son without my knowledge: but ſuch Matters I omit. As for this Letter, it ſeemeth ſtrange to me, that the Queen ſhould command me as a Subject, to appear perſonally in Judgment. I am an abſolute Queen, and will do nothing which may prejudice either mine own Royal Majeſty, or other Princes of my Place and Rank, or my Son. My Mind is not yet directed, neither will I ſink under my Calamity. I refer my ſelf to thoſe things which I have proteſted before Bromley, now Chancellor, and the Lord La-Ware. The Laws and Statutes of England are to me moſt unknown; I am deſtitute of Counſellors, and who ſhall be my Peers I am utterly ignorant. My Papers and Notes are taken from me, and no Man dareth ſtep forth to be my Advocate. I am clear from all Crime againſt the Queen, I have excited no Man againſt her, and I am not to be charg'd but by mine own Word or Writing, which cannot be produced againſt me. Yet can I not deny but I have commended my ſelf and my Cauſe to foreign Princes.

The next day there returned unto her in the name of the Commiſſioners, Powlet and Barker, who ſhewed unto her this Anſwer drawn in Writing, and asked her, whether ſhe would perſiſt in the ſame. When ſhe had heard it diſtinctly read, ſhe commended it as rightly and truly conceived, and ſaid, ſhe would perſiſt therein. But this, ſaid ſhe, I have forgotten, which I would have to be added thereunto: Whereas the Queen hath written, that I am ſubject to the Laws of England, and to be judged by them, becauſe I have lived under the Protection of them; I anſwer, that I came into England to crave Aid, and ever ſince have been detained in Priſon, and could not enjoy the Protection or Benefit of the Laws of England; nay, I could never yet underſtand from any Man, what manner of Laws thoſe were.

In the afternoon came unto her certain ſelected Perſons from amongſt the Comiſſioners, with Men learned in the Civil and Canon-Law. But the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Treaſurer declared their Authority by Patent, and ſhewed that neither her Impriſonment, nor her Prerogative of Royal Majeſty could exempt her from anſwering in this Kingdom, with fair Words, adviſing her to hear what Matters were to be objected againſt her: Otherwiſe they threatned, that by Authority of Law, they both could and would proceed againſt her, though ſhe were abſent. She anſwered, That ſhe was no Subject, and rather would ſhe die a thouſand deaths, than acknowledge her ſelf a Subject, conſidering, that by ſuch an Acknowledgement, ſhe ſhould both prejudice the Height of Regal Majeſty, and withal confeſs her ſelf to be bound by all the Laws of England, even in matter of Religion: Nevertheleſs ſhe was ready to anſwer to all things in a free and full Parliament, for that ſhe knew not whether this Meeting and Aſſembly were appointed againſt her, being already condemned by Fore-judgings, to give ſome ſhew and colour of a juſt and legal Proceeding. She warned them therefore to look to their Conſciences, and to remember, that the Theatre of the whole World is much wider than the Kingdom of England. She began then to complain of Injuries done unto her: And the Lord Treaſurer interrupting her, began to reckon up Queen Elizabeth's Kindneſſes towards her, namely, that ſhe had puniſhed ſome which impugned the Claim ſhe laid to England, and had been a means to keep her from being condemned by the Eſtates of the Realm, for the Marriage ſought with the Duke of Norfolk, for the Rebellion in the North, and for other matters. All which when ſhe ſeem'd little to eſteem, they returned back.

Within few hours after, they delivered unto her, by the hands of Powlet and the Sollicitor, the chief Points of their Commiſſion, and the Names of the Commiſſioners, that ſhe might ſee that they were to proceed according to Equity and Right, and not by any cunning point of Law, and extraordinary Courſe. She took no Exceptions againſt the Commiſſioners, but moſt ſharply excepted againſt the late Law, upon which the Authority of their Commiſſion wholly depended; as that it was unjuſt, deviſed of purpoſe againſt her, that it was without Example, and ſuch whereunto ſhe would never ſubject her ſelf. She asked, by what Law they would proceed: If by the Civil or Canon-Law, then ſaid ſhe, Interpreters are to be fetched from Pavia, or Poictiers, and other foreign Univerſities; for in England none are to be found that are meet. She added alſo, That it was manifeſt, by plain Words in the Queen's Letters, That ſhe was already fore-judged to be guilty of the Crime, tho unheard; and therefore there was no reaſon why ſhe ſhould appear before them: And ſhe required to be ſatisfied touching ſome Scruples in the ſaid Letters, which ſhe had for her ſelf noted confuſedly, and by Snatches, ſeverally by themſelves, but would not deliver them written out; for it ſtood not, ſaid ſhe, with her Royal Dignity, to play the Scrivener.

Touching

Touching this matter, the ſaid ſelected Commiſſioners went unto her again, to whom ſhe ſignified, That ſhe did not well underſtand what thoſe Words meant, ſeeing ſhe is under the Queen's Protection. The Lord Chancellor anſwered, That this was plain to every one of underſtanding, yet was it not for Subjects to interpret what the Queen's Meaning was, neither were they made Commiſſioners for that end. Then ſhe required to have her Proteſtation ſhewed and allowed, which ſhe had formerly made. It was anſwered, that it never had been, nor now was to be allowed, for that it was prejudicial to the Crown of England. She asked, By what Authority they would proceed? It was anſwered, By Authority of their Commiſſion, and by the common Law of England.

But, ſaid ſhe, ye make Laws at your pleaſure, whereunto I have no reaſon to ſubmit my ſelf, conſidering that the Engliſh, in times paſt, refuſed to ſubmit themſelves to the Law Salique of France: And if they would proceed by the common Law of England, they ſhould produce Precedents and Caſes, foraſmuch as that Law conſiſteth much of Caſes and Cuſtom: And if by the Canon Law, none elſe ought to interpret the ſame but the Makers thereof. It was anſwered, That they would proceed neither by the Civil nor Canon Law, but by the Common Law of England: That it might nevertheleſs be proved by the Civil and Canon Law, that ſhe ought to appear before them, if ſhe would not refuſe to hear it. And indeed ſhe refuſed not to hear it, but, but as ſhe ſaid, by way of Interlocution, not Judicially.

From hence ſhe fell into other Speeches, That ſhe had intended nothing to the Deſtruction of the Queen; that ſhe had been incenſed with Injuries and Indignities; that ſhe ſhould be a Stone of Offence to others, if ſhe were ſo unworthily handled: that by Nam ſhe had offered her beſt means for revoking the Biſhop of Rome's Bull; that ſhe would have defended her Innocency by Letters, but it was not allowed her; and finally, that all the Offices of Kindneſs which ſhe had tender'd theſe twenty years, were rejected. Thus while ſhe wandered far in theſe Digreſſions, they called her back again, and prayed her to ſpeak plainly, whether ſhe would anſwer before the Commiſſioners. She replied, That the Authority of their Delegation was founded upon a late Law made to intrap her; that ſhe could not away with the Queen's Laws, which ſhe had good reaſon to ſuſpect; that ſhe was ſtill full of good Courage, and would not offend againſt her Progenitors, the Kings of Scots, by acknowledging her ſelf a Subject to the Crown of England: For this were nothing elſe but to profeſs them openly to have been Rebels and Traitors. Yet ſhe refuſed not to anſwer, ſo as ſhe might not be reduced to the rank of a Subject: But ſhe had rather periſh utterly, than to anſwer as a criminal Perſon.

Whereunto Hatton, Vice-Chamberlain to Queen Elizabeth, anſwered: You are accuſed (but not condemned) to have conſpired the Deſtruction of our Lady and Queen anointed. You ſay you are a Queen: Be it ſo. But in ſuch a Crime the Royal Dignity is not exempted from anſwering, neither by the Civil nor Canon Law, nor by the Law of Nations, nor of Nature. For if ſuch kind of Offences might be committed without Puniſhment, all Juſtice would ſtagger, yea, fall to the ground. If you be innocent, you wrong your Reputation in avoiding Tryal. You proteſt your ſelf to be innocent, but Queen Elizabeth thinketh otherwiſe, and that neither without Grief and Sorrow for the ſame. To examine therefore your Innocency, ſhe hath appointed for Commiſſioners moſt honourable, prudent and upright Men, who are ready to hear you according to Equity with favour, and will rejoice with all their hearts if you ſhall clear your ſelf of this Crime. Believe me, the Queen herſelf will be much affected with joy, who affirmed unto me at my coming from her, that never any thing befel her more grievous, than that you were charged with ſuch a Crime. Wherefore lay aſide the bootleſs Privilege of Royal Dignity, which now can be of no uſe unto you; appear in Judgment, and ſhew your Innocency, leſt by avoiding Tryal, you draw upon your ſelf Suſpicion, and lay upon your Reputation an eternal Blot and Aſperſion.

I refuſe not (ſaid ſhe) to anſwer in a full Parliament before the Eſtates of the Realm lawfully aſſembled, ſo as I may be declared the next to the Succeſſion; yea, before the Queen and Council, ſo as my Proteſtation may be admitted, and I may be acknowledged the next of kin to the Queen. To the Judgment of mine Adverſaries, amongſt whom I know all defence of mine Innocency will be barred, flatly I will not ſubmit my ſelf.

The Lord Chancellor asked her, Whether ſhe would anſwer, if her Proteſtation were admitted? I will never (ſaid ſhe) ſubmit my ſelf to the late Law mention'd in the Commiſſion.

Hereupon the Lord Treaſurer inferred; We, notwithſtanding, will proceed to-morrow in the Cauſe, tho you be abſent and continue contumax.

Search (ſaid ſhe) your Conſciences, look to your Honour, God reward you and yours for your Judgment againſt me.

On the morrow, which was the 14th of the month, ſhe ſent for certain of the Commiſſioners, and pray'd them, that her Proteſtation might be admitted and allowed. The Lord Treaſurer asked her, Whether ſhe would appear to her Tryal, if her Proteſtation were only received and put in writing, without allowance. She yielded at length, yet with much ado, and with an ill-will, leſt ſhe ſhould ſeem (as ſhe ſaid) to derogate from her Predeceſſors or Succeſſors; but was very deſirous to purge her ſelf of the Crime objected againſt her, being perſuaded by Hatton's Reaſons, which ſhe had weighed with Adviſement.

Soon after, the Commiſſioners which were preſent, aſſembled themſelves in the Preſence-Chamber. At the upper end of the Chamber was placed a Chair of Eſtate for the Queen of England, under a Cloth of Eſtate. Over-againſt it, below and more remote near the tranſom or beam that ran croſs the Room, ſtood a Chair for the Queen of Scots. At the Walls on both ſides, were placed Benches, upon which ſate, on the one ſide, the Lord-Chancellor of England, Lord-Treaſurer of England, the Earls of Oxford, Kent, Derby, Worceſter, Rutland, Cumberland, Warwick, Pembroke, Lincoln, and the Lord Viſcount Montacute; on the other ſide, the Barons of Abergavenny, Zouch, Morley, Stafford, Grey, Lumley, Sturton, Sandes, Wentworth, Mordant, St. John of Bletſho, Compton, and Cheiney. Nigh unto theſe ſate the Knights of the Privy-Council, Sir James a Croftes, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, Sir Francis Walſingham, Sir Ralph Sadleir, Sir Walter Mildmay, and Sir Amias Powlet. Forward, before the Earls, ſate the two Chief Juſticers, and the Chief Baron of the Exchequer; and on the other ſide two Barons, the other Juſticers, Dale and Ford, Doctors of the Civil Law; and at a little Table in the midſt ſate Popham the Queen's Attorney, Egerton the Sollicitor, Gaudy the Queen's Serjeant at Law, the Clerk of the Crown, and two Writers.

When ſhe was come, and had ſettled her ſelf in her ſeat, after ſilence proclaimed, Bromley Lord-Chancellor turning to her, ſpake briefly to this effect: The moſt High and Mighty Queen Elizabeth, being not without great grief of mind advertiſed, that you have conſpired the Deſtruction of her and of England, and the Subverſion of Religion, hath, out of her Office and Duty, leſt ſhe might ſeem to have neglected God, herſelf and her People, and out of no Malice at all, appointed theſe Commiſſioners, to hear the Matters which ſhall be objected unto you, and how you can clear your ſelf of them, and make known your Innocency.

She riſing up, ſaid, That ſhe came into England to crave aid, which had been promiſed her, and yet was ſhe detained ever ſince in Priſon. She proteſted, that ſhe was no Subject of the Queen's, but had been and was a free and abſolute Queen, and not to be conſtrained to appear before Commiſſioners, or any other Judge whatſoever, for any Cauſe whatſoever, ſave before God alone the higheſt Judge, leſt ſhe ſhould prejudice her own Royal Majeſty, the King of Scots her Son, her Succeſſors, or other abſolute Princes. But, that ſhe now appeared perſonally, to the end to refute the Crimes objected againſt her. And hereof ſhe prayed her own Attendants to bear witneſs.

The Lord Chancellor, not ackowledging that any Aid had been promis'd her, anſwer'd, That this Proteſtation was in vain, for that whoſoever (of what Place and Degree ſoever he were) ſhould offend againſt the Laws of England, in England, was ſubject unto the ſame Laws, and by the late Act might be examin'd and try'd; the ſaid Proteſtation therefore made in prejudice of the Laws and Queen of England, was not to be admitted. The Commiſſioners nevertheleſs commanded, that as well her Proteſtation, as the Lord Chancellor's Anſwer, ſhould be recorded.

Then after the Commiſſion was openly read, which was grounded upon the Act already often mention'd, ſhe ſtoutly oppos'd her Proteſtation againſt the ſame Act, as enacted directly and purpoſely againſt her, and herein ſhe appeal'd to their Conſciences.

When Anſwer was made by the Lord Treaſurer, that every Perſon in this Kingdom was bound even by the lateſt Laws, and that ſhe ought not to ſpeak againſt the Laws; and that the Commiſſioners would judge, according to that Law, what Proteſtations or Appellations ſoever ſhe interpos'd: ſhe ſaid at length, that ſhe was ready to hear and anſwer touching any Fact whatſoever againſt the Queen of England.

Gawdy now open'd the Law from Point to Point, affirming, that ſhe had offended againſt the ſame, and hereupon he made an hiſtorical Diſcourſe of Babington's Conſpiracy, and concluded, That ſhe knew of it, approv'd it, aſſented unto it, promis'd her Aſſiſtance, and ſhew'd the Way and Means.

She anſwer'd with ſtout Courage, That ſhe knew not Babington, that ſhe never receiv'd any Letters from him, nor wrote any to him; that ſhe never plotted the Deſtruction of the Queen, and that to prove the ſame, her Subſcription under her own hand was to be produc'd; that for her part ſhe never ſo much as heard ſpeak thereof; that ſhe knew not Ballard, nor ever reliev'd him; but ſhe underſtood from ſome, that the Catholicks in England took many things very hardly, and hereof ſhe herſelf had advertis'd the Queen by Letters, and beſought her to take pity on them; that many alſo, which were to her utterly unknown, had offer'd her their Help and Aſſiſtance, yet had ſhe excited no Man to commit any Offence; and being ſhut up in Priſon, ſhe could neither know nor hinder what they attempted.

Hereupon it was urg'd out of Babington's Confeſſion, that there had been Intercourſe by Letters betwixt her and Babington. She confeſs'd that there had paſs'd Conference by Letters betwixt her and many Men, yet could it not thereby be gather'd that ſhe was privy to all their wicked Counſels. She requir'd that her own Subſcription, under her hand, might be produc'd; and ask'd, what hurt it were, if ſhe had redemanded the Letters which had been kept from her almoſt a whole Year. Then were read the Copies of Babington's Letters unto her, wherein the whole Conſpiracy was ſet down.

As for theſe Letters (ſaid ſhe) it may be that Babington wrote them, but let it be prov'd that I receiv'd them: If Babington or any others affirm it, I ſay they lye openly; other Mens Crimes are not to be caſt upon me. A Packet of Letters, which had been kept from me almoſt a whole Year, came to my hands about that time, but by whom it was ſent, I know not.

To prove that ſhe had receiv'd Babington's Letters, there were read out of Babington's Confeſſion the chief Heads of certain Letters, which he had voluntarily confeſs'd that ſhe wrote back unto him: wherein when mention was made of the Earl of Arundel and his Brethren, and the Earl of Northumberland, the Tears burſt forth, and ſhe ſaid, Alas! what hath that noble Houſe of the Howards endur'd for my ſake? And ſhortly after, having wip'd away the Tears, ſhe anſwer'd, That Babington might confeſs what he liſt, but it was an open Lye that ſhe had devis'd ſuch means to eſcape: That her Adverſaries might eaſily get the Cyphers which ſhe had us'd to others, and with the ſame write many things falſly: That it was not likely ſhe ſhould uſe Arundel's help, whom ſhe knew to be ſhut up in Priſon; or Northumberland's, who was very young, and to her unknown.

There were read alſo certain Points pick'd out of Savage's and Ballard's Confeſſions, who had confeſs'd that Babington imparted unto them certain Letters, which he had receiv'd from the Queen of Scots.

She affirm'd, That Babington receiv'd none from her, yea that ſhe was angry with ſome which had ſecretly ſuggeſted Counſels unto her for invading of England, and had warn'd them to beware.

Now was there a Letter brought forth, wherein Babington's Plot was commended and approv'd. Hereof ſhe requir'd a Copy, and affirm'd, That it proceeded not from her, but haply from her Alphabet of Cyphers in France: That ſhe had done her beſt Endeavour for the Recovery of her Liberty, which Nature it ſelf alloweth, and had ſollicited her Friends to deliver her; yet to ſome, whom ſhe liſted not to name, when they offer'd her their Help to deliver her, ſhe anſwer'd not a word. Nevertheleſs, ſhe much deſir'd to divert the Storm of Perſecution from the Catholicks, and for this ſhe had made earneſt Suit to the Queen: For her part, ſhe would not purchaſe the Kingdom with the Death of the meaneſt Man of the common People, much leſs of the Queen: That there were many which attempted dangerous Deſigns without her knowledg; and by a very late Letter which ſhe had receiv'd, Pardon was ask'd of her by ſome, if they ſhould enterprize any thing without her Privity: That it was an eaſy Matter to counterfeit the Cyphers and Characters of others, as a young Man did very lately in France, which had vaunted himſelf to be her Son's baſe Brother: That ſhe fear'd alſo leſt this were done now by Walſingham to bring her to her Death, who (as ſhe heard) had practis'd againſt her Life and her Son's. She proteſted that ſhe not ſo much as thought the Deſtruction of the Queen; that ſhe had rather moſt gladly ſpend her own Life, than for her ſake the Catholicks ſhould be ſo afflicted in Hatred of her, and drawn to cruel Death. And withal ſhe ſhed plenty of Tears.

But (ſaid the Lord Treaſurer) no Man which hath ſhew'd himſelf a good Subject, was ever put to death for Religion, but ſome have been for Treaſon, while they maintain'd the Pope's Bull and Authority againſt the Queen.

Yet I (ſaid ſhe) have heard otherwiſe, and have read it alſo in Books ſet forth in print.

The Authors (reply'd he) of ſuch Books, do write alſo that the Queen hath forfeited her Royal Dignity.

Walſingham, who had found himſelf tax'd even now by her words, took opportunity; and riſing up, proteſted that his Mind was free from all Malice: I call God (ſaid he) to Record, that as a private Perſon I have done nothing unbeſeeming an honeſt Man, nor as I bear the place of a publick Perſon, have I done any thing unworthy my Place. I confeſs that being very careful for the Safety of the Queen and Realm, I have curiouſly ſearched out the Practices againſt the ſame. If Ballard had offered me his help, I ſhould not have refuſed it, yea, I would have recompenſed the pains he had taken. If I have practiſed any thing with him, why did he not utter it to ſave his Life?

With this anſwer, ſhe ſaid ſhe was ſatisfied: She prayed him he would not be angry that ſhe had ſpoken freely what ſhe had heard reported; and that he would give no more Credit to thoſe that ſlander'd her, than ſhe did to ſuch who accuſed him: That Spies were Men of doubtful Credit, which diſſemble one thing, and ſpeak another; and that he would in no ſort believe that ſhe had conſented to the Queen's Deſtruction. And now again, ſhe burſt forth into Tears; I would never (ſaid ſhe) make ſhipwreck of my Soul, by conſpiring the Deſtruction of my deareſt Siſter.

It was anſwered by the Lawyers, that this ſhould ſoon be diſproved by Teſtimony. Thus far in the Forenoon.

In the Afternoon, to diſprove this, was produced the Copy of a Letter which Charles Paget had written; and Curle, one of her Secretaries, had witneſſed that ſhe had received; touching a Conference betwixt Mendoza and Ballard, about the deſign for invading of England, and ſetting her at liberty.

This (anſwered ſhe) was nothing to the purpoſe, and proved not that ſhe had conſented to the Deſtruction of the Queen.

The Lawyers proceeded further, to prove that ſhe was both privy to the Conſpiracy, and conſpired alſo the Deſtruction of the Queen, by Babington's Confeſſion, and Letters alſo that had paſſed betwixt her and him; wherein he called her, his moſt dread and Sovereign Lady, and Queen: And by the way, they mentioned that a Plot was laid for conveying the Kingdom of England to the Spaniard. She confeſſed, that a Prieſt came unto her, and ſaid, That if ſhe would not intermeddle, ſhe and her Son both ſhould be excluded from the Inheritance; but the Prieſt's Name ſhe would not tell. She added, that the Spaniard did lay claim to the Kingdom of England, and would not give place to any but to her.

Then preſſed they her with the Teſtimonies of her Secretaries Naw and Curle, out of Babington's Confeſſion, and the Letters ſent to and fro betwixt her and Babington, and the whole Credit of their Proofs reſted upon their Teſtimony; yet were not they produced before her Face to Face. Curle ſhe acknowledged an honeſt Man, but not a meet Witneſs to be againſt her. As Naw, he had been ſometimes a Secretary (ſaid ſhe) to the Cardinal of Lorain, and commended unto her by the French King, and might eaſily be drawn either by Reward, or Hope, or Fear, or to bear falſe Witneſs, as one that had ſundry times raſhly bound himſelf by Oath, and had Curle ſo pliable unto him, that at his beck he would write what he bad him. It might be that theſe two might inſert into her Letters, ſuch things as ſhe had not dictated unto them. It might be alſo that ſuch Letters came to their hands, which notwithſtanding ſhe never ſaw; and ſo ſhe brake forth into ſuch words as theſe: All both Majeſty and Safety of all Princes falleth to the ground, if they depend upon the Writings and Teſtimony of Secretaries. I deliver'd nothing to them but what Nature delivered to me, that I might at length recover my Liberty. And I am not to be convicted but by mine own Word or Writing. If they have written any thing which may be hurtful to the Queen my Siſter, they have written it altogether without my knowledge; and let them bear the Puniſhment of their inconſiderate Boldneſs. Sure I am, if they were here preſent, they would clear me of all blame in this Cauſe. And I, if my Notes were at hand, could anſwer particularly to theſe things.

Amongſt theſe Speeches, the Lord Treaſurer objected unto her, that ſhe had purpoſed to ſend her Son into Spain, and to convey her Title ſhe claimeth in the Kingdom of England, to the Spaniard.

To whom ſhe anſwered, That ſhe had no Kingdom which ſhe could convey, yet was it lawful for her to give thoſe things which were hers, at her pleaſure, and not to be accountable for the ſame to any.

When her Alphabets of Cyphers, ſent over to Babington, the Lord Lodouic and Fernihurſt, were objected unto her out of Curle's Teſtimony; ſhe denied not, but ſhe had written out many; and amongſt others, that for the Lord Lodouic, when ſhe had commended him and another to the dignity of a Cardinal; and that without Offence, (ſhe truſted) for that it was as lawful for her to have intercourſe of Letters, and to negotiate her matters with Men of her Religion, as for the Queen with the Profeſſors of another Religion.

Then preſſed they her hard with the conſenting Teſtimonies of Naw and Curle reiterated: And ſhe reiterated her Anſwers, or elſe refelled their Teſtimonies by a flat denial; proteſting again, that ſhe neither knew Babington nor Ballard.

Amongſt theſe Speeches, when the Lord Treaſurer had mentioned, that ſhe knew Morgan well, which had ſent Parry privily to murder the Queen, and that ſhe had aſſigned him a yearly Penſion; ſhe ſhe replied, That ſhe knew not whether Morgan had done ſo, but ſhe knew that Morgan had loſt all for her ſake, and therefore it concerned her in Honour to relieve him; and ſhe was not bound to revenge an Injury done the Queen by a Friend that had deſerved well at her hands; yet had ſhe terrified the Man from ſuch wicked Attempts: But contrarywiſe (ſaid ſhe) Penſions have been aſſigned out of England to Patrick Gray, and to the Scots my Adverſaries, as alſo to my Son.

The Lord Treaſurer anſwered, When the Revenues of Scotland were by the negligence of the Regents much diminiſhed, the Queen beſtowed ſomewhat in bounty upon your Son the King, her near Kinſman.

Afterwards were produced the chief Points of certain Letters ſent to England, and the Lord Paget, and to Bernardine de Mendoza, about foreign Aid. But when ſhe had anſwered, That theſe things made not to the deſtruction of the Queen; and if Foreigners laboured to ſet her at liberty, it was not to be laid to her Charge; and that ſhe had ſundry times openly ſignified to the Queen that ſhe would ſeek her own Liberty: the matter was prorogued till the next Day following.

The next Day ſhe returned her former Proteſtation, and required to have it recorded, and a Copy thereof delivered unto her, lamenting that the moſt reaſonable Conditions, which ſhe had many times propounded to the Queen, were always rejected, even when ſhe promiſed to deliver her Son, and the Duke of Guiſe's Son for Hoſtages, that the Queen or Kingdom of England ſhould receive no detriment by her: ſo as ſhe ſaw her ſelf already quite barred from all hope of her Liberty. But now ſhe was moſt unworthily dealt withal, whoſe Honour and Reputation was called in queſtion before foreign Lawyers, which by wretched Concluſions drew every Circumſtance into a Conſequence; whereas Princes anointed and conſecrate are not ſubject to the ſame Laws that private Men are. Moreover, whereas Authority was granted to the Commiſſioners, to examine matters tending to the hurt of the Queen's Perſon; yet was the Cauſe ſo handled, and Letters wreſted, that the Religion which ſhe profeſſed, the Immunity and Majeſty of foreign Princes, and the private Intercourſe betwixt Princes were called in queſtion, and ſhe her ſelf made to deſcend beneath her Royal Dignity, and to appear as a Party guilty, before a Tribunal Seat: and all to no other purpoſe but that ſhe might be quite excluded out of the Queen's Favour, and her own Right to the Succeſſion; whereas ſhe appeared voluntarily to clear her ſelf of the matters objected againſt her, leſt ſhe might ſeem to have neglected the defence of her own Honour and Innocency. She called alſo to remembrance, how Queen Elizabeth her ſelf had been drawn in queſtion about Wiat's Conſpiracy, whereas notwithſtanding ſhe was moſt innocent: religiouſly affirming, that tho ſhe wiſhed the ſafety of the Catholicks might be provided for; yet would ſhe not that it ſhould be effected with the Death and Blood of any one. For her part, ſhe had rather play Heſter than Judith; make Interceſſion to God for the People, than deprive the meaneſt of the People of Life. She expoſtulated, that her Enemies had divulged abroad that ſhe was Irreligious; but the time was (ſaid ſhe) when I would have been inſtructed in the Proteſtant Religion, but they would not ſuffer me to be ſo, as if they cared not what became of my Soul. And now concluding, When ye have done all ye can (ſaid ſhe) againſt me, and have excluded me from my Right, ye may chance fail of your Cauſe and Hope. And withal making her appeal to God, and to the Princes her Kinſmen, and renewing her Proteſtation, ſhe prayed that there might be another meeting about this matter, and that an Advocate might be granted unto her to plead her Cauſe; and that ſeeing ſhe was a Princeſs, ſhe might be believed in the word of a Princeſs: For it were extreme folly to ſtand to their Judgment, whom ſhe ſaw moſt plainly to be armed with prejudice againſt her.

To theſe things the Lord Treaſurer ſaid, Whereas I bear a double Perſon, one of a Commiſſioner, another of a Counſellor, receive firſt a few Words from me as a Commiſſioner. Your Proteſtation is recorded, and a Copy thereof ſhall be delivered unto you. To us our Authority is granted under the Queen's Hand, and the great Seal of England, from which there is no Appeal; neither do we come with Prejudice, but to judge according to the exact Rule of Juſtice. The Queen's learned Counſel do level at nothing elſe but that the Truth may come to light, how far you have offended againſt the Queen's Perſon. To us full Power is given to hear and examine the matter, even in your abſence; yet were we deſirous you ſhould be preſent, leſt we might ſeem to have derogated from your Honour: We purpoſed not to object any thing unto you, but what you were privy to, or have attempted againſt the Queen's Perſon. The Letters have been read to no other purpoſe, but to diſcover your Offence againſt the Queen's Perſon, and the matters to it belonging, which are ſo interlaced with other matters, that they cannot be ſever'd. The whole Letters therefore, and not Parcels picked out here and there, have been openly read, for that the Circumſtances do give aſſurance what matters you dealt with Babington about.

She interrupting him, ſaid, The Circumſtances may be proved, but never the Fact: Her Integrity depended not upon the Credit and Memory of her Secretaries, tho ſhe knew them to be honeſt and ſincere Men. Yet if they have confeſſed any thing out of fear of Torments, or hope of Reward and Impunity, it was not to be admitted, for juſt Cauſes, which ſhe would alledge elſewhere. Mens minds (ſaid ſhe) are diverſly carried about with Affections, and they would never have confeſſed ſuch matters againſt her, but for their own Advantage and Hope. Letters may be directed to others than thoſe to whom they are written, and many things have been often inſerted which ſhe never dictated. If her Papers had not been taken away, and ſhe had her Secretary, ſhe could better confute the things objected againſt her.

But nothing (ſaid the Lord Treaſurer) ſhall be objected, but ſince the 19th Day of June; neither will your Papers avail you, ſeeing your Secretaries and Babington himſelf, being never put to the Rack, have affirmed that you ſent thoſe Letters to Babington; which tho you deny, yet whether more Credit is to be given to an Affirmation, than to a Negation, let the Commiſſioners judge. But to return to the matter; this which followeth, I tell you as a Counſellor: Many things you have propounded time after time concerning your Liberty; that they have failed of Succeſs, it is long of you, or of the Scots, and not of the Queen. For the Lords of Scotland flatly refuſed to deliver the King in Hoſtage. And when the laſt Treaty was holden concerning your Liberty, Parry was ſent privily by Morgan a Dependent of yours to murder the Queen.

Ah (ſaid ſhe) you are my Adverſary. Yea (ſaid he) I am Adverſary to Queen Elizabeth's Adverſaries. But hereof enough, let us now proceed to Proofs. Which when ſhe refuſed to hear; Yet we (ſaid he) will hear them: And I alſo (ſaid ſhe) will hear them in another Place, and defend my ſelf.

Now were read again her Letters to Charles Paget, wherein ſhe ſhewed him that there was no other way for the Spaniard to reduce the Netherlands to Obedience, but by ſetting up a Prince in England that might be of uſe unto him; and to the Lord Paget to haſten his Auxiliary Forces to invade England: And Cardinal Allen's Letter, wherein he called her his moſt dread Sovereign Lady, and ſignified that the matter was commended to the Prince of Parma's Care.

As theſe Letters were in reading, ſhe interpoſed theſe Speeches; That Babington and her Secretaries had accuſed her to excuſe themſelves; that ſhe never heard of the ſix Executioners, and that the reſt made nothing to the purpoſe. As for Allen, ſhe held him for a Reverend Prelate; and ſhe acknowledg'd no other Head of the Church, but the Biſhop of Rome. In what Rank and Place ſhe was eſteemed by him and foreign Princes, ſhe knew not, neither could ſhe hinder it, if in their Letters they called her Queen of England. As for her Secretaries, ſeeing they had done contrary to their Duty and Allegiance ſworn unto her, they deſerved no Credit. They which have once forſworn themſelves, tho they ſwear again with never ſo great Oaths and Proteſtations, are not to be credited. Neither did theſe Men think themſelves bounden by any Oath whatſoever in Court of Conſcience, foraſmuch as they had ſworn their Fidelity and Secrecy to her before, and were no Subjects of England. That Naw had many times written otherwiſe than ſhe had dictated unto him, and Curle wrote whatſoever Naw bade him. But for her part ſhe was willing to bear the burden of their fault in all things, but what might lay a blot upon her Honour. And haply alſo they confeſſed theſe things to ſave themſelves; ſuppoſing that they could not hurt her by confeſſing, who they thought ſhould be more favourably dealt withal as being a Queen. As for Ballard, ſhe never heard of any ſuch, but of one Hallard, which had offered her his help; which notwithſtanding, ſhe had refuſed, for that ſhe had heard that the ſame Man had alſo vowed his Service to Walſingham.

Afterwards, when certain brief Notes of her Letters to Mendoza, which Curle had confeſſed he had written in privy Cypher, were read, and out of them ſhe was preſſed as if ſhe had purpoſed to convey her Right in the Kingdom to the Spaniard, and that Allen and Parſons lay now at Rome for that cauſe; ſhe complaining that her Secretaries had broken their Allegiance bound by Oath, anſwered, When being Priſoner I languiſhed in Cares without hope of Liberty, and was without all hope to effect thoſe things which very many expected at my hands, declining now through Age and Sickneſs; it ſeemed good to ſome, that the Succeſſion of the Crown of England ſhould be eſtabliſhed in the Spaniard, or ſome Engliſh Catholick. And a Book was ſent unto me to avow the Spaniard's Title; which when it was not allowed by me, I incurred diſpleaſure among ſome: But now all my hope in England being deſperate, I am fully reſolved not to reject foreign Aid.

The Sollicitor put the Commiſſioners in mind what would become of them, their Honours, Eſtates and Poſterities, if the Kingdom were ſo conveyed. But the Lord Treaſurer ſhewed that the Kingdom of England could not be conveyed, but was to deſcend by Right of Succeſſion according to the Laws: and asked her, if ſhe would any more.

She required that ſhe might be heard in a full Parliament, or that ſhe might in Perſon ſpeak with the Queen, who would (ſhe hoped) have regard of a Queen, and with the Council. And now riſing up with great Confidence of Countenance, ſhe had ſome Conference with the Lord Treaſurer Hatton, Walſingham, and the Earl of Warwick by themſelves apart.

Theſe things being done, the Aſſembly was prorogued to the 25th of October, at the Star-Chamber at Weſtminſter. Thus far touching this matter out of the Commentaries of Edward Barker, principal Regiſter to the Queen's Majeſty; Thomas Wheeler publick Notary, Regiſter of the Audience of Canterbury; and other credible Perſons which were preſent.

The ſaid 25th Day of October, all the Commiſſioners met, ſaving the Earls of Shrewsbury and Warwick, which were both of them ſick at that time: and after Naw and Curle had by Oath, viva voce, voluntarily without Hope or Reward, before them avowedly affirmed and confirmed all and every the Letters, and Copies of Letters, before produced, to be moſt true; Sentence was pronounced againſt the Queen of Scots, and confirmed with the Seals and Subſcriptions of the Commiſſioners, and recorded in theſe words: By their joint Aſſent and Conſent, they do pronounce and deliver their Sentence and Judgment, at the Day and Place laſt recited; and ſay, That after the end of the aforeſaid Seſſion of Parliament, in the Commiſſion aforeſaid ſpecified, namely after the aforeſaid 1ſt Day of June, in the 27th Year aboveſaid, and before the date of the ſame Commiſſion, divers matters have been compaſſed and imagined within this Realm of England, by Anthony Babington and others, cum ſcientia, in Engliſh, with the Privity, of the ſaid Mary, pretending Title to the Crown of this Realm of England, tending to the hurt, death and deſtruction of the Royal Perſon of our ſaid Lady the Queen. And namely, That after the aforeſaid 1ſt Day of June, in the 27th Year aboveſaid, and before the Date of the Commiſſion aforeſaid, the aforeſaid Mary pretending Title to the Crown of this Realm of England, hath compaſſed and imagined within this Realm of England, divers matters tending to the hurt, death and deſtruction of the Royal Perſon of our Sovereign Lady the Queen, contrary to the form of the Statute in the Commiſſion aforeſaid ſpecified.

Concerning this Sentence, which depended wholly upon the Credit of the Secretaries, and they not brought forth Face to Face, according to the firſt Act of the 13th Year of Queen Elizabeth, much talk there was, and divers Speeches ran abroad, while ſome thought them credible Perſons, and ſome unworthy to be credited. I have ſeen Naw's Apology to King James, written in the Year 1605. wherein laborioufly proteſting, he excuſeth himſelf, that he was neither Author, nor Perſuader, nor the firſt Revealer of the Plot that was undertaken, nor failed of his Duty through Negligence, or want of Foreſight; yea, that this Day he ſtoutly impugned the chief points of Accuſation againſt his Lady and Miſtreſs: which not-notwithſtanding appeareth not by Records. But the ſame day was there a Declaration made by Commiſſioners and the Judges of the Land, That the ſaid Sentence did derogate nothing from James King of Scots, in Title or Honour, but that he was in the ſame place, degree and right, as if the ſame Sentence had never been pronounced.

Some few days after, a Parliament was holden at Weſtminſter, begun by virtue of a certain Power of Vice-gerency, granted by the Queen to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Treaſurer, and the Earl of Derby, and that not without Precedent. In which Parliament the Proſcription of the Lord Paget, Charles Paget, Sir Francis Engleſield, Francis Throckmorton, Anthony Babington, Thomas Salisbury, Edward Jones, Chidiock Titchborne, Charles Tilney, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, was confirmed, and their Goods and Poſſeſſions confiſcate. The Eſtates alſo of the Realm, which had by their Voices approved and confirmed the Sentence given againſt the Queen of Scots, did with joint Aſſent put up a Supplication to the Queen by the hands of the Lord Chancellor, as follows:

MAY it pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty, our moſt gracious Sovereign, we your humble, loving and faithful Subjects, the Lords and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, having of long time to our intolerable grief ſeen by how manifold moſt dangerous and execrable Practices, Mary the Daughter and Heir of James V. late King of Scots, Dowager of France, and commonly called Queen of Scots, hath compaſſed the Deſtruction of your Majeſty's Sacred and moſt Royal Perſon, in whoſe Safety (next under God) our chief and only Felicity doth conſiſt; and thereby not only to bereave us of the ſincere and true Religion of Almighty God, bringing us and this noble Crown back again into the Thraldom of the Romiſh Tyranny, but alſo utterly to ruinate and overthrow the happy State and Commonweal of this moſt noble Realm; which being from time to time by the great Mercy and Providence of God, and your Highneſs's ſingular Wiſdom foreſeen and prevented, your Majeſty of your exceeding great Clemency and Princely Magnanimity hath either moſt graciouſly paſſed over, or with ſingular favour tolerated, altho often and inſtantly moved by your moſt loving and faithful Subjects to the contrary, in Times of your Parliaments, and at many other times: and hath alſo protected and defended the ſaid Scottiſh Queen from thoſe great dangers which her own People, for certain deteſtable Crimes and Offences to her imputed, had determined againſt her. All which notwithſtanding, the ſame Queen was nothing moved with theſe and many other your Majeſty's moſt gracious Favours towards her; but rather obdurate in Malice, and by hope of continual Impunity imboldened to proſecute her cruel and miſchievous Determination by ſome ſpeedy and violent Courſe: and now lately a very dangerous Plot being conceived and ſet down by Anthony Babington and others, That ſix deſperate and wicked Perſons ſhould undertake that wicked and moſt horrible Enterprize, to take away your Majeſty's Life, (whom God of his infinite Mercy long preſerve) ſhe did not only give her Advice and Direction upon every point, and all Circumſtances concerning the ſame, make earneſt requeſt to have it perform'd with all diligence, but did alſo promiſe aſſurance of large Reward and Recompence to the doers thereof: which being informed to your Majeſty, it pleaſed your Highneſs, upon the earneſt Suit of ſuch as tendered the Safety of your Royal Perſon, and the good and quiet ſtate of this Realm, to direct your Commiſſion under the Great Seal of England, to the Lords and others of your Highneſs's Privy-Council, and certain other Lords of Parliament of the greateſt and moſt antient Degree, with ſome of your principal Judges, to examine, hear and determine the ſame Cauſe, and thereupon to give Sentence or Judgment according to a Statute in that behalf, made in the 27th Year of your moſt gracious Reign: By virtue whereof, the more part of the ſame Commiſſioners, being in number thirty ſix, having at ſundry times fully heard what was alledged and proved againſt the ſaid Scottiſh Queen in her own Preſence, touching the ſaid Crimes and Offences, and what ſhe could ſay for her Defence and Excuſe therein, did after long Deliberation give their Sentence and Judgment with one Conſent, that the Death and Deſtruction of your Royal Perſon was imagined and compaſſed by the ſaid Anthony Babington, with the privity of the ſame Scottiſh Queen: And that ſhe her ſelf did alſo compaſs and imagine the Death and Deſtruction of your moſt Royal Perſon. Now for as much as we your Majeſty's moſt humble, loyal and dutiful Subjects, repreſenting unto your moſt excellent Majeſty the univerſal State of your whole People of all degrees in this your Realm, do well perceive, and are fully ſatisfied, that the ſame Sentence and Judgment is in all things moſt Honourable, Juſt and Lawful; and having carefully and effectually, according to our moſt bounden Duties, weighed and conſidered upon what Ground and Cauſe ſo many traitorous Complots, and dangerous Practices againſt your moſt Royal Perſon and Eſtate, and for the invading of this Realm, have for the ſpace of many years paſt grown and proceeded, do certainly find, and are undoubtedly perſuaded that all the ſame have been from time to time attempted and practiſed, by and from the Scottiſh Queen, and by her Confederates, Miniſters and Favourers, who conceive an aſſured hope to atchieve ſpeedily by your Majeſty's untimely Death that which they have long expected, and whereof during your Life (which God long preſerve to our ineſtimable Comfort) they deſpair; to wit, to place her the ſaid Scottiſh Queen in the Imperial and Kingly Seat of this Realm, and by her to baniſh and deſtroy the Profeſſors and Profeſſing of the true Religion of Jeſus Chriſt, and the antient Nobility of this Land, and to bring this whole State and Commonweal to foreign Subjection, and utter Ruin and Confuſion: which their malicious and traitorous Purpoſe they will never ceaſe to proſecute by all poſſible means they can, ſo long as they may have their Eyes and Imaginations fixed upon that Lady, the only ground of their treaſonable Hope and Conceits, and the only Seed-Plot of all dangerous and traitorous Devices and Practices againſt your ſacred Perſon. And ſeeing alſo what inſolent Boldneſs is grown in the Heart of the ſame Queen, through your Majeſty's former exceeding Favours and Clemencies towards her; and thereupon weighing with heavy and ſorrowful Hearts, in what continual Peril of ſuch like deſperate Conſpiracies and Practices your Majeſty's moſt Royal and Sacred Perſon and Life (more dear unto us than our own) is and ſhall be ſtill, without any poſſible means to prevent it, ſo long as the ſaid Scottiſh Queen ſhall be ſuffered to continue, and ſhall not receive that due Puniſhment, which by Juſtice, and the Laws of this your Realm, ſhe hath ſo often and ſo many ways for her moſt wicked and deteſtable Offences deſerved: Therefore, and for that we find, that if the ſaid Lady ſhould now eſcape the due and deſerved Puniſhment of Death for theſe her moſt execrable Treaſons and Offences, your Highneſs's Royal Perſon ſhall be expoſed unto many more, and thoſe more ſecret and dangerous Conſpiracies than before, and ſuch as ſhall not or cannot be foreſeen or diſcovered, as theſe her late Attempts have been; and ſhall not hereafter be ſo well able to remove or take away the ground and occaſion of the ſame, as now by Juſtice may and ought to be done: We do moſt humbly beſeech your moſt excellent Majeſty, that as well in reſpect of the Continuance of the true Religion now profeſſed amongſt us, and of the Safety of your moſt Royal Perſon and Eſtate, as in regard of the Preſervation and Defence of us your moſt loving, dutiful and faithful Subjects, and the whole Commonweal of this Realm; it may pleaſe your Highneſs to take ſpeedy Order, That Declaration of the ſame Sentence and Judgment be made and publiſhed by Proclamation, and that thereupon direction be given for further Proceedings againſt the ſaid Scottiſh Queen, according to the effect and true meaning of the ſaid Statute: Becauſe upon adviſed and great Conſultation, we cannot find that there is any poſſible means to provide for your Majeſty's Safety, but by the juſt and ſpeedy Execution of the ſaid Queen, the neglecting whereof may procure the heavy Diſpleaſure and Puniſhment of Almighty God, as by ſundry ſevere Examples of his great Juſtice in that behalf left us in the Sacred Scriptures doth appear. And if the ſame be not put in preſent Execution, we your moſt loving and dutiful Subjects ſhall thereby (ſo far as Man's Reaſon can reach) be brought into utter Deſpair of the Continuance amongſt us of the true Religion of Almighty God, and of your Majeſty's Life, and the Safety of all your faithful Subjects, and the good Eſtate of this moſt flouriſhing Commonweal.

The Queen with great Majeſty of Countenance and Voice, anſwered to this purpoſe: So many and ſo great are the bottomleſs Graces, and immeaſurable Benefits beſtowed upon me by the Almighty, that I muſt not only moſt humbly acknowledge them as Benefits, but admire them as Miracles, being in no ſort able to expreſs them. And tho there liveth not any that may more juſtly acknowledge himſelf bound to God than I, whoſe Life he hath miraculouſly preſerved from ſo many Dangers, yet am I not more deeply bound to give him Thanks for any one Thing, than for this which I will now tell you, and which I account as a Miracle: Namely, that as I came to the Crown with the moſt hearty Good-will of all my Subjects, ſo now after 28 years Reign, I perceive in them the ſame, if not greater Good-will towards me; which if I once loſe, well might I breath, but never think I lived. And now tho my Life hath been dangerouſly ſhot at, yet I proteſt there is nothing hath more grieved me, than that one not differing from me in Sex, of like Rank and Degree, of the ſame Stock, and moſt nearly allied unto me in Blood, hath fallen into ſo great a Crime. And ſo far have I been from bearing her any Ill-will, that upon the diſcovery of certain treaſonable Practices againſt me, I wrote unto her ſecretly, that if ſhe would confeſs them by a private Letter unto my ſelf, they ſhould be wrapped up in Silence. Neither did I write thus in mind to intrap her, for I knew then as much as ſhe could confeſs. And even yet, tho the matter be come thus far, if ſhe would truly repent, and no Man would undertake her Cauſe againſt me, and if my Life alone depended hereupon, and not the Safety and Welfare of my whole People, I would (I proteſt unfeignedly) moſt willingly pardon her. Nay, if England might by my Death attain a more flouriſhing Eſtate, and a better Prince, I would moſt gladly lay down my Life: For, for your ſakes it is, and for my Peoples, that I deſire to live. As for me, I ſee no ſuch great Cauſe why I ſhould either be fond to live, or fear to die. I have had good Experience of this World, and I know what it is to be a Subject, and what to be a Sovereign. Good Neighbours I have had, and I have met with bad; and in Truſt I have found Treaſon. I have beſtowed Benefits upon ill Deſervers; and where I have done well, have been ill requited. While I call to mind theſe things paſt, behold things preſent, and expect things to come, I hold them happieſt that go hence ſooneſt. Nevertheleſs againſt ſuch Miſchiefs as theſe, I put on a better Courage than is common to my Sex, ſo as whatſoever befall me, Death ſhall not take me unprepared.

And as touching theſe Treaſons, I will not ſo prejudicate my ſelf, or the Laws of my Kingdom, as not to but think that ſhe having been the Contriver of the ſame Treaſons, was bound and liable to the antient Laws, tho the late Act had never been made; which notwithſtanding was no ways made to prejudice her. So far was it from being made to intrap her, that it was rather intended to forewarn and terrify her from attempting any thing againſt it. But ſeeing it was now in force of a Law, I thought good to proceed againſt her according to the ſame. But you Lawyers are ſo curious in ſcanning the nice Points of the Law, and following of Precedents and Form, rather than expounding the Laws themſelves, that by exact obſerving of your Form, ſhe muſt have been indicted in Staffordſhire, and have holden up her hand at the Bar, and have been tried by a Jury of twelve Men. A proper Courſe forſooth of Tryal againſt a Princeſs! To avoid therefore ſuch Abſurdities, I thought it better to refer the Examination of ſo weighty a Cauſe, to a good number of the nobleſt Perſonages of the Land, and the Judges of the Realm; and all little enough. For we Princes are ſet as it were upon Stages, in the ſight and view of all the World. The leaſt Spot is ſoon ſpyed in our Garments, a Blemiſh quickly noted in our Doings. It behoveth us therefore to be careful that our Proceedings be juſt and honourable. But I muſt tell you one thing, that by this laſt Act of Parliament you have brought me to a narrow ſtraight, that I muſt give Order for her Death, which is a Princeſs moſt nearly allied unto me in Blood, and whoſe Practices againſt me have ſtricken me into ſo great Grief, that I have been glad to abſent my ſelf from this Parliament, leſt I ſhould increaſe my Sorrow by hearing it ſpoken of, and not out of fear of any danger, as ſome think. But yet I will now tell you a ſecret (tho it is well known that I have the property to keep counſel;) It is not long ſince theſe Eyes of mine ſaw and read an Oath, wherein ſome bound themſelves to kill me within a Month: hereby I ſee your danger in me, which I will be very careful to avoid.

Your

Your Aſſociation for my Safety I have not forgotten, which I never ſo much as thought of, till a great number of Hands, with many Obligations, were ſhewed me; which as I do acknowledge as a ſtrong Argument of your true Hearts, and great Zeal to my Safety, ſo ſhall my Bond be ſtronger tied to a greater Care for your Good. But foraſmuch as this matter now in hand is very rare, and of greateſt conſequence, I hope you do not look for any preſent Reſolution; for my manner is, in matters of leſs moment than this, to deliberate long upon that which is once to be reſolved. In the mean time I beſeech Almighty God to illuminate my Mind, that I may foreſee that which may ſerve for the Good of his Church, the Proſperity of the Commonwealth, and your Safety. And that Delay may not breed Danger, we will ſignify our Reſolution with all Conveniency. And whatever the beſt Subjects may expect at the hands of the beſt Princeſs, that expect from me to be performed to the full.

The twelfth Day after, when ſhe had throughly weighed the matter in her Mind, being diſtracted with doubtful Care and Thought, and as it were in ſome Conflict with her ſelf what to do in ſo important a Buſineſs, ſhe ſent the Lord Chancellor to the higher Houſe, and Puckering to the reſt in the lower Houſe; praying them to enter into a new Conſideration upon ſo weighty a matter, and to deviſe ſome better remedy, whereby both the Queen of Scots Life might be ſpared, and her own Security provided for.

After much and long Deliberation, they judging that both the Welfare and Hurt of the Prince belongeth to all, concurred again with one Voice in the ſame Opinion, and that for theſe Cauſes: For that the Queen's Safety could not be ſecured as long as the Queen of Scots lived, unleſs ſhe either ſeriouſly repented and acknowledg'd her Offence, or were kept with a more ſtreight Guard, good aſſurance being given by Bond and Oath for her good Demeanour, or delivered Hoſtages, or elſe departed the Realm. As for her Repentance, they were out of all hope of it, conſidering that ſhe had ill requited the Queen which had ſaved her Life, and did not yet acknowledge her fault. As for a ſurer Guard, ſtreighter Cuſtody, Bonds, Oath, and Hoſtages, they held them all as nothing, for that the Queen's Life being once taken away, theſe would preſently vaniſh. And if ſhe ſhould depart the Realm, they feared leſt ſhe would preſently take Arms to invade the ſame.

Theſe Reaſons when the Lord Chancellor, and Puckering Speaker of the lower Houſe, had opened more at large, urging hard that the Sentence might be put in Execution; for that as it were Injuſtice to deny Execution of Law to any one of her Subjects that ſhould demand it, ſo much more to her whole People of England, with one Voice and Mind making humble and inſtant Suit for the ſame: The Queen ſpake in this manner;

Full grievous is that way, whoſe going on, and end, yield nothing but Cumber for the hire of a laborious Journey. I have this day been in greater Conflict with my ſelf, than ever in all my Life, whether I ſhould ſpeak, or hold my peace. If I ſpeak, and not complain, I ſhall diſſemble: And if I ſhould be ſilent, your Labour taken were all in vain. If I ſhould complain, it might ſeem ſtrange and rare. Yet I confeſs that my moſt hearty deſire was, that ſome other means might have been deviſed to work your Security and my Safety, than this which is now propounded. So as I cannot but complain, tho not of you, yet unto you; that I perceive by your Petitions that my Safety dependeth wholly upon the Death of another. If there be any that think I have prolonged the time of purpoſe to make a counterfeit ſhew of Clemency, they do me moſt undeſerved wrong, as he knoweth which is the Searcher of the moſt ſecret Thoughts of the Heart. Or if there be any that be perſuaded, that the Commiſſioners durſt not pronounce other Sentence, as fearing thereby to diſpleaſe me, or to ſeem to fail of their care for my Safety, they do but heap upon me moſt injurious Conceipts. For either thoſe whom I have put in truſt, have failed of their Duties, or elſe they ſignified unto the Commiſſioners in my Name, that my Will and Pleaſure was, that every one ſhould deal freely according to his Conſcience, and what they would not openly declare, that they ſhould reveal unto me in private. It was of my moſt favourable Mind towards her, that I deſired ſome other means might be found out to prevent this miſchief. But ſince now it is reſolved, that my Surety is moſt deſperate without her Death, I have a moſt inward feeling of Sorrow, that I which have in my time pardoned ſo many Rebels, winked at ſo many Treaſons, or neglected them with ſilence, muſt now ſeem to ſhew Cruelty upon ſo great a Princeſs.

I have, ſince I came to the Crown of this Realm, ſeen many defamatory Books and Pamphlets againſt me, accuſing me to be a Tyrant: Well fare the Writers Hearts, I believe their meaning was to tell me News; and News indeed it was to me, to be branded with the note of Tyranny: I would it were as great News to hear of their Impiety. But what is it which they will not write now, when they ſhall hear that I have given Conſent, that the Executioner's hands ſhall be imbrued in the Blood of my neareſt Kinſwoman? But ſo far am I from Cruelty, that to ſave mine own Life, I would not offer her Violence; neither have I been ſo careful how to prolong mine own Life, as how to preſerve both: which that it is now impoſſible, I grieve exceedingly. I am not ſo void of Judgment, as not to ſee mine own Perils before mine eyes; nor ſo mad, to ſharpen a Sword to cut mine own Throat; nor ſo careleſs, as not to provide for the Safety of mine own Life. But this I conſider with my ſelf, that many a Man would put his own Life in danger to ſave a Princeſs's Life. I do not ſay, ſo will I; yet have I many times thought upon it.

But ſeeing ſo many have both written and ſpoken againſt me, give me leave, I pray you, to ſay ſomewhat in my own defence, that ye may ſee what manner of Woman I am, for whoſe Safety you have paſſed ſuch careful Thoughts; wherein as I do with moſt thankful Heart conſider your vigilant Care, ſo am I ſure I ſhall never requite it, had I as many Lives as you all.

When firſt I took the Sceptre, I was not unmindful of God the Giver, and therefore began my Reign with his Service, and the Religion I had been both born in, bred in, and I truſt ſhall die in. And tho I was not ignorant how many Perils I ſhould be beſet withal at home for altering Religion, and how many great Princes abroad, of a contrary Profeſſion, would attempt all Hoſtility againſt me; yet was I no whit diſmayed, knowing that God, whom only I reſpected, would defend both me and my Cauſe. Hence it is, that ſo many Treacheries and Conſpiracies have been attempted againſt me, that I rather marvel that I am, than muſe that I ſhould not be, were it not that God's holy Hand hath protected me beyond all Expectation. Then, to the end I might make the better progreſs in the Art of ſwaying the Scepter, I enter'd into long and ſerious Cogitation what things were worthy and fitting for Kings to do: and I found it moſt neceſſary that they ſhould be abundantly furniſhed with thoſe ſpecial Virtues, Juſtice, Temperance, Prudence, and Magnanimity. As for the two latter, I will not boaſt my ſelf, my Sex doth not permit it: But for the two former, I dare ſay, (and that without Oſtentation) I never made a difference of Perſons, where Right was one; I never preferred for Favour, whom I thought not fit for Worth; I never bent my ear to credit a tale that was firſt told, nor was ſo raſh to corrupt my Judgment with Prejudice, before I heard the Cauſe. I will not ſay but many Reports might haply be brought me in too much Favour of the one ſide or other; for we Princes cannot hear all our ſelves: Yet this I dare ſay boldly, My Judgment went ever with the Truth according to my Underſtanding. And as full well Alcibiades wiſhed his Friend, not to give any Anſwer till he had run over the Letters of the Alphabet; ſo have I not uſed raſh and ſudden Reſolutions in any thing.'

And therefore as touching your Counſels and Conſultations, I acknowledge them to be ſo careful, provident, and profitable for the preſervation of my Life, and to proceed from Minds ſo ſincere and to me moſt devoted, that I ſhall endeavour my ſelf all I can, to give you cauſe to think your pains not ill-beſtowed, and ſtrive to make my ſelf worthy of ſuch Subjects.

And now for your Petition, I pray you for this preſent to content your ſelves with an Anſwer without Anſwer. Your Judgement I condemn not, neither do I miſtake your Reaſons, but pray you to accept my Thankfulneſs, excuſe my Doubtfulneſs, and take in good part my Anſwer anſwerleſs. If I ſhould ſay, I would not do what you requeſt, I might ſay perhaps more than I think: And if I ſhould ſay I would do it, I might plunge my ſelf into Peril, whom you labour to preſerve; which in your Wiſdoms and Diſcretions ye would not that I ſhould, if ye conſider the Circumſtances of Place, Time, and the Manners and Conditions of Men.

After this, the Aſſembly of the Eſtates was prorogued.

About that time were Lord Buckhurſt and Beale ſent to the Queen of Scots, to ſignify unto her that Sentence was pronounced againſt her; that the ſame was approved and confirmed by Act of Parliament, as moſt juſt, and the Execution thereof inſtantly ſued for by the Eſtates, out of a due regard of Juſtice, Security and Neceſſity: and therefore to perſuade her to acknowledge her Offences againſt God and the Queen, and to expiate them before her Death by Repentance; letting her underſtand, that as long as ſhe lived, the received Religion in England could not ſubſiſt. Hereat ſhe ſeemed with a certain unwonted Alacrity to triumph, giving God thanks, and rejoicing in her heart that ſhe was holden to be an Inſtrument for the re-eſtabliſhing of Religion in this Iſland. And earneſtly ſhe prayed, that ſhe might have a Catholick Prieſt to direct her Conſcience, and miniſter the Sacraments unto her. A Biſhop and a Dean whom they commended unto her for this uſe, ſhe utterly rejected, and ſharply taxed the Engliſh Nation, ſaying often, That the Engliſh had many times ſlaughtered their Kings; no marvel therefore, if they now alſo ſhew their Cruelty upon me, that am iſſued from the Blood of their Kings.

The Publication of the Sentence was ſtayed a while by the Interceſſion of L'Aubeſpine the French Embaſſador: but in the month of December, through the earneſt Inſtance of ſome Courtiers, it was publickly proclaimed all over the City of London, the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, and principal Officers and Citizens being preſent, and afterward throughout the whole Realm. In the Proclamation the Queen ſeriouſly proteſted, that this Publication was extorted from her not without exceeding Grief of Mind, out of a certain Neceſſity, and the moſt vehement Prayers and Obteſtations of the Eſtates of the Realm; though there were which thought this to proceed of Womens Cunning, who tho they much deſire a thing, yet will always ſeem rather to be conſtrained unto it.

The Scottiſh Queen's Letter to Anthony Babington, to renew the Intelligence.

'MY very good Friend, albeit it be long ſince you heard from me, not more than I have done from you, it is againſt my Will; yet would I not you ſhould think I have in the mean while, nor ever will be unmindful of the effectual Affection you have ſhewed heretofore towards all that concerneth me. I have underſtood, that upon the renewing of your Intelligence, there were addreſſed unto you, both from France and Scotland, ſome Packets for me; I pray you, if any be come to your hands, and be yet in place, to deliver them to the Bearer hereof, who will ſafely convey them unto me; and I will pray to God for your Preſervation.

June the 28th, at Chartley. Your Aſſured Good Friend,

MARY REGINA.

Anthony Babington's Letter to the Scottiſh Queen.

'MOST mighty, moſt excellent, my dread Sovereign Lady and Queen, unto whom I owe all Fidelity and Obedience; it may pleaſe your gracious Majeſty to admit Excuſe of my long Silence, and Diſcontinuance from thoſe dutiful Offices, intercepted upon the Remove of your Royal Perſon from the antient place of your abode, to the cuſtody of a wicked Puritan, and meer Leiceſtrian, a mortal Enemy both by Faith and Faction to your Majeſty and to the Catholick Eſtate: I held the hope of our Country's Weal depending (next under God) upon the Life of your Majeſty, to be deſperate, and thereupon reſolved to depart the Realm, determining to ſpend the remnant of my Life in ſuch ſolitary ſort, as the miſerable and wretched Eſtate of my Country doth require; only expecting, according to the juſt Judgment of God, the preſent Confuſion thereof; which God, for his Mercy ſake, prevent. The which my purpoſe being in execution, and ſtanding upon my departure, there was addreſſed unto me, from the Parts beyond the Seas, one Ballard, a Man of Virtue and Learning, and of ſingular Zeal to the Catholick Cauſe, and your Majeſty's Service. The Man informed me of great Preparations by

the

‘ the Chriſtian Princes, your Majeſty's Allies, for ‘ the Deliverance of our Country from the ex- ‘ treme and miſerable Eſtate wherein for a long ‘ time it hath remained. Which when I under- ‘ ſtood, my eſpecial Deſire was, to adviſe by ‘ what means I might, with the hazard of my ‘ Life, and all my Friends in general, do your ‘ ſacred Majeſty one day's good Service. Where- ‘ upon, moſt dread Sovereign, according to the ‘ great care which thoſe Princes have of the Pre- ‘ ſervation and ſafe Deliverance of your Majeſty's ‘ ſacred Perſon, I adviſed of Means, and conſi- ‘ der'd of Circumſtances accordingly, to and with ‘ ſo many of the wiſeſt and moſt truſty, as with ‘ ſafety I might commend the Secrecy thereof ‘ unto: I do find, by the Aſſiſtance of the Lord ‘ Jeſus, aſſurance of good Effect, and deſired Fruit ‘ of our Travel. Theſe things are firſt to be ad- ‘ viſed in this great and honourable Action; upon ‘ iſſue of which dependeth, not only the Life of ‘ your moſt excellent Majeſty, which God long ‘ preſerve, to our ineſtimable Comfort, and to ‘ the Salvation of Engliſh Souls, and the Lives of ‘ all us Actors therein; but alſo the Honour and ‘ Weal of our Country, far more dear than our ‘ Lives unto us, and the laſt hope ever to recover ‘ the Faith of our Forefathers, and to redeem our ‘ ſelves from the Servitude and Bondage which ‘ hereby heretofore hath been impoſed upon us ‘ with the loſs of many thouſand Souls. Firſt, in ‘ the aſſuring of Invaſions, ſufficient ſtrength on ‘ the Invaders parts to arrive are appointed, with ‘ a ſtrong Party at every place, to join with them, ‘ and warrant their landing, the Deliverance of ‘ your Majeſty, the Diſpatch of the uſurping Com- ‘ petitor. For the effecting of all, may it pleaſe ‘ your Majeſty to rely upon my Service, I proteſt ‘ before the Almighty, who hath long miraculouſly ‘ preſerved your royal Perſon, no doubt, to ‘ ſome univerſal Good, that what I have ſaid ‘ ſhall be performed, or all our Lives happily loſt ‘ in the Execution thereof. Which Vow all the ‘ chief Actors have taken ſolemnly; and are upon ‘ Aſſurance, by your Majeſty's to me, to receive ‘ the bleſſed Sacrament thereupon, either to pre- ‘ vail in the Church's behalf, and your Majeſty's, ‘ or fortunately to die for ſo honourable a Cauſe. ‘ Now, foraſmuch as delays are extreme dange- ‘ rous, it might pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty, ‘ by your Wiſdom to direct us, and by your ‘ Princely Authority to enable us, and ſuch as may ‘ advance the Affairs: Foreſeeing there is not ‘ any of the Nobility, at liberty, aſſured to your ‘ Majeſty in this deſperate Service, except un- ‘ known unto us; and ſeeing that it is very ne- ‘ ceſſary that ſome there ſhould be to become ‘ Heads to lead the Multitude, who are diſpoſed ‘ by Nature, in this Land, to follow Nobility: ‘ Conſidering withal, it doth not only make the ‘ Commons and Country to follow without Con- ‘ tradiction or Contention, which is ever found ‘ in equality, but alſo doth add great Courage to ‘ the Leaders. For which neceſſary Regards, I ‘ would recommend ſome to your Majeſty as are ‘ fitteſt, in my knowledge, to be your Lieute- ‘ nants, in the Weſt Parts, in the North Parts, ‘ South-Wales and North-Wales, the Countries of ‘ Lancaſter, Derby and Stafford. In all which ‘ Countries, Parties being already made, and Fi- ‘ delity taken in your Majeſty's Name, I hold ‘ them as moſt aſſured, and of undoubted Fidelity. ‘ My ſelf, with ten Gentlemen of Quality, and ‘ an hundred Followers, will undertake the deli- ‘ very of your Perſon from the hands of your Ene- ‘ mies: And for the Diſpatch of the Uſurper, ‘ from Obedience of whom, by the Excommuni- ‘ cation of her, we are made free, there be ſix noble ‘ Gentlemen, all my private Friends, who, for ‘ the Zeal they bear to the Catholick Cauſe, and ‘ your Majeſty's Service, will undertake the Tra- ‘ gical Execution. It reſteth, that according to ‘ their infinite Deſerts, and your Majeſty's Boun- ‘ ty, their Heroical Attempts may be honourably ‘ rewarded in them, if they eſcape with Life, ‘ or in their Poſterity; and that ſo much, by your ‘ Majeſty's Authority, I may be able to aſſure ‘ them. Now it remaineth only in your Majeſty's ‘ Wiſdom, that it be reduced into Method, that ‘ your happy Deliverance be firſt, for that there- ‘ upon dependeth the only Good, and that the ‘ other Circumſtances concur; that the untimely ‘ end of the one do not overthrow the reſt. All ‘ which your Majeſty's wonderful Experience and ‘ Wiſdom will diſpoſe in ſo good manner, as I doubt ‘ not, through God's good Aſſiſtance, ſhall take ‘ deſerved effect: for the obtaining of which, every ‘ one of us ſhall think his Life moſt happily ſpent. ‘ Upon the twelfth day of this month I will be at ‘ Litchfield, expecting your Majeſty's Anſwers and ‘ Letters, to execute what by them ſhall be com- ‘ manded.

Your Majeſty's

Faithful Subject, and Sworn Servant,

Anthony Babington.

The Anſwer of the Scottiſh Queen to a Letter written by Anthony Babington, 12 July, 1586.

‘ TRUSTY and Well-beloved, according ‘ to the Zeal and intire Affection which I ‘ have known in you towards the common Cauſe ‘ of Religion, and mine, having always made ac- ‘ count of you as a principal and right worthy ‘ Member to be imployed both in the one, and ‘ in the other; it hath been no leſs Conſolation ‘ unto me to know your Eſtate, as I have done by ‘ your laſt Letter, and to have further means to ‘ renew my Intelligence with you, than I have ‘ felt Griefs all this while paſt, to be without the ‘ ſame. I pray you therefore to write unto me ‘ hereafter, ſo often as you can, of all Concurrants, ‘ which you may judge in any ſort importunate to ‘ the good of mine Affairs, wherein I ſhall not fail ‘ to correſpond with all the Care and Diligence ‘ that ſhall be by poſſibility: For divers great and ‘ importunate Conſiderations, which were here ‘ too long to be deducted, I cannot but greatly ‘ praiſe and commend your common deſire to pre- ‘ vent, in time, the Deſignment of our Enemies, ‘ for the Extirpation of our Religion out of this ‘ Realm, with the Ruin of us all; for I have long ‘ ago ſhewed to the Foreign Catholick Princes, ‘ what they have done againſt the King of Spain, ‘ and in the time the Catholicks here remaining, ‘ expoſed to all Perſecutions and Cruelty, do daily ‘ diminiſh in Number, Forces, Means and Power, ‘ ſo as if Remedy be not thereunto ſpeedily pro- ‘ vided, I fear not a little but that they ſhall be- ‘ come altogether unable for ever to ariſe again to ‘ receive any Aid at all whenſoever it is offered. ‘ Then for my own part, I pray you aſſure our ‘ principal

‘ principal Friends, that albeit I had no particular ‘ Intereſt in this Caſe, that all that I may pretend ‘ unto, being of no Conſideration to me in reſpect ‘ of the publick Good of the State, I ſhall be al- ‘ ways ready, and moſt willing to imploy therein ‘ my Life, and all that I have, or may look for in ‘ this World. Now to ground ſubſtantially this ‘ Enterprize, and to bring it to good Succeſs, you ‘ muſt examine duly,

‘ Firſt, What Forces, as well on Foot as on ‘ Horſe, you may raiſe among you all; and what ‘ Captains you ſhall appoint for them in every ‘ Shire, in caſe a General cannot be had.

‘ Secondly, Which Towns, Ports and Havens you ‘ may aſſure your ſelves, as well on the North, ‘ Weſt and South, to receive Succours, as well ‘ from the Low-Countries, Spain and France, as from ‘ other Parts.

‘ Thirdly, What place you eſteem fitteſt, and of ‘ moſt advantage to aſſemble the principal Compa- ‘ ny of your Forces at the ſame time, which ‘ would be compaſſed conform to the proportion ‘ of your own.

‘ Fourthly, For how long Pay and Munition, ‘ and Ports fitteſt for their Landing in this Realm, ‘ from the foreſaid three foreign Countries.

‘ Fifthly, What Proviſion of Monies and Ar- ‘ mour, in caſe you ſhould want, you would ask.

‘ Sixthly, By what means do the ſix Gentlemen ‘ deliberate to proceed.

‘ Seventhly, The manner of my getting forth ‘ of this Hold.

‘ Which Points having taken amongſt you who ‘ are the principal Actors, and alſo as few in number ‘ as you can; the beſt Reſolution in my Device is, ‘ That you impart the ſame with all diligence to ‘ Bernardin de Mendoza, Ambaſſador Lieger for the ‘ King of Spain in France, who beſides the Experi- ‘ ence he hath of the Eſtate on this ſide, I may aſ- ‘ ſure you, will imploy himſelf moſt willing: I ſhall ‘ not fail to write to him of the matter, with all the ‘ Recommendations I can, as alſo I ſhall do in any ‘ wiſe what ſhall be needful. But you muſt take ‘ choice Men for the managing of the Affairs with ‘ the ſaid Mendoza, and others out of the Realm, of ‘ ſome Faithful and very Secret, both in Wiſdom ‘ and Perſonage, unto whom only you muſt com- ‘ mit your ſelves; to the end things may be kept ‘ the more ſecret, which for your own Security I ‘ commend to your ſelf. If your Meſſenger bring ‘ you back again ſure promiſe, and ſufficient aſſu- ‘ rance of the Succours which you demand, then ‘ thereafter (but not ſooner, for that it were in ‘ vain) take diligent Order, that all thoſe on your ‘ part make, ſecretly as they can, proviſion of Ar- ‘ mour, fit Horſes, and ready Mony, wherewith ‘ to hold themſelves in a readineſs to march ‘ ſo ſoon as it ſhall be ſignified unto you by the ‘ Chief and Principal of every Shire: And for the ‘ better colouring of the matter, reſerving to the ‘ Principals the knowledge of the Ground of the ‘ Enterprize, it ſhall be enough at the beginning ‘ to give it out to the reſt, that the ſaid Proviſi- ‘ ons are made only for the fortifying of your ſelves ‘ in caſe of need, againſt the Puritans of this ‘ Realm, the principal whereof having the chief ‘ Forces thereof in the Low-Countries, as you ‘ may let the bruit go diſguiſed, do ſeek the Ruin ‘ and Overthrow at their return home of the ‘ Catholicks, and to uſurp the Crown, not only ‘ againſt me and all other lawful Pretenders there- ‘ to, but againſt their own Queen that now is, if ‘ ſhe will not altogether ſubmit her ſelf to their ‘ Government. Theſe pretexts may ſerve to found ‘ and eſtabliſh among all, Aſſociations or Conſe- ‘ derations general, as done only for your Preſer- ‘ vation and Defence, as well in Religion as ‘ Lands, Lives and Goods, againſt the Oppreſ- ‘ ſion and Attempts of the ſaid Puritans; without ‘ directly writing, or giving out any thing againſt ‘ the Queen, but rather ſhewing your ſelves wil- ‘ ling to maintain her and her lawful Heirs after ‘ her, not naming me. The Affairs being thus ‘ prepared, and Forces in readineſs, both without ‘ and within the Realm, then ſhall it be time to ‘ ſet the ſix Gentlemen on work, taking good order ‘ upon the accompliſhment of their Diſcharges: ‘ I may be ſuddenly tranſported out of this Place, ‘ and meet without tarrying for the arrival of the ‘ foreign Aid, which then muſt be haſtened with ‘ all Diligence. Now for that there can be no ‘ certain Day appointed for the accompliſhment ‘ of the ſaid Gentlemen's deſignment, to the end ‘ others may be in a readineſs to take me from ‘ hence, I would that the ſaid Gentlemen had al- ‘ ways about them, or at leaſt at Court, divers and ‘ ſundry Scoutmen, furniſhed with good and ſpeedy ‘ Horſes, ſo ſoon as the deſign ſhall be executed, ‘ to come with all diligence to advertiſe me there- ‘ of, and theſe that ſhall be appointed for my ‘ tranſporting; to the end, that immediately ‘ after they may be at the place of mine abode, ‘ before my Keeper can have advertiſement of the ‘ execution of the ſaid deſignment, or at the leaſt ‘ before he can fortify himſelf within the Houſe, ‘ or carry me out of the ſame. It were neceſſary ‘ to diſpatch two or three of the ſaid Advertiſers ‘ by divers ways, to the end, if one be ſtaid, the ‘ other may come through: At the ſame inſtant ‘ it were needful alſo to aſſay to cut off the Poſts ‘ ordinary ways. This is the Plot that I think ‘ beſt for this Enterprize, and the order whereby ‘ we ſhall conduct the ſame for our common Secu- ‘ rity: for ſtirring on this ſide before you be ſure ‘ of ſufficient foreign Forces, that were for no- ‘ thing but to put our ſelves in danger of follow- ‘ ing the miſerable Fortune of ſuch as have here- ‘ tofore travelled in the like Actions; and if you ‘ take me out of this Place, be well aſſured to ſet ‘ me in the midſt of a good Army, or ſome very ‘ good Strength, where I may ſafely ſtay till the ‘ Aſſembly of your Forces, and Arrival of the ſaid ‘ foreign Succours. It were ſufficient cauſe gi- ‘ ven to the Queen, in catching me again, to ‘ incloſe me in ſome hold, out of the which I ‘ ſhould never eſcape, if ſhe did uſe me no worſe; ‘ and to purſue with all extremity thoſe that aſſiſt- ‘ ed me, which would grieve me more than all ‘ the unhappineſs might fall upon my ſelf. Ear- ‘ neſtly as you can, look and take heed moſt care- ‘ fully and vigilantly to compaſs and aſſure all ſo ‘ well, that ſhall be neceſſary for the effecting of ‘ the ſaid Enterprize, as with the Grace of God ‘ you may bring the ſame to happy End; remit- ‘ ting to the judgment of your principal Friends ‘ on this ſide, with whom you have to deal, therein ‘ to ordain and conclude upon theſe Points, which ‘ may ſerve you for an Overture of ſuch Propoſi- ‘ tions as you ſhall amongſt you find beſt: and to ‘ your ſelf in particular, I refer the Genttlemen a- ‘ forementionʼd, to be aſſured of all that ſhould be ‘ requiſite for the intire execution of their Good- ‘ Wills. I leave their common Reſolution to Ad- ‘ vice; in caſe the deſign do not take hold, as ‘ may happen whether they will or no, do not ‘ purſue my Tranſport, and the Execution of the ‘ reſt

'reſt of the Enterprize. But if the miſhap ſhould 'fall out, that you might not come by me, being ſet 'in the Tower of London, or in any other Strength, 'with ſtrong Guard; yet notwithſtanding, 'leave not for God's ſake to proceed in the Enter-'prize: for I ſhall at any time die moſt conten-'tedly, underſtanding of your delivery out of the 'ſervitude wherein you are holden as Slaves. I 'ſhall aſſay, that at the ſame time that the work 'ſhall be in hand, at that preſent to make the Ca-'tholicks of Scotland to ariſe, and put my Son into 'their hands, to the effect, that from thence our 'Enemies here may not prevail by any Succour: 'I would alſo that ſome ſtirring were in Ireland, 'and that it were laboured to begin ſome time be-'fore any thing be done here, and then that the 'Alarm might begin thereby on the flat contrary 'ſide: that the ſtroke may come from your deſigns, 'to have ſome General, or chief Head, are very 'pertinent; and therefore were it good to ſend 'obſcurely for the purpoſe to the Earl of Arundel, 'or ſome of his Brethren, and likewiſe to ſeek to 'the young Earl of Northumberland, if he be at 'liberty from over the Sea; the Earl of Weſt-'moreland may be had, whoſe Hand and Name, 'you know may do much in the North Parts; alſo 'the Lord Paget, of good Ability in ſome Shires 'thereabouts: both the one and the other may be 'had, amongſt whom ſecretly ſome more princi-'pal baniſhed, may return, if the enterprize be 'once reſolute. The ſaid Lord Paget is now in 'Spain, and may treat of all that, by his Brother 'Charles, directly by himſelf, you will commit un-'to him touching the Affairs. Beware that none 'of your Meſſengers, that you ſend forth of the 'Realm, carry any Letters upon themſelves, but 'make their Diſpatches, and ſend them either af-'ter or before them by ſome others. Take heed 'of Spies and falſe Brethren that are amongſt you, 'eſpecially of ſome Prieſts, already practiſed upon 'by your Enemies for your diſcovery; and in any 'caſe keep never a Paper about you, that may in 'any ſort do harm: for from like Errors have 'come the Condemnation of all ſuch as have ſuf-'fered heretofore, againſt whom otherwiſe no-'thing could juſtly have been proved. Diſcover 'as little as you can, your Names and Intentions 'to the French Ambaſſador, now Leiger at Lon-'don; for although, as I underſtand, he is a very 'honeſt Gentleman, yet I fear his Maſter entertain-'eth a Courſe far contrary to our deſignment, which 'may move him to diſcover us, if he had any par-'ticular knowledge thereof. All this while I 'have ſued to change and remove from this Houſe; 'and for anſwer, the Caſtle of Dudley only hath 'been named to ſerve the turn; ſo as by appear-'ance about the end of this Summer, I may go thi-'ther: therefore adviſe ſo ſoon as I ſhall be there, 'what Proviſion may be had about that part, for 'my eſcape from thence. If I ſtay here, there is 'but one of theſe three ways or means to be 'looked for.

'The Firſt, That at a certain Day appointed 'for my walking abroad on horſeback on the 'Mores, between this and Stafford, where ordi-'narily, you know, but few People do paſs, let 'fifty or threeſcore Horſemen, well mounted and 'armed, come to take me away, as they may ea-'ſily; my Keeper having with him but eighteen 'or twenty Horſes, with only Dogs.

'The Second means, To come at Midnight, or 'ſoon after, and ſet fire on the Barns and Stables, 'which you know are near the Houſe; and whilſt 'my Guardian Servants ſhall come forth to the 'Fire, your Company having duly on a Mark, 'whereby they may be known one from another, 'ſome of you may ſurprize the Houſe, where I 'hope, with the few Servants I have about me, 'I ſhall be able to give you correſpondent Aid.

'And the Third is, Some there be that bring 'Carts hither early in the Morning, three Carts 'may be ſo prepared, that being in the midſt 'of the great Gate, the Carts might fall down, 'or overthrow; that thereupon you might come 'ſuddenly, and make your ſelves Maſters of the 'Houſe, and carry me ſuddenly away: ſo you 'might eaſily do before any number of Soldiers, 'who lodg in ſundry Places forth of this Place, 'ſome half a Mile, and ſome a whole Mile, 'could come to relieve. Whatſoever Iſſue the 'matter taketh, I do, and ſhall think my ſelf ob-'liged, ſo long as I live, towards you, for 'the offers you make to hazard your ſelf as you 'do for my Deliverance; and by any means that 'ever I may have, I ſhall do my endeavour to re-'cognize by Effects your Deſerts: therein I have 'commanded a more ample Alphabet to be made 'for you, which herewith you ſhall receive. God 'Almighty have you in his Protection.

Your aſſured Friend for ever,

Mary Regina.

The Contents of a Letter written by the Scottiſh Queen to Bernardine de Mendoza, May 20, 1586. after the Pope's Calendar.

'I FIND my ſelf greatly troubled what 'Courſe to take anew, for the Affairs on this 'ſide the Sea: Charles Paget hath a Charge from 'me to impart unto you certain Overtures in my 'behalf; whereupon I pray you deliver him freely, 'what you think may be obtained thereof from the 'King your Maſter.

'There is another point depending thereof, 'which I have reſerved to write to your own ſelf, 'for to be by you ſent unto the King your Maſter 'on my behalf, no Man elſe, if it be poſſible, be-'ing privy thereunto; that is, that conſidering 'my Son's great Obſtinacy in Hereſy, and fore-'ſeeing hereupon the imminent danger and harm 'like to enſue to the Catholick Church, he com-'ing to the Succeſſion of this Realm, I have re-'ſolved with my ſelf, in caſe my ſaid Son do not 'reduce himſelf before my Death to the Catholick 'Religion, (as I muſt tell you plainly, I have ſmall 'hope ſo long as he ſhall remain in Scotland) to 'give and grant my Right to the ſaid King your 'Maſter, in the Succeſſion of this Crown, by my 'laſt Will and Teſtament; praying him in Con-'ſideration hereof from this time forward to take 'me wholly into his Protection, likewiſe the State 'and Affairs of this Country: the which for diſ-'charge of my Conſcience, I cannot think I can 'put into the hands of a Prince more zealous of 'our Religion, and able in all reſpects to re-eſta-'bliſh the ſame on this ſide, as it imports all the 'reſt of Chriſtendom. Let this be kept ſecret, 'foraſmuch as if it come to be revealed, it ſhould 'be in France the loſs of my Dower, in Scotland a 'clear Breach with my Son, and in this Country 'my total Ruin and Deſtruction.

'Thank

'Thank on my behalf the ſaid King your Maſter, for the Favour and Liberality extended to the Lord Paget and his Brother, which I pray him moſt earneſtly to continue, and to gratify for my ſake with ſome Penſion poor Morgan, who hath ſo much endured not only for me, but for the common Cauſe.

'I recommend likewiſe unto you Fulſambe (whom you know) to help him to ſome Supply, above the Entertainment that I have allotted him, according to the ſmall means I have.

Queen Elizabeth's Letter directed to Sir Amias Powlet Kt. Keeper of the Queen of Scots, at the Caſtle of Fotheringay; viz.

'AMIAS, my moſt faithful Servant, God reward thee treeble-fold in the double of thy moſt troubleſome Charge, ſo well diſcharged: if you knew, my Amias, how kindly, beſides dutifully, my grateful Heart accepts your double Labours, and faithful Actions, your wiſe Orders, and ſafe Regards, performed in ſo dangerous a Charge; it would eaſe your Travel, and rejoice your Heart, in that I cannot ballance, in any weight of my Judgment, the value that I prize you at, and ſuppoſe no Treaſure to countervail ſuch Faith; and ſhall condemn my ſelf, in that thought I never committed, if I reward not ſuch deſerts; yea, let me lack, when I moſt need, if I acknowledge not ſuch a Merit with a Reward, not omnibus datum: but let your wicked Murthereſs know, how with hearty ſorrow her vile deſerts compel theſe Orders; and bid her, from me, ask God forgiveneſs for her treacherous dealing againſt my Life many Years, to the intolerable Peril of her own; and yet not content with ſo many Forgiveneſſes, but muſt fall again ſo horribly, far paſſing a Woman's Thought, much leſs a Prince's; inſtead of excuſing whereof, not one can ſerve it, being ſo plainly confeſſed by the Author of my guiltleſs Death. Let Repentance take place, and let not the Fiend poſſeſs her, ſo that the better part be loſt, which I pray, with hands lifted up to him that can both ſave and ſpill, with my moſt loving Adieu, and Prayer for thy long Life,

Your aſſured and loving Sovereign, as Heart, by good Deſert, indureth,
Elizabeth Regina.

The Commiſſion for executing the Queen of Scots.

'ELIZABETH, by the Grace of God, Queen of England, France and Ireland, &c. To our truſty and well-beloved Couſins, George Earl of Shrewsbury, Earl Marſhal of England; Henry Earl of Kent; Henry Earl of Derby; George Earl of Cumberland; and Henry Earl of Pembrook, Greeting, &c. Whereas ſithence the Sentence given by you, and others of our Council, Nobility and Judges, againſt the Queen of Scots, by the name of Mary, the Daughter of James V. late King of Scots, commonly called the Queen of Scots, and Dowager of France, as to you is well known: All the States in the laſt Parliament aſſembled, did not only deliberately, by great Advice, allow and approve the ſame Sentence as juſt and honourable, but alſo with all humbleneſs, and earneſtneſs poſſible, at ſundry times require, ſollicit, and preſs us to direct ſuch further Execution againſt her Perſon, as they did adjudge her to have daily deſerved; adding thereunto, that the forbearing thereof was, and would be daily certain and undoubted Danger, not only unto our own Life, but alſo unto themſelves, their Poſterity, and the publick Eſtate of this Realm, as well for the Cauſe of the Goſpel, and true Religion of Chriſt, as for the Peace of the whole Realm: whereupon we did, although the ſame were with ſome delay of time, publiſh the ſame Sentence by our Proclamation, yet hitherto have forborn to give Direction for the further Satisfaction of the aforeſaid moſt earneſt Requeſts, made by our ſaid States of our Parliament, whereby we do daily underſtand, by all ſorts of our loving Subjects, both of our Nobility and Council, and alſo of the wiſeſt, greateſt, and beſt devoted of all Subjects of inferior Degrees, how greatly, and deeply from the bottom of their Hearts, they are grieved and afflicted with daily, yea hourly Fears of our Life, and thereby conſequently with a dreadful Doubt and Expectation of the Ruin of the preſent happy and godly Eſtate of this Realm, if we ſhould forbear the further final Execution, as it is deſerved, and neglect their general and continual Requeſts, Prayers, Counſels and Advices. And thereupon contrary to our natural Diſpoſition in ſuch Caſe, being overcome with the evident weight of their Counſels, and their daily Interceſſions, importing ſuch a neceſſity, as appeareth, directly tending to the Safety not only of our ſelf, but alſo to the Weal of our whole Realm, We have condeſcended to ſuffer Juſtice to take place; and for the Execution thereof, upon the ſpecial truſty Experience and Confidence which we have of your Loyalties, Faithfulneſs and Love, both toward our Perſon and the Safety thereof, and alſo to your native Countries, whereof you are moſt noble and principal Members, we do will, and by Warrant hereof do authorize you, as ſoon as you ſhall have time convenient, to repair to our Caſtle of Fotheringay, where the ſaid Queen of Scots is in Cuſtody of our right Truſty and Faithful Servant and Counſellor, Sir Amias Powlet Kt. and then taking her into your Charge, to cauſe by your Commandment Execution to be done upon her Perſon, in the preſence of your ſelves, and the aforeſaid Sir Amias Powlet, and of ſuch other Officers of Juſtice as you ſhall command to attend upon you for that purpoſe; and the ſame to be done in ſuch manner and form, and at ſuch time and place, and by ſuch Perſons, as to five, four or three of you, ſhall be thought by your Diſcretions convenient, notwithſtanding any Law, Statute or Ordinance to the contrary. And theſe our Letters Patents, ſealed with our great Seal of England, ſhall be to you, and every of you and to all Perſous that ſhall be preſent, or that ſhall be, by you, commanded to do any thing appertaining to the aforeſaid Execution, a full ſufficient Warrant, and Diſcharge for ever. And further, we are alſo pleaſed and contented, and hereby we do will, command, and authorize our Chancellor of England, at the Requeſts of you all, and every of you, the Duplicate of our Letters Patents, to be to all purpoſes made, dated and ſealed with our great Seal of England, as theſe Preſents now are: In witneſs whereof, we have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patents. Yeoven at our Mannor of Greenwich, the 1ſt Day of February, in the 29th Year of our Reign.

The Tryal of PHILIP HOWARD, Earl of Arundel, the 18*th day of* April, 1589. and in the 31*ſt Year of the Reign of Queen* Elizabeth.

FROM the outward Bar in the King's Bench, was there a Court made of 30 Foot ſquare, within which was a Table of 12 Foot ſquare, covered with green Cloth; and in the ſame Court were Benches to ſit upon, covered with green Say. In the midſt of the ſame Court, at the upper end, was placed a Cloth of State, with a Chair and Cuſhion for the Lord Steward: from the midſt of the ſame Court, to the midſt of the Hall, was built a Gallery for the Priſoner to come upon to the Court, in length 110 Foot, and in breadth 15 Foot, and in height from the ground 6 Foot, railed round about, and going down with ſeven Steps.

Between eight and nine of the Clock in the morning, the Earl of Derby, Lord Steward his Grace, enter'd the Hall, attended by divers Noblemen and Officers, four Serjeants at Arms, with their Maces waiting before him; next before his Grace, the Earl of Oxford, Lord Great Chamberlain of England. My Lord of Derby's Grace being ſeated in his Chair of State, every Nobleman was placed in his degree, by Garter King of Heraults.

At his Grace's feet did ſit Mr. Winckefield, one of her Majeſty's Gentlemen-Uſhers, holding a long white Wand in his Hand, being accompany'd with Mr. Norris, Serjeant of the Garter.

Before them did ſit Mr. Sandes, Clerk of the Crown of the King's-Bench.

Oppoſite againſt my Lord's Grace did ſit the Queen's Majeſty's Learned Council, viz.

1. Serjeant Puckering.
2. Serjeant Shettleworth.
3. Mr. Popham, the Queen's Attorney-General.
4. Mr. Edgerton, the Queen's Sollicitor.

The Names of the Commiſſioners on the Right Hand, ſitting upon a lower Bench, under the Lords of the Jury.

1. Sir Francis Knowles Kt. Treaſurer of the Houſhold.
2. Sir James a Croſts Kt. Comptroler of the Houſhold.
3. Sir John Parrat, one of her Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy-Council.
4. Mr. Wolley, Secretary of the Latin Tongue, of the Privy-Council.
5. John Forteſcue, Maſter of the Wardrobe, and of the Privy-Council.
6. Dr. Dale, one of the Maſters of Requeſt to her Majeſty.
7. William Fleetwood, Serjeant at Law, and Recorder of London.
8. Mr. Rockby, Maſter of Requeſts, and Maſter of St. Katherines.

The Names of the Commiſſioners on the Left Hand.

9. The Lord Chief Juſtice of England, Sir Chriſtopher Wray.
10. The Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Gilbert Gerrard.
11. The Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Edmund Anderſon.
12. The Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Roger Manwood.
13. Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, William Periam.
14. Juſtice Gandy, of the King's-Bench.

The Serjeant at Arms, uſually Attendant on the Lord Chancellor, nam'd Roger Wood, was commanded to make an O Yes three times.

Then Mr. Sandes, Clerk of the Crown, read the Commiſſion.

And Sir Francis Knowles Kt. gave up the Verdict of the great Aſſize.

Then was called Matthew Spencer, Serjeant at Arms, to return his Precept; which was returned and read.

After that, the Noblemen and Peers of the Jury, for his Tryal, were ſeverally called by their Names, as followeth:

1. William Lord Burleigh, Lord Treaſurer of England.
2. Edward Earl of Oxford, Lord Great Chamberlain of England.
3. William Lord Marqueſs of Wincheſter.
4. Henry Earl of Kent.
5. Henry Earl of Suſſex.
6. Henry Earl of Pembroke.
7. Edward Earl of Hertford.
8. Henry Earl of Lincoln.
9. Henry Lord Hunſdon, Lord Chamberlain of her Majeſty's Houſhold.
10. Peregrine Lord Willoughby of Eresby.
11. Lord Morley.
12. Lord Cobham.
13. Arthur Lord Grey.
14. Lord Darcy, of the North.
15. Lord Sandes.
16. Lord Wentworth.
17. Lord Willoughby of Parham.
18. Lord North.
19. Lord Rich.
20. Lord St. John of Bletſho.
21. Lord Buckhurſt.
22. Lord De la Ware.
23. Lord Norris.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower was called to return his Precept, and to bring forth his Priſoner, Philip Earl of Arundel. The Earl came into the Hall, being in a wrought Velvet Gown, furred about with Martins, laid about with Gold Lace, Lace, and button'd with Gold Buttons, a black Sattin Doublet, a pair of Velvet Hoſe, and a long high black Hat on his Head; a very tall Man, looking ſomewhat Swarth-colour'd.

Then was the Earl brought to the Bar, with the Ax carried before him by Mr. Shelton, Gent. Porter of the Tower, being accompanied with Sir Owen Hopton Kt. Lieutenant of the Tower, Sir Drew Drewry, Conſtable of the Tower for the time, Mr. Henry Bronkard, and others.

At my Lord of Arundel's coming to the Bar, he made two Obeyſances to the State, and to the Nobles, and others there preſent.

Then did Mr. Sandes, Clerk of the Crown, ſay, he was indicted of ſeveral Treaſons, and ſaid unto him, Philip Howard, Earl of Arundel, late of Arundel in the County of Suſſex, hold up thy Hand.

He held up his Hand very high, ſaying, Here is as true a Man's Heart and Hand, as ever came into this Hall.

Mr. Sandes then read the Indictment.

That whereas divers traitorous Perſons, in the Parts beyond the Seas, being natural Engliſh-men, viz. Dr. Allen, Parſons, Champion, Mott, and divers others, have heretofore, divers and ſundry times, with ſundry Perſons, as well Engliſh-men as of other Countries, practiſed to accompliſh and bring to paſs ſeveral dangerous and unnatural Treaſons againſt the Queen's Majeſty, her Royal Perſon, Crown and Dignity, viz. to ſubvert the State, invade the Realm, to ſet up Catholick Religion, to raiſe Inſurrections, &c. amongſt which number of unnatural Traitors, the Earl of Arundel was well acquainted with that notorious Traitor Dr. Allen, by means of Bridges, Weſton, Ithill, and other Popiſh Prieſts, with whom, divers times, ſithence the 20th Year of her Majeſty's Reign, he hath had private and ſecret Conference, and Communication of ſeveral Treaſons; inſomuch, that the Earl of Arundel did preſently diſpatch his ſeveral Letters by Bridges aforeſaid, to Dr. Allen, to wiſh him at any hand to do ſomething concerning the Cauſe Catholick; wherein he promiſed to perform any thing that Dr. Allen ſhould think fit for him to do. And whereas, the 24th day of April, in the 27th Year of the Queen's Reign, he was flying by Sea to Dr. Allen, that Arch-Traitor; and that the Biſhop of Rome, and the King of Spain, were thereupon ſollicited by Allen aforeſaid, to raiſe War againſt this Realm: And whereas alſo the Earl of Arundel had underſtanding of a Bull, that Sixtus the Fifth Pope of that Name, had ſent into England for the Excommunication of her Majeſty, and for the invading of the Realm, &c. And that at the Tower, the 21ſt of July, in the 30th Year of her Majeſty's Reign, he did imagine, with other traitorous Perſons, that the Queen was an Heretick, and not worthy to govern the Realm; and that he did move and procure one William Bennet, a Seminary Prieſt, to ſay Maſs for the happy Succeſs of the Spaniſh Fleet; whereupon he had Maſs, and did help to ſay Maſs himſelf, to that purpoſe: And having news of the Conflict at Sea, betwixt the Spaniſh Fleet and the Engliſh, he procured Sir Thomas Gerrard, and divers others, then Priſoners in the Tower, to ſay Maſs with him for the fortunate Succeſs of Spain; and that he made a Prayer ſpecially for that purpoſe, to be daily uſed and exerciſed amongſt them.

Hereupon Mr. Sandes asked the Earl of Arundel, if he were Guilty, or Not Guilty of the ſeveral Treaſons compriſed in the ſaid Indictment?

To this the Earl anſwered, He would fain know, whether the ſeveral Points in the Indictment contained, were but one Indictment, yea or no?

The Judges ſatisfied him, it was but one Indictment, and a matter he need not ſtand upon.

My Lord vouched a Caſe in Edw. 3. and in the end ſaid, Not Guilty; and was well contented to be tried by his Peers, and liked the Tryal well, that he ſhould be tried by ſuch good Noblemen there preſent, that knew his Life: He ſaid, he had been Priſoner four years, and twenty-five weeks cloſe Priſoner, and that he had been ſick and weak, whereby his Memory might fail him; and therefore humbly deſired my Lord Steward's Grace, making three ſeveral Obeyſances on both Knees, that he might be heard to make anſwer to every particular Point.

My Lord Steward anſwered, That there was no other Meaning nor Intent, and that he ſhould be heard deliberately.

Then did Mr. Serjeant Puckering deliver to the Lords of the Jury, the Effect of the Indictment, and other Evidence at large, as followeth:

Firſt, that my Lord had private and ſecret Conference with Bridges aforeſaid, and divers other Traitors and Seminary Prieſts; and that he had written his Letters to Dr. Allen, to find which way he might further the Cauſe Catholick.

That he did faſt twenty-four hours, and prayed for the happy Succeſs of the Spaniſh Fleet.

That Allen and others, being arrant Traitors, had taken order, that in the 22d Year of her Majeſty's Reign, there ſhould be 50 Men in privy Coats, and Pocket-Daggers, to kill the Queen; and that one Pain, and one Elliot, were put in truſt to perform the ſame.

That my Lord was a Catholick, and favoured their Proceedings.

My Lord anſwered, he was no Catholick in the 22d Year of the Queen's Reign.

That he ſecretly was flying out of the Realm to Dr. Allen, being an Arch-Traitor; which doth argue my Lord to be no good Subject.

That Throckmorton practiſing his Treaſons by ſounding the Ports, he did ſet down in his Catalogue, that a South-weſt Wind would ſerve from Spain to Arundel-Caſtle in Suſſex, and an Eaſterly Wind from the Low-Countries.

That in Throckmorton's Catalogue of all the Names of all the Noblemen and Gentlemen of every Shire that affecteth the Catholicks; he began in Suſſex, and ſet down the Earl of Arundel's Name the firſt.

That further, one Mott a Prieſt informed Throckmorton, that he was come over to ſound the Intents of the Earls of Arundel and Northumberland, and others.

My Lord anſwered, when Mott was in Suſſex, he never came there, but always attended at Court.

Mr. Puckering ſaid, The Traitors have a good Conceit of my Lord of Arundel, in knowing him to be affected to the Catholick Cauſe.

It was defined, that the Catholick Cauſe was meer Treaſon.

Petro

Petro Paulo Roſſetto came over to ſound Noblemen and Gentlemen in England.

Then ſaid my Lord, How prove you me to be a Traitor in theſe Points?

Becauſe, ſaid Mr. Popham, you have confederated with Traitors, by deſiring Dr. Allen in your Letters to employ you any way that concerned the Cauſe Catholick: becauſe you have been reconciled to the Pope; and there was a Law made in the 22d Year of this Queen, That whoſoever was reconciled to the Pope from the Obedience of the Queen's Majeſty, was in caſe of Treaſon.

My Lord confeſſed, that Bridges did confeſs him, but not reconcile him in any ſuch ſort, but only for Abſolution of his Sins

Mr. Popham charged him, that he did once ſubmit himſelf, but ſithence fell from his Submiſſion, and therefore practiſed new Treaſons.

He confeſſed he was acquainted with the Prieſts, and by two of them had been abſolved and confeſſed.

Sithence which time, ſaid Mr. Popham, he came to the Church, and fell to the Catholick Cauſe again, which he cannot do by their Order, unleſs he be reconciled.

My Lord denied that ever he came to the Church after that time.

There was a Letter ſent to the Queen of Scots by Morgan of France, in Commendation of two Prieſts, wherein he ſaith, one of them had reconciled the Earl of Arundel.

Edmonds a Prieſt, upon Examination, ſaid, that Reconciliation was odious.

My Lord ſaid, Theſe be but Allegations and Circumſtances, and that they ought to be proved by two Witneſſes.

It was juſtified, he ſaid, once in the Star-Chamber amongſt the Lords there aſſembled, concerning a Libel there in queſtion, That whoſoever was a Prieſt or Papiſt was an arrant Traitor.

Mr. Popham ſaid, it was a Diſcontentment made my Lord a Catholick, and not Religion; and that he did diſguiſe himſelf in ſhadow of Religion.

There was a Picture ſhewed that was found in my Lord's Trunk, wherein was painted a Hand bitten with a Serpent, ſhaking the Serpent into the Fire, about which was written this Poeſie, Quis contra nos? On the other ſide was painted a Lion Rampant, with his Forces all bloody, with this Poeſie, Tamen Leo. My Lord ſaid, one Wilgrave's Man gave him the ſame, with a pair of Hangers, for a New-year's Gift.

One Jonas Meredith being examin'd, &c. by way of Communication with a Towns-man, who commended my Lord of Arundel for his Forwardneſs, in that he had often obſerved my Lord at Paul's Croſs:

This Jonas anſwered, That he knew he had often been at Paul's Croſs in the Forenoon, and hath heard a Maſs with him at the Charter-houſe, in the Afternoon.

To this my Lord ſaid nothing, but ſeemed to deny it.

My Lord being examin'd in the Tower, of his ſudden going away to Sea, he anſwered, To ſerve the Prince of Parma, or whither Dr. Allen ſhould direct him for the Cauſe-Catholick.

My Lord ſaid alſo, he was going away for fear of ſome Statute ſhould be made in the 22d of this Queen's Reign againſt the Catholicks in that Parliament; and that Dr. Allen adviſed him that he ſhould not come over if he could tarry here in any ſafety, becauſe he might be the better able to make a Party in England when they came.

Before my Lord's going to Sea, he writ a Letter to be given to the Queen after he was gone, wherein he found fault with her hard dealing in giving countenance to his Adverſaries, and in diſgracing him; and that he was diſcontented with the Injuſtice of the Realm towards his Great Grandfather, his Grandfather, and his Father.

My Lord ſaid, Holliuſhead was faulty, for ſetting forth in his Chronicle, that his Grandfather was attainted by Act of Parliament, but ſhewed no cauſe wherefore.

He ſaid, in his Letter, his Grandfather was condemned for ſuch Trifles, that the People ſtanding by were amazed at it; he found fault alſo with the Proceedings againſt his Father.

Whereby 'tis apparent, ſaid Mr. Popham, 'twas Diſcontentment moved my Lord, and not Religion: and fearing leſt his Friends ſhould think amiſs of him, he left a Copy of his Letter with Bridges a Traitor to be diſperſed, to make the Catholicks to think well of him; for, ſaid Mr. Popham, being diſcontented, he became a Catholick, and being ſo great a Man, he became a Captain of the Catholicks, which is as much as to be a Captain over Traitors.

A counterfeit Letter was made twenty-two days before his going to Sea, directed to one Baker at Lynn, there being no ſuch Man abiding; wherein was ſignified that my Lord was very hardly dealt withal by ſome of the Council, and that he was gone into Suſſex, and a farther Voyage, and that he would come home by Norfolk.

This was a counterfeit Letter, ſaid Mr. Attorney, appointed by my Lord to be diſperſed, to make it known he was diſcontented.

Alſo Allen ſent a Letter to the Queen of Scots in Cyphers, ſhewing a great Party in England.

Allen ſent my Lord word, if he did come over, he muſt take a greater Title than that of Earl upon him, and therefore addreſt my Lord in this Stile, To Philip Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Arundel.

Babington in his Examination ſaid, the Queen of Scots ſent him word that the Earl of Arundel was a fit Man to be a chief Head for the Catholicks.

Allen ſent word to Rome, that the Bull which was laſt ſent over into England, was at the Interceſſion of a great Man in England.

My Lord (ſaid Mr. Popham) was one of the principalleſt, and acquainted thus far with Allen; Ergo, my Lord of Arundel, that great Man.

Dr. Allen made a moſt villanous and ſlanderous Book, which was very hard to be got, in which was contained, That the Earl of Arundel was a Procurer of the laſt Bull, and the Procurer of the Invaſion alſo; the Bull it ſelf was ſome part read, and the Book was part read alſo.

My Lord being charged on his Confeſſion, being examined why he would be ruled thus by Dr. Allen, he excuſed it by ſaying, That he ſaid he would be ruled by Allen in all things, ſaving in that did concern her Majeſty and the State; and thereupon appealed to my Lord Chancellor, and Sir Walter Mildmay, who were not preſent.

The Book aforeſaid intended, that my Lord was a Practiſer with Allen about the Invaſion.

Then ſaid my Lord, he would ſerve the Queen againſt all Princes, Pope or Potentates whatſoever.

The Queen's Sollicitor ſtood upon theſe Points; and becauſe it was proved, that the Earl of Arundel would would be ruled by Allen in any thing that ſhould concern the Catholick Cauſe.

And for that Dr. Allen hath ſince that time practiſed divers monſtrous Treaſons, and continually hath built upon the help of ſome chief Man in England, there is none yet known of his degree, that hath any thing to do with Allen; and therefore my Lord muſt needs be culpable of all the Treaſons Allen hath practiſed and procured, in flying to Allen to ſerve the Prince of Parma, ut antea.

My Lord was charged with relieving of divers Traitors as Prieſts; and that he did converſe, and was confederate, with divers and ſundry Traitors attainted, indicted and ſuſpected, being Priſoners in the Tower, and that he had Maſs in the Tower; and that if the Spaniards ſhould ſurprize the Tower, Sir Owen Hopton ſhould be put to the Rack-houſe.

He was alſo charged, That divers Papiſts, Seminaries, and ſuch-like, being Priſoners in Newgate, and other Priſons, reported, that they hoped to ſee the Earl of Arundel King of England, and that Cardinal Allen ſhould direct the Crown of England.

Before the coming of the Spaniards Fleet, when our Commiſſioners were in the Low-Countries, news was brought to the Tower, that we ſhould have Peace betwixt Spain and England; then would my Lord of Arundel be penſive.

When the Spaniſh Fleet was upon our Coaſt, and news was brought to the Tower, that the Spaniards ſped well, then the Earl would be merry.

Then when news came, the Engliſh Fleet ſped well, the Earl would be ſorry.

When news came, the Spaniſh Fleet was come upon the Coaſt of Kent, my Lord ſaid, It is a great Wood, and a puiſſant Fleet, we ſhall have luſty Play ſhortly, I hope we ſhall plague them that have plagued us.

My Lord ſaid, He would not fight againſt any that came to fight for the Catholick Faith.

He ſaid, when the Spaniſh Fleet was at Sea, he would have three Maſſes a-day for the happy Succeſs of Spain.

He ſaid alſo, He would have continual Prayer without ceaſing for a time, for the good Succeſs of Spain, viz. he would have, every twenty-four hours, five Prieſts to pray two hours a-piece for the defect of Lay-men, and fourteen Lay-men to pray every one an hour a-piece for the happy and fortunate Succeſs of Spain.

He made himſelf a ſpecial Prayer for that purpoſe, and cauſed Copies thereof in haſte to be made.

Mr. Shelley, then Priſoner in the Tower, told my Lord, That to exerciſe that Prayer were dangerous, and wiſhed my Lord to let it alone: Therefore my Lord called for the Copy of the Prayer again, and would not have it copied.

He was charged, That he did conjure Sir Thomas Gerrard Kt. to keep Counſel in all theſe Matters before ſet down, who promiſed him, he would.

Bennet alſo promiſed to keep his Counſel, and divers others.

Then were Sir Thomas Gerrard, Mr. Shelley, Bennet the Prieſt, and divers others, removed from the Tower to ſeveral other Priſons, and upon Examination, confeſſed all as aforeſaid.

My Lord hearing all theſe Matters, laid hard againſt him by Mr. Sollicitor, grew into ſome Agony, and called for his Accuſers face to face; which the learned Counſel did not yet yield unto.

He was likewiſe charged, That he came once merrily to Bennet the Prieſt in the Tower, ſaying, Come, Mr. Bennet, let us go pray that the Spaniards may beat down London-Bridge; and promiſed to give him a Damask Gown ſhortly, and that he hoped to make him Dean of Pauls e'er it were long: that the time of their Delivery was at hand, and willed them in any wiſe to be ſecret, for if he ſhould reveal theſe things, he would deny them to his Face.

When news came to the Tower, that the Spaniſh Fleet was driven away, my Lord ſaid, We are all undone; there is no hope for us this Year, and the King of Spain cannot provide ſuch a Power again theſe five or ſix Years, ſome of us may be dead and rotten e'er that time.

There were then brought into the Court, vivâ voce, upon their ſeveral Oaths, Anthony Hall, and Richard Young, a Juſtice of the Peace, who aimed ſomething by hearſay to the Proof of the former Matters.

Alſo Sir Thomas Gerrard, William Bennet, Tuchnon, Snoden, and Ithel, and divers others, were cloſely kept in a place over the King's-Bench, cloſed in with Arras, and were thereupon ſeverally called into the Court, vivâ voce, upon their ſeveral Oaths, to affirm that which is ſpecified before; ſithence Mr. Sollicitor began to ſpeak, as this Mark Bennet the Prieſt was charged with a Letter written to my Lord, wherein he ſhould be ſorry for the opening of theſe Matters as aforeſaid againſt my Lord.

One Randal had writ this Letter in Bennet's Name, by advice of my Lord of Arundel, to blind his Practices. Bennet openly denied the writing of that Letter; whereupon my Lord Grey and my Lord Norris, asked Bennet, if he knew of the Letter, yea, or no? For their better Evidence, Bennet confeſſed, he had been moved to ſuch a Matter, but he did it not.

Againſt Sir Thomas Gerrard, my Lord ſtood very ſtoutly in denial of what he witneſſed, willing him to look him in the Face, and charging him as he would anſwer before God, in whoſe Preſence he ſpoke, to tell nothing of him but Truth. In anſwer whereof, Sir Thomas referred himſelf to his Depoſitions before read, to which he ſaid he was ſworn; yea, twice ſworn.

There were called into the Court two Witneſſes more, viz. one Walton, and one Church, who juſtified Letters were brought from England to Rehnes, where they both were; which Letters were ſent by one Hill, one of my Lord's Faction, that the Earl of Arundel ſhould be General of the Catholicks, when the Tower ſhould be ſurprized.

To Walton, my Lord took exception, affirming, that he was a naughty leud Fellow, who had ſold that little Land he had to three ſeveral Men: and of the other Witneſſes he ſaid, that ſome were attainted, ſome indicted, bad Men and Priſoners, and that their Words were worth little Credit.

Then ſaid Mr. Popham, They were never tortured, but confeſſed all this willingly, and they are ſuch as you have accompanied.

Here ended every Man's Speech, and the Noblemen and Peers of the Jury went together.

My Lord humbly having ſubmitted himſelf to the Conſideration of his Peers, with Proteſtation of Loyalty; the Lieutenant brought him from the Bar unto a Seat near unto the Court of Common-Pleas, where the Warders attended upon him.

My Lord Steward likewiſe withdrew himſelf a little while, as it ſeemed, to take ſome Refection; having all the day, for the time of his Buſineſs, forborn to eat any thing; and preſently returned to his Seat of State.

Within

Within one hour after, the Noblemen of the Jury came every one back, and were again placed by Garter King of Heraulds.

Then Mr. Sandes asked every Man of the Jury, ſeverally, beginning at my Lord Norris, the youngeſt Baron, and proceeding to my Lord Treaſurer, the Foreman, whether the Priſoner were Guilty, yea, or no?

Which every one of them, laying their Hands upon their Hearts, did proteſt in their Conſciences, and upon their Honours, that he was Guilty.

Then was the Lieutenant called to bring his Priſoner to the Bar, who was brought accordingly, attended as before.

Then ſaid Mr. Sandes unto him, That he had been indicted of ſeveral Treaſons, and that he had put himſelf upon the Tryal of his Peers, who had found him Guilty; and therefore asked, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt him.

Whereupon my Lord making three very low Obeyſances upon his knees, did humbly ſubmit himſelf to my Lord Steward's Grace, and the Favours of the reſt of the Nobles and Peers there preſent, and beſought them to be Mediators for him, that he might obtain at her Majeſty's hands, to have order taken for his Debts, and to have Conference with his Officers, and to talk with his Wife, and to ſee his Infant, born after his Impriſonment, whom he had never ſeen.

Then my Lord's Grace pronounced Judgment, viz. That he ſhould be conveyed to the Place from whence he came, and from thence to the place of Execution, and there to be hanged until he were half dead, his Members to be cut off, his Bowels to be caſt into the Fire, his Head to be cut off, his Quarters to be divided into four ſeveral parts, and to be beſtowed in four ſeveral Places: and ſo (ſaid my Lord Steward) the Lord have Mercy on thy Soul.

To this the Earl of Arundel ſaid, as it were ſoftly to himſelf, Fiat voluntas Dei. And ſo having made a low Obeyſance to the State, the Lieutenant took him away; Mr. Shelton going before him with the Edge of the Ax towards him.

Then there was an O Yes made by the Serjeant at Arms, and the Court, together with my Lord Steward's Commiſſion diſſolved; which done, my Lord of Derby took the white Wand out of Mr. Winkfield's Hand, and broke the ſame in pieces, and every Man cried, God ſave the Queen.

The Tryal of Mr. John Udall, 31 Eliz. 1589.

ON Tueſday the 13th of January, 1589. I appeared at my Lord Cobham's Houſe in the Blackfryers; before my Lord Cobham, my Lord Buckhurſt, my Lord Anderſon, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, Mr. Forteſcue, Mr. Egerton the Queen's Sollicitor, Dr. Aubery, Dr. Lewen. Then was I called in before them, whereupon my Lord Anderſon ſaid unto me.

Anderſon. How long have you been at Newcaſtle?

Udall. About a Year, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Ander. Why went you from Kingſton upon Thames?

Udall. Becauſe I was ſilenced there, and was called to Newcaſtle.

Rocheſter. What calling had you thither?

Udall. The People made means to my Lord of Huntingdon, who ſent me thither.

Roch. Had you the allowance of the Biſhop of that Dioceſe?

Udall. There was none at that time.

Roch. Then you ſhould have gone to the Archbiſhop.

Udall. There was no Archbiſhop at York neither.

Ander. You are called hither to anſwer concerning certain Books, which are thought to be of your making.

Udall. If it be for any of Martin's Books (according as my Lord Chamberlain's Letters, that fetched me, import) I have already anſwered, and am ready ſo to do again.

Ander. Where have you anſwered, and in what manner?

Udall. At Lambeth, a Year and a half ago, I cleared my ſelf not to be the Author, nor to know who he was.

Ander. Is this true, Mr. Beadle?

Beadle. I have heard that there was ſuch a thing, but I was not there at it, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Aubery, Lewen. There was ſuch a thing, as my Lord's Grace told us.

Udall. I am the hardlier dealt withal, to be fetched up ſo far at this time of the Year. I have had a Journey, I would not wiſh unto my Enemy.

Roch. You may thank your own dealing in matters that you ſhould not have meddled withal.

Ander. It is more than I heard, that ever you were called to anſwer; but you are to anſwer concerning other Books.

Udall. I hope your Lordſhips will not urge me to any others, ſeeing I was ſent for about thoſe.

Ander. You muſt anſwer to others alſo: What ſay you to thoſe Books? A Demonſtration or a Dialogue, &c. did not you make them?

Udall. I cannot anſwer thereunto.

Ander. Why would you clear your ſelf of Martin, and not of theſe, but that you are guilty herein?

Udall. Not ſo my Lord, I have reaſon to anſwer in the one, but not in the other.

Ander. I pray you let us hear what Reaſon, for I cannot conceive of it, ſeeing they are all written concerning one matter.

Udall. This is the matter, my Lord; I hold the matter propos'd in them all to be one, but I would not be thought to handle it in that manner, which the former Books do; and becauſe I think otherwiſe of the latter, I care not tho they ſhould be fathered upon me.

Buck. But I pray you tell me, know you not Penry?

Udall.

Udall. Yes my Lord, that I do.

Buck. And do you not know him to be Martin?

Udall. No ſurely, neither do I think him to be Martin.

Buck. What is your Reaſon?

Udall. This my Lord; when firſt it came out, he (underſtanding that ſome gave out that he was thought to be the Author) wrote a Letter to a Friend in London, wherein he did deny it, with ſuch Terms as declare him to be ignorant and clear in it.

Buck. Where is that Letter?

Udall. Indeed I cannot now ſhew you, for I have forgotten unto whom it was written.

Buck. You will not tell where it is.

Udall. Why my Lord, it tendeth to the clearing of one, and the accuſing of none.

Buck. Can you tell where Penry is?

Udall. No ſurely my Lord.

Buck. When did you ſee him?

Udall. About a quarter of a Year ago.

Buck. Where did you ſee him?

Udall. He called at my Door, and ſaluted me.

Buck. Nay, he remained belike with you?

Udall. No indeed, he neither came in my Houſe, neither did he ſo much as drink with me.

Buck. How came you acquainted with him?

Udall. I think at Cambridge, but I have been often in his Company.

Buck. Where?

Udall. At divers places, and namely in mine own Houſe whilſt I dwelt at Kingſton.

Buck. What cauſe had you to be ſo often in his Company?

Udall. He being a Scholar and Student in Divinity, and one whom I always thought to be an honeſt Man, your Lordſhip may eaſily conceive the Cauſe. Here was much to this ſame effect ſpoken about Mr. Penry, and my being at Mrs. Crane's Houſe at Moulſley, and with her, &c. which I always anſwered, as in the like Caſe concerning Mr. Horton of Richmond before the Archbiſhop.

Then Dr. Lewen reading my Anſwers to thoſe Queſtions, that had been by the Archbiſhop propounded unto me concerning my Papers in my Study, and namely the Notes of my ſeveral Conferences with the Biſhops and their Officers; I was asked, as I remember, by Mr. Forteſcue.

Forteſcue. Why did you pen ſuch things and keep them?

Roch. Becauſe he and ſuch like might apiſhly imitate the Martyrs of former times, and account themſelves perſecuted by us, as thoſe were by the Popiſh Biſhops.

Udall. The Cauſe is this, for that in the quickneſs of Wit, and readineſs of Memory in Youth, thoſe things may be ſpoken, that in Age will be more eaſily made uſe of in Writing than otherwiſe, the Memory of Man not being infinite.

Ander. What ſay you, did you make theſe Books, or know you who made them?

Udall. I cannot anſwer to that Queſtion, my Lord.

Ander. You had as good ſay you were the Author.

Udall. That will not follow; but if you think ſo, I cannot do withal.

Cob. Mr. Udall, if you be not the Author, ſay ſo, and if you be, confeſs it: you may find Favour.

Udall. My Lord, I think the Author, for any thing I know, did well, and I know that he is enquired after to be puniſhed; and therefore I think it my Duty to hinder the finding of him out, which I cannot do better than thus.

Ander. And why ſo, I pray you?

Udall. Becauſe if every one that is ſuſpected do deny it, the Author at the length muſt needs be found out.

Ander. Why dare you not confeſs it, if you be the Author of it? Dare you not ſtand to your own doings?

Udall. I profeſſed before that I lik'd of the Books, and the Matter handled in them: but whether I made them or no, I will not anſwer; neither of any other Book of that Argument, whatſoever goeth without Name, if you ſhould ask me, for the Reaſon alledged before: beſides that if I were the Author, I think that by Law I need not anſwer.

Ander. That is true, if it concerned the Loſs of your Life.

Udall. I pray your Lordſhip, doth not the Law ſay generally, No Man ſhall be put to anſwer without preſentment before Juſtices, or things of Record, or by due Proceſs or Writ Original, &c. Anno 42. Edw. 3. cap. 5.

Ander. That is Law, and it is not Law.

Udall. I underſtand you not, my Lord; it is a Statute which is in force, if it be not repealed.

Ander. I tell you, by Law you ought to anſwer in this Caſe.

Udall. Good my Lord, ſhew me this favour, to tell me in what Book of the Law I ſhall find it; for I profeſs to underſtand the Latin, French and Engliſh Tongues, wherein all the Laws be written.

Forteſ. You are very cunning in the Law; I pray you by what Law did you preach at Newcaſtle, being forbidden at Kingſton?

Udall. I know no Law againſt it, ſeeing it was the Official Dr. Hone, who did ſilence me; whoſe Authority reacheth not out of his Arch deaconry.

Forteſ. What was the Cauſe for which you were ſilenced?

Udall. Surely I cannot tell, nor yet imagine, ſaving the ſecret Suggeſtions of Mr. Harvie.

Forteſ. To be ignorant of that, is craſſa & ſupina ignorantia.

Udall. No Sir, the Action was craſſa & ſupina injuria.

Ander. Well, what ſay you to thoſe Books; who made them, and where were they printed?

Udall. Tho I could tell your Lordſhip, yet dare I not, for the Reaſons before alledged.

Roch. I pray you let me ask you a queſtion or two concerning your Book.

Udall. It is not yet proved to be mine; but I will anſwer to any thing concerning the matter of the Book, ſo far as I know.

Roch. You call it a Demonſtration, I pray you what is a Demonſtration? I believe you know not what it is.

Udall. If you had asked me that queſtion when I was a Boy in Cambridge of a Year's ſtanding, it had been a note of ignorance in me, to have been unable to anſwer you.

Roch. Surely it ſeemeth by the frame of the Syllogiſmes and Reaſons in it, that you know it not, if you be the Author of that Book: I read none of it late, but in the Parliament-time, ſitting in a Morning in the Houſe, I read ſome of it; and it ſeemed to me in many things, not to conclude probably, much leſs demonſtratively.

Udall. I will ſhew you as I take it, why the Author called it a Demonſtration; becauſe the Reaſon which is uſually brought to prove the Concluſions, ſions, is commonly drawn from a place of Scripture, which hath more force in it to manifeſt the Concluſion ἀποδεικτικῶς, than any of Ariſtotle's Proofs drawn as they ſay, ex primis, veris, neceſſariis & immediatis cauſis.

Roch. Indeed that which is proved by the Scriptures, is proved moſt demonſtratively; but the proofs in that Book are far from any ſuch.

Udall. Let that be the queſtion, and try it in ſome one.

Ander. My Lord of Rocheſter, I pray you let us make ſhort work with him, offer him a Book; will you ſwear to anſwer to ſuch things as ſhall be demanded of you in the behalf of our Sovereign Lady the Queen?

Udall. I will take an Oath of Allegiance to her Majeſty, wherein I will acknowledge her Supremacy according to Statute, and promiſe my Obedience as becometh a Subject; but to ſwear to accuſe my ſelf or others, I think you have no Law for it.

Ander. Mr. Sollicitor, I pray you tell him the Law in this point.

Then Mr. Sollicitor (who had ſitten all the while very ſoberly) noting what paſſed (and if a Man's Mind may be known by his Countenance, ſeeming to miſlike the Courſe holden againſt me) upon my Lord Anderſon's Commandment, ſtood up, and putting off his Hat unto me, ſaid:

Eger. Mr. Udall, I am ſorry that you will not anſwer, nor take an Oath, which by Law you ought to do: I can aſſure you, your Anſwers are like the Seminary Prieſts Anſwers; for they ſay, there is no Law to compel them to take an Oath to accuſe themſelves.

Udall. Sir, if it be a Liberty by Law, there is no reaſon why they ſhould not challenge it, for (tho they be very bad ones) they are Subjects, and until they be condemned by Law, may require all the benefits of Subjects; neither is that any Reaſon, that their anſwering ſo, ſhould make the claim of leſs value for me, ſeeing that herein we are Subjects alike, tho otherwiſe of a moſt contrary Diſpoſition.

Buck. My Lord, it is no ſtanding with him thus: what ſayſt thou, wilt thou take the Oath?

Udall. My Lord, I have ſaid as much thereunto as I can.

Then they commanded me to go forth, and they conſulted a little ſpace, and called me again, at which time almoſt every one of them uſed many words to perſuade me to confeſs a Truth; ſaying the Queen was merciful, and that otherwiſe it would go hardly with me: to whom I ſaid, My Lords, I know not that I have offended her Majeſty; when it is proved that I have, I hope her Mercy will not then be too late: howſoever it be, I dare not take this Oath.

Aubery, Lewen. You have heretofore taken it, and why will you not take it now?

Udall. Indeed you call to remembrance a good Reaſon to refuſe it; I was called to anſwer to certain Articles upon mine Oath heretofore, which I voluntarily did, and freely confeſſed that againſt my ſelf, concerning my Judgment and Preaching of the Points of Diſcipline, which could never have been proved; and when my Friends laboured to have me reſtored to my Place, the Archbiſhop anſwered, that there was ſufficient matter againſt me, by mine own Confeſſion, why I ſhould not be reſtored: whereupon I covenanted with mine own Heart, never to be mine own Tormentor in that ſort again.

Ander. Whatſoever be the Iſſue of it, you muſt do your Duty, and deal plainly with the Magiſtrate.

Udall. I take my Duty to be in this Caſe, not to anſwer, nor the Magiſtrate's to require it of me; ſeeing the Apoſtle ſaith, Receive not an Accuſation againſt an Elder, under two or three Witneſſes: which Semanca, the Spaniſh Inquiſitor, alledgeth to the ſame purpoſe.

Buck. What, you are an Elder, are you?

Udall. My Lord, howſoever the word Elder be taken, whether ſo largely as I and my Brethren that deſire the Diſcipline do take it, or only for a Miniſter of the Word, as our Adverſaries underſtand it, I am an Elder.

Roch. It is true, my Lord, that an Elder in that place containeth all ſuch as he is, but none elſe.

Buck. Yea, but they would have other Elders to govern the Church; which Deſire of theirs, when it cometh to paſs, I will give over my Barony, and become an Elder.

Udall. If your Lordſhip underſtood what great Pains, and ſmall worldly Recompence belongeth to that Office, you would never ſay ſo.

Roch. The Day is paſt, and we muſt make an end: will you take the Oath?

Udall. I dare not take it.

Roch. Then you muſt go to Priſon, and it will go hard with you, for you muſt remain there until you be glad to take it.

Udall. God's Will be done, I had rather go to Priſon with a good Conſcience, than to be at Liberty with an ill one.

Roch. Your Sentence for this time is, to go to the Gate-houſe cloſe Priſoner, and you are beholden to my Lords here, that they have heard you ſo long.

Udall. I acknowledge it, and do humbly thank their Honours for it.

And when they were all gone, my Lord Cobham ſtayed me to ſpeak to me; who told me, that it might be he and others wiſhed things to be amended as well as I, but the time ſerved not, and therefore he wiſhed me not to ſtand in it: and I praying his Lordſhip's good Favour, he promiſed to do for me what he could; for which I humbly thanked him, and ſo was carried to the Gatehouſe by a Meſſenger, who delivered me with a Warrant to be kept cloſe Priſoner, and not be ſuffered to have Pen, Ink, or Paper, or any body to ſpeak with me. Thus I remained there half a Year, in all which time my Wife could not get leave to come unto me; ſaving only that in the hearing of the Keeper ſhe might ſpeak to me, and I to her, of ſuch things as he ſhould think meet, notwithſtanding that ſhe made ſuit to the Commiſſioners, yea unto the Body of the Council, for ſome more Liberty: all which time my Chamber-fellows were Seminary Prieſts, Traytors, and profeſſed Papiſts. At the end of half a Year, I was removed to the White-Lyon in Southwark, and ſo carried to the Aſſizes at Croydon, where what was done, I will not mention, ſeeing there were preſent ſuch as were both able, and I think willing to ſet down; unto whoſe Report I refer thoſe that would know the ſame.

At the Aſſizes at Croydon, the 24*th* July, 1590.

Mr. Udall was called, and commanded to hold up his Hand at the Bar; who held up his Hand accordingly. Then was his Indictment read, being thus: John Udall, late of London Clerk, thou art art indicted, &c. The form of which Indictment was as againſt Murderers: namely, that he not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being ſtirred up by the inſtigation and motion of the Devil, did malicioully publiſh a ſlanderous and infamous Libel againſt the Queen's Majeſty, her Crown and Dignity: And being asked whether he were Guilty, or not Guilty, he anſwered thus:

Udall. My Lords, may it pleaſe you to hear me a word or two.

Jud. Cla. Anſwer firſt to the Indictment, and then you ſhall be heard.

Udall. My Lords, I beſeech you hear me firſt a word or twaine.

Jud. Say on.

Udall. My Caſe is rare, and ſuch as hath not been heard of heretofore, and conſiſteth upon divers points of Law; I humbly crave of your Lordſhips to grant me to anſwer by Counſel if it may be.

Jud. Cla. You cannot have it, and therefore anſwer to your Indictment.

Udall. Then I anſwer (my Lords) that I am not Guilty.

Jud. Cla. How wilt thou be tried?

Udall. I do deſire to be tried by an Inqueſt of learned Men; but ſeeing I ſhall not, I am contented to be tried by the ordinary Courſe, as theſe Men before me are, that is (as you uſe to ſay) by God and the Country.

Then the Clerk of the Aſſizes ſaid to the Parties arraigned, (after he had read the names of the Jury before them) Theſe Men whoſe Names you have heard, are to go upon your Lives and your Deaths; look upon them when they are called to be ſworn, and if you know any Cauſe, take exception againſt them. Then the reſt of the Felons having nothing to ſay, Mr. Udall ſaid, My Lords, I am ignorant of the Law in this Point; I pray you therefore ſhew me the manner of challenging the Jury; how many I may challenge, and whether I may render a Reaſon of the ſame.

Jud. I think you will know a Cauſe in your Conſcience, before you challenge any of them.

Udall. Then I pray you my Lord, how many am I by Law permitted to challenge?

Jud. Nay, I am not to tell you that, I ſit to judge, and not to give you counſel.

Then Mr. Udall keeping ſilence, Proclamation was made according to the manner; that if any Man could give in Evidence againſt John Udall, Priſoner at the Bar, that they ſhould come into the Court and be heard. Then Mr. Daulton ſtood up: And in the mean while Mr. Udall ſaid to the Judges thus; My Lords, I beſeech you anſwer me to one queſtion before Mr. Daulton begin to ſpeak.

Jud. Say on.

Udall. Is it permitted me by Law to anſwer to thoſe things in particular, which are brought to prove this Indictment?

Jud. It is permitted.

Udall. Then I humbly crave of your Lordſhips to grant me two Petitions, which I think will greatly further both him in ſpeaking, me in anſwering, and alſo be a more ready help to the memory of the Jury, that they may be able to bear the matter away.

Jud. What are your Petitions?

Udall. The firſt is, that when Mr. Daulton hath ſpoken to one Point what he can; I may anſwer to that before he proceed any further, leſt my Memory being overwhelmed with multitude of matter, I ſhould forget to anſwer to ſome Points of Importance, and the Jury made leſs able to diſcern of the Particulars. The ſecond is, that it might pleaſe you to grant me to anſwer without Interruption.

Jud. You ſhall have them both granted.

Daul. Then Mr. Daulton ſaid, Mr. Udall, you have theſe Petitions granted you, I deſire the ſame of you. And then he deſiring leave of the Judges, before he ſhould prove the Indictment, to ſay ſomething touching this, that this Man, and ſuch as he is, do maintain, &c. after leave given him, he uſed a very long Speech, to the great diſgrace and ſlander of the Cauſe, and thoſe Men that profeſſed the ſame, eſpecially of Mr. Udall: and making mention in the ſame his Speech, of five ſeveral Books of Common-Prayer, made by ſuch as deſire Reformation; he affirmed, that in one of the ſaid Books there was horrible Blaſphemy, in theſe words of the Conſecration of the Lord's Supper, Take eat, this my Body; drink, this is my Blood. Then he cried out, ſaying, Oh horrible Blaſphemy! And taking occaſion upon the variety of theſe Books, he affirmed that there was no conſtancy in theſe Men: And whereas one of the Books doth allow, that over every Congregation there ſhould be a faithful Paſtor; that is quoth he, a Shepherd, whereby they may take the Government out of her Majeſty's hand, and ſo bring her Majeſty to be one of their Sheep; no quoth he, her Majeſty is no Sheep under any Shepherd in the World, except Chriſt: and for the Government that theſe Men do ſeek for, I am aſſured there is none ſuch to be found in the Word of God.

Udall. Mr. Daulton hath uſed a very large Speech, which doth nothing concern to prove the Indictment, or me in particular; and therefore ſeeing I am not called hither to diſpute (and if I would, I ſhould not be permitted) I will not anſwer it; only thus much will I ſay (if it pleaſe your Lordſhips) that ſeeing Mr. Daulton is by Profeſſion a Lawyer, and the Cauſe is yet in queſtion amongſt the learned Divines, methinks it had been more modeſty for Mr. Daulton to have ſuſpended his Judgment until the Controverſy had been determined amongſt them, to whoſe Profeſſion it belongeth: eſpecially ſeeing Mr. Daulton knoweth in his Conſcience, that he hath heretofore carried ſome ſhew of liking to the Cauſe, which now he ſpeaketh againſt.

Judge. Sirrah, Sirrah, anſwer to the matter that Mr. Daulton hath againſt you; Mr. Daulton, proceed to the proof of the points of the Indictment.

Daul. My Maſters, you of the Jury, &c. I will prove, Firſt, That he had a malicious Intent in making of this Book: Secondly, that he is the Author of it: And Thirdly, That theſe matters contained in the Indictment are Felony, by the Statute, Eliz. 23. cap. 2.

Then was Mr. Beadle the Regiſter called, who was ſworne, that theſe Examinations following were as the Parties themſelves confeſſed the ſame: And to prove the firſt, the Clerk of the Aſſizes cauſed Stephen Chatfield to be called into the Court, to give in Evidence againſt John Udall, but he appeared not at all, for which the Judges were offended; and Serjeant Puckering ſaid, there was a Warrant ſent for him: whereupon ſome ſtanding by affirmed, that the Warrant came after his departure from home. Then Mr. Daulton ſaid, that he went out of the way of purpoſe; and Judge Clarke ſaid, Mr. Udall, you are glad of that. Mr. Udall anſwered;

Udall. My Lords, I wiſh heartily he had been here; for as I am ſure he never could ſay any thing againſt me to prove this point, ſo I have heard and am able to prove it to be true, that he is very ſorry that ever he made any complaint againſt me, confeſſing he did it in his Anger, when Martin came firſt out; and by their Suggeſtions, whom he hath proved ſince by Experience to be very bad Men.

Dault. It is no great matter whether he be here or no, for we have his Articles againſt you, and your own Confeſſion, to prove this point ſufficiently.

Then were Mr. Chatfield's Articles (that he brought to the Archbiſhop againſt Mr. Udall) read by the Clerk, containing a Report of certain written Papers; tending, as he ſuppoſed, to the making of ſuch a Book as this is: and thereupon asked Mr. Udall whoſe writing they were; who anſwered, they are a Friend's of mine: whereunto Chatfield replied, wiſhing him to take heed of them, and to rid his hands of them, and to return them to his Friend from whom he had them, for he doubted they concerned the State. Theſe Papers he ſaw in Mr. Udall's Study at Kingſton. Alſo he further ſaith, that at another time, he having conferred with Mr. Udall in a certain Field by Kingſton, called Little-field, about this putting to ſilence; he ſaith, that the ſaid Mr. Udall uttered theſe words, That if they put him to ſilence, he would give the Biſhops ſuch a Blow, as they never had.

Udall. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips that I may anſwer to theſe things in particular.

Judg. Say on, let us hear your anſwer.

Udall. I was accuſed this time two Years upon the words of Chatfield, that theſe Papers that he did ſee in my Study, ſhould be the matter of Martin Mar-Prelate; and becauſe I cleared my ſelf of that, it is now brought to prove another matter: but it proveth nothing, unleſs it were ſet down in particular what they were.

Daul. It proveth this, that you had a purpoſe to write this Book, and thoſe things were Collections from your Friends, and Preparations thereunto.

Udall. Let the Jury conſider how that Point is prov'd by it. Beſides it may be prov'd, that this Book was extant in Mens hands before the Conference between Chatfield and me; therefore how can it be prov'd that this is the Book that ſhould give them ſuch a Blow?

Dault. But you cannot deny the ſecond Point, that you had a pretended Malice, for it is extant in your own Confeſſion: Read his Anſwer to thoſe Articles of Mr. Chatfield. Then the Clerk read his Anſwer to this effect, That if the Biſhops put him to ſilence, they would give him Occaſion and Leiſure to be imployed in writing againſt them. Then ſaid Mr. Daulton, is not this moſt evident, what can be plainer than it is?

Udall. I pray your Lordſhips to give me leave to explain theſe things.

Judg. Say on, and be brief.

Udall. Mr. Chatfield told me, that he was commanded to come to Kingſton and be reſident there, of purpoſe that I might be put to ſilence, and that there might not appear any want of a Preacher, I being put down; whereupon I ſaid, in effect, as is above rehearſed: But I pray you hear in what ſenſe theſe words were uttered.

Judg. The Matter is clear, and we ſee what you can ſay to it well enough; proceed, Mr. Daulton, to the Proof of the ſecond Point.

Dault. And that you be the Author of this ſlanderous and infamous Libel, it ſhall be proved clearly to the Jury before your face. Then ſaid he to the Clerk, read the Anſwer of Nicholas Thompkins, which was made upon his Oath before her Majeſty's High Commiſſioners. Then was read to this effect, that Thompkins knew that Mr. Udall was the Author of that Book call'd The Demonſtration, for he ſaid that Mr. Udall himſelf told him ſo. Alſo that he ſaw either in Mr. Udall's Houſe, or in ſome other Place in Kingſton, a Catalogue of all the Books that Mr. Udall had made, amongſt which the Demonſtration was one.

Judg. You ſee here that this is clear, and a ſufficient Teſtimony.

Udall. It carrieth ſome ſhew, but it is nothing.

Judg. Do you call the Teſtimony of one being an honeſt Man, and upon his Oath, before the High Commiſſioners, to be nothing, can you anſwer it?

Udall. My Lords, I anſwer it thus, denying it to be his Teſtimony; for if it be, why is he not preſent to verify it face to face, according to the Law?

Jud. Puck. It is verified to be his true Anſwer, under the hands of Dr. Auberie and Dr. Lewen, the latter whereof confirmed it before me upon his corporal Oath.

Dault. You can take no Exceptions againſt that, and will you ſay he is not an honeſt Man?

Udall. I am perſuaded he was amazed, and anſwered he knew not what; for he hath reported it ſo diverſly, that it ſeemeth he remembreth not what he ſaid.

Judg. But the Oath of Thompkins is to be preferred before his bare Report.

Udall. My Lords, I anſwer; I proteſt unto you, (and will verify it upon my Oath, if it pleaſe you) that he told me the day before I was committed, at his Maſter's Houſe, that he could not ſay, neither would he for a thouſand Pounds affirm any more than this, that he heard me ſay, I would not doubt but ſet my Name to that Book if I might have indifferent Judges. And further (if it pleaſe you my Lords) here are ſome Witneſſes that upon their Oaths will teſtify, how diverſly he hath reported of his Confeſſion to this thing, if it pleaſe your Lordſhips to accept them. And the Witneſſes offering themſelves to be heard, were anſwered, that becauſe their Witneſs was againſt the Queen's Majeſty, they could not be heard. And after other Speeches paſſing, Mr. Udall ſaid;

Udall. My Lords, the Speech of the Catalogue is moſt vain, and hath no Senſe in it; for can I have made ſo many Books, as that I need make a Catalogue of them? It may be, my Lords, he ſaw a Catalogue of the Books in my Study, wherein if that were one, it is rather an Argument that I made it not; for Men uſe not to put their own Works in the Catalogue of thoſe that they have in their Study.

Dault. You of the Jury conſider this, that Thompkins was Mrs. Crane's Man, and one that was privy to all the Printing that was at her Houſe, and Mr. Udall uſed to go often thither.

Udall. All that is nothing to me, what if I uſed to go thither, ſhe is of my Acquaintance, I know her to be an honeſt Gentlewoman, what can you gather by any of theſe things? Why is not Thompkins here to declare his Teſtimony, and to ſay what he can?

Dault.

Dault. He is beyond the Seas about Merchandizes, ſent away by Mr. Gore, who married Mrs. Crane's Daughter.

Udall. How doth that appear? he is no Merchant, but a Serving-Man; and if he were, what is that to me? But it cannot be proved that Mr. Gore did ſend him, ſo that here is nothing but bare Papers to ſhew for Evidence againſt me.

Then there was much ſaid, to prove that the Teſtimony of a Man abſent was ſufficient, if it were proved to be his upon the Oaths of others. And then the Judge ſaid, Judg. What ſay you? Did you make the Book Udall, yea or no? What ſay you to it, will you be ſworn? Will you take your Oath that you made it not? We will offer you that Favour which never any indicted of Felony had before; take your Oath, and ſwear you did it not, and it ſhall ſuffice.

Udall. My Lords, I pray you hear me to this: If I would have done ſo before the Lords of her Majeſty's Privy Council that committed me, I had not come hither; but I neither then might, nor may do ſo now, whereof I pray you let me ſhew a Reaſon to the Jury. I and many more do think the Book to be good, for any thing we can find in it, and to be written in defence of a Cauſe which we take to be moſt true. Now the Author is ſought for, that he may be puniſh'd for ſome Speeches that may be wreſted in the Book; therefore leſt he ſhould be found (if one after another that are ſuſpected do deny it) it is thought beſt every one neither to confeſs nor to deny, yea tho we ſuffer ſome Puniſhment, rather than the Author, being found out, ſhould ſuffer Extremity.

Judg. Nay this is but a ſhift, I will go further with you: Will you but ſay upon your Honeſty that you made it not, and you ſhall ſee what ſhall be ſaid unto you?

Udall. My Lords, it is all one, I make a Conſcience of my Word as of my Oath, for I muſt give account for both. This is no direct Courſe in this Place.

Judg. You of the Jury conſider this. This argueth, that if he were not guilty, he would clear himſelf, and conſider well of it. And then ſpeaking to Mr. Udall, he ſaid, do not ſtand in it, but confeſs it, and ſubmit your ſelf to the Queen's Mercy, before the Jury find you guilty.

Udall. My Lord, I anſwer that according to my Indictment I am not guilty, every Point whereof muſt be proved, or elſe the whole is falſe. And I beſeech your Lordſhips give me leave, and I will be very brief: My Conſcience doth not accuſe me that I have ſo much as offended her Majeſty, her Council, or the meaneſt of her People in any thing I have done concerning this Cauſe; for if I ſhould, of all other I deſerved the leaſt Favour, being one that profeſſed to teach others Loyalty to her Majeſty, and Love to one another: and would you have me to confeſs a Fault where there is none? No, I cannot do it, neither will I: wherefore proceed in your Courſe begun.

Dault. We have yet more Proof than this, tho yet this were ſufficient of it ſelf; wherefore read the other Examinations. Then was read the Confeſſion of Henry Sharpe of Northampton, who upon his Oath, before my Lord Chancellor, had ſaid, that he heard Mr. Penry ſay, that Mr. Udall was the Author of the Demonſtration.

Udall. Sharpe and I were never above once in Company together (to my remembrance) neither knew he ever any of my Dealings. This is nothing to prove me the Author of the Book: Reports be uncertain; and if Reports be true, the Archbiſhop himſelf told me, that Mr. Penry made it; which is more forcible for me than any of Sharpe's Reports can be againſt me.

Dault. You miſtake the Matter, the force of the Point reſteth in Mr. Penry's Report, who was one of your great Acquaintance and Familiars; and you, and Waldgrave, and he, were at Mrs. Crane's Houſe.

Udall. Here is one Man's ſaying that another ſaid ſo, let the Jury conſider of what force this Proof is; if you have any more, let it appear.

Judg Clark. You of the Jury have not to enquire whether he be guilty of the Felony, but whether he be the Author of the Book; for it is already ſet down by the Judgment of all the Judges in the Land, that whoſoever was Author of that Book, was guilty by the Statute of Felony, and this is declared above half a year agone.

Udall. Tho it be ſo determined already, yet I pray your Lordſhips give me leave to ſhew that which I have to ſay, and I will be very brief; and it is to prove, that tho I were found to be the Author, yet it cannot be within the Compaſs of that Statute, Anno 23 Eliz. cap. 2. whereupon the Indictment is framed.

Judg. You ſhall be heard to ſay for your ſelf what you can, therefore ſay on.

Udall. Tho I be not by Profeſſion a Lawyer, yet I think I can ſhew it clearly by theſe Reaſons following: (1.) The Intent of the Law-makers, (which always is to be regarded in theſe Caſes) is to be conſidered, which appeareth in the Preface of the Statute in theſe words, To fruſtrate the Malice of thoſe that be evil-affected to her Highneſs. Now I pray you conſider this how can it be? or how is it poſſible that a Preacher, of the ſame Religion which her Majeſty profeſſeth and maintaineth, who is known continually to pray unto God for her Highneſs's Proſperity and Happineſs, both of Soul and Body; how is it poſſible, I ſay, that ſuch a one ſhould be maliciouſly affected towards her? Therefore it is evident that the Statute was made againſt the Papiſts, who uſe to ſlander her Highneſs with the Terms of Heretick, &c. and no way againſt us; for I dare boldly ſay of my ſelf, and in the name of all my Brethren, Curſed is he of God, and he deſerveth doubtleſs to be hated of Men, that doth imagine the leaſt hurt againſt her Highneſs. (2.) The Matter that maketh a Man a Felon by that Statute, muſt proceed from a malicious Intent againſt her Highneſs, which I or any ſuch as I am can no way juſtly be charged with; partly for that which is ſaid before, and partly for that my Courſe of teaching and living in this Country theſe nine years (ſaving this laſt Year, wherein I have been abſent) is known to have tended to no other end, than the provoking and perſuading of the People to like of and yield Obedience unto her Majeſty, and the Religion receiv'd in her Dominions: for the Proof whereof, I refer my ſelf to the Conſciences of all Men in the Country that have known me. And further, is it likely, that I who have been trained up in the Univerſities under her Majeſty's Protection, and have always bended my Studies to the Advancement of the Sincerity of the Goſpel; ſo that thoſe ſmall Crumbs of Learning which I have gather'd, I do acknowledge to have received by her Majeſty's means: Theſe things conſidered, how can it be that I ſhould be evil-affected towards her Highneſs, whom I proteſt I unfeignedly reverence? And therefore the worſt that the Author

Author can be charg'd withal, is his Overheat and too much Vehemency, by reaſon of his Zeal againſt the Abuſes, and not any Malice againſt her Majeſty, or the meaneſt of her Subjects. Again, the Matter to bring it within the Compaſs of the Statute muſt be falſe: But this Book is written in the behalf of a moſt true Cauſe. Laſtly, The End of it muſt be either to the Defamation of the Queen's Majeſty, or ſtirring up of Inſurrection, Sedition, or Rebellion: For the former, I truſt that the whole Courſe of our Behaviour, both in our Miniſtry and Converſation, declareth it ſelf to be ſo far from ſeeking to defame her Highneſs, as it tendeth to the uttermoſt of our Powers, to the Advancement of her Honour. For I am perſuaded that there is none of us that would refuſe to undergo any Pain, whereby her Majeſty might any way be the better honour'd; yea we would not refuſe, if need ſo requir'd, to lay down our Lives for redeeming of the leaſt aking of her Majeſty's little Finger, wherewith ſhe might be griev'd. Now for the ſecond end, which is the moving or ſtirring up of Rebellion, &c. I pray your Lordſhips, and you of the Jury to conſider this: There have been, ſince the firſt day of her Majeſty's Reign, learned Men, that have deſir'd the Advancement of this Cauſe, and many of the People that affected it, and yet hath it never appeared, that by Occaſion hereof, there hath, in all this time, been any in any Place that have raiſed any Inſurrection or Sedition: yea this Book, which is now in queſtion, hath been extant theſe two years; yet I truſt neither your Lordſhips, nor any here preſent, can ſhew that any People in any Corner of the Land, nay it cannot be juſtly proved that any one Perſon hath taken any occaſion hereby to enterprize any ſuch matter: and therefore the making of this Book cannot be Felony. Beſides all this, if there had been any ſuch thing meant by the Author, or received by the People, as the Indictment chargeth me withal (which is the Defamation of her Highneſs's Government) yet, as I take it, it ſhould not be Felony by that Statute; for the whole Courſe of it declareth, that it is only meant of them that defame her Highneſs's Perſon, and not her Government, as it is manifeſt by the laſt Proviſo; wherein it is ſhewed, that the whole Statute doth determine and end with her Majeſty's Life. And we may not think their Wiſdoms that made the Law to be ſo unadviſed, as to make a Law for the Preſervation of the Prince's Government, which is continual, to laſt no longer than the Life of one Prince, which is temporary: therefore it ſeemeth that the Statute hath no further regard than this, that her Highneſs's Perſon might be preſerved in that Honour and Dignity, which becometh her Royal Dignity and Eſtate. And I do beſeech your Lordſhips to anſwer me, for I appeal to your Conſciences, as you will anſwer to God for my Life, and I pray you tell the Jury, whether you do think the Intent of the Statute were in any ſort meant againſt us, and not rather againſt the Papiſts.

Judg Puck. Judge Puckering ſaid, You do not well to charge us ſo with our Conſciences, which God only is to know. I anſwer you, the Intent of the Statute is againſt all, for ſo the words are.

Udall. The words, my Lord, I confeſs are ſo; but is the principal Intent ſo?

Judg. Yea, it is ſo.

Judg Clarke. We have heard you ſpeak for your ſelf to this Point at large, which is nothing to excuſe you; for you cannot excuſe your ſelf to have done it with a malicious Intent againſt the Biſhops, and that exerciſing their Government which the Queen hath appointed them, and ſo it is by conſequence againſt the Queen.

Udall. My Lords, I am perſuaded that the Author did it not of any Malice againſt them; and for my ſelf, I proteſt I wiſh them as much good as I do to my own Soul, and will pray to God to give them Repentance. But the Cauſe why the Author did ſo earneſtly inveigh againſt them was this, as it ſeemeth, becauſe he perceived them not only to execute an Authority which he taketh to be unlawful by the Word of God, but alſo for that they do not the tenth part of that good (even in thoſe corrupt Callings) which by Law they might do; and I am perſuaded that your Lordſhips know in your own Conſciences, that they do not the tenth part of that they are bound to do.

Judg Clarke. That is true, they do not the good that they might do; but yet that doth not excuſe you: for it is plain in your Book, that you writ not againſt them only, but you writ againſt the State; for is it not againſt the State, when you ſay, that it is more eaſier to live in England a Papiſt, an Anabaptiſt, of the Family of Love, and what not? yea, you ſay, I could live ſo in a Biſhop's Houſe, it may be theſe twenty years, and never be much moleſted for it. What is this but a plain ſlandering of the State? and mark the words, for you ſay, you could live ſo in England: And doth her Majeſty's Laws allow of Papiſts? This maketh evidently againſt you, and it is ſo plain, that you cannot deny it.

Udall. My Lords, if it might pleaſe you to hear me a word or two, I will ſhew the meaning of the Author of the Book, I beſeech you to hear me, and I will be very brief: I know the Laws of England do not allow of any ſuch as are mentioned in the Book, for there are godly Laws made for the puniſhing of them, if they were put in execution. But this I take to be the Author's Meaning, that it is not ſpoken in reſpect of her Majeſty's Government and Laws, but in reſpect of the Biſhops, whom your Lordſhips know to be wholly imployed in finding us out, and puniſhing of us, not regarding (in a manner) the puniſhing any Sin elſe.

Judg. What, Sirrah, will you not confeſs any Fault to be in the Book? you ſeek to excuſe all.

Udall. My Lords, I do acknowledge that there was never any Work of Man ſo perfect, but there have been Imperfections in the ſame; and therefore there may be ſome fault in the Manner, but ſurely none in the Matter: for the Biſhops themſelves will confeſs that they may fail in their Actions, and be partial (as they are Men) in the manner of handling any thing. So alſo the Author of this Book, being aſſured that the Matter is without reproof, may err in the Manner, in being over-zealous in the handling of it; and this fault I will eaſily confeſs to be in the Book, my Lords: but I am ſure the Author never had any malicious Intent againſt her Highneſs, or any of her Subjects.

Judg Clarke. This Book hath made you to come within the Compaſs of the Statute, tho your Intent were not ſo: for I am ſure there was Mr. Stubbs, well known to divers here, to be a good Subject and an honeſt Man; yet taking upon him to write a Book againſt her Majeſty touching Monſeir, he thereby came within the Compaſs of Law, which he intended not in making of the Book; and I am perſuaded, that he did it of a good Affection towards her Majeſty; and yet if this Law had been made then, which was made ſince, he had died for it: So you, tho you intended not to come within the compaſs of the Statute, yet the Law reacheth to your Fact, as that did to his.

and

Udall. My Lords, his Caſe and mine is not alike, for his Book concerned her Highneſs's Perſon; but the Author of this Book toucheth only the Corruptions of the Biſhops, and therefore not the Perſon of her Majeſty.

Judg. But I will prove this Book to be againſt her Majeſty's Perſon; for her Majeſty being the ſupreme Governor of all Perſons and Cauſes in theſe her Dominions, hath eſtabliſhed this kind of Government in the hands of the Biſhops, which thou and thy Fellows ſo ſtrive againſt; and they being ſet in Authority for the exerciſing of this Government by her Majeſty, thou doſt not ſtrive againſt them, but her Majeſty's Perſon, ſeeing they cannot alter the Government which the Queen hath laid upon them.

Udall. My Lords, we are not ignorant of this, that her Majeſty hath a care that all things might be well; and in that reſpect hath given them often in charge, (upon the Conſiderations of theſe Controverſies) to ſee to it that nothing be amiſs; and becauſe ſhe hath a good Opinion of them for their Gravity and Learning, ſhe believeth them when they ſay all is well and in good caſe: whereas, if they had the grace to look into theſe things, and to make them known as they be, indeed her Majeſty and the State, I doubt not, would quickly redreſs them; and therefore was it that the Author did ſo charge them.

Then the Judge proceeding farther in the Book to prove him to have offended, he took occaſion by the ſame to ſpeak againſt railing againſt Magiſtrates; and ſpeaking to Mr. Udall, he ſaid in effect thus:

Judge Clarke. Sirrah, you that ſhould have been a Teacher of her Majeſty's People, you ſhould have taught your ſelf not to have rail'd upon the Rulers of the People; for do you not know what is written in the 23d of Exodus, Thou ſhalt not rail upon the Ruler of the People, for whoſoever doth ſo ſhall die the death. And do you not know what is written in the 23d of Acts, where the Apoſtle Paul being before the High Prieſt, called him a painted Wall; and being ſmitten by one of the High Prieſt's Servants, it was ſaid unto him, Revileſt thou the Lord's High Prieſt? To which Paul anſwered, I knew not, Brethren, that he was the High Prieſt. Lo! thus did he acknowledge his Fault: Do you know theſe things, Sirrah?

Udall. My Lord, you know that we hold it not lawful for a Miniſter to be a Civil Magiſtrate, and there are at leaſt 500 in this Land, amongſt whom I am the moſt unworthy, that are of the ſame Judgment in this Point.

Judg. But how if the Queen doth give it them?

Udall. They ought not to take it. And my Lord (if it pleaſe you) I will anſwer to your Proofs, tho I came not hither to diſpute. But in my anſwering, my purpoſe is not to give any liberty to any Man to rail upon any that are in Authority. Now to your Proofs, I ſay my Lords, that the place out of Exod. 23. doth rather concern your Lordſhips, and ſuch as are under her Majeſty for Judges, than any way to concern the Biſhops: And touching the ſecond place out of Acts 23. where the Apoſtle ſaith, Brethren, I wiſt not that it was the High Prieſt; the meaning of that place is, as if he ſhould ſay, I thought there had not been any High Prieſt now, ſeeing Chriſt being come, the High Prieſthood was to ceaſe: ſo that the Apoſtle doth not acknowledge any Fault in that his Speech, for there was no lawful High Prieſt of that time; neither did he acknowledge any, ſeeing they did end in Chriſt. And thus do the beſt Divines expound the place.

Then, after ſome farther Speeches of this Expoſition, the Judge returned to the matter of the Book again, ſaying, That the Book did concern the State, and ſaid:

Judg. But, Sirrah, thou canſt not ſo excuſe thy ſelf, as though it touched not the Queen and the State; for it is not written in thy Book, that this Saying will not ſerve their turns, the Queen and Council will have it ſo: whereby it is plain, that thou didſt ſpeak againſt the Queen and the State.

Udall. My Lord, the Author only meaneth this, That when we are called before the Biſhops, they were often driven to uſe this Argument (when they had nothing elſe to ſay for themſelves) that they could be content many things were amended; but it muſt be ſo, for the Queen and Council will have it ſo: And ſurely herein methinks they ſlander her Highneſs; and we tell them, that however they bear it out here before Men, yet before God that Excuſe will not ſerve their turn.

Judg. Thou canſt not carry it away ſo: Doſt not thou plainly ſay, That they are not ſafe, tho they have human Authority on their ſide; but he that is on our ſide is mightier than they? Whereby thou both abaſeſt her Majeſty, and alſo doſt threaten them with ſome Force and Violence.

Udall. It is true, that whoſoever doth unjuſtly is not ſafe in it, tho all the Princes in the world ſhould defend him in it; and that is the Meaning of the Author: But to ſay, that Force and Violence is threatned them, is fartheſt doubtleſs from this Meaning; for it is known to all the World, that we deſire, by all good means, to commend this holy Cauſe of Reformation to her Majeſty and the State, and do not look for neither, that ever it ſhould by any force prevail, but that it would pleaſe God to honour her Highneſs with the advancement of the ſame.

Judg. No, no, theſe are but Excuſes, theſe malicious Speeches proceeded from thee, and were the Ground-work of all theſe Libels that have been diſperſed ſince, and thou art known to be the Ring-leader of this Faction.

Udall. There is no reaſon to charge me with other Mens doings, every Man muſt anſwer for himſelf; but as for me (alas) I am no body: there are five hundred Miniſters in this Land of my judgment in theſe things, the meaneſt of which I acknowledge to be far better learned than I am. But by the way, my Lords, I pray your Lordſhips give me leave to ſay one thing, which I being about to ſpeak of before, was interrupted; and therefore ſeeing now it cometh into my Memory, I pray you to hear me, tho it be out of time, concerning the Felony whereof I am accuſed; it maketh greatly for me.

Judg. What is it? Let us hear what you can ſay.

Udall. When I was before the Lords of her Majeſty's Council at the time of my Commitment, amongſt other things that I alledged againſt the taking of an Oath to accuſe my ſelf, I ſaid, that the thing was accounted criminal, and therefore by Law I was not to anſwer: My Lord Anderſon ſaid, that I ſaid true, if the caſe had concerned either the the loſs of Life or Limb; whereby it is manifeſt, that then my Caſe was not eſteemed Felony.

Judg. Though the Judges had not then concluded it, yet it was Law before, or elſe it could not ſo be determined after; the violent courſe of others ſince, hath cauſed your Caſe to be more narrowly ſifted.

Then the Judge (having ſpoken to the like effect alſo) ſaid to the Jury, That they ſhould not need to trouble themſelves to find him Guilty of the Felony, but only it was ſufficient if they found him Guilty to be the Author of the Book; for, quoth he, it is already determined by all the Judges of the Land, that the Author of that Book was in the compaſs of the Statute of Felony; and this, quoth he, was concluded before we came hither: Therefore you being ignorant of the Law, and we being ſworn, as well as you are, you are to hear us, and to take our Expoſition of the Law. And after many other Speeches, the Judges ſaid, Go thy way, we will hear thee no longer; get thee hence; and ſhaking his Hand, he called for the other Felons to hear their Cauſes.

Then the Jury ſaid, What can we find?

Judg. Find him Author of the Book, and leave the Felony to us.

And after ſome other Speeches, Mr. Fuller ſaid to the Jury, You are to find him Author of the Book, and alſo Guilty of a malicious Intent in making it.

Whereat Mr. Daulton ſaid, What have you to do with the matter, Mr. Fuller, to ſpeak to the Jury?

Then there being ſome Noiſe at the Bar, Mr. Udall could not any more be heard: Yet as he was ready to depart, he ſaid to the Jury, You of the Jury conſider this, that you have not to conſult about the Life of a Seminary and Popiſh Prieſt, but of a Miniſter of the Goſpel.

Then Judge Clarke ſhewed the Reaſons to the Jury, why they muſt find him Guilty; ſaying, The Evidences are manifeſt for the firſt Point, that he is the Author of the Book; and the ſecond is a Point in Law agreed upon by all the Judges, as I have ſaid.

So the Jury, after they had heard the Evidences of the other Felons at the Bar, departed to conſult about them; in which time of their Conſultation, there came two ſeveral Meſſages, exhorting him to ſubmit himſelf, and to yield unto the Judges before the Jury had given up their Verdict.

Unto whom Mr. Udall replied, willing them not to trouble him with any ſuch matter; for he was clear in his Conſcience, and therefore he was not to accuſe himſelf. In which time alſo the Jury, divers times ſent and received Meſſages from the Judges; and at laſt, the Foreman of the Jury went himſelf unto them. Thus having debated of the Evidences of the reſt of the Felons with Mr. Udall, after the Judges had dined, the Jury brought in their Verdict that he was guilty of Felony.

After that Baron Clarke had finiſhed all other matters of Law, and that the Juries had given their Verdicts on the Felons, finding ſome Guilty, and ſome Not Guilty, the Judge commanded all the Priſoners to ſtand forth and to anſwer to their Names: who did ſo. And firſt, Mr. Udall was called, who ſtood forth at the Bar; but the Judge commanded him for that time to ſtand aſide, ſaying, That he would deal with him anon. Then ſome of the Priſoners which were ſaved by their Books, were burnt in their Hands; and for that Night there was nothing more done. Then the Judge commanding the Jailor to bring the Priſoners betimes in the Morning, commanded them to depart: And ſo for that time every Man departed to his place.

The next morning, being the 25th of July, about four of the Clock, the Priſoners were brought to the Bar, who ſtay'd till the coming of the Judges; who came thither by ſix of the Clock, or thereabouts, and called the Priſoners by their Names to receive Sentence of Death: And firſt, they began with Mr. Udall; who, after he was called, was commanded to ſtand aſide till anon. And then were ſeven Felons that received Sentence of Death; who being taken aſide, Mr. Udall was called the ſecond time; and the Clerk of the Aſſizes ſaid, John Udall, hold up thy Hand, what canſt thou alledge for thy ſelf, why thou ſhouldſt not receive Judgement to die?

Udall. My Lords, notwithſtanding my earneſt pleading and proteſting of mine Innocency yeſterday, which I could and would have done more clearly, but that I was ſo much interrupted; yet it hath pleaſed the Jury, upon their Conſciences, to find me Guilty of that which, I thank God, never enter'd into my heart: Now therefore muſt I plead another Plea, and therefore I crave of your Lordſhips to grant me the Benefit of the Pardon granted the laſt Parliament.

Judg. I think you can have no Benefit by it, for I am deceived if it be not excepted. Then ſaid he to the Clerk, or ſome other, Reach me the Statute-Book: And whilſt he looked in the ſame,

Mr. Udall ſaid, I pray your Lordſhips conſider the Ground of my Plea, albeit indeed it ſeems to be excepted: Your Lordſhips confeſſed yeſterday, and I ſhewed it by my Lord Anderſon's Speeches to me, that it was not thought Felony till of late; and therefore the things that be excepted, be ſuch as be inquirable and puniſhable in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts.

Judg. That is nothing; for if the leſſer be excepted, much rather is the greater.

Udall. My Lords, I refer it to your Conſciences and favourable Conſiderations: The Words are theſe in the Pardon, which he repeated: And they finding it to be as he had ſaid, the Judge ſaid, Here is no help for you: And after other Speeches between them of the Meaning of the Words of the Pardon, the Judge ſaid, Mr. Udall, your Counſel hath deceived you.

Udall. My Lords, I have not received any Counſel herein, for I have been cloſe Priſoner this half year, and therefore could not attain to have any Counſel; but thus much have I gathered, which is my Judgment, out of the Book.

Judg. What can you alledge more for your ſelf? for this helpeth you not.

Udall. Nothingbut mine own Innocency, but that your Lordſhips may proceed.

Judg. What ſay you? are you contented to ſubmit yourſelf to the Queen?

Udall. Yea, or elſe I were not worthy to live in her Highneſs's Dominions.

Judge. But will you acknowledge your ſelf to have offended her Majeſty in making this Book? She is gracious and full of Mercy; it may be, that we, reporting your Submiſſion unto her Majeſty, may procure her Pardon for you.

Udall. May it pleaſe your Lordſhips to hear me; The Cauſe for which I am called in queſtion, I cannot forſake in any ſort, for I hold it to be the undoubted Truth of God; but, &c. And then he was interrupted by Judge Puckering, who ſaid:

Judg.

Judg. Nay, ſtay there, you cannot go away with that Speech unanſwered, to buz into the Peoples ears ſuch a Conceit, that it is an undoubted Truth that you hold; for I hold it to be an undoubted Falſhood. And then he proceeded further in a large ſet Speech, the effect whereof was, That this Land having been governed by ſundry Nations, hath yet kept her antient Laws, which (he affirmed) would be overthrown, if this Government that theſe Men ſeek for, ſhould be eſtabliſhed: And then he further ſhewed, What Inconveniences (as he thought) would come by the ſame, viz. That we having Laws and Judges appointed to decide all Controverſies, this Presbytery which theſe Men ſeek for, would overthrow all, and bring to their Cenſure and Government all Mens Cauſes, or elſe they would excommunicate them from their Churches; yea, and they are ſo hot for this Government, that they will not ſtay for the Magiſtrate; and if the Magiſtrate will not, they will reform themſelves: and one of them writing in a Letter to a Friend of his, ſaith, Let us number our hot Brethren, that we may know who will ſtand to it, for it is high time. So that it is plain, that if they cannot have it with her Majeſty's Conſent, they will have it, tho it make our Hearts to ake, as you ſay in your Book. And whereas her Majeſty hath Revenue belonging to her Crown out of the Church-Livings, and Cathedral Churches, theſe Men would have her Majeſty give unto them thoſe Revenues, for the Maintenance of their Presbytery, and they would allow her a Stipend at their Diſcretions; ſo that they would bring the Queen and the Crown under their Girdles.

And ſome of theſe Men have gone ſo far, that they ſay plainly we have no Church, no Sacrament, no Miniſters, nor any Worſhip of God amongſt us. If theſe things be not look'd unto in time, what Confuſion ſhall we have in this Land ſhortly? Many other things he ſpake againſt the Cauſe of Reformation, which I cannot particularly lay down: but this is in effect the Subſtance of it, concluding, he ſaid, Thus much, Mr. Udall, have your Speeches enforced me to ſpeak, leſt the People here preſent (being deceived) ſhould be carried away by it. To which Mr. Udall anſwered briefly.

Udall. My Lords, it is bootleſs for me to enter Diſputation with you in this place touching this matter; only this I could wiſh you, to leave it to be firſt decided by the learned Divines, to whoſe Calling it belongeth. And although ſome weak Men wanting judgment have been headily carried in ſeeking the Furtherance of this Cauſe, and ſo for want of this Government have run into ſome Errors; yet it is no reaſon to charge us with them, for your Lordſhips know, that we have been the Men that have taken the greateſt pains to reclaim them to the joining of themſelves with the Church, from which they have ſeparated themſelves.

Judg. Clarke. You are deceived, it is not a matter of Divinity only, but it is a matter of State, and within the compaſs of our Profeſſion; and it is not ſo greatly in controverſy, as you would have us to believe it is.

Udall. It is diverſly debated (my Lords) and the greateſt number of learned Men in Chriſtendom do maintain the ſame.

Judg. How do you know that? have you been beyond the Seas to know the greateſt number of learned Men to be of this Judgment?

Udall. Your Lordſhips know, that all the Churches of France, the Low-Countries, and of Scotland, do maintain the ſame, beſides many hundred of learned Men in this Land.

Judg. Have you been in all theſe Churches, that you can tell ſo much?

Udall. I know it to be true (my Lords) for their Practice doth ſhew them to be of this Judgement.

Judg. Well, if you can alledge no more, neither will ſubmit your ſelf to the Queen's Mercy, then hear your Judgment.

Udall. My Lords, I was beginning to ſpeak, but you interrupted me; I pray you hear me what I will ſay, and then do as God ſhall move you.

Judg. Let us hear what you will ſay.

Udall. As I ſaid before, ſo I ſay now, I believe the Cauſe to be the undoubted Truth of God; and therefore in the Matter, I cannot by any means yield: yet ſeeing, by your order of Law, I am found to be guilty, neither can I (for the Reverence I bear to her Majeſty's Laws) take any Exceptions againſt you nor the Jury; but that which you have done, I acknowledge to be done in all Equity and Right. Seeing, I ſay, you have found me to be guilty, whereby I cannot live without her Majeſty's gracious and ſpecial Favour, I acknowledge, that whatſoever I have done to the advancement of the Cauſe, I may offend in the Manner; in which reſpect (if I have offended) ſeeing it hath pleaſed your Lordſhips and the Jury to find me guilty, I do willingly ſubmit my ſelf, and heartily crave her Majeſty's Pardon.

Judg. But are you ſorry that you have offended the Queen's Majeſty?

Udall. I am ſorry, that the Courſe of the Law hath found me to have offended.

Judg. So is every Thief that is condemned ſorry, that his Offence is found out, but not for the Fact. This is a plain Fallacy.

Udall. My Lord, indeed if it were ſo as your Lordſhip doth underſtand it, it were a plain Fallacy; but I ſay farther, if in the Mnner of handling ſo good a Cauſe, there be found in me any Offence againſt her Majeſty's Laws, I acknowledge, that in the Manner of handling it, her Majeſty may be juſtly offended, for which I am ſorry. And I proteſt that I have never gone about to advance it by any other means, than by manifeſting it to all Men, and tendering it to them in Authority; and that by ſuch means as might not be contrary to the Laws of this Land, that ſo it might be received by her Majeſty and the State: and this is the Care of us all, howſoever we be charged with Factions.

Judg. You ſay, If there be found any Offence; whereby you call in queſtion the Equity of dealing in this Court againſt you.

Udall. My Lords, I do not, neither will I; let it be looked into by you and the reſt whom it concerneth, I hope you would not deal otherwiſe than lawfully againſt me.

Judge Puck. You ſay, you ſeek no unlawful Means: What can be meant but unlawful Means in the words of your Book? If it come in by that Means that will make all your Hearts to ake, blame your ſelves. What good Means can be meant by theſe Words?

Udall. My Lords, yeſterday I ſhewed you what I took to be the meaning of the Author in ſome places of the Book alledged againſt me in the Indictment; and then I would have ſpoken unto all, but you cut me off; I pray you therefore let me ſhew you the Meaning of the Author in thoſe Words now.

Judge. Let us hear you how you expound it.

Udall. My Lords, your Lordſhips muſt underſtand, that the Author taketh it for granted, that the Cauſe is God's and muſt prevail: and therefore, ſeeing God hath uſed all the means of his Mercy to bring it in, in giving us a gracious Prince, long Peace, and Abundance, and of ſtirring up ſome to exhibit Supplications to the Parliament; theſe things not prevailing in his Mercy, he will bring it in by ſome Judgment, as Plague or Famine, or ſome ſuch-like Puniſhment: and this is always the manner of God's dealing.

Judge. You cannot expound it ſo; for the Words import another thing.

Udall. My Lord, the Author himſelf expoundeth it ſo in the Words following; where he ſaith, That it muſt prevail, for ſuch a Judgement will overtake this Land, as ſhall make the ears of all that hear thereof to tingle: So that he meaneth nothing but this, That God will bring it in by his own Hand, by Judgement, if by Mercy he cannot prevail.

Judge. No, no, your Meaning was, That it ſhould be brought in by Force and Violence.

Udall. God forbid! far be it from us to conceive any ſuch Imagination. The Author of that Book doth plainly ſhew, that he meant no ſuch thing; and the Words following, in the end of the Epiſtle, do declare the ſame; for there he ſheweth by whom it is to be brought in, namely, by her Majeſty and her honourable Counſellors, that they may ſee it, and eſtabliſh the ſame.

Judge. Nay, the meaning is, That if the Queen will not, yet you ſay, it ſhall come in; for ſo the Words are, That it muſt prevail, maugre the Heads of all that ſtand againſt it.

Udall. Nay my Lords, the Words are, Maugre the Malice of all that ſtand againſt it. For there are many Heads that are not maliciouſly bent againſt it: There is great difference between Malice and Heads; for ſome are againſt the Cauſe, through Ignorance.

Judge. It is all one in effect.

Udall. Nay, my Lords, there is great difference.

Judge Puck. Well, Mr. Udall, you were beſt to ſubmit your ſelf to the Queen's Mercy, and leave theſe Courſes; for I tell you, that your Book is moſt ſeditious and ſlanderous againſt her Majeſty and the State; and yet I aſſure you, that your Book had been paſſed over, if there had not come forth preſently after it ſuch a number of ſlanderous Libels, as Martin Mar-Prelate, Martin's Epitome, Martin Jun. or Theſes Martinianæ, Martin Sen. and others ſuch-like; of which your Book was judged to be the Ring-leader.

Udall. My Lords, thoſe that are learned, and do maintain this Cauſe, do judge this Book to be written very indifferently, how ſoever it be hardly conſtrued. But for Martin, and the reſt of thoſe Books that you have named, they were never approved by the Godly Learned: And I am fully perſuaded, that thoſe Books were not done by any Miniſter; and I think there is never a Miniſter in this Land, that doth know who Martin is. And I, for my part, have been inquiſitive, but I could never learn who he is.

Judge Clarke. You will not acknowledge your ſelf faulty in any thing, and therefore it is in vain to ſtand any longer with you.

Udall. I will eaſily confeſs, that in Manner the Author hath offended, for no Man can handle a Cauſe ſo well, but there will fault appear in it, as appeareth by Job, who having a good Cauſe, handled it weakly: It is eaſier to handle an ill Cauſe cunningly, than a good one well.

Judge. Nay, but you have maliciouſly offended in publiſhing this Book, which tendeth to the overthrowing of the State, and the moving of Rebellion.

Udall. My Lords, that be far from me, for we teach that in reforming things amiſs, if the Prince will not conſent, the Weapons that Subjects are to fight withal, are Repentance and Prayers, Patience and Tears.

Judge. Yea, you had done well if you had uſed theſe Weapons, rather than to have made this Book.

Udall. God forbid but that we ſhould give unto her Majeſty that Honour which juſtly is due unto her, for we have not taught the People to reform the State without the Prince, and our practice hath proved the ſame; for we never taught any of her Subjects to go before her, but to leave that Honour as belongeth to her Majeſty.

Judge. Well, will you ſubmit your ſelf or not? for elſe I muſt proceed to Judgment, and I have no Authority to favour you, neither will I ſtay Sentence of Death according to my Office: what my Brother hath I know not, and therefore ſhortly ſubmit your ſelf, or elſe I am to pronounce Sentence of Death.

Udall. And I am ready to receive it: For I proteſt before God (not knowing that I am to live an Hour) that the Cauſe is good, and I am contented to receive Sentence, ſo that I may leave it to Poſterity how I have ſuffered for the Cauſe. But my Lords, the Cauſe excepted, I will ſubmit my ſelf in any thing.

Judge. Let the Cauſe alone, and tell us no more of it, but acknowledge your ſelf to have offended the Queen's Majeſty.

Udall. I may not in any caſe yield in the Cauſe; I have almoſt ever ſince I was a Preacher of the Goſpel profeſſed it, and therefore I cannot be at this time changed.

Judge. Let (I ſay) the Cauſe alone, and ſay what you will do.

Udall. I muſt needs profeſs it and mention it, leſt it ſhould be thought that I have ſtarted from it; but for any thing that I have done in the Manner againſt Law, I am heartily ſorry for it: more than this I cannot ſay, do with me what you will.

Judge. But are you ſorry for offending her Majeſty and her Laws, and be you contented to amend, and to live in Obedience as becometh a good Subject?

Udall. I am content to ſeek the advancement of this Cauſe by no other means, than that which may ſtand with the Laws of this Land, and the Duty of a good Subject.

Judge. I come not here to intreat you to ſubmit your ſelf, but you ſhall do it willingly upon your Knees, and crave her Majeſty's Mercy.

Udall. Then Mr. Udall kneeling down, ſaid, I refuſe not any kind of Submiſſion to her Majeſty: And I intreat your Lordſhips to be a means to her Majeſty for me. And if I were worthy that my poor Papers might come unto her Majeſty, or to her honourable Council, I would write thus much unto them.

Judge. Nay, will you write thus much unto us, that we may firſt ſee it and commend it to her Majeſty?

Udall.

Udall. I willingly do it.

Thus they diſmiſſed him.

And this is the Sum of that which I with the help of others could remember, having not any intent to leave out or enlarge any thing further than the meaning of the Speakers did intend; notwithſtanding many more things were ſaid on both ſides, eſpecially the ſet Speeches of both the Judges, and of Mr. Daulton, to the diſgrace of the deſired Reformation, which could not well be expreſſed in particular, and therefore I have left them. Alſo many other things Mr. Udall purpoſed and begun to ſay, which they ſtopped, ſo that they could not be perceived.

The Aſſizes being thus ended, Mr. Udall was returned to the Priſon of the White-Lion again, where he continued till the Seſſions in Southwark, beginning the 18th Day of February, 1590. during which time he wrote a Supplication or Submiſſion to the Queen's Majeſty, as followeth:

To the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

MOST gracious and dread Sovereign, the preſent lamentable Eſtate wherein I ſtand, being found guilty by Verdict, to be Author of a Book intituled, A Demonſtration of Diſcipline, and being without your gracious Pardon, to die for the ſame; I humbly proſtrate my ſelf at your Majeſty's Feet, ſubmitting my ſelf in moſt humble manner as becometh a dutiful Subject, to ſuch Order as it ſhall pleaſe your Highneſs to appoint, to whom God hath given ſo high and ſovereign a Power, as is able both to kill and to quicken, to bring to the Gates of Death, and to cauſe to return to the Comfort of Life again: Before whom ſtanding thus convict, I am not to plead my Innocency; yet I moſt humbly deſire it may not offend your excellent Majeſty, that I proteſt (of the Truth whereof I call God to witneſs, who knoweth all Secrets, and will judge both the quick and the dead) that I had never any thought or imagination to publiſh, write, or do any thing maliciouſly, or tending to the diſhonour or ſlander of your Majeſty's Royal Perſon or Princely Eſtate, under whoſe gracious Government I have attained to ſo many Benefits and Bleſſings; amongſt which I moſt highly eſteem the true Knowledge and Fear of God; in regard whereof, I have been always ready even to adventure my Life, for the preſervation of your moſt Royal Perſon and defence of your Princely Eſtate, and the ſame have alſo taught unto others, as a thing ſpecially commanded by God: notwithſtanding, fearing the Severity of Juſtice unto Death, I fly for Life unto your Majeſty's moſt gracious Mercy, moſt humbly deſiring your Highneſs of your merciful Compaſſion, for relief of my poor and miſerable Eſtate, to grant me your gracious and comfortable Pardon, whereby I may be diſcharged, both of the Offence and Puniſhment, which the Law hath laid upon me. Other hope than this have I none, but the Truſt I have in God, (according to his Promiſes) that your Majeſty by a ſpecial Gift of God is gracious and merciful, and have vouchſafed to ſhew Mercy even unto ſuch as were not only by imputation of Law, but indeed malicious and mortal Enemies to your Highneſs; and therefore I hope that the ſame Goodneſs of ſo Princely a Nature may be moved, and will ſhew forth it ſelf in like gracious Compaſſion on my behalf. Which gracious Pardon on my Knees I moſt humbly crave your excellent Majeſty to grant unto me, by which ſpecial Favour being raiſed as it were from the dead, I promiſe and vow to lead the reſt of my Life in all humble and dutiful Obedience unto your Majeſty; praying continually for the preſervation of your Highneſs's precious Life and happy Government, to the Honour of Almighty God, and the Comfort of all obedient and dutiful Subjects.

The Proceedings againſt Mr. Udall, at the Aſſizes in Southwark, February 18, 19, 20. 1590.

BEING called the firſt Day of the Aſſizes in the Afternoon, Serjeant Puckering ſaid:

Puck. We do not mean now to deal with you, only I muſt put you in mind that you have made a Petition, wherein you promiſe to ſubmit your ſelf to ſuch Order as her Majeſty ſhall appoint; conſider of it, and look that you do it, for I can tell you, it is looked for at your hands.

Udall. I know not my Lord what you mean, I made a Petition to her Majeſty, and will willingly perform any thing promiſed therein.

Puck. Well, adviſe well with your ſelf, and look that you do it, I tell you aforehand.

Udall. Unleſs you mean that, I know not your meaning.

Juſtice Fenner dwelling in Surrey, ſat on the Bench, and ſaid; Mr. Udall, I muſt needs ſay ſomething unto you, I have heard much good of you, and that you are Learned, it were pity you ſhould do otherwiſe than well, I pray you take heed that thoſe good things which are in you be not marred for want of Humility: I tell you Humility is a ſpecial Vertue in a Man of your Calling, the want whereof marreth all in them that want it; I pray you ſtand not in your own Opinion too much: I have heard that you have done much good, let not Humility be wanting, &c.

Udall. My Lord, I acknowledge that Humility is a Vertue generally required in Men of my Calling, without which all other Gifts are nothing; for God reſiſteth the Proud, and giveth Wiſdom to the Simple: and I deſire that the ſame Vertue may be found in me: but I truſt your meaning is not thereby to perſuade me to deny the Truth, which I truſt the Lord will keep me from, whatſoever befall me.

Fen. I ſpeak to you of good-will, I would not have you ſtiff in your own Conceit.

Puck. Remember what I ſaid unto you.

And ſo I was carried into a Chamber to be conferred with by ſome of the Bench, &c. And when that Promiſe which the Judge ſo much ſpake of came to be examined, it was nothing but a Sentence in my Submiſſion to her Highneſs, the meaning whereof is (as the words going before it, and immediately following it do declare) that I profeſſed my ſelf willing to live or die, according as that Power which God hath given to her Majeſty, ſhall appoint.

I having been dealt withal to this effect the firſt Day of the Aſſizes (by certain of the Bench in private) as alſo the ſecond Day by ſome of them to this effect, that I would make ſuch a Submiſſion as would condemn the Book in queſtion, and juſtify the Hierarchy; and perceiving that I was not to be heard till the laſt Day, I intreated Sir William Moore and Mr. Bowyer to be a mean to the Judges for me; that, foraſmuch, as my Caſe was rare, and I had (as I was perſuaded) ſufficient to alledg, why (notwithſtanding the Verdict againſt me) Judgment ought to be ſtayed, I might be heard over Night, that ſo (according to that good Counſel given by them unto me, to adviſe with myſelf, and to conſider what I would do) alſo they might have a Night to think of what I had to ſay, and the next Day to do with me as God ſhould move them.

Hereupon I was fetch'd forth before the Judges in private, immediately after Dinner; who uſing many Perſuaſions to draw me to relent (which being in private, I will not expreſs) told me that they ſent for me, for that they underſtood I deſired to be heard over Night, which they were willing then and there to do. I anſwered, My Lords, my meaning was not to deſire private, but publick hearing, ſeeing I have nothing to ſay, but ſuch as would prevent my ſelf, and diſappoint my publick Speech, if I ſhould utter it in private: yet becauſe they told me their other Affairs would not permit them to have any time with me till the latter end of the Aſſizes, I was rather willing that I ſhould be prevented, than they ſhould be conſtrained to determine on a ſudden upon ſo weighty a matter: whereupon I did draw out a Paper for each of them, containing theſe Reaſons following.

I humbly pray your Lordſhips to conſider, whether theſe Reaſons ought not in Conſcience to move you to ſtay the Sentence notwithſtanding the Verdict againſt me, and to be means of my releaſe.

1. It ſeemeth that my Caſe is not eſteemed Felony by the Judges of the Land, ſeeing they do uſually ſit in the High-Commiſſion Court, where the printing and diſperſing of the ſame, and ſuch like Books, are uſually enquired after as Tranſgreſſions of another nature.

2. No Judgment in Law ought to be given in caſe of Felony, but upon a Party firſt found Guilty thereof by a Verdict of twelve Men; but I am not ſo: for proof whereof, I pray you it may be remembred, that your Lordſhip gave the Jury in Iſſue only for the Tryal of the Fact, whether I were Author of ſuch a Book, and freed them from enquiring the Intent, without which there is no Felony.

3. I humbly pray you call to mind by what means the Jury was drawn to give that Verdict they did, whether they were left wholly to their own Conſciences, or were wrought unto it partly by Promiſe, aſſuring it ſhould be no further Danger unto me, but tend to my good; and partly by Fear, as appeareth in that it hath been an occaſion of great Grief unto ſome of them ever ſince. And then I pray you to conſider, whether upon ſuch a Verdict ſo drawn from twelve ſimple Men, Chriſtian Judges, in a good Conſcience, may proceed to Sentence of Death?

4. In caſe the Verdict were never ſo free, yet your Lordſhips being Men of Wiſdom and Knowledge, are to conſider, whether the Statute whereupon I am indicted, do agree to my Caſe in the truth and meaning of it, there being nothing in that Book ſpoken of her Majeſty's Perſon, but in Duty and Honour; and whether the drawing of it from her Majeſty to the Biſhops (as being a part of her Body Politick) be not a violent depraving and wreſting of the Statute? which if it be, you being Chriſtian Judges, cannot in a good Conſcience upon ſuch a ground proceed to Sentence, contrary to your own Knowledge.

5. But if the Statute be to be taken ſo as it is urged, it ought to be conſidered that without a malicious Intent againſt her Majeſty's Perſon, the Statute it ſelf maketh no Act forbidden by it to be felonious; wherein I appeal firſt to God, and then to all Men that have ſeen the whole Courſe of my Life, and to your Lordſhips own Conſciences, wherein I pray you to examine your ſelves in the ſight of God, Whether either by your ſelves, or the juſt Report of any other, you can find me guilty of any Act in all my Life, that ſavoured of any Malice or malicious Intent againſt her Majeſty, or of any other Behaviour than ſtandeth with the Allegiance and Duty of a moſt Dutiful and Chriſtian Subject. Of which Malice or malicious Intent againſt her Majeſty, if your Conſciences clear me before God, the Act wherewith I am charged being not Felony without ſuch an Intent; I hope you will conſider that you cannot with a good Conſcience proceed to Judgment.

6. Yet if the Statute and Intent were ſuch as it is ſaid, in caſe of Life the Evidences ought to be pregnant, and full living Witneſſes (I am ſure by the Word of God, and I truſt alſo by the Laws of this Land) were to have been produced Face to Face to charge me. But I have none ſuch againſt me, neither any other thing, ſaving only Papers and Reports of Depoſitions taken by Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners and others; which kind of Proof the Judges of the Land caſt away in caſe of Lands, and by no means allow to be ſufficient, and therefore are much leſs to be allowed in a Caſe of Life: which being ſo, your Lordſhips ought to have a Conſcience, that upon ſo weak Evidences, Sentence of Death be not pronounced.

7. But if the ſame that hath been given in for Evidence in Writing, had been teſtified by Men living, ſtanding out in the preſence of the Court, and of me the Accuſed; I truſt your Lordſhips will conſider that no one of the Evidences do directly prove me to be the Author of the Book in queſtion; which as it was, hath little Force in it, as appeareth by this, that the Author of the chiefeſt Teſtimony is ſo grieved, that he is aſhamed to come where he is known. Whereupon howſoever the Jury have not diſcerned thereof, yet you being Men of Skill and Underſtanding, are to have regard of it, and not upon ſo weak and impertinent Proofs, to proceed to Judgment of Death.

8. If all theſe things were ſuch as they ought to be, yet your Lordſhips are to conſider (ſuppoſing me to be the Author of the Book in queſtion) that the ſaid Book for the Subſtance of it, containeth nothing but that which is taught and believed to be a part of the Goſpel of Chriſt, by all the beſt reformed Churches in Europe; wherein nothing being diverſe from them, I cannot be condemned without condemning in me all ſuch Nations and Churches as hold the ſame Doctrine. In which (if there be no Error in them) the Offence commonly being in Form, Circumſtance and Manner of Writing, which ſome Men may think worthy an Admonition, ſome more ſevere worthy Correction and Amercement, the ſharpeſt cannot judge it to deſerve more than ſome ſhort time of Impriſonment.

But Death for an Error of ſuch a kind, in terms and words not altogether dutiful of certain Biſhops, cannot be but extreme Cruelty: Which ſeeing it ought to be far from any Chriſtian Man that hath the Bowels of Chriſt in him, ſurely Chriſtian Judges profeſſing the Goſpel, for a Service of the Goſpel (ſaving ſome overſight in words and terms) ought not to proceed againſt me (that hath endeavoured to ſhew himſelf a dutiful Subject and faithful Miniſter of the Goſpel) to give Sentence of Death.

9. My Offence not being aggravated, but remaining as it was the laſt Aſſizes when my Submiſſion was accepted, and Judgment thereupon ſtaid; I truſt your Favour will be the ſame towards me now alſo, ſeeing I am ready to do the like.

If all this prevail not, yet my Redeemer liveth, to whom I commend my ſelf, and ſay as ſometime Jeremy ſaid in a Caſe not much unlike; Behold I am in your hands, do with me what ſeemeth good unto you: but know you this, that if you put me to death, you ſhall bring innocent Blood upon your own Heads, and upon the Land. As the Blood of Abel, ſo the Blood of Udall will cry to God with a loud Voice, and the righteous Judge of the World will require it at the hands of all thoſe that ſhall be guilty of it.

This is the Sum of that which I deliver'd to the Judges.

The Aſſizes being almoſt finiſhed, and the other Priſoners, that were called to the Bar to have Sentence of Death, ſtanding forth to hear the ſame; I was at the laſt called, and demanded what I could ſay for my ſelf why I ſhould not have Judgment to die. Hereupon I humbly craving Audience, began to this effect:

Udall. My Lords, I do acknowledge that I have been hitherto proceeded againſt by due Courſe of Law, and that a Verdict was given in againſt me the laſt Aſſizes as guilty of Felony, &c. But I do not only (as heretofore) proteſt mine Innocence, but alſo think that I have ſufficient to alledge why (notwithſtanding the Verdict) Judgment ought not to be given; wherefore I intreat to be heard.

Judge Puck. I pray you ſtay, you ſeem in the beginning to ſpeak Contraries; for firſt you acknowledge the Courſe of Law to be due, and afterwards ſtand upon it that you are innocent. How can a due Courſe of Law condemn the Innocent?

Udall. Theſe things agree well enough, as I will ſhew, if it ſhall pleaſe you to give me leave: It is by due Courſe of Law that I have been indicted, arraigned, have had a Jury impannelled upon me, been accuſed, heard ſpeak for my ſelf, and Teſtimony produced againſt me: But in that the Proof by Witneſs was inſufficient, and the Jury either in Judgment or Affection miſled; thereupon it hath come to paſs, that (notwithſtanding the due Courſe of Law) Guiltineſs is laid upon a guiltleſs Perſon. But I pray you let me proceed to the Reaſons that I have to alledge for my ſelf.

Then I left the firſt Reaſon of purpoſe, ſeeing I did rather wiſh that they only ſhould underſtand it (which they did by my Papers over-night) than to blaze it to the World; ſo that I did begin to ſpeak according to the ſecond Reaſon mentioned before: whereupon Serjeant Puckering prayed Baron Clarke to ſpeak, ſeeing it did moſt concern him.

Judge Clarke. I muſt needs tell you, you do us and the Seat of Juſtice great wrong; indeed I told the Jury, what was the Law in the Opinion of all the Judges of the Land; for it was not my private Opinion, as I ſaid alſo at that time.

Udall. It is not material, my Lord, in this Caſe, what the Judges think; for tho all the Judges in the World thought ſo, our Laws thought no Man a Felon, or capable of Sentence as a Felon, till he be convicted by the Verdict of twelve Men.

Clarke. You are ſo convicted, as the Record will teſtify.

Udall. I acknowledge the Record againſt me, but I appeal to your Lordſhip's Conſcience, whether you delivered not unto them Speeches to this effect: 'As for the Felony you are not ſo much to 'enquire, but only whether he made the Book, 'leaving the Felony to us.'

Clarke. You do me great wrong, I only told them the Law.

Udall. Well, I leave it to your Lordſhip's favourable Conſideration, you perceive my Reaſon.

Then I ſpake to the third Reaſon, whereupon it was ſaid:

Puck. All that you ſay tendeth to the diſgracing of the Court of Juſtice holden againſt you heretofore; the Jury were left to their own Conſciences, and did as they ſaw meet to do.

Udall. No, my Lords, I ſpeak not any thing to diſgrace the Court of Juſtice; for I acknowledge both this Courſe, and all others of the like nature, to be God's holy Ordinance, which I ought to reverence; neither do I ſpeak to defame the Jury, but only to give your Lordſhips occaſion why you may not proceed to Sentence thereupon: for if the Jury did well, why ſhould it grieve any of them? If they did ill, your Lordſhips may not proceed to Sentence thereupon.

Puck. We cannot remember the particular Circumſtances that then paſſed, neither are we to call in queſtion the Verdict, but it is our Office to give Sentence according to it.

Udall. I pray your Lordſhips tell me one thing, muſt the Judges always give Sentence according to the Verdict, or may there not be cauſe to ſtay it?

Clarke. Yes, there may be Cauſe to ſtay the Verdict, ſuch may the Caſe be.

Udall. And I deſire no other, but that my Reaſons may be well weighed, whether my Caſe be ſuch or no.

Then I prayed, for ſo much as they had the Subſtance of that in Writing aforehand which I meant to ſay, it would pleaſe them to give me leave to ſay at once what I could, leſt my Memory (being ſo much weakned and dulled by Impriſonment) ſhould fail me, and ſo I leave ſome material thing unſpoken. Then I ſpake according to the fourth and fifth Reaſons, whereunto little was replyed, ſaving ſuch things as were mentioned at my Arraignment: Only Baron Clarke uſed a very long Speech, wherein he compared Mr. Stubb's Cauſe and mine together; and after the end of his Speech, Judge Puckering ſaid, Puck. Who taught you ſuch Law? I tell you, you are much deceived and abuſed in it; one may be within the Compaſs of Felony, tho he do not directly mean any ſuch thing.

Udall. Your Lordſhip knoweth I pleaded theſe Points the laſt Aſſizes, when I came from cloſe Impriſonment to the Bar: I underſtand Engliſh, which is the Language wherein the Statute was written, and I profeſs my ſelf a Scholar; and therefore to have (thro God's Mercy) ſome Underſtanding of the Senſe of that I read. It ſeemeth to me moſt direct, direct, and no otherwiſe to be taken than I underſtand it.

Then I ſpake according to the ſixth and ſeventh Reaſons, whereunto it was replyed thus:

Puck. You are deceived, in that you think the Witneſſes againſt you the leſs lawful, becauſe the Parties were not preſent. It is an ordinary thing to have Witneſſes examined in the Chancery, and other ſuch like Courts, which do remain thereof as ſufficient Credit for ever, as they were when the Party's Oath was taken upon the ſame.

Udall. Then would I have anſwered that the Caſe was not alike, ſeeing the High-Commiſſion is no Court of Record; but I was not then ſuffered to ſpeak, for that it was ſaid by the other Judge, Clarke. Where do you find that there muſt needs (by the Word of God) be two Witneſſes face to face?

Udall. It is ſo clear, as the Witneſſes were alſo to have the firſt hand in executing the Puniſhment upon the Party offending.

Puck. That was according to Moſes's Law, which we are not ty'd unto.

Udall. It is the Word of God, which hath a perpetual Equity in it; for the Life of Man is ſo precious in the ſight of God, as he would not have it taken away without moſt evident and manifeſt Proof, ſuch as in his Law is ſet down.

Clarke. We are not now to call in queſtion the Proofs; ſeeing the Jury did think them ſufficient: This Speech of yours tendeth to prove the Jury perjured.

Udall. Not ſo, my Lord; I think of them, that they did according to their Conſciences: but being Men unlearned, and the Caſe being ſtrange unto them, they may have done their beſt, and yet you being Men of more Knowledg and Judgment, are to look further into the matter,

Puck. Whereas you ſay that none of the Witneſſes did directly prove you the Author of the Fact, that was not neceſſary; for if all laid together, and the Circumſtances conſider'd, do prove it, it is as good a Proof as if every Witneſs were direct.

Udall. But the Law of God, from which I truſt our Laws diſagree not, would that every Proof be direct.

Puck. And do you think indeed, that the Laws of this Land are agreeable to the Word of God?

Udall. I do not profeſs to know them; but ſurely I have ſo reverent an Opinion of them, that I truſt the Grounds of them are according to the Word of God, however in ſome Particulars the Proceedings may miſs thereof.

Puck. Then the Government by Arch-Biſhops, and Lord Biſhops, is according to the Word of God, ſeeing the Laws of the Land do allow them.

Udall. I pray you, my Lord, take me not ſo general; for that will not follow upon my Speeches.

Puck. Well, you may not now diſgrace the Witneſſes, you ſhould have done it at your Arraignment.

Udall. I neither meant then, nor purpoſe now to diſgrace the Witneſſes, but to ſhew the Inſufficiency of their Teſtimony in this caſe, that your Lordſhips may thereby ſee ſome reaſon to ſtay the Sentence.

The firſt Teſtimony that was alledged, was that of Mr. Chatfield, who affirmeth, that it was not given in againſt me upon his Oath; but only in his anger he ſet his hand to, but is now ſorry for it.

Puck. You ſhould have alledged this before; it is now too late.

Udall. It is alledged too late, to prevent the Verdict; but if there be any Force in it, it ought to be conſider'd to ſtay the Sentence: I could alledge it no ſooner, becauſe I knew it not till after the Verdict.

Puck. We may not ſuffer you to proceed ſo, to diſgrace that which is paſſed already: if you have any other thing to ſay, ſpeak on; otherwiſe we muſt do our Office.

Udall. It is not my Meaning, howſoever you take it, to diſgrace any thing paſſed heretofore; only I pray you further to conſider, that Tompkins, whoſe Teſtimony only carried ſome ſhew, proteſted before my Commitment, that he would not for all the World affirm me to be the Author of the Book.

Puck. Why did not you plead theſe things to the Jury?

Udall. I did ſo, and offer'd to produce ſufficient Proof for it; but your Lordſhips anſwer'd, that no Witneſſes might be heard in my behalf, ſeeing it was againſt the Queen: which ſeemeth ſtrange to me; for methinks it ſhould be for the Queen, to hear all things on both ſides; eſpecially when the Life of any of her Subjects is in queſtion.

Puck. The Witneſſes were then thought by the Jury ſufficient to prove the Matter, which we may not now call in doubt; therefore ſay on if you have any more.

Udall. Then I ſpake according to the eighth Reaſon; whereupon it was ſaid, Clarke. I tell you, you are not called into queſtion for the Cauſe (as you call it) nor for the Body of the Book; but only for ſlanderous things in the Preface, againſt her Majeſty's Government, and therefore you may let the Cauſe alone.

Udall. But it is for the Hatred borne to the Cauſe, that I am thus entreated; for had not it been handled in the Book, ſuch matter as is now made of the Preface, had never been objected againſt me, or any other.

Puck. Well, it is beſt for you to leave off all other Pleas, and ſubmit your ſelf to the Queen's Majeſty's Mercy.

Udall. I will do ſo with all my heart.

Puck. But will you do it as you did the laſt Aſſizes?

Udall. Yea, that I will: And ſo I ſpake according to the laſt Reaſon; whereupon it was ſaid, Puck. You confeſſed that you were juſtly condemned.

Udall. I am not yet condemned.

Puck. I mean convicted by the Jury. Then you acknowledged that you had offended her Majeſty; that you were ſorry for it, and promiſed that you would never do the like again.

Udall. My Lord, it is not for me to oppoſe my Word and Credit (which is nothing) againſt yours; I refer it to them that heard it: only, I pray you give me leave to ſpeak of it, as I take it that it was. Firſt, I did avow (and ſo I do now, and will do whilſt I live) that the Cauſe handled in that Book, is an undoubted Truth.

Clarke. How often ſhall we bid you leave the Cauſe, and tell you, that you are not troubled for it?

Udall. But it is the Cauſe that is ſought to be defac'd in my Perſon, and therefore I muſt and will ſtill profeſs it, and juſtify it, whatſoever Diſgrace I receive by it unto my ſelf. I pray you let me proceed. Secondly, I did proteſt that I never had any

any purpoſe to deface, but ever to ſeek to honour her Majeſty and her Government. Thirdly, I profeſſed that the Courſe of Law againſt me was due; whereby what I have meant, you have heard. Fourthly, I ſaid, that I never had any purpoſe to do any thing to the Advancement of this Cauſe, but keeping my ſelf (to the uttermoſt of my power) within the compaſs of the Law. Laſtly, I never confeſs'd my ſelf to be Author of the Book. Then my Submiſſion was this, That if I had done any thing to the Advancement of ſo holy a Cauſe, which had brought me within compaſs of the Law, or might juſtly offend her Majeſty, I was heartily ſorry for it: If this be not it, let me have any other drawn, wherein the former Points are juſtify'd, and I will ſet my hand unto it.

Puck. But all this is nothing to your Book in particular; what ſay you to it?

Udall. I ſay this, That tho I hold the Matter in it to be a moſt manifeſt Truth; yet I confeſs the Manner of handling in ſome part, to be ſuch as might juſtly provoke her Majeſty's Indignation.

Puck. Becauſe you ſtand ſo much upon the Cauſe, as you call it, you provoke me ſo, as I muſt needs ſay ſomewhat of it, leſt the Audience ſhould think ſome Matter in it, more than is.

Udall. My Lord, you underſtand my Judgment therein: I beſeech you ſpeak not againſt it, unleſs you will give me leave to reply unto you.

Puck. I may not do ſo, you provoke me to it; your Diſcipline that you ſtand upon, whereupon is it grounded? Forſooth upon the Saying of Chriſt, Tell the Church; which never was expounded theſe fifteen hundred years, as you do within theſe few years.

Udall. My Lord, he did abuſe you that told you ſo: Chryſoſtom expounded it thus, Tell the Church, that is, the Governours of the Church.

Puck. He meant the Governours of the Jewiſh Synagogue.

Udall. How can that be, when he lived above four hundred years after Chriſt?

Puck. Was there never any that could find it out before now, if it were a Truth?

Udall. Yes, it hath Teſtimony ſufficient, if it might be receiv'd.

Puck. And leſt Men ſhould think that your Matter were as good as you pretend, I will tell you what I know; it is written in one of your Books, that without an Elderſhip there is no Salvation.

Udall. I am perſuaded that cannot be ſhew'd.

Puck. Yes, it is in Theſes Martinianæ. One writ that it is time to number our hot Brethren; another (Mr. Snape of Northampton by name) wrote that the Biſhops ſhould be put down all in one day.

Theſe things he did diſcourſe of at large, in an invective Speech, moſt bitter, tending to perſuade the People that we meant to rebel, and ſet up the Diſcipline, and pull down the Biſhops by ſtrong hand; and went about to impair the Queen's Prerogative and Patrimony. After which, with much ado, I got audience to this effect.

Udall. My Lord, I proteſt in the preſence of God, and hearing of all this People, that neither I, nor any of my Brethren, that ever I was acquainted with, to my knowledg, did ſo much as ever purpoſe, or ſpeak of any ſuch means as your Lordſhip mentioneth to bring in the Diſcipline; but only by Prayer to God, Supplication to her Majeſty, and ſuch other peaceable Means: This is my Anſwer to your large Invective. And whereas, my Lord, you ſeem to be ſo hardly carried againſt the Cauſe, I would not doubt, but if I might privately confer with you, with the Bleſſing of God, to perſuade you to be a Friend unto it.

And after ſome other Speeches of other Books, and the aforeſaid Speeches in the Books mention'd already, Judg Puckering ſaid, Puck. Nay, I tell you there are as foul things in your own Book: For, do you not ſay, that the Church is committed to the Miſtreſs of the Stewes, and ruled by the Laws of a Brothel-houſe?

Udall. It is ſpoken of the Popiſh Canon-Law; which is as unfit to rule the Church of Chriſt, as the Laws of a Brothel-Houſe to govern an honeſt Woman.

Puck. And thoſe Laws are eſtabliſh'd by her Majeſty's Laws.

Udall. It would trouble the learneſt Lawyer in England to prove that.

Then Baron Clarke began a Voice, tending again to compare my Caſe to that of Mr. Stubs, and to perſuade me to ſubmit my ſelf, telling me what Good I might do; but becauſe he ſpake low, and I ſaid I did not well hear him, he gave over, and pray'd the other to ſpeak, who told me his Meaning: And then ſaid, Puck. We ſhall make ſhort work with you: Will you here acknowledge all the Laws Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal of this Land, to be agreeable to the Word of God?

Udall. My Lord, I have Diſgrace enough upon me already; you may eaſily perceive what I think of the preſent Eccleſiaſtical Government. I pray you preſs me not with theſe things, I can yield no further than you have heard.

Puck. Then we muſt do our Office, and pronounce Sentence on you.

Udall. God's Will be done.

Puck. Yea, God's Will be done on you indeed.

Then he gave Sentence upon me and the reſt. After which I did purpoſe to ſpeak according to the laſt Sentence, after the Reaſons; but the Clamours of the other Priſoners, calling to the Judges to be good unto them, diſappointed me thereof. Thus was I returned to Priſon; what will be the Iſſue, I know not. The Lord turn it to his Glory, the Good of his Church, and Shame of his Foes; and then welcome Life or Death.

I being reprieved (as the Sheriff ſaid, by her Majeſty's own Commandment) Dr. Bond, one of the Queen's Chaplains, came to me as from the Queen her ſelf, and from the Council, with the Submiſſion that was tender'd unto me; to confer with me in general, but eſpecially to perſuade me to yield thereunto, or to take the Reaſons of my Refuſal. After two day's conference, we agreed upon a Form of Submiſſion, as followeth.

The Form of that Submiſſion which was offer'd unto me, and I refus'd.

I John Udall, have been hitherto, by due Courſe of Law, convicted of Felony, for penning and ſetting forth a certain Book, call'd, A Demonſtration of Diſcipline; wherein falſe, ſlanderous, and ſeditious Matters are contain'd, againſt her Majeſty's Prerogative-Royal, her Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Laws and Government Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal, eſtabliſhed by Law under her Highneſs, and tending to the erecting of a new Form of Government, contrary to her ſaid Laws: All which Points I do now, by the Grace of God, perceive perceive to be very dangerous to the Peace of this Realm and Church, ſeditious in the Commonwealth, and juſtly offenſive to the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty; ſo as thereby I now ſeeing the Grievouſneſs of this my Offence, do moſt humbly on my knees, before God and this Preſence, ſubmit my ſelf to the Mercy of her Highneſs; being moſt ſorry, that ſo deeply and worthily I have incurred her Majeſty's Indignation againſt me: promiſing, if it ſhall pleaſe God to move her Royal Heart to have compaſſion on me, a moſt ſorrowful convicted Perſon, that I will for ever hereafter forſake all ſuch undutiful and dangerous Courſes, and demean my ſelf dutifully and peaceably to all Authorities both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, eſtabliſhed in this Realm; for I do acknowledg them to be both lawful and godly, and to be obey'd of every faithful Subject.

The Form of that Submiſſion whereunto I did conſent, and ſet my Hand.

With theſe three Proteſtations I do ſubmit my ſelf in manner as followeth:

I. I hold the Cauſe of Diſcipline debated in that Book, to be an undoubted Truth.

II. I never imagin'd any Evil againſt her Majeſty's Perſon or Eſtate; but have ſought to honour them both.

III. I never propoſed to do or perſuade any thing, whereby the Diſcipline might be advanc'd, but by peaceable means; endeavouring to keep within the compaſs of Law.

I John Udall have been, by due Courſe of Law, convicted and condemned of Felony, for penning and publiſhing a certain Book, called The Demonſtration of Diſcipline; in the Preface whereof, ſome Matter, as alſo the Manner of writing, I confeſs to be in ſome part ſo bitter and undutiful, as deſerveth juſtly to be cenſur'd and puniſh'd, and juſtly offenſive to the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſty: Wherefore the Tryal of the Law imputing unto me all ſuch Defaults as are in that Book, and laying the Puniſhment of the ſame, in moſt grievous manner, upon me; and I ſeeing the Grievouſneſs of this Offence, do moſt humbly on my knees, as in the preſence of God, ſubmit my ſelf to the Mercy of her Highneſs, being moſt ſorry that ſo deep and juſt Occaſions ſhould be given to procure her Majeſty's Diſpleaſure againſt me; promiſing that if it ſhall pleaſe God to move her Royal Heart to have compaſſion on me, a moſt ſorrowful condemned Perſon, that I will for ever hereafter forſake all undutiful and dangerous Courſes, and demean my ſelf dutifully and peaceably, as becometh a Miniſter of the Goſpel, and as a loyal Subject to the Queen's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

At the ſame time that Dr. Bond was with me, I receiv'd a Letter from a Friend of mine, that did ſollicite Sir Walter Rawleigh for me; wherein were theſe words:

SIR Walter Rawleigh willed me to let you underſtand, that her Majeſty is inform'd of you, that you hold that the Church of England is no Church, and the Sacraments of the ſame no Sacraments, and that all her Eccleſiaſtical Laws are againſt the Word of God, and ſo her Government; and that all Eccleſiaſtical Matters ought to be governed by a Presbytery, and ſhe her ſelf to be ſubject to the Cenſures thereof. And that for theſe things, and ſuch like, you are not worthy to live: but if you will write half a dozen Lines under your hand, unto Sir Walter, concerning theſe Opinions, that he may ſhew it to her Majeſty, he hopeth to obtain your Life. I know it is an eaſy thing for you to anſwer all theſe things, and therefore do it with ſpeed, and in your writing to Sir Walter, take knowledg that he hath ſent you ſuch Word.

Hereupon I wrote a Letter to Sir Walter Rawleigh, and what I hold in theſe Points, as followeth.

To the Right Honourable Sir Walter Rawleigh, Kt. Lord Warden of the Stanary.

MY Duty being remembred unto your Lordſhip, I humbly thank your Honour for your great and honourable Care over me, and for my Good; whereof I truſt you ſhall never be aſham'd: moſt humbly beſeeching your good Lordſhip to be a means to appeaſe her Majeſty's Indignation conceiv'd againſt me, by means of ſome Accuſations untruly ſuggeſted. For, God is my Witneſs, I have never had any earthly thing in ſo precious account, as to honour her Highneſs; and to draw her Subjects to acknowledg with all Thankfulneſs, the exceeding Bleſſings that God beſtoweth upon them by her Majeſty's happy Government, whereof I truſt mine Adverſaries will be Witneſſes, when I am dead. I have ſent unto your Lordſhip (as in perplexity I could upon the ſudden) what I hold concerning certain Points declared unto me, as from your Lordſhip; praying that it would pleaſe you to make known the Truth thereof unto her Highneſs: And if neither my Submiſſion, heretofore deliver'd, nor theſe things now ſet down, will be accepted to draw her Highneſs, of her gracious compaſſion, to pardon me, that yet it would pleaſe her Majeſty (that the Land may not be charged with my Blood) to change my Puniſhment from Death to Baniſhment. Thus truſting your Lordſhip will vouchſafe me this Favour, and that it will pleaſe her Majeſty thereupon graciouſly to conſider of me, I humbly take my leave, from the White-Lion, Feb. 22. 1590.

Your Lordſhip's to command,

John Udall, Priſoner.

1. I do believe, and have often preach'd, that the Church of England is a Part of the true viſible Church of Chriſt; and that the Preaching of the Word and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments therein, are the holy Ordinances of God, profitable and comfortable to every one that rightly partakes thereof: In which regard I have been, and do yet deſire to be, a Preacher in the ſame Church; and have communicated in the Sacraments and Prayers therein, for the ſpace of 7 years at Kingſton, and about a year at Newcaſtle upon Tine, immediately before mine Impriſonment: and therefore I do from my Heart utterly renounce the Schiſm whereinto the Browniſts have fallen, in condemning the Churches of England, and ſeparating themſelves from communicating in the publick Miniſtry thereof.

2. I know no other, but that the Statute-Laws of this Land do maintain the holy Miniſtry of the Word and Sacraments in ſuch manner, as any Chriſtian may, with a ſafe Conſcience, both adminiſter therein, and communicate therewithal: Alſo that the Law which requireth a Subſcription to the Articles of Religion, ſo far as they contain the Doctrine Doctrine of Faith and Sacraments, is agreeable to the Word of God.

3. I do believe, that by the Word of God, her Majesty hath, and ought to have a supreme Authority over all Persons, in all Causes, both Ecclesiastical and Civil, to inforce every Man to do his Duty, and to be obedient in every thing that is not contrary to the Word of God. And if the Prince should command any thing contrary to God's Word, it is not lawful for the Subjects to rebel or resist, no not so much as in Thought, but with Patience and Humility to bear all the Punishments laid upon them; seeking only by Prayer to God, and Supplication to Authority, and such like peaceable means, to have faults amended.

4. I do believe that by the Word of God, the Churches rightly reformed ought to be governed Ecclesiastically by the Ministers, assisted with Elders; and this is not my private Judgment, but such as I have learned out of the Word of God, been confirmed in by the Writings of the most learned and godly Men of antient and latter Times, and have seen practised with much Peace and Comfort in the best reformed Churches in Europe, and even by those Exiles which her Majesty to her great Honour hath hitherto protected.

5. I do believe that the Censures of the Church ought merely to concern the Soul, and may not impeach any Subject, much less any Prince, in the Liberty of Body, Dominion, Goods, or any earthly Privilege whatsoever; and that therefore the Papal Excommunication that deposeth Princes, and freeth their Subjects from their Allegiance, or any part of Christian Obedience to Civil Authority, is blasphemous against God, injurious to all Men, and directly contrary to God's Word: neither do I believe that a Christian Prince ought otherwise to be subject to the Censures of the Church, than our gracious Queen professeth her self to be unto the Preaching of the Word, and Administration of the Sacraments, according to the Doctrine of our Church, in Mr. Nowell's Catechism, and the Homilies of the right Use of the Church, at this Day appointed publickly to be read.

If I understand of any other thing that I am charged to hold as a strange and private Opinion, I would be willing to shew my Mind freely in it; for my desire is, that her Highness might truly be informed of every thing that I hold: so should I be sure to obtain her gracious Favour, without which I do not desire to live.

These things thus passed, I remained as before, without any great hope of Liberty, or fear of Extremity, until the next Assizes drew near: at last there came Mr. Nowell Dean of Pauls, and Mr. Dr. Andrews with a new Submission, yet containing nothing (one Clause excepted) which was not in the former, which I condescended unto; notwithstanding I refused presently to set my hand unto it (tho they promised in the name of the Council, that in yielding to it I should obtain Pardon and Liberty) because I would do nothing without good Advice and Consideration.

The Copy of the Submission given me by Mr. Dean of Pauls, with his name to it, as followeth.

I John Udall, have been heretofore by due course of Law, convicted and condemned of Felony, for penning and publishing a certain Book, called, The Demonstration of Discipline; in the Preface whereof, some Matter, as also the Manner of handling of it, I confess in some part to be so bitter and undutiful, as deserveth justly to be censured and punished according to the Laws of this Realm, established under her Highness, and justly offensive to the Queen's most excellent Majesty: wherefore I now seeing the Grievousness of this Offence, do most humbly on my Knees, and in the presence of God submit my self to the Mercy of her Highness, being most sorry that so deep and just occasion should be given to procure her Majesty's Displeasure against me; promising that if it shall please God to move her Majesty's Royal Heart to have Compassion on me, a most sorrowful condemned Person, I will ever hereafter forsake all undutiful, seditious and dangerous Courses, and demean my self dutifully and peaceably, as becometh a Minister of the Gospel, and a loyal Subject of the Queen's most excellent Majesty.

This is the true Copy of the Submission sent unto me from her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council.

Alexander Nowell.

When I had weighed with my self, that the Clause which is added may admit a good Interpretation, and the omitting of that which is left out of my former Submission, causeth no ill Sense of that which is set down, I condescended (being also advised thereunto by my good and godly Friends) to set my Hand unto it; and thereupon wrote a Letter unto Mr. Nowell as followeth.

Right Worshipful Mr. Dean,

'I Praise God with all my Heart, that Authority hath so good remembrance of my lamentable Estate, and yet more that by the same I am for my Form of Submission to deal with a Man of that Piety and Wisdom, that you have been worthily in the Church long agone esteemed to be of, and so have continued to this reverend Age that you are come unto. It may please you, Sir, to understand, that I have considered of the Form of Submission, that your Worship brought unto me, and find nothing in it, but that in a good Conscience I can yield unto; for it requireth not of me any denial or disallowance of the Cause of Discipline debated in the Book, for which I am in question; the substance of which Doctrine I believe to be the undoubted Truth of God, and therefore ought never to deny or disallow it: notwithstanding with my persuasion I take God to witness, that I never purposed to do or persuade any thing, whereby it might be advanced, but by peaceable means, endeavouring to keep within the compass of Law. Further also the said Form of Submission chargeth me not with any Malice against her Majesty, from which likewise I acknowledge as in the presence of our Saviour Christ, that is ready to come to judge the quick and the dead, that I have been always free, and have carried a christian, loving and dutiful Affection to her Majesty's Royal Person and Estate, as I know by the Word of God I ought to do; which being so, I have resolved to satisfy the Authority from which you brought me the said Form of Submission, and at your Good-pleasure without further Limitation simply to subscribe it.

'Good Mr. Dean, in the Bowels of Christ have Compassion of my Estate, more ways lamenta-

'ble than I can in a few or many words expreſs, 'or (as I think) any other but only the Spirit that 'is taught to pray with groans that cannot be ut-'tered: and in ſuch Chriſtian Compaſſion, by your 'favourable and earneſt mediation to the Autho-'rity that may relieve me, procure my Pardon 'and free Diſcharge, of the Dangers and Troubles 'wherein I am; that I may ſay with the Prophet, 'I ſhall not die, but live, and declare the Works of the 'Lord.

'So ſhall not only my poor Wife and Children, 'but I hope many others praiſe God for you in 'that reſpect, and my ſelf as beholden unto you 'in a caſe of Life, continually pray for your good 'Eſtate to the Lord of Life bleſſed for ever. 'Amen.

After I had thus ſet my Hand hereunto, I adviſed alſo to write unto certain of the Council, and other honourable Perſons beſides; partly to let them underſtand in what Senſe I had yielded hereunto, and partly to intreat their Favour, and furthermore for my Liberty: the Copy of which Letter (for it was the ſame word for word to every one, the Title of their ſeveral Eſtates excepted) here enſueth.

Right Honourable,

'MY preſent lamentable Condition enforceth 'me, in moſt humble manner, to crave ſo 'much leiſure of your Lordſhips from the weighty 'Affairs of the State, as to conſider of theſe few 'Lines. The Reverend Mr. Nowell Dean of Pauls, 'and Mr. Dr. Andrews, a few days ago brought 'me a Form of Submiſſion (as they ſaid) from Au-'thority, with hope of Favour for my Life, if I 'would yield unto it. Whereof having conſidered, 'and finding nothing in it, but which I had here-'tofore yielded unto, when Mr. Doctor Bond was 'with me, one Clauſe excepted, to wit, That the 'faults do deſerve to be puniſhed according to the 'Laws of the Land; which yet hath no ſuch 'words, but may bear ſo good a Senſe, as I think 'I may in ſuch Form ſubmit my ſelf, without ei-'ther condemning the Suit for a further Reforma-'tion, or my ſelf as juſtly deſerving by the Laws 'to die: I cannot diſcern ſufficient Cauſe to re-'fuſe it, for by the hardeſt word that I have by 'due Courſe of Law been convicted and condemn-'ed; I underſtand the Form of Proceeding by In-'dictment, Arraignment, Jury, Witneſſes and ſuch 'like, as alſo by that Clauſe, That the manner of 'writing is in ſome part ſuch, as deſerveth juſtly 'to be cenſured and puniſhed by the Laws of this 'Land; I mean of ſuch Cenſures as the good 'Laws of this Land, adminiſtred with Juſtice, do 'ordain for puniſhing of ſuch Offences in the man-'ner of Writing; which cannot be of Death, 'without Malice againſt her Majeſty: from 'which (I take Almighty God to witneſs) I have 'been always free. In regard whereof, I feared 'leſt I might be thought to ſtand too contentiouſly 'and undutifully with Authority, and to be too 'careleſs of mine own Eſtate, if I ſhould not yield 'to ſuch a Form of Submiſſion as they brought 'unto me. Wherein having yielded, as far as in 'Conſcience I may, and as Authority by their 'means requireth of me; my moſt humble Suit 'to your Lordſhips is, that in your Chriſtian and 'Honourable Compaſſion of my moſt lamentable 'Eſtate, that it may pleaſe your Lordſhip, by 'your favourable mediation to her excellent Ma-'jeſty, to further my moſt humble Suit, for my 'Pardon and free Diſcharge of theſe my grievous 'Troubles. So ſhall I be bound yet more heartily 'to praiſe God for your Honour, and to pray unto 'God for your proſperous Eſtate long to endure, 'to the Glory of Almighty God, and to your own 'everlaſting Comfort.

Within four or five days after, Mr. Doctor Andrews returned unto me, ſignifying that all that was done was miſtaken, for that was not the Submiſſion that was meant of me, but another. Which when I had peruſed, I found it the ſame (only the laſt Clauſe left out) which was offered me by the Judges at the Aſſizes: And he ſaid, the Clerk to whom the making of the Letter to Mr. Nowell put in one for another. And becauſe I utterly refuſed to conſult of it, as having yielded before to ſo much as I might, he prayed me to underſtand what I took Exceptions againſt, and for what Reaſons. So we entred into many Diſcourſes; as firſt, how the Diſcipline could be ſaid to be againſt the Queen's Prerogative Royal, ſeeing it was (as I ſaid I did believe) expreſſed in the Scriptures, whereby all lawful Privileges of Princes are warranted. Then we debated whether the Supremacy of a Chriſtian Prince be the ſame with an Heathen, or diverſe from it. After that, whether the Authority of Princes in making Church-Laws, be de jure, or de facto only: and laſtly, of the moſt Points of Diſcipline. Thus we continued 5 or 6 hours, and at laſt he would have no anſwer of me then, but he prayed me to adviſe of it, for he would come again. I anſwered, that the oftner he came, the welcomer he ſhould be, but I told him I would not accept of it; yet he came twice after, and took my Reaſons of my refuſal to yield thereunto; and promiſing me all the favour he could procure me, he departed.

After this the Aſſizes approaching, and the general Report being that it would go hard with me; I being deſirous to uſe any good means, did not only ſollicit the Earl of Eſſex, and Sir Walter Raleigh, who had heretofore dealt for me; but alſo I was adviſed to write again unto Mr. Nowell, earneſtly charging him to take my Caſe to heart, ſeeing he had promiſed to procure me Favour: whereupon I wrote unto him this Letter following.

Right Worſhipful Mr. Nowell,

'AS I did rejoice when I perceived that you 'were imployed to deal with me about my 'Submiſſion, becauſe of that reverend Eſtimation 'that you have been ſo long of, among the Worthies 'in the Church of God; hoping, that I ſhould have 'found thereby, ſome comfortable means of Me-'diation unto Authority for my releaſe: ſo I am 'now occaſioned to fear that all that Credit 'which you are of, ſhall be uſed as an Inſtrument 'to further and haſten Extremity upon me. For 'ſo much time being paſſed ſince I voluntarily 'yielded to that Submiſſion which you brought un-'to me, and no Liberty appearing from any place, 'but rather that being given out, that my Submiſ-'ſion ſhall be a ſpecial means to haſten my Death, 'and no way to procure my Liberty; I am con-'ſtrained to write unto you, to let you underſtand, 'that as I look for that end the next Week at the 'Aſſizes at Kingſton (where I have been a Preacher) 'which hath ſo long been threatned, but (to the 'doubling of my Torments) deferred; whereunto 'I doubt not the Lord will ſtrengthen me, as gra-'ciouſly

'ciously he hath hitherto done. So I pray you, as 'you will answer unto God for my Blood, which 'I am perſuaded your Credit being imployed to 'the uttermoſt (as in the Word and Faith of a 'Chriſtian you promiſed) might have preſerved, 'that you would ſo take my Caſe to heart, as it 'may inforce you to leave no Stone unturn'd which 'may either further my Liberty, or at leaſt clear 'your Conſcience from being any way acceſſary 'to my Death. For it will one day be an hea-'vy thing to your Heart, to think that you ſhould 'be ſet on work, and the account that is worthily 'made of you, imployed under pretence; yea, 'and as it were with aſſurance of Life and Liberty 'to draw that from a Preacher and Profeſſor of the 'Goſpel, which afterward ſhall be uſed to haſten 'his End: and you will ſay it had been better 'that you had never been of any reckoning, than 'to be made an Inſtrument to further ſuch an Acti-'on. This I write unto you, not in any troubled 'affection with the fear of Death, for I thank 'God I am willing to end my days, and (if it 'pleaſe the Lord) even in this manner; and hope 'that my Death ſhall further the Cauſe for which 'I ſuffer, more than my Life. But leſt I ſhould 'neglect any means which might ſeem to be a fur-'therance to prevent the ſame, or leave that Duty 'unperformed unto you, which I take my ſelf in 'Conſcience bound to diſcharge; the Lord make 'us willing and able to diſcharge every good Duty, 'that he enjoineth us to his Glory, the Good of 'his Church, and our own Comfort, whether by 'Life or Death.

About the ſame time came a Letter from the King of Scotland to a Scottiſh Merchant, one Mr. Johnſon, lying in London, to be delivered to her Majeſty (as was ſaid) being written in my behalf, as he had done once before when I was cloſe Priſoner; this Letter did the Merchant deliver to her Majeſty, and the Dean of Paul's upon my Letter went to the Council, whereby whatſoever was wrought, as ſoon as the Judges heard that I was brought to Kingſton, where the Aſſizes were then kept, I was immediately returned unto the White-Lion in the Evening, before the firſt Day thereof. Afterward Mr. Johnſon had the Copy of the King's Letter ſent unto him, which then appeared to be written not for me alone, but alſo for the reſt of my Brethren the Miniſters in Priſon for the ſame Cauſe of Diſcipline; the Tenor of which Letter here followeth.

'RIGHT Excellent, High and Mighty Prin-'ceſs, our deareſt Siſter and Couſin, in our 'heartieſt manner we recommend us unto you: 'Hearing of the Apprehenſion of Mr. Udall, and 'Mr. Cartwright, and certain other Miniſters of 'the Evangel within your Realm, of whoſe good 'Erudition and fruitful Travels in the Church, we 'hear a very credible Commendation; howſoever 'that their diverſity from the Biſhops and others 'of your Clergy, in matters touching them in 'Conſcience, hath been a mean by their dilation 'to work them your miſliking; at this preſent we 'cannot (weighing the Duty which we owe to 'ſuch as are afflicted for their Conſcience in that 'Profeſſion) but by our moſt effectuous and ear-'neſt Letter interpone us at your hands, to any 'harder uſage of them for that Cauſe: requeſt-'ing you moſt earneſtly, that for our Cauſe and 'Interceſſion it may pleaſe you to let them be re-'lieved of their preſent ſtrait, and whatſoever 'further accuſation or purſuit depending on that 'ground, reſpecting both their former Merit, in 'ſetting forth of the Evangel, the Simplicity of 'their Conſcience in this Defence, which cannot 'well be their lett by Compulſion, and the great 'ſlander which could not fail to fall out upon 'their further ſtraiting for any ſuch occaſion: 'which we aſſure us your Zeal to Religion, be-'ſides the Expectation we have of your Good-'will to pleaſure us, will willingly accord to our 'Requeſt, having ſuch proofs from time to time 'of our like Diſpoſition to you, in any matters 'which you recommend unto us. And thus, right 'Excellent, right High and Mighty Princeſs, our 'dear Siſter and Couſin, we commit you to God's 'good Protection. From Edinburgh the 12th Day 'of June, 1591.

The juſt Copy of the King's Letter ſent to her Majeſty.

Preſently upon theſe things fell out that wretched matter of that leud fellow Hacket, whereby the Adverſary did take occaſion ſo to ſlander the Truth, and to diſgrace the Profeſſors of the ſame unto her Majeſty, that I thought it bootleſs to ſue. And ſo I did little till the Lord Chancellor was dead, and forgotten by ſuch as were ſorry for it; ſo that about Eaſter Term following, I ſued for Liberty to go to Church, which was denied me, being a condemned Man; but by the Lord Treaſurer's means, I got a Copy of my Indictment, which before I could not obtain.

Hereupon I getting a Pardon framed according to the Indictment, ſent it with a Petition by my Wife to the Council, who referred me to the Archbiſhop, unto whom I both ſent divers Petitions, and dutiful Letters, and alſo got many of my Friends, both honourable Perſonages and others, to ſue to him, yet could not his Good-will be gotten. At laſt the Turkey Merchants having my Conſent to go for a time into Guinea to teach their People that abide in that place, if they could procure my Liberty, ſent unto him for his Conſent, who promiſed his Good-will, ſo that they would be bound that I ſhould go indeed, when I had my Liberty. But when two of the Antients of the Company went unto him for his Hand thereunto, he would not yield it, unleſs they would be bound not only that I ſhould go (which they were willing unto) but alſo that I ſhould tarry there, till I had her Majeſty's Licence to come thence.

This Condition they could not yield unto, for that I denied to go upon any ſuch Ground, ſo was their Suit, and my Hope of Liberty, at an end; ſaving that one Mr. Cavell, who had been the firſt beginner of it, and being to go into Turkey did moſt affect it, moved the Dean of Paul's in it: who thereupon wrote to my Lord Keeper, perſuading him of the Conveniency of that Journey for me, and my Fitneſs thereunto. Which Letter when he received, he did ſo deal with the Archbiſhop, as they both promis'd at their next meeting at Court to deal with her Majeſty to ſign my Pardon, that ſo I might have Liberty to go the Voyage.

The Tryal of ROBERT Earl of Eſſex, and HENRY Earl of Southampton, at Weſtminſter the 19*th of* February, 1600. and in the 43*d Year of the Reign of Queen* Elizabeth.

A SPACIOUS Court was made in Weſtminſter-Hall, where the Lord Treaſurer Buckhurſt ſat as High-Steward of England, under a Canopy of State; where ſat alſo about the Table, the Earls, Barons, and Judges of the Land, according to their Degrees.

The Judges were theſe;

The Lord Chief Juſtice Popham, and the Lord Chief Juſtice Anderſon.

The Lord Chief Baron, Sir William Perian.	Juſtice Walmeſley.
Juſtice Gawdie.	Juſtice Warburton.
Juſtice Fenner.	Juſtice Kingſmill.
	Mr. Baron Clarke.

Theſe ſat all in the Court next the Bar, before the High Steward. Seven Serjeants at Arms came in with Maces before the High Steward, and laid them down before him in the Court. The King at Arms ſtood on the one ſide of the High Steward by his Chair of Eſtate, and one of her Majeſty's Gentlemen Uſhers with his white Rod in his Hand on the other ſide. The Clerk of the Crown and his Aſſiſtant ſat before him to read the common Indictments and Examinations. The Captain of the Guard (Sir Walter Rawleigh) and forty of the Queen's Guard were there to attend the Service. Then the Serjeant at Arms made three O Yes! and Proclamation, That the Lord High Steward of England commanded Silence, and to hear the Commiſſion read, upon pain of Impriſonment. Then the Clerk of the Crown read the Commiſſion, whereunto the Earl of Eſſex was very attentive.

Another Proclamation was made, That the Lord High Steward of England commanded all Juſtices to whom any Writs had been directed for this Service, to bring them in, and certify the ſame.

Another Proclamation was made by a Serjeant at Arms, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London ſhould return his Precept, and bring forth his Priſoners, Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Henry Earl of Southampton.

Then the Lord High Conſtable of the Tower, the Lieutenant of the Tower, and the Gentleman Porter, who carried the Ax before the Priſoners, came firſt in, and the Priſoners followed and made their appearance at the Bar, the Gentleman Porter with the Ax ſtanding before them, with the Ax's Edge from them; and ſo the Lieutenant delivered his Precept into the Court.

The two Earls (which were Priſoners) kiſſed one another's Hands, and embraced each other.

Another Proclamation was made, That the Serjeant at Arms to the Queen's Majeſty do return his Precept of the Names of all the Peers of Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Henry Earl of Southampton, the which he delivered into the Court accordingly.

Another Proclamation was made, That all Earls, Viſcounts, and Barons of the Realm of England, which were Peers of Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Henry Earl of Southampton, and ſummoned to appear this Day, do make anſwer to their Names, upon pain and peril that will fall thereon.

Then the Lords were called, and anſwered and appeared as followeth:

Edward Earl of Oxford.	Henry Lord Cobham.
Gilbert Earl of Shrewſbury.	Henry Lord Stafford.
William Earl of Derby.	Thomas Lord Grey.
Edward Earl of Worceſter.	Thomas Lord Lumley.
George Earl of Cumberland.	Henry Lord Windſor.
Robert Earl of Suſſex.	William Lord Chandois.
Edward Earl of Hertford.	Robert Lord Rich.
Henry Earl of Lincoln.	Thomas Lord Darcy.
Charles Earl of Nottingham.	George Lord Hunſdon.
Thomas Viſcount Bindon.	Oliver Lord St. John of Bletſo.
Thomas Lord De la Ware.	Thomas Lord Burleigh.
Edward Lord Morley.	William Lord Compton.
	Thomas Lord Howard, Baron of Walden.

Then the Earl of Eſſex deſired to know of my Lord Chief Juſtice, whether he might challenge any of the Peers or no; whereunto the Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, No: and Mr. Attorney General alledged a Caſe in Henry VIII's Time, of my Lord Darcy. Whereupon the Earl bad them go on.

[When the Lord Grey was called, the Earl of Eſſex laughed upon the Earl of Southampton, and jogged him by his Sleeve.]

Then they were called to hold up their Hands at the Bar, which they did. And then the Clerk of the Crown read the Indictments. That being done, they were bid to hold up their Hands again, which they did, and another Indictment was read, whereunto the Earl of Eſſex was attentive. After which, the Clerk of the Crown asked them, whether they were Guilty, or not Guilty: they pleaded not Guilty; and for their Tryals they put themſelves upon God and their Peers. They ſpake this ſeverally.

Then my Lord High Steward in a few words gave the Peers a Charge, requiring them to have a due regard of their Conſciences.

Serjeant Yelverton's Speech.

Firſt he began to open the Evidence, and ſhewed the Effect of the Indictment, and held it in his Hand, and ſaid as followeth:

May it pleaſe your Grace (ſpeaking to the High Steward) about the 8th of February laſt, my Lord of of Eſſex (there Priſoner at the Bar) went about with armed Men very rebelliouſly to diſinherit the Queen of her Crown and Dignity, which when it came to her Majeſty's Ear, ſhe of her abounding Mercy, ſent to ſee if it were poſſible to ſtop the Rebellion: and who did ſhe ſend? She ſent (my Lord) no worſe Perſons than my Lord Keeper, my Lord Chief Juſtice of England, the Earl of Worceſter, and Sir William Knowles, all which went in her Majeſty's Name, and commanded the Earls and their Adherents very ſtrictly to diſſolve their Aſſemblies, and to lay down their Arms. But he knowing it, very treacherouſly impriſoned the ſaid Lords and Counſellors by her Majeſty ſo ſent, and altogether refuſed her Majeſty's Authority: and divers of their Confederates cry'd out, Kill them, kill them! thereby putting her Majeſty's Council in fear of their Lives; and withal, left them with Sir Jo. Davis to keep ſafe, leſt they themſelves ſhould miſcarry in the City. But, my Lord, I muſt tell you this by the way, that my Lord of Eſſex can no way excuſe nor ſhadow this his rebellious Purpoſes, nor turn his Actions to any other intent: for the ſending of Temple his Secretary into London the Night before, manifeſteth his determination, without Scruple or Queſtion; for by that means he was in hopes to have had the help of the Citizens, her Majeſty's moſt loyal and loving Subjects: and he uſed not only his beſt endeavours to ſtrengthen himſelf abroad, but alſo fortified his Houſe at home with ſtrong Defence and Ammunition; all which were Tokens of his Inclinations to a ſudden and unexpected Rebellion, and were confirmed in the opinion of all the World, when he withſtood divers of her Majeſty's Subjects ſtanding in her Highneſs's Right, and Defence of her Peace, againſt him and his Confederates. Good my Lord, I beſeech your Grace, and you my Lords that are the Peers, to underſtand, That if any Man do but intend the Death of the King, it is death by the Law: for he is the Head of the Commonwealth, and all his Subjects as Members ought to obey and ſtand with him. But as for this Rebellion, being duly conſidered, it contains in it many Branches of Treaſon, which are and will be directly proved: which being found to be ſo, my Lords, who are their Peers, are to find them Guilty. Hereof need to be made no doubt, for it is more manifeſt than the Sedition of Catiline to the City of Rome, and conſequently England is in no leſs danger; for as Catiline entertained the moſt ſeditious Perſons about all Rome to join with him in his Conſpiracy, ſo the Earl of Eſſex had none but Papiſts, Recuſants, and Atheiſts for his Adjutors and Abetters in their capital Rebellion againſt the whole Eſtate of England. My Lord, I much wonder that his Heart could forget all the Princely Advancements given him by her Majeſty, and be ſo ſuddenly beſlinted, as to turn them all to rebellious Ends; but it ſeems this overweighing a Man's own Conceit, and an aſpiring Mind to wiſhed Honour, is like the Crocodile, which is ever growing as long as he liveth. Your Lordſhips know in what ſort they went into the City, with Armour and Weapons, and how they returned to Eſſex-Houſe again, as you my Lord Admiral, and my Lord of Cumberland, with others of their honourable Peers do know; which makes me wonder they do not bluſh to be ſo forward to ſtand upon their Tryals without Confeſſion, when their intended Treaſons are in all Mens Judgments palpable. For my part, my Lord, I can conjecture nothing hereby; and it will not eaſily out of my own conceit, but that there is ſome further Matter in it than as yet appears; but my hope is, that God of his Mercy, that hath revealed their Treaſons, will not ſuffer the reſt of his or any others to the hurt of the State, or prejudice to her Majeſty's moſt Royal Perſon, whom I pray God long to preſerve from the hands of our Enemies. Amen, cry'd the Earl of Eſſex and the Earl of Southampton, and God confound their Souls that ever wiſhed otherwiſe to her ſacred Perſon.

* Attorney Gen. May it pleaſe your Grace, the Lords Chief Judges, which are the Fathers of the Law, do know, that the Thought of Treaſon to the Prince, by the Law is Death; and he that is guilty of Rebellion, is guilty of an Intent (by the Laws of the Land) to ſeek the Deſtruction of the Prince, and ſo adjudged Treaſon: and I will prove this unto your Lordſhips by two ſeveral Caſes. Firſt, he raiſeth Power and Strength in a ſettled Government, the Law will not ſuffer it, but it is conſtrued as in caſe of High Treaſon; he that doth uſurp upon it, the Law doth intend that he hath purpoſed the Deſtruction of the Prince; he that doth aſſemble Power, if the King doth command him upon his Allegiance to diſſolve his Company, and he continue it, without any queſtion it is High Treaſon: he that doth levy Forces to take any Town in the Prince's Dominions, it is ſo likewiſe. But my Lord of Eſſex hath levied Power to take the Tower of London, and to ſurprize the Queen's own Court; then this muſt needs be higher than the higheſt; and he that doth fortify himſelf againſt the Prince's Power, muſt needs be within the compaſs of Treaſon. And by your favour, my Lord of Eſſex, I will now ſpeak a word unto you, for I know you can ſpeak as well as any Man; That whereas you ſay the Law of Nature compelled you to do this, which in judgement you have, tho moſt treacherouſly attempted, I will in a word diſprove your own Judgment, admitting you muſt make that freely your Argument. Firſt, I will open the Quality of your Rebellion; Secondly, the Manner of it; Thirdly, I will touch the Circumſtances; and, Laſtly, I will obſerve the Perſon. The Quality hath High Treaſon; for which I think I ſhall not need to ſay any more. For the Manner of it, I hold it an unnatural Act for a natural Subject to commit Treaſon againſt his natural Sovereign; and methinks it cannot be by any probability denied, but that this High Treaſon is, and muſt be, both againſt the Law of God, Nature and Reaſon. And under your Grace's favour, my Lord, the Manner of it being of ſo high a Nature as it is, muſt needs be High Treaſon, which was not only carried in their Hearts, but, for a continual Remembrance, kept in a black Purſe, which my Lord of Eſſex wore on his Breaſt next to his Skin. Let me note unto you, my good Lord, that they being both born under the Government of this Princeſs, and ſo highly advanced by her Majeſty's Favour, ſhould have trembled once to think of ſuch Rebellion as they have enterprized. Doth not my Lord of Eſſex now enjoy his Earldom of Eſſex by the Gift of Henry VIII. to his Father? Was not he made Maſter of her Majeſty's Horſe at twenty-two Years of Age? One of her Majeſty's Council? to be Earl Marſhal of England? General of her Majeſty's Forces in Ireland? And laſtly, hath he not received divers Gifts and Sums of Money, to his own uſe, of her Majeſty's Gracious and Princely Bounty, to the

the value of thirty thouſand Pounds? Yet all theſe were as cleverly forgotten, as if they had never been, Now ſhall I ſhew you the Perſon whom this concerns, even her Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, againſt whom their Attempts have been, only for the undertaking of God's Cauſe, and exerciſing of Juſtice with admirable Mercy; and tho I cannot ſpeak without reverent Commendations of her Majeſty's moſt honourable Juſtice, yet I think her overmuch Clemency to ſome, turneth to overmuch Cruelty for her ſelf: for tho the rebellious Attempts were ſo exceeding heinous, yet out of her Princely Mercy, no Man was racked, tortured, or preſſed to ſpeak any thing farther, than of their own accord, and willing minds, for diſcharge of their Conſciences they uttered; and then, to ſee the Mercy of God that will have the Truth known, it is admirable beyond the Conceit of Man's Capacity: For they being ſeverally examined, notwithſtanding, all agreed directly, without varying. But when her Majeſty ſent a Counſellor of State to have the Earl come before her, when ſhe heard of his Rebellion, for no other end or purpoſe but for his Admoniſhment, he refuſed to come; and having a guilty Conſcience, and ſuſpecting his Treaſons were laid open, took conſultation to ſurprize the Court and the Tower of London, all at one inſtant: and for this purpoſe, had appointed Blunt the cuſtody of the Gates, Sir Jo. Davis of the Hall, Sir Charles Danvers of the Preſence, and himſelf of her Majeſty's Perſon. Whereupon Blunt ſaid, Ah! in what Humours ſhall we find them in at the Court? This was not all, for the Earl he muſt call a Parliament, and he would decide matters, not making for his purpoſe: but now in God's moſt juſt Judgment, he of his Earldom ſhall be Robert the laſt, that of a Kingdom thought to be Robert the firſt. And my Lord did not any whit amuſe himſelf to give order, that if he and his Complices ſhould miſcarry in London, then the Counſellors which he cauſed to be impriſoned in his Houſe, ſhould be ſlain. It was plain Treaſon in him to ſtand out, being by them charged to diſſolve his Company upon his Allegiance. What ſhall I need to ſtand upon further Proofs? it is ſo evident, and my Lord himſelf will not deny, but that he had a Schedule, containing in it divers of his Friend's Names; which, as I conjecture, muſt needs contain ſome other matter, for he durſt not let it come to light, but burnt it: and as for Owen, Salisbury, Davis and Treſham, they muſt have the guard of the Lords of the Council, to uſe them at their pleaſure.

Eſſex. Will your Lordſhips give us our turns to ſpeak, for he playeth the Orator, and abuſeth your Lordſhips ears and us with Slanders; but they are but faſhions of Orators in corrupt States. Conſidering ſome Privileges which we might challenge, equal Anſwers and equal Hearing were indifferent; for unleſs it will pleaſe your Lordſhips that we might anſwer to every Particular, we ſhall ſoon confound our own Memories, and give Liberty and Advantage to our Enemies, whereupon to lay hold, for lack of preciſe Anſwer to each particular Objection. And ſeeing now, my Lord, you have undertaken the place of a Judge, I beſeech you, as you prove againſt, we for our ſelves may anſwer what may fall out to be fit.

Here the Lord of Eſſex was interrupted, and not allowed to ſpeak until Henry Witherington's Examination was read, which imported thus much:

Witherington's Examination.

That upon the Sunday morning, he was ſent for to Eſſex-Houſe, where he found the place guarded with many Gentlemen in Arms, who told his Uncle that came in his Company, that he feared they were come into an ill Action; my Lord of Eſſex bade him very wery welcome, and intreated him to go with him, for he feared hurt of ſome private Enemies. And when Mr. Witherington perceived the Council were ſtayed, he feared danger to them; for he heard ſome bid, Stab them; and others, Let us make an end of them, we ſhall have the fewer to deal withal. And he proves further, that order was left, That if the Earl ſhould miſcarry in London, then the Lord Keeper and the Lord Chief Juſtice ſhould be killed; and alſo when the Council had commanded him, upon his Allegiance, to diſſolve his Forces, he anſwered nothing: he likewiſe ſaw my Lord of Bedford brought in that morning; and Mr. Witherington, fearing he might be drawn on to his Deſtruction, prayed him only to follow him, for when opportunity ſerved in London, they would leave the Troop; and that they followed the Earl into London, and on a ſudden loſt him.

Eſſex. I will not (I proteſt to God) ſpeak to ſave my Life; for thoſe that proſecute it againſt me, ſhall do me a good turn to rid me of my Miſery, and themſelves out of Fear. As for Mr. Witherington, he does much diſparage himſelf if he ſaith ſo, for I proteſt to God upon my Salvation, I never heard ſuch words as, Kill him, kill him; and Mr. Witherington came voluntarily to my Houſe, unſent for, and in the forenoon did come into our Company, and took to heart as much as we did whatever we went about: and theſe are but Reports, for he that is the Witneſs, is now ſent into the Country about ſome Employments. But if it had been a Secret, Mr. Witherington being privy thereto, might have been a good Witneſs; but being ſo openly ſpoken, (as you ſay) a hundred more might have teſtified it, yet none ſpake it beſides. And as for locking up the Council, I proteſt to God it was done in Charity, and without Diſloyalty, but intending only to ſave them, leſt they ſhould take hurt; conſidering the People abroad in the Streets, with a great and ſudden Out-cry, ſaid, We ſhall be ſlain. At which time we thought our Enemies had been come to beſet the Houſe, for my intent was no otherwiſe than Loyal to her Majeſty and them.

Earl of Worceſt. They proved in Court upon their Honours, that they heard the words, Kill them, kill them; but they would not charge my Lord of Eſſex that they were ſpoken either by his Privity or Command.

Attorn. Gen. Yea, my Lord, you had three hundred Men in Arms in your Houſe; why did you not diſſolve them, being commanded upon your Allegiance from the Queen to do it?

Eſſex. They hearing rumours of Men about my Houſe againſt them, put them into ſuch a Fear and Extaſy, that it was not in my Power ſuddenly to diſſolve them, or to quench their Paſſions; and the rather for that Sir Walter Raleigh deſired Sir Ferdinando Gorges to leave their Company, or elſe they would be all loſt; ſo that they ſtood amazed, and knew not what to do.

Southampton. Mr. Attorney, you ſpeak all this as if it were as true as the Goſpel.

Eſſex. Good my Lord, let me intreat you to mark the Circumſtances: Word was brought that Men were ſent for into the Country, to take us in our own

own Houſes; then we conceiving the thirſty Appetite of our private Enemies, took our ſelves to our Arms, and were glad to ſtand upon our guard for our own Defence. But as for the Lords of the Council that came to my Houſe, we being before advertiſed that we ſhould be beſet, thought it the ſecureſt way for thoſe of the Council to keep them there, not knowing what Miſchief would enſue.

Attorn. Gen. My Lord, your Grace ſees that this is without Colour or Queſtion; for my Lord Chief Juſtice hath proved it plain, that they would not diſſolve their Company that was up in Arms, being charged upon their Allegiance ſo to do.

Eſſex. Good my Lord, know whether it were in my Lord of Southampton's power or in mine to withhold their Purpoſes ſo ſuddenly: For, not long before Sir Walter Raleigh had ſent to my Houſe to have Sir Ferdinando Gorges to come to him to Durham-Houſe; and we fearing him to be a private Enemy, would not ſuffer Sir Ferdinando to go thither, but returned anſwer, that he would meet him on the Water upon equal Terms: where Sir Walter Raleigh uſed the former Speeches to Sir Ferdinando Gorges, wiſhing him to leave our Company, or elſe he would be undone. And whereas we are charged to have dealt with Papiſts, I aſſure your Lordſhip, and it is moſt true, that Papiſts have been hired and ſuborned to witneſs againſt me; as by the means of one Sudall, who was a Seminary Prieſt, and ſent into Ireland to deal with Sir Chriſtopher Blunt, whom he thought to be inward with me, to touch my Honour and Reputation. Then Bales, the Scrivener in the Old-Baily, hath confeſſed under his hand to forge and counterfeit my hand in at leaſt two Letters; and theſe two honeſt Gentlemen can witneſs it.

Attorn. Gen. Ay, by my troth this is true, but it was by the Procurement of one of your own Men.

Eſſex. Thou ſweareſt it, but it is not on a Book; that Man thou ſayeſt I procured to do it, his name is John Daniel, an arrant Thief, one that broke a Standard of mine, and ſtole a Casket of my Wife's, and many other things. It is very probable that I ſhould truſt him ſo far, that had before betrayed me, is it not? But it is well known who ſet him at work to attempt againſt me ſo much as he hath done, to procure my hand to be counterfeited; and yet this Man, by your Judgment, muſt be a Practiſer in ſuch Matters by my own Conſent. Well, Mr. Attorney, I thank God you are not my Judge this day, you are ſo uncharitable.

Attorn. Gen. Well, my Lord, we ſhall prove you anon what you are, which your Pride of Heart, and aſpiring Mind, hath brought you unto.

Eſſex. Ah! Mr. Attorney, lay your Hand upon your Heart, and pray to God to forgive us both.

Raleigh. That Sir Ferdinando Gorges told me upon the Water, that my Lord of Eſſex had put himſelf into a ſtrong Guard at Eſſex-Houſe, and this is like to be the bloodieſt day's work that ever was, wiſhing him to go to Court with ſpeed for prevention thereof: Then Sir Walter wiſhed Sir Ferdinando Gorges to refuſe their Company, elſe he would be undone. To this Sir Walter was ſworn.

Eſſex. Whatſoever Sir Walter Raleigh hath ſaid, differeth altogether from that which Sir Ferdinando told us at Eſſex-Houſe, upon his return from the Water.

Attorn. Gen. Well, my Lord, what can you deviſe to ſay for Sir John Davis, another of your Adherents, that Papiſt? for he hath confeſſed that he is a Papiſt and a Catholick, and drawn in by Sir Chriſtopher Blunt, one of your chiefeſt Counſel, and that he called for a Seminary Prieſt upon his Convertment to abſolve him.

Eſſex. If Sir John Davis were ſuch a Man, it cannot be but ſtrange to me to hear it; although I cannot ſearch into the Secrets of his Heart to accuſe him inwardly, yet I have ſeen him dutifully come to Prayers, and to the Service of God in my own Houſe with me, and behaved himſelf very godlily; and of this I can be witneſs. And as for Blunt (God is my witneſs) I have been ſo far from Popery, as I have ſo earneſtly dealt with him to reform himſelf, inſomuch that he hath told me, I have been very paſſionate. But whereas you ſay, we have committed Treaſon, firſt prove that true.

Serjeant Yelvert. Why, my Lord, if you deny the raiſing the Power, why ſhould ſo many Men come to your Houſe that day?

Southampt. By your favour, Mr. Serjeant Yelverton, a word I hope; for my coming thither, it was not ſtrange news, and when I came that ſame morning to Eſſex-Houſe, I proteſt I had not above ten or twelve Men attending me, which was but my uſual Company, therefore far from purpoſing to raiſe a Tumult.

Attorn. Gen. Why, the reaſon of that was, for that you thought all London would have riſen with you; but good my Lord, I beſeech your Grace to hear the Oath of Sir Ferdinando Gorges: whoſe Evidence was read, and himſelf there in perſon did juſtify the ſame.

Sir Ferdinando Gorges his Confeſſion.

He depoſeth, That in January laſt the Earl of Eſſex wrote to him a Letter, wherein he complained grievouſly of his Misfortunes, and the miſerable Eſtate he ſtood in, whereof he purpoſed ſhortly to free himſelf, and therefore prayed Sir Ferdinando Gorges to come up to London to him: who coming accordingly, the Earl told him how mightily he was croſſed and diſcredited by his private Enemies, which he could not endure; for, ſaith he, I have 120 Earls, Barons, and Gentlemen, that participate in my diſcontented Humour, and will join with me, and I deſire your Help and Counſel therein. One ſpecial Friend I have in the Court, whereby I have Intelligence from time to time: And I hold our ſelves indifferently affected by the Citizens of London, and hope to have a good Party in Wales. He confeſſed alſo, that they had two ſeveral Meetings at Drury-Houſe, to conſult of theſe Matters; and the Projects were, Whether it were better firſt to ſurprize the Court, or to take the Tower of London, or to ſtir in the City. But moſt agreed, firſt to ſurprize the Court. And then and there Sir John Davis took Pen, Ink, and Paper, and ſet down, That ſome ſhould keep the Hall, ſome the Court-Gates, ſome the Guard-Chamber, and ſome the Preſence-Chamber; ſaying, many of the Guard had been the Earl of Eſſex's Servants, and were preferred to the Queen by him, and will be more indifferent to deal with than others; and ſo my Lord ſhall have a way through his own Guards to come to the Privy-Chamber, and the Preſence of the Queen. And Sir Ferdinando Gorges ſaid to the Earl of Eſſex, Alas! my Lord, what is ſo ſmall a number of Men able to do in ſo worthy an Action? and ſo diſſuaded the Earl from ſurprizing the Court, and rather bade him ſubmit himſelf to the Queen's Mercy, than proceed any further. And that the Earl of Southampton ſaid at Eſſex-Houſe, Is it not three months ſince this Plot began, and ſhall we reſolve on nothing?

Then

Then upon a sudden they all agreed, first to stir in London, where they assured themselves of great Favour: And after the Council was lock'd up, this Deponent followed the Troops into London; and after some advice the Earl of Essex sent him back again with a Token to deliver to the Lord Chief Justice only, by colour of which Token he set at liberty the Lord Keeper and the rest. Lastly, he confirmed, that he told Sir Walter Raleigh first, upon the Thames, of my Lord of Essex's making his House a Guard, and putting his Friends into Arms, as it is delivered by Sir Walter Raleigh.

Queen's Counsel. They desired, that the Examination of Sir Charles Danvers might be read, which being produced, was then read to this effect:

Sir Charles Danvers's Examination.

He confesseth, That before Christmas last the Earl of Essex entred into Consideration, how he might secure himself to have access to the Queen's Presence without Resistance; and that the Resolution was agreeable to certain Articles written with the Earl of Essex's own Hand, and sent to the Earl of Southampton to surprize the Court; and that there were divers Consultations about it, and the Points were these: First, to take the Tower, for it would command London, then to surprize the Court; and after, the Court being taken and possessed, to have assembled the rest of their Friends, and to have presented themselves to the Queen: and that being done, and the Guards secured, Sir Christoper Blunt should keep the outward Gates of the Court, Sir John Davis the Hall and Water-gate, Sir Charles Danvers (this Deponent) should keep the Presence and Guard-Chamber, and seize upon the Halberts and Pensioners Battle-Axes. The Intent was to surprize the Captain of the Guard at the Court, or at his own House, and some others; and then to surprize the Tower of London: And that the Earl of Essex resolved (these things being accomplished) immediately to have called a Parliament to reform Disorders and private Grievances. That this Deponent utterly disliked of these Courses; and after the Alarm was given at Court, he persuaded the Earl rather to flee into Wales, or other parts beyond the Seas for his Security, and avoiding the imminent Danger he was fallen into, than to trust to the City. And lastly, he protested, for his own part, what he had done in the business, was merely for the Love he bore to the Earl of Southampton, and not for any Malice or private Discontent otherwise.

When this was read, Mr. Attorney General produced the Examination of Sir John Davis, which contained in effect as follows:

Sir John Davis's Examination.

He saith, That the Earl's Purpose was, to possess himself of the Court, and to take the Tower of London; and that they had several Meetings of Consultation, together with the Earl of Southampton, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, Jo. Littleton, Sir Christopher Blunt, Sir Charles Danvers, and this Deponent. And these Matters (he confesseth) the Earl of Essex set down all with his own Hand, viz. Sir Christopher Blunt to keep the outward Gate of the Court himself, this Deponent the Hall and Water-gate, and Sir Charles Danvers the Presence and Guard-Chamber; then my Lord of Essex and his Forces would have come by Land, and so have possessed the Presence of the Queen. The question was asked the Earl of Essex (as this Deponent saith) how he would deal with Offenders, and such as resisted him, after he should be possessed of these things? He resolved them by way of Answer, That he meant to admit them all to an honourable Tryal.

Counsel. There is another Examination of Sir Christopher Blunt's, I pray let that be read.

Sir Christopher Blunt's Examination.

He saith, That four or five days before the Insurrection in London, the Earl of Essex set down divers Articles with his own Hand, with Petitions to the Earl of Southampton, Sir Charles Danvers, Sir John Davis, Sir Ferdinando Gorges, Jo. Littleton, and this Deponent; which were to the effect before remembred. And further this Deponent remembreth, That the Earl of Essex's Purpose was (after these things should be over-passed and settled) to alter the State of Government: And further this Deponent confesseth himself to be reconciled to the Pope: And moreover saith, that the Earl of Essex said, He looked not that any should be troubled for Religion, and Liberty of Conscience; that he received Letters from the Earl of Essex the 20th of January, to come to London; whereupon he came.

The Earl of Rutland's Examination.

He saith, That being in London, with the Earl of Essex, he heard him cry out in the Streets, England is bought and sold to the Spaniard; and confesseth, when they had been possessed of London, their Purpose was to have taken the Lord Keeper with them to the Court, with the Earl of Essex's Company; and that the Earl of Southampton and Sir John Davis were in special Confederacy and Trust with the Earl of Essex in these Causes. Lastly, That the Earl of Essex said, he was sure of Sheriff Smith: and this Deponent specially noted, the Earl of Southampton was very much discontented.

Lord Cromwel's Examination.

He saith, He never heard of the Matter till the same Sunday-morning, when the Earl of Essex, coming through Fleet-street, where this Deponent lay, and being sent for by a Man of my Lord's, he came into the Street to him; where my Lord and divers of his Followers took him by the Hand, and bade him welcome, praying him to go along with him; and the Earl of Essex cry'd, It is for the Good of the Queen, and of you all, my Masters. First, he went to the Mayor's House, and then to Sheriff Smith's House; and being in Grace-church-street, and hearing of the Proclamation, the Earl of Essex said, Where is the Sheriff? let him bring Muskets and Pistols; for I am credibly informed out of Ireland, that the Kingdom of England is sold to the Spaniard. And so upon the Proclamation the Deponent left him and his Company.

Lord Sandes's Examination.

He saith, He was sent for on Sunday-morning, the same day, by the Earl of Essex; and coming to Essex-House, he found then but a few there; but in a short time after, came the Earl of Southampton with the rest. This Deponent agreeth in divers other Circumstances with former Examinations: He confesseth, he went with the Earl into London, and came back with him to Ludgate, and there being repuls'd, repulſed, he heard my Lord of Eſſex cry, Charge, charge! and call for his Horſe. And he ſaith, that Sheriff Smith was as far in the Matter as the the beſt of them.

Mr. Attorney. Here Mr. Attorney urged, that there was a Combination; and one Paſhell affirm'd the burning of a black Purſe by the Earl of Eſſex, which my Lord confeſſeth; but ſaith, that there was nothing in it, but a Key of an Iron-Cheſt, which he took out, and burnt a Paper in the ſame Purſe, which did not contain above five or ſix Lines of ſecret Matter: and, for that he would not have ſo much as their Names drawn into queſtion, which were altogether ignorant of theſe Occurrents, did throw the Purſe and Paper into the Fire. And alſo Paſhell confeſſeth further, that when the Earl of Eſſex came out of London to his Houſe, he told them, that he was beloved in the City.

He ſaith, He had no Fore-knowledge of theſe Matters; but confeſſeth, he follow'd the Earl of Eſſex down Fleetſtreet, intending to go to the Mayor, and ſo to his Houſe in Seething-Lane. And this Deponent being with the Earl of Eſſex in Grace-Church-Street, confeſſeth he did hear the Earl (when the Lord Burleigh came with the Herald of Arms) command ſome of his Followers to bid the Herald ſtay, for he would not hear him abuſe the Queen's Name. He ſaith alſo, he went back with the Earl to Ludgate, and they were repulſed.

Mr. Attorney. Now, my Lord, I beſeech your Grace, and you, my Lords, that be the Peers, let the due Conſideration of theſe ſeveral Examinations and Depoſitions enter into your Hearts; and do but note, they have all agreed and jumped together in each particular point, notwithſtanding they were all ſeverally examined: but I muſt needs think it the juſt Judgment of God, in his mere Mercy towards our Sovereign, to have the Truth ſo marvellouſly reveal'd; coming from them of their own accords, without Rack or Torture to any of them.

Eſſex. Mr. Attorney, I anſwer then this for that point; The ſelf-ſame Fear, and the ſelf-ſame Examiner, may make theſe ſeveral Examinations agree all in one, were they never ſo far diſtant; but good my Lord, let me intreat your Lordſhip to conſider who they be that teſtify this againſt me: My Lord, they are Men within the Danger of the Law, and ſuch as ſpeak with a deſire to live; but I think they have much to anſwer for between God and their Souls, and me. I ſee they charge me with the ſurprizing of the Tower; but upon what ground do they ſpeak? They had only ſome particular Notes of my Friends Names, but ever very ſcornfully daſhed at me: for when my Friends perſuaded me to any courſe, this was my purpoſe, to have come with eight or nine honourable Perſons, who had juſt Cauſe of Diſcontentment (tho not equal with mine) unto her Majeſty, and ſo by petition, proſtrating our ſelves at her Majeſty's feet, to have put our ſelves unto her Mercy. And the Effect of our Deſires ſhould have been, that ſhe would have been pleaſed to have ſever'd ſome from her Majeſty, who, by reaſon of their Potency with her, abus'd her Majeſty's Ears with falſe Informations; and they were Cobham, Cecil and Raleigh: For we thought my Lord Cobham carry'd himſelf in ſuch factious and dangerous Courſes, as he told her Majeſty many Untruths; which was a principal Cauſe (as I think) of withdrawing her Favour from us. And to that intent, to remove ſuch from her Highneſs (I confeſs) was the only Deſire we had to preſent our ſelves in all Humility before her Majeſty, but without any purpoſe of Hurt to her Highneſs: for, I proteſt before God, I do carry as reverent and loyal Duty to her Majeſty, as any Man in the World. But now, my Lord, ſeeing that I have heard the Teſtimony of Sir Ferdinando Gorges, and himſelf here in Court to teſtify it, I will ſay no more, but that if it pleaſe her Majeſty to be merciful unto him, I will be glad, and pray for it; yet whatſoever he hath ſaid, let my Life and his Dealing teſtify the Truth: and Sir Ferdinando, ſpeak nothing to touch thy ſelf, and ſpeak what thou wilt to me; for I ſee thou deſireſt to live, yet ſpeak like a Man.

Lord Admiral. I deſire, for the better Satisfaction of my ſelf and Fellow-Peers, that Gorges might unfold openly what other Secrets have paſs'd bebetween him and my Lord of Eſſex, touching the State.

Eſſex. Ah! my Lord Admiral, aſſure your ſelf, in faith, no Treaſon: But yet, I pray thee, good Sir Ferdinando, ſpeak openly, whatſoever thou doſt remember; and with all my heart I deſire thee to ſpeak freely.

Gorges. All that I can remember, I have deliver'd in my Examination; and further I cannot ſay.

Eſſex. Yes, Ferdinando, if ever you knew any other Matter, which contain'd any Thought of Treaſon or Diſloyalty, ſpeak it; for they are things not to be forgotten.

Southampton. Good Sir Ferdinando, ſatisfy the Court what was intended among all our Conferences, and Talk of our Enemies, and Diſcontentments, and Conſultations, and what was our beſt Courſe for our Defence againſt them?

Gorges. Some deliver'd their Minds one way, ſome another; but, by the Oath I have taken, I did never know or hear any Thought or Purpoſe of Hurt or Diſloyalty intended to her Majeſty's Perſon by my Lord of Eſſex.

Lord Admiral. I deſire to know, for the better Satisfaction of my Conſcience, whether my Lord of Eſſex did at any time deliver out any Articles in writing under his hand; therein laying open the Projects of his Purpoſe for ſurprizing the Court and Tower.

Southampton. It was a fooliſh Action, I muſt needs confeſs, the going through the Town, and that was ſuddenly paſſed over: But my Lord's purpoſe to have Men planted at the Court, was in regard he feared hindrance by private Enemies, that would have ſtopped his Paſſage to the Queen; which, I proteſt, he intended to no other end, but to proſtrate himſelf at her Majeſty's feet, and ſubmit to her Mercy; as ye have formerly heard.

Cobham. My Lord of Eſſex (quoth the Lord Cobham, ſtanding up) let me know, I intreat you, why you lay ſuch Imputations upon me, as you have deliver'd.

Eſſex. My Lord, I have forgiven all the World, and therefore you ſhall not need to inſiſt upon theſe Circumſtances; for I lay not my Cauſe upon ought that ſhall do your Lordſhip any harm for my ſake: For, I proteſt, my Heart bears you no Malice, but what I ſpake was freely, and in God's preſence, hoping her Majeſty would have heard us, and our Complaints being but true. And I do further aſſure your Lordſhip, that I never ſpake it out of fear of Death, or deſire of Life.

Bacon. My Lord, may it pleaſe your Grace, whatſoever my Lord of Eſſex hath here deny'd, in my conceit it ſeemeth to be ſmall. I ſpeak not to any ordinary Jury, but to prudent, grave and wiſe Peers: And this I muſt needs ſay, It is evident that you, my Lord of Eſſex, had planted a Pretence in your Heart againſt the Government; and now, under colour of excuſe, you muſt lay the Cauſe upon particular Enemies. You put me in remembrance of one Piſiſtratus, that was come into a City, and doting upon the Affections of the Citizens unto him (he having a purpoſe to procure the Subverſion of a Kingdom, and wanting Aid for the accompliſhing his Humour) thought it the ſureſt means for the winning of the Hearts of the Citizens unto him, and ſo in that hope enter'd the City, and cut his Body over-thwart, to the end they might conjecture he had been in danger: and ſo by this means held the ſame Conceit as you and your Complices did; entring the City of London, perſuading your ſelves, if they had undertaken your Cauſe, all would have gone well on your ſide. And now, my Lord, all you have ſaid, or can ſay, in anſwer to theſe Matters, are but Shadows; and therefore, methinks, it were your beſt courſe to confeſs, and not to juſtify.

Eſſex. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I muſt plead Mr. Bacon for a Witneſs; for when the Courſe of private Perſecution was in hand, and moſt aſſail'd me, then Mr. Bacon was the Man that proffer'd me Means to the Queen, and drew a Letter in my name, and in his Brother Sir Nicholas Bacon's name, which Letter he purpoſed to ſhew the Queen, and Goſnal was the Man that brought them unto me: wherein I did ſee Mr. Bacon's Hand pleaded as orderly, and appointed them out that were my Enemies, as directly as might be: Which Letters I know Mr. Secretary Cecil hath ſeen, and by him it will appear what Conceit he held of me, and no otherwiſe than he here coloureth and pleadeth the contrary.

Bacon. My Lord, I ſpent more hours to make you a good Subject, than upon any Man in the World beſides; but ſince you have ſtirred up this Point, my Lord, I dare warrant you this Letter will not bluſh: for I did but perform the part of an honeſt Man, and ever labour'd to have done you good, if it might have been, and to no other end; for what I intended for your Good, was wiſhed from the Heart, without Toueh of any Man's Honour.

Eſſex. Well, my Lord, I do here proteſt before the living God, that an honourable, grave, and wiſe Counſellor hath lamented and grieved at the Courſes he hath ſeen taken, and therewith hath wiſhed himſelf often dead; and this I ſpeak upon credible and honourable Information: But I can prove thus much from Sir Robert Cecil's own Mouth; that he, ſpeaking to one of his Fellow-Counſellors, ſhould ſay, that none in the World but the Infanta of Spain had Right to the Crown of England.

Here Sir Robert Cecil ſtepped forth into the Court (having kept himſelf private till then) and humbly deſired leave to ſpeak to Eſſex.

Sir R. Cecil. The Difference between you and me is great; for I ſpeak in the Perſon of an honeſt Man, and you, my Lord, in the Perſon of a Traitor: for well I know, you have Wit at Will. The Preheminence hath been yours, but I have Innocence, Truth of Conſcience, and Honeſty, to defend me againſt the Scandal of ſlanderous Tongues, and aſpiring Hearts; and I proteſt before God, I have loved your Perſon, and juſtify'd your Virtues: and I appeal to God and the Queen, that I told her Majeſty, your Afflictions would make you a fit Servant for her. And had not I ſeen your ambitious Affections inclined to Uſurpation, I could have gone on my Knees to her Majeſty to have done you good; but you have a Sheep's Garment in ſhow, and in appearance are humble and religious; but God be thanked, we know you: for indeed your Religion appears by Blunt, Davies and Treſham, your chiefeſt Counſellors for the preſent; and by promiſing Liberty of Conſcience hereafter. I ſtand for Loyalty, which I never loſt; you ſtand for Treachery, wherewith your Heart is poſſeſs'd: and you charge me with high things, wherein I defy you to the uttermoſt. You, my good Lords, Counſellors of State, have many Conferences, and I do confeſs I have ſaid the King of Scots is a Competitor, and the King of Spain a Competitor, and you I have ſaid are a Competitor: you would depoſe the Queen, you would be King of England, and call a Parliament. Ah, my Lord, were it but your own Caſe, the Loſs had been the leſs; but you have drawn a number of noble Perſons and Gentlemen of Birth and Quality into your Net of Rebellion, and their Bloods will cry vengeance againſt you. For my part, I vow to God, I wiſh my Soul was in Heaven, and my Body at reſt, ſo this had never been.

Eſſex. Ah, Mr. Secretary, I thank God for my Humbling; that you, in the Ruff of your Bravery, came to make your Oration againſt me here this day.

Cecil. My Lord, I humbly thank God that you did not take me for a fit Companion for you and your Humours; for if you had, you would have drawn me to betray my Sovereign, as you have done: but I would have you name the Counſellor you ſpeak of; name him, name him, name him if you dare, if you dare, I defy you; name him if you dare.

Eſſex. Here ſtands an honourable Perſon (meaning the Earl of Southampton) that knows I ſpeak no Fables; he heard it as well as I.

Cecil. Then my Lord of Southampton, I adjure you by the Duty you owe to God, Loyalty and Allegiance you owe to your Sovereign, by all Tokens of true Chriſtianity, and by the antient Friendſhip and Acquaintance once between us, that you name the Counſellor.

Southampt. Mr. Secretary, if you will needs have me name the Counſellor, it was Mr. Comptroller.

Whereupon the Secretary falling down upon his knees, ſaid, I thank God for this day; and upon his knee deſired the Lord High Steward, that a Gentleman of the Privy Chamber (or one that might have acceſs to the Queen) might go, and humbly intreat her Highneſs to command Mr. Comptroller to come before his Grace.

Hereupon the Lord High Steward calling Mr. Knevet (a Gentleman of her Majeſty's Privy Chamber) ſaid unto him, go Mr. Knevet unto her Majeſty, and let her underſtand Mr. Secretary's Demand.

Cecil. Mr. Knevet, you ſhall have free acceſs unto her Majeſty; tell her, that I vow before the God of Heaven, that if ſhe refuſe to ſend Mr. Comptroller, whereby I may clear my ſelf of theſe open Scandals, I will rather die at her foot, (as her Subject and Vaſſal) than live to do her any more Service in this honourable degree, wherein her Highneſs employs me. And withal, let me adjure you, Mr. Knevet, that you do not acquaint Mr. Comptroller with the Cauſe why you come for him. Mr. Knevet went, and not long after return'd with Mr.

Mr. Comptroller, to whom the Lord High Steward repeated the Cauſe why he was ſent for, and deſir'd him to ſatisfy the Lords, whether Mr. Secretary did uſe any ſuch Speech in his Hearing, or to his Knowledge.

Mr. Comptroller. I remember that once in Mr. Secretary's Company, there was a Book read, that treated of ſuch matters; but I never did hear Mr. Secretary uſe any ſuch words, or to that effect.

Whereupon Mr. Secretary thanked God, that though the Earl ſtood there as a Traytor, yet he was found an honeſt Man, and a faithful Subject; withal ſaying, I beſeech God to forgive you for this open wrong done unto me, as I do openly pronounce I forgive you from the bottom of my Heart.

Eſſex. And I, Mr. Secretary, do clearly and freely forgive you with all my Soul; becauſe I mean to die in Charity.

Bacon. My Lord, you may now perceive that my Lord of Eſſex went about to procure matter, and to give over on the inſtant.

Southamp. Well, I beſeech your Lordſhip, let me ſatisfy your Lordſhip and the reſt thus much, that for my own part, I did never know the Laws. Now to ſhew the Cauſes that made me adventure ſo far as I did: The firſt occaſion that made me adventure into theſe Courſes, was the Affinity betwixt my Lord of Eſſex and me, I being of his Blood, and marrying his Kinſwoman; ſo that for his ſake I ſhould have hazarded my Life: But what I have by my forwardneſs offended in Act, I am altogether ignorant, but in Thought I am aſſured never. And if through my Ignorance in the Law I have offended, yet I humbly ſubmit my ſelf to her Majeſty, and from the bottom of my Heart do beg her gracious Pardon if it pleaſe her; and I hope that neither your Lordſhip nor any of the Peers will hold any of the former Reſolutions ſpoken of by theſe Orators for any certainty, which depends no otherwiſe than one upon another. For if any fooliſh Speeches have paſſed, I proteſt, as I ſhall be ſaved, that they were never purpoſed by me, nor underſtood to be ſo purpoſed by me, to the hurt of her Majeſty's Perſon Eſſex. I beſeech your Lordſhip to underſtand me, and aſſure your ſelf, that what I now ſpeak, is not with any deſire (I proteſt) to ſpare one drop of my Blood; and becauſe ſome Honourable Perſons are intereſted in the Cauſe, I would (under favour) ſignify, becauſe the Point hath been ſo much urged by Mr. Attorney, that at our being in London when we were paſt Pauls, word was brought me, that the Chain was drawn at Ludgate, and that my Lord of Cumberland was there: which when I heard, I was right glad; for if there had been cauſe, I would have been glad to have put my ſelf into ſo Honourable a Perſon's hands as his: but it was a falſe Report, for my Lord was not then come thither. After which I went to Sheriff Smith's Houſe, and after my coming thither, I ſent the Sheriff and Mr. Alderman Watts to my Lord Mayor, deſiring him to come to us; if he would not, to ſend four of his Aldermen to ſee if we demeaned our ſelves loyally, with intent to put our ſelves into their hands to uſe us as they would, or to put us into any Priſon; yet in regard of our private Enemies, and the fear of their Treachery, we deſired them to ſhut their Gates: and this was the end for which we went into the City.

Attorn. My Lord, if you had no other Purpoſe, why did you go into Grace-Church-ſtreet and Fen-Church-ſtreet, crying out all the way you went, England is bought and ſold to the Spaniard!

Southamp. Mr. Attorney, I proteſt (as I hope to have Mercy in Heaven) I never heard my Lord ſpeak any ſuch Word, neither did I hear of the Proclamation you ſpeak of, made by my Lord Burleigh and the Herald at Arms; neither did I ſee them: and I deny (my Soul and Conſcience bearing me Witneſs) that I ever knew of any Intent and Meaning, or did ever mean or intend any Treaſon, Rebellion, or other Action againſt my Sovereign or the State; but only what I did, was to aſſiſt my Lord of Eſſex, in his private Quarrel; and therefore, Mr. Attorney, you have urged the matter very far, and you wrong me therein, my Blood be upon your Head. As for my Lord of Rutland, whereas he inferreth againſt me to be a perſuader and inviter of my Lord of Eſſex to theſe Actions, he wrongeth me exceedingly; for he was never the Man that ſaw me once diſcontented, and therefore had ſmall ground or reaſon ſo to ſay. And you Mr. Attorney, whereas you charge me for a Papiſt, I proteſt moſt unfeignedly, I was never converſant with any of that ſort; I only knew one White a Prieſt that went up and down the Town, yet did I never converſe with him in all my Life.

Eſſex. My Lord, and you that be our Peers, I beſeech you give me hearing thus far, not that I will ſpeak it for the ſafeguard of my Life, but with this my deſire, I charge the Souls of all them that be our Cenſurers or Tryers; becauſe out of a Form and Cuſtom of ſpeaking, theſe Orators would make them more odious that come to the Bar, that I may not be thought to have done this upon Revenge: for within theſe few days I purpoſed to have received the Communion, to be a Teſtimony that I was far from bearing of Malice to any, not ſo much as to my private Enemies. But the falling out between the Earl of Southampton and the Lord Grey, happening on a Sunday, hindered my Intent; for ſo ſoon as I knew of it, I found my Affections to ſtir on it exceedingly: yet I have ſince that time laboured, and by my Prayers to God earneſtly deſired, that I might be armed with Patience to endure all Afflictions. And here I proteſt before the ever-living God, as he may have Mercy on me, That my Conſcience is clear from any diſloyal Thought or Harm to her Majeſty; and my deſire ever hath been to be free from Bloodſhed, as Mr. Dove can witneſs. But if in all my Thoughts and Purpoſes I did not ever deſire the good Eſtate of my Sovereign and Country, as of my own Soul; I beſeech the Lord then ſhew ſome Mark upon me and my Soul in this place, for a juſt Vengeance of my Untruths to all the World. And God which knoweth the Secrets of all Hearts, knoweth that I never ſought the Crown of England, nor ever wiſhed to be a higher degree than a Subject. I greatly endeavoured to have brought my Conſcience to peace, only by ſeeking to ſecure my Acceſs to the Preſence of the Queen, that I might ſpeedily have unfolded my Griefs unto her Majeſty againſt my private Enemies; but not to have ſhed one drop of their Blood: And this, my Lord, I ſpeak, to the end I might put off all imputation of being an Hypocrite or an Atheiſt; for I was never Papiſt, neither did I ever favour any Sectary (as my Lord of Canterbury knoweth, and can teſtify:) for my Religion, it is ſound, and as I live, I mean to die in it.

Bacon. Well my Lord, may it pleaſe your Grace, you may ſee how weakly he hath ſhadowed his Purpoſe, and how ſlenderly he hath anſwered the Objections againſt him. But my Lord, doubting that too much variety of Matter may miniſter occaſion of Forgetfulneſs; I will only trouble your Lordſhip's remembrance with this only Point, rightly comparing this Rebellion of my Lord of Eſſex to the Duke of Guiſe's, that came upon the Barricadoes at Paris in his Doublet and Hoſe, attended upon with 8 Men; but his Confidence in the City was ſuch (even as my Lord's was) that when he had delivered himſelf ſo far, and that the ſhallowneſs of his own Conceit could not accompliſh what he expected, the King for his defence taking Arms againſt him, he was glad to yield himſelf, thinking to colour his Pretexts, turned his Practices, and alledged the occaſion thereof to be a private Quarrel.

Eſſex. My Lord, I muſt confeſs it was my fault to ſtand out, and to maintain my Houſe with defence and reſiſting; but I will not deny but that my Lord of Southampton and Sir Charles Danvers did perſuade me to parley with my Lord General: which I hope your Lordſhip will remember I did yield upon ſome indifferent Terms and Conditions; which were,

Firſt, That I might have an Honourable Tryal.

Secondly, That I might deliver my Griefs my ſelf to the Queen.

Thirdly, That I might go in Safety.

Fourthly, That I might have my Miniſter with me. And, Laſtly, (Which I chiefly beg of her Majeſty,) That ſhe would be pleaſed to redeem ſome that were with me in the Houſe, and guiltleſs, for Knowledge, Intent or Action, of what was by me purpoſed. All which I thought good to remember, and ſo humbly ſubmit the ſame to her Majeſty's gracious Pleaſure.

Serjeant at Arms. Then Proclamation was made, Lieutenant of the Tower, withdraw your Priſoners from the Bar. They being removed, the Lords and Peers went together into a private place made of purpoſe, behind the Canopy and Chair of Eſtate; then the two Chief Judges, and the Lord Chief Baron were ſent for in to them, to deliver their Opinions in Law. After half an Hour they came all out again, and each Man took his place; which being done, the Serjeant at Arms begun at the puny Lord, and called Thomas Lord Howard, who ſtood up bare-headed; then ſaid the Lord High Steward,

L. Steward. My Lord Thomas Howard, Whether is Robert Earl of Eſſex guilty of this Treaſon whereupon he hath been indicted, as you take it upon your Honour, or no?

L. Tho. Howard. Whereupon the Lord Thomas Howard made anſwer, bending his Body, and laying his left Hand upon his right Side, ſaid, Guilty, my Lord, of High Treaſon. After which manner all the Peers found him guilty one after another, from the puny to the higheſt, and ſo delivered in like ſort upon their Honours. Being called over anew, they found Henry Earl of Southampton guilty of High Treaſon alſo.

Serjeant at Arms. Then the Serjeant at Arms commanded the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Priſoners to the Bar again.

Clerk of the Crown. Then the Clerk of the Crown ſpeaking firſt to the Earl of Eſſex, ſaid; Robert Earl of Eſſex, you have been arraigned and indicted of High Treaſon, you have pleaded not Guilty, and for your Tryal you have put your ſelf upon God and your Peers; the Peers here (who have heard the Evidence, and your Anſwer in your Defence) have found you Guilty: Now what can you ſay for your ſelf, why you ſhould not have Judgment of Death?

Eſſex. I only ſay this, That ſince I have committed that which hath brought me within the compaſs of the Law, I may be counted the Law's Traytor in offending the Law, for which I am willing to die, and will as willingly go thereto as ever did any: But I beſeech your Lordſhip, and the reſt of the Lords here, to have Conſideration of what I have formerly ſpoken, and do me the right as to think me a Chriſtian, and that I have a Soul to ſave, and that I know it is no time to jeſt: Lying and Counterfeiting, my Soul abhorreth; for I am not deſperate nor void of Grace, now to ſpeak falſely. I do not ſpeak to ſave my Life, for that I ſee were vain: I owe God a death, which ſhall be welcome, how ſoon ſoever it pleaſeth her Majeſty. And to ſatisfy the opinion of the World, that my Conſcience is free from Atheiſm and Popery, howſoever I have been in this Action miſled to tranſgreſs the Points of the Law, in the Courſe and Defence of private Matters, and whatſoever through the Weakneſs of my Wit, and Dulneſs of Memory, or through violent Courſes, (if there be any violent that ſeek either Life or Death;) or if I have omitted or may have uttered any thing otherwiſe; yet I will live and die in the Faith and true Religion which here I have profeſſed.

Clerk of the Crown. Then the Clerk of the Crown demanded of Henry Earl of Southampton, What he could ſay for himſelf, why Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt him?

Southampton. My Lords, I muſt ſay for my part as I have ſaid before, That ſince the Ignorance of the Law hath made me incur the Danger of the Law, I humbly ſubmit my ſelf to her Majeſty's Mercy; and therefore my Lord High Steward, and my Lord Admiral, I beſeech you both, that ſeeing you are Witneſſes I am condemned by the Letter of the Law, it would pleaſe you to let the Queen know that I crave her Mercy. I know I have offended her, yet if it pleaſe her to be merciful unto me, I may live, and by my Service deſerve my Life. I have been brought up under her Majeſty, I have ſpent the beſt part of my Patrimony in her Majeſty's Service with danger of my Life, as your Lordſhips know; if there were any that could challenge me, that I have ever heretofore committed or intended Treaſon, or any other thing prejudicial to her Majeſty or Eſtate, God let me never inherit his Kingdom, neither would I deſire Mercy: but ſince the Law hath caſt me, I do ſubmit my ſelf to Death, and yet I will not deſpair of her Majeſty's Mercy; for that I know ſhe is merciful, and if ſhe pleaſe to extend it, I ſhall with all humility receive it.

L. Steward. My Lord of Eſſex, the Queen's Majeſty hath beſtowed many Favours on your Predeceſſors and your ſelf; I would wiſh therefore that you likewiſe would ſubmit your ſelf to her Majeſty's Mercy, acknowledging your Offences, and reconciling your ſelf inwardly to her Majeſty, by laying open all Matters that were intended to prejudice her Majeſty, and the Actors thereof; and thereby no doubt you ſhall find her Majeſty merciful.

Eſſex.

Eſſex. My Lord, you have made an honourable Motion; do but ſend to me at the time of my Death, and you ſhall ſee how penitent and humble I will be towards her Majeſty, both in acknowledging her exceeding Favours to my Anceſtors, and to my ſelf: whereby I doubt not but the penitent ſuffering of my Death, and ſprinkling of my Blood, will quench the evil-conceited Thoughts of her Majeſty againſt me. And I do moſt humbly deſire her Majeſty, that my Death may put a period to my Offences committed, and be no more remembred by her Highneſs. If I had ever perceived any of my Followers to have harboured an evil thought againſt her Majeſty, I would have been the firſt that ſhould have puniſhed the ſame, in being his Executioner; and therefore I beſeech you, my good Lord, miſtake me not, nor think me ſo proud, that I will not crave her Majeſty's Mercy, for I proteſt (kneeling upon the very Knee of my Heart) I do crave her Majeſty's Mercy with all Humility: yet I had rather die than live in Miſery.

Then the Lord High Steward, after a few Exhortations unto the Earls to prepare themſelves for God, told them, ſeeing the Law had found them Guilty, it followed of courſe that he muſt proceed to Judgment.

The Earl of Eſſex replied very cheerfully, and ſaid; Yea, my Lord, with a very good Will, I pray you go on.

Then the Lord High Steward gave Judgment as followeth:

You muſt go to the place from whence you came, and there remain during her Majeſty's Pleaſure; from thence to be drawn on a Hurdle through London Streets, and ſo to the place of Execution, where you ſhall be hanged, bowelled, and quartered; your Head and Quarters to be diſpoſed of at her Majeſty's Pleaſure, and ſo God have Mercy on your Souls.

Eſſex. My Lord, I am not a whit diſmayed to receive this Sentence, for I proteſt Death is as welcome to me as Life; and I ſhall die as cheerful a Death upon ſuch a Teſtimony, as ever did Man. And I think it fit my poor Quarters that have done her Majeſty true Service in divers parts of the World, ſhould be ſacrificed and diſpoſed of at her Majeſty's Pleaſure; whereunto with all willingneſs of Heart I have ſubmitted my ſelf. But one thing I beg of you, my Lords, that have free acceſs to her Majeſty's Perſon, humbly to beſeech her Majeſty to grant me, that (during the ſhort time I ſhall live) I may have the ſame Preacher to comfort me, that hath been with me ſince my Troubles began: for as he that hath been long ſick, is moſt deſirous of the Phyſician which hath been, and is beſt acquainted with the Conſtitution of his Body; ſo do I moſt wiſh to have the Comfort and ſpiritual Phyſick from the Preacher which hath been and is acquainted with the inward Griefs, and ſecret Affections of my Soul. And my laſt Requeſt ſhall be only this; that it will pleaſe her Highneſs that my Lord Thomas Howard, and the Lieutenant of the Tower may be partakers with me in receiving the Sacrament, and be a witneſs of it, in token of what I have proteſted to be true in this Life, for my Loyalty, Religion, and Peace of Conſcience: and then whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe her Majeſty to call me, I ſhall be ready to ſeal the ſame with my Blood.

The Lords promiſed they would move the Queen for his Requeſts.

Eſſex. I humbly thank your Lordſhips.

Then the Serjeant at Arms ſtood up with the Mace on his Shoulder, and after Proclamation was made, ſaid thus: All Peers that were ſummoned to be here this Day, may now take their Eaſe; and all other Perſons attending here this Service, may depart in her Majeſty's Peace, for my Lord High Steward is pleaſed to diſſolve this Commiſſion.

As the Lords were riſing, the Earl of Eſſex ſaid, My Lord De la Ware, and my Lord Morley, I beſeech your Lordſhips to pardon me for your two Sons that are in Trouble for my ſake: I proteſt upon my Soul they knew not of any thing that was or ſhould have been done, but came to me in the Morning, and I deſired them to ſtay, and they knew not wherefore. And ſo farewel, my Lords.

The

The Tryal of Sir WALTER RALEIGH Kt. at Winton, on Thurſday the 17*th of* November, Anno Dom. 1603. in the firſt Year of King James the Firſt:

Charles Blunt, Earl of Devon.
Lord Henry Howard, afterward Earl of Northampton.
Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury.
Edward Lord Wotton of Morley.
Sir John Stanhope, Vice-Chamberlain.
Lord Chief Juſtice of England, Popham.
Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, Anderſon.
Mr. Juſtice Gaudie.
Juſtice Warburton, and Sir William Wade, Commiſſioners.

FIRST the Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was read by the Clerk of the Crown-Office; and the Priſoner bid hold up his Hand.

And then preſently the Indictment was in effect as followeth:

THAT he did conſpire, and go about to deprive the King of his Government, to raiſe up Sedition within the Realm; to alter Religion, to bring in the Roman Superſtition, and to procure foreign Enemies to invade the Kingdoms. That the Lord Cobham, the 9th of June laſt, did meet with the ſaid Sir Walter Raleigh in Durham-Houſe, in the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, and then and there had Conference with him, how to advance Arabella Stuart to the Crown and Royal Throne of this Kingdom; and that then and there it was agreed, that Cobham ſhould treat with Aremberg, Embaſſador from the Archduke of Auſtria, to obtain of him 600000 Crowns, to bring to paſs their intended Treaſons. It was agreed that Cobham ſhould go to the Archduke Albert, to procure him to advance the pretended Title of Arabella: from thence knowing that Albert had not ſufficient means to maintain his own Army in the Low-Countries, Cobham ſhould go to Spain to procure the King to aſſiſt and further her pretended Title.

It was agreed, the better to effect all this Conſpiracy, that Arabella ſhould write three Letters, one to the Archduke, another to the King of Spain, and a third to the Duke of Savoy; and promiſe three things:

Firſt, To eſtabliſh a firm Peace between England and Spain.

Secondly, To tolerate the Popiſh and Roman Superſtition.

Thirdly, To be ruled by them in contracting of her Marriage.

And for the effecting theſe traitorous Purpoſes, Cobham ſhould return by the Iſle of Jerſey, and ſhould find Sir Walter Raleigh Captain of the ſaid Iſle there, and take Counſel of Raleigh for the diſtributing of the aforeſaid Crowns, as the Occaſion or Diſcontentment of the Subjects ſhould give cauſe and way.

And further, That Cobham and his Brother Brook met on the 9th of June laſt, and Cobham told Brook all theſe Treaſons: To the which Treaſons Brook gave his Aſſent, and did join himſelf to all theſe. And after, on the Thurſday following, Cobham and Brook did ſpeak theſe words; That there would never be a good World in England, till the King (meaning our Sovereign Lord) and his Cubs (meaning his Royal Iſſue) were taken away.

And the more to diſable and deprive the King of his Crown, and to confirm the ſaid Cobham in his Intents, Raleigh did publiſh a Book, falſly written againſt the moſt Juſt and Royal Title of the King, knowing the ſaid Book to be written againſt the juſt Title of the King; which Book Cobham after that received of him. Further, for the better effecting theſe traitorous Purpoſes, and to eſtabliſh the ſaid Brook in his Intent, the ſaid Cobham did deliver the ſaid Book unto him the 14th of June. And further, the ſaid Cobham, on the 16th of June, for accompliſhment of the ſaid Conference, and by the traitorous Inſtigation of Raleigh, did move Brook to incite Arabella to write to the three forenamed Princes, to procure them to advance her Title; and that ſhe, after ſhe had obtained the Crown, ſhould promiſe to perform three things, viz. 1. Peace between England and Spain. 2. To tolerate with Impunity the Popiſh and Roman Superſtitions. 3. To be ruled by them three in the contracting of her Marriage.

To theſe Motions the ſaid Brook gave his Aſſent. And for the better effecting of the ſaid Treaſons, Cobham on the 17th of June, by the Inſtigation of Raleigh, did write Letters to Count Aremberg, and did deliver the ſaid Letters to one Matthew de Lawrency, to be delivered to the ſaid Count, which he did deliver, for the obtaining of the 600000 Crowns; which Mony by other Letters Count Aremberg did promiſe to perform the Payment of: and this Letter Cobham received the 18th of June. And then did Cobham promiſe to Raleigh, that when he had received the ſaid Mony, he would deliver 8000 Crowns to him, to which motion he did conſent; and afterwards Cobham offered Brook, that after he ſhould receive the ſaid Crowns, he would give to him 10000 thereof: to which Motion, Brook did aſſent.

To the Indictment, Sir Walter Raleigh pleaded Not Guilty.

The

The JURY.

Sir Ralph Conisby,
Sir Thomas Fowler,
Sir Edward Peacock, } Knights.
Sir William Rowe,
Henry Goodyer,
Roger Wood,
Thomas Walker, } Esquires.
Thomas Whitby,
Thomas Highgate,
Robert Kempthon,
John Chawkey, } Gentlemen.
Robert Bromley,

Sir Walter Raleigh, Prisoner, was asked, Whether he would take exceptions to any of the Jury?

Raleigh. I know none of them; they are all Christians, and honest Gentlemen, I except against none.

E. Suffolk. You Gentlemen of the King's Learned Counsel, follow the same course as you did the other day.

Raleigh. My Lord, I pray you I may answer the Points particularly as they are delivered, by reason of the Weakness of my Memory and Sickness.

L. C. Just. Popham. After the King's Learned Counsel have delivered all the Evidence, Sir Walter, you may answer particularly to what you will.

Heale, the King's Serjeant at Law. You have heard of Raleigh's bloody Attempts to kill the King and his Royal Progeny, and in place thereof, to advance one Arabella Stuart. The Particulars of the Indictment are these: First, That Raleigh met with Cobham the 9th of June, and had Conference of an Invasion, of a Rebellion, and an Insurrection, to be made by the King's Subjects, to depose the King, and to kill his Children, poor Babes that never gave Offence. Here is Blood, here is a new King and Governor. In our King consists all our Happiness, and the true Use of the Gospel; a thing which we all wished to be settled, after the Death of the Queen. Here must be Money to do this, for Money is the Sinew of War. Where should that be had? Count Aremberg must procure it of Philip King of Spain, five or six hundred thousand Crowns; and out of this Sum Raleigh must have eight thousand. But what is that Count Aremberg? Though I am no good Frenchman, yet it is as much as to say in English, Earl of Aremberg. Then there must be Friends to effect this: Cobham must go to Albert Archduke of Austria, for whom Aremberg was Embassador at that time in England. And what then? He must persuade the Duke to assist the pretended Title of Arabella. From thence Cobham must go to the King of Spain, and persuade him to assist the said Title. Since the Conquest, there was never the like Treason. But out of whose Head came it? Out of Raleigh's, who must also advise Cobham to use his Brother Brook to incite the Lady Arabella to write three several Letters, as aforesaid in the Indictment: all this was on the 9th of June. Then three days after, Brook was acquainted with it. After this, Cobham said to Brook, It will never be well in England,, till the King and his Cubs are taken away. Afterwards, Raleigh delivered a Book to Cobham, treacherously written against the Title of the King. It appears that Cobham took Raleigh to be either a God, or an Idol. Cobham endeavours to set up a new King, or Governor: God forbid mine Eyes should ever see so unhappy a Change. As for the Lady Arabella, she, upon my Conscience, hath no more Title to the Crown than I have; which before God I utterly renounce. Cobham, a Man bred in England, hath no Experience abroad: but Raleigh, a Man of great Wit, Military, and a Sword-man. Now whether these things were bred in a hollow Tree, I leave to them to speak of, who can speak far better than my self. And so sate him down again.

Sir Ed. Coke, the King's Attorney. I must first, my Lords, before I come to the Cause, give one Caution, because we shall often mention Persons of eminent Places, some of them great Monarchs: Whatever we say of them, we shall but repeat what others have said of them; I mean, the Capital Offenders in their Confessions. We professing Law, must speak reverently of Kings and Potentates. I perceive these honourable Lords, and the rest of this great Assembly, are come to hear what hath been scattered upon the Wrack of Report. We carry a just Mind, to condemn no Man, but upon plain Evidence. Here is Mischief, Mischief in summo gradu, exorbitant Mischief. My Speech shall chiefly touch these three Points; Imitation, Supportation, and Defence.

The Imitation of Evil ever exceeds the Precedent; as on the contrary, Imitation of Good ever comes short. Mischief cannot be supported but by Mischief; yea, it will so multiply, that it will bring all to Confusion. Mischief is ever underprop'd by Falshood of foul Practices: and because all these things did concur in this Treason, you shall understand the Main, as before you did the Bye.

The Treason of the Bye consisteth in these Points: First, That the Lord Grey, Brook, Markham, and the rest, intended by Force in the Night to surprize the King's Court; which was a Rebellion in the Heart of the Realm, yea, in the Heart of the Heart, in the Court. They intended to take him that is a Sovereign, to make him subject to their Power, purposing to open the Doors with Muskets and Calievers, and to take also the Prince and Council: then under the King's Authority to carry the King to the Tower; and to make a Stale of the Admiral. When they had the King there, to extort three things from him: First, A Pardon for all their Treasons: Secondly, A Toleration of the Roman Superstition; which their Eyes shall sooner fall out, than they shall ever see; for the King hath spoken these Words in the hearing of many, I will lose the Crown and my Life, before ever I will alter Religion. And, thirdly, To remove Counsellors. In the room of the Lord Chancellor, they would have placed one Watson a Priest, absurd in Humanity, and ignorant in Divinity. Brook, of whom I will speak nothing, Lord Treasurer. The great Secretary must be Markham; Oculus Patriæ. A Hole must be found in my Lord Chief Justice's Coat. Grey must be Earl-Marshal, and Master of the Horse, because he would have a Table in the Court; marry, he would advance the Earl of Worcester to a higher Place. All this cannot be done without a Multitude: Therefore Watson the Priest tells a resolute Man, that the King was in danger of Puritans and Jesuits; so to bring him in blindfold into the Action, saying, That the King is no King till he be crown'd; therefore every Man might right his own Wrongs: But he is Rex natus, his Dignity descends as well as yours, my Lords. Then Watson imposeth a blasphemous Oath, That they should ſhould ſwear to defend the King's Perſon; to keep ſecret what was given them in charge, and ſeek all Ways and Means to advance the Catholick Religion. Then they intend to ſend for the Lord Mayor and the Aldermen, in the King's Name, to the Tower, leſt they ſhould make any Reſiſtance, and then to take Hoſtages of them; and to enjoin them to provide for them Victuals and Munition. Grey, becauſe the King remov'd before Midſummer, had a further Reach, to get a Company of Sword-men to aſſiſt the Action: Therefore he would ſtay till he had obtained a Regiment from Oſtend or Auſtria. So you ſee theſe Treaſons were like Sampſon's Foxes, which were joined in their Tails, tho their Heads were ſever'd.

Raleigh. You Gentlemen of the Jury, I pray remember, I am not charged with the Bye, being the Treaſon of the Prieſt.

Attorney. You are not. My Lords, you ſhall obſerve three things in the Treaſons: Firſt, They had a Watch-word, (the King's Safety); their Pretence was Bonum in ſe; their Intent was Malum in ſe: Secondly, They avouched Scripture; both the Prieſts had Scriptum eſt; perverting and ignorantly miſtaking the Scriptures: Thirdly, They avouched the Common Law, to prove that he was no King till he was crowned; alledging a Statute of 13 Eliz. This, by way of Imitation, hath been the courſe of all Traitors.

In the 20th of Edward II. Iſabella the Queen, and the Lord Mortimer, gave out, that the King's Perſon was not ſafe, for the good of the Church and Commonwealth.

The Biſhop of Carliſle did preach on this Text, My Head is grieved, meaning by the Head, the King; that when the Head began to be negligent, the People might reform what is amiſs.

In the 3d of Henry IV. Sir Roger Claringdon, accompany'd with two Prieſts, gave out, That Richard II. was alive, when he was dead.

Edward III. cauſed Mortimer's Head to be cut off, for giving counſel to murder the King.

The 3d of Henry VII. Sir Henry Stanley found the Crown in the Duſt, and ſet it on the King's Head: when Fitzwater and Garret told him, that Edward V. was alive, he ſaid, If I be alive, I will aſſiſt him. But this coſt him his Head.

Edmund de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, killed a Man in the Reign of King Henry VII. for which the King would have him hold up his Hand at the Bar, and then pardoned him: Yet he took ſuch an Offence thereat, that he ſent to the Noblemen to help to reform the Commonwealth; and then ſaid, he would go to France, and get Power there. Sir Roger Compton knew all the Treaſon, and diſcovered Windon and others, that were attainted.

He ſaid, There was another thing that would be ſtood upon, namely, that they had but one Witneſs. Then he vouched one Appleyard's Caſe, a Traitor in Norfolk, who ſaid, a Man muſt have two Accuſers. Helms was the Man that accuſed him; but Mr. Juſtice Catlin ſaid, That that Statute was not in force at that day. His Words were, Thruſt her into the Ditch.

Then he went on ſpeaking of Acccuſers, and made this difference: An Accuſer is a Speaker by Report, when a Witneſs is he that upon his Oath ſhall ſpeak his Knowledge of any Man.

A third ſort of Evidence there is likewiſe, and this is held more forcible than either of the other two; and that is, when a Man, by his Accuſation of another, ſhall, by the ſame Accuſation, alſo condemn himſelf, and make himſelf liable to the ſame Fault and Puniſhment: This is more forcible than many Witneſſes. So then ſo much by way of Imitation. Then he defined Treaſon: There is Treaſon in the Heart, in the Hand, in the Mouth, in Conſummation: comparing that in Corde to the Root of a Tree; in Ore, to the Bud; in Manu, to the Blo[ſ]om; and that which is in Conſummatione, to the Fruit.

Now I come to your Charge, you of the Jury: The Greatneſs of Treaſon is to be conſidered in theſe two things, Determinatione finis, and Electione mediorum. This Treaſon excelleth in both, for that it was to deſtroy the King and his Progeny. Theſe Treaſons are ſaid to be Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis; this goeth further, and may be term'd, Crimen extirpandæ Regiæ Majeſtatis, & totius Progeniei ſuæ. I ſhall not need, my Lords, to ſpeak any thing concerning the King, nor of the Bounty and Sweetneſs of his Nature, whoſe Thoughts are innocent, whoſe Words are full of Wiſdom and Learning, and whoſe Works are full of Honour; although it be a true Saying, Nunquam nimis quod nunquam ſatis. But to whom do you bear Malice? to the Children?

Raleigh. To whom ſpeak you this? You tell me News I never heard of.

Attorney. Oh Sir, do I? I will prove you the notorioueſt Traitor that ever came to the Bar. After you have taken away the King, you would alter Religion: as you, Sir Walter Raleigh, have followed them of the Bye in Imitation; for I will charge you with the Words.

Raleigh. Your Words cannot condemn me; my Innocency is my Defence. Prove one of theſe things wherewith you have charg'd me, and I will confeſs the whole Indictment, and that I am the horribleſt Traitor that ever lived, and worthy to be crucified with a thouſand thouſand Torments.

Attorney. Nay, I will prove all: Thou art a Monſter; thou haſt an Engliſh Face, but a Spaniſh Heart. Now you muſt have Money: Aremberg was no ſooner in England (I charge thee Raleigh) but thou incitedſt Cobham to go unto him, and to deal with him for Money, to beſtow on diſcontented Perſons, to raiſe Rebellion on the Kingdom.

Raleigh. Let me anſwer for my ſelf.

Attorney. Thou ſhalt not.

Raleigh. It concerneth my Life.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. Sir Walter Raleigh, Mr. Attorney is but yet in the General, but when the King's Counſel have given the Evidence wholly, you ſhall anſwer every Particular.

Attorney. Oh! do I touch you?

Lord Cecil. Mr. Attorney, when you have done with this General Charge, do you not mean to let him anſwer every Particular?

Attorney. Yes, when we deliver the Proofs to be read. Raleigh procured Cobham to go to Aremberg; which he did by his Inſtigation: Raleigh ſupped with Cobham before he went to Aremberg; after Supper, Raleigh conducted him to Durham-Houſe; from whence Cobham went with Lawrency, a Servant of Aremberg's, unto him, and went in by a Back-way. Cobham could never be quiet until he had entertained this Motion, for he had four Letters from Raleigh. Aremberg anſwer'd, The Money ſhould be performed, but knew not to whom it ſhould be diſtributed. Then Cobham and Lawrency came back to Durham-Houſe, where they found Raleigh. Cobham and Raleigh went up, and left Lawrency below, where they had ſecret Conference in a Gallery; and after, Cobham and Lawrency rency departed from Raleigh. Your Jargon was Peace: What is that? Spaniſh Invaſion, Scottiſh Subverſion. And again, you are not a fit Man to take ſo much Money for procuring of a lawful Peace, for Peace procured by Money is diſhonourable. Then Cobham muſt go to Spain, and return by Jerſey, where you were Captain: And then, becauſe Cobham had not ſo much Policy, or at leaſt Wickedneſs, as you, he muſt have your Advice for the diſtribution of the Money. Would you have depoſed ſo good a King, lineally deſcended of Elizabeth, eldeſt Daughter of Edward IV? Why then muſt you ſet up another? I think you meant to make Arabella a Titular Queen, of whoſe Title I will ſpeak nothing; but ſure you meant to make her a Stale. Ah! good Lady, you could mean her no Good.

Raleigh. You tell me News, Mr. Attorney.

Attorney. Oh Sir! I am the more large, becauſe I know with whom I deal: For we have to deal to-day with a Man of Wit.

Raleigh. Did I ever ſpeak with this Lady?

Attorney. I will track you out before I have done. Engliſhmen will not be led by perſuaſion of Words, but they muſt have Books to perſuade.

Raleigh. The Book was written by a Man of your Profeſſion, Mr. Attorney.

Attorney. I would not have you impatient.

Raleigh. Methinks you fall out with your ſelf; I ſay nothing.

Attorney. By this Book you would perſuade Men, that he is not the lawful King. Now let us conſider ſome Circumſtances: My Lords, you know my Lord Cobham (for whom we all lament and rejoice; lament in that his Houſe, which hath ſtood ſo long unſpotted, is now ruinated; rejoice, in that his Treaſons are reveal'd:) he is neither Politician nor Sword-man; Raleigh was both, united in the Cauſe with him, and therefore Cauſe of his Deſtruction. Another Circumſtance is, the ſecret Contriving of it. Humphry Stafford claimed Sanctuary for Treaſon. Raleigh, in his Machivilian Policy, hath made a Sanctuary for Treaſon: He muſt talk with none but Cobham; becauſe, ſaith he, one Witneſs can never condemn me. For Brook ſaid unto Sir Griffith Markham, Take heed how you do make my Lord Cobham acquainted; for whatſoever he knoweth, Raleigh the Witch will get it out of him. As ſoon as Raleigh was examined on one point of Treaſon concerning my Lord Cobham, he wrote to him thus; I have been examined of you, and confeſſed nothing. Further, you ſent to him by your truſty Francis Kemiſh, that one Witneſs could not condemn; and therefore bade his Lordſhip be of good Courage. Came this out of Cobham's Quiver? No: but out of Raleigh's Machivilian and deviliſh Policy. Yea, but Cobham did retract it; why then did ye urge it? Now then ſee the moſt horrible Practices that ever came out of the bottomleſs Pit of the loweſt Hell. After that Raleigh had Intelligence that Cobham had accuſed him, he endeavour'd to have Intelligence from Cobham, which he had gotten by young Sir John Payton: But I think it was the Error of his Youth.

Raleigh. The Lords told it me, or elſe I had not been ſent to the Tower.

Attorney. Thus Cobham, by the Inſtigation of Raleigh, enter'd into theſe Actions: So that the queſtion will be, Whether you are not the principal Traitor, and he would nevertheleſs have enter'd into it? Why did Cobham retract all that ſame? Firſt, Becauſe Raleigh was ſo odious, he thought he ſhould fare the worſe for his ſake. Secondly, He thought thus with himſelf, If he be free, I ſhall clear my ſelf the better. After this, Cobham asked for a Preacher to confer with, pretending to have Dr. Andrews; but indeed he meant not to have him, but Mr. Galloway; a worthy and reverend Preacher, who can do more with the King (as he ſaid) than any other; that he, ſeeing his conſtant Denial, might inform the King thereof. Here he plays with the Preacher. If Raleigh could perſuade the Lords, that Cobham had no intent to travel, then he thought all ſhould be well. Here is Forgery! In the Tower Cobham muſt write to Sir Thomas Vane, a worthy Man, that he meant not to go into Spain: which Letter Raleigh deviſed in Cobham's Name.

Raleigh. I will waſh my hands of the Indictment, and die a true Man to the King.

Attorney. You are the abſoluteſt Traitor that ever was.

Raleigh. Your Phraſes will not prove it, Mr. Attorney.

Attorney. Cobham writeth a Letter to my Lord Cecil, and doth will Mellis's Man to lay it in a Spaniſh Bible, and to make as though he found it by chance. This was after he had Intelligence with this Viper, that he was falſe.

Lord Cecil. You mean a Letter intended to me; I never had it.

Attorney. No, my Lord, you had it not. You, my Maſters of the Jury, reſpect not the Wickedneſs and Hatred of the Man, reſpect his Cauſe: if he be guilty, I know you will have care of it, for the Preſervation of the King, the Continuance of the Goſpel authorized, and the Good of us all.

Raleigh. I do not hear yet, that you have ſpoken one word againſt me; here is no Treaſon of mine done: If my Lord Cobham be a Traitor, what is that to me?

Attorney. All that he did was by thy Inſtigation, thou Viper; for I thou thee, thou Traitor.

Raleigh. It becometh not a Man of Quality and Virtue, to call me ſo: But I take comfort in it, it is all you can do.

Attorney. Have I anger'd you?

Raleigh. I am in no caſe to be angry.

Popham. Sir Walter Raleigh, Mr. Attorney ſpeaketh out of the Zeal of his Duty, for the Service of the King, and you for your Life; be valiant on both ſides.

Now they proceed to the Reading the Proofs.

The Lord Cobham's Examination read.

He confeſſeth, he had a Paſs-port to go into Spain, intending to go to the Archduke, to confer with him about theſe Practices; and becauſe he knew the Archduke had not Money to pay his own Army, from thence he meant to go to Spain, to deal with the King for the 600000 Crowns, and to return by Jerſey; and that nothing ſhould be done, until he had ſpoken with Sir Walter Raleigh for diſtribution of the Money to them which were diſcontented in England. At the firſt beginning, he breathed out Oaths and Exclamations againſt Raleigh, calling him Villain and Traitor; ſaying, he had never entred into theſe Courſes, but by his Inſtigation, and that he would never let him alone.

Here Mr. Attorney willed the Clerk of the Crown-Office to read over theſe laſt Words again (He would never let him alone.)

The Lord Cobham's Examination.

Beſides he ſpake of Plots and Invaſions; of the Particulars whereof he could give no Account, tho Raleigh and he had conferred of them. Further he ſaid, He was afraid of Raleigh, that when he ſhould return by Jerſey, that he would have him and the Mony to the King. Being examined of Sir Arthur Gorge, he freed him, ſaying, They never durſt truſt him; but Sir Arthur Savage they intended to uſe, becauſe they thought him a fit Man.

Raleigh. Let me ſee the Accuſation: This is abſolutely all the Evidence can be brought againſt me; poor Shifts! You Gentlemen of the Jury, I pray you underſtand this. This is that which muſt either condemn, or give me Life; which muſt free me, or ſend my Wife and Children to beg their Bread about the Streets: This is that muſt prove me a notorious Traitor, or a true Subject to the King. Let me ſee my Accuſation, that I may make my Anſwer.

Clerk of the Council. I did read it, and ſhew you all the Examinations.

Raleigh. At my firſt Examination at Windſor, my Lords asked me, what I knew of Cobham's Practice with Aremberg; I anſwer'd negatively: And as concerning Arabella, I proteſt before God, I never heard one word of it. If that be proved, let me be guilty of ten thouſand Treaſons. It is a ſtrange thing you will impute that to me, when I never heard ſo much as the Name of Arabella Stuart, but only the Name of Arabella.

After being examin'd, I told my Lords, that I thought my Lord Cobham had conference with Aremberg; I ſuſpected his viſiting of him: for after he departed from me at Durham-Houſe, I ſaw him paſs by his own Stairs, and paſſed over to St. Mary Saviours, where I knew Lawrency a Merchant, and a Follower of Aremberg, lay, and therefore likely to go unto him. My Lord Cecil asked my Opinion concerning Lawrency; I ſaid, that if you do not apprehend Lawrency, it is dangerous, he will fly: if you do apprehend him, you ſhall give my Lord Cobham notice thereof. I was asked who was the greateſt Man with my Lord Cobham; I anſwer'd, I knew no Man ſo great with him, as young Wyat of Kent.

As ſoon as Cobham ſaw my Letter to have diſcover'd his Dealing with Aremberg, in his Fury he accus'd me; but before he came to the Stair-foot he repented, and ſaid he had done me wrong. When he came to the end of his Accuſation, he added, that if he had brought this Mony to Jerſey, he fear'd that I would have deliver'd him and the Mony to the King. Mr. Attorney, you ſaid this never came out of Cobham's Quiver; he is a ſimple Man. Is he ſo ſimple? no; he hath a Diſpoſition of his own, he will not eaſily be guided by others; but when he has once taken head in a Matter, he is not eaſily drawn from it: he is no Babe. But it is ſtrange for me to deviſe with Cobham, that he ſhould go to Spain, to perſuade the King to diſburſe ſo much Mony, he being a Man of no Love in England, and I having reſigned my room of chiefeſt Command, the Wardenſhip of the Stannaries. Is it not ſtrange for me to make my ſelf Robin Hood, or a Kett, or a Cade? I knowing England to be in better Eſtate to defend it ſelf than ever it was. I knew Scotland united; Ireland quieted, wherein of late our Forces were diſperſed; Denmark aſſured, which before was ſuſpected. I knew, that having a Lady whom Time had ſurpriz'd, we had now an active King, a lawful Succeſſor, who would himſelf be preſent in all his Affairs. The State of Spain was not unknown to me: I had written a Diſcourſe, which I had intended to preſent unto the King, againſt Peace with Spain. I knew the Spaniards had ſix Repulſes; three in Ireland, and three at Sea, and once in 1588, at Cales, by my Lord Admiral. I knew he was diſcourag'd and diſhonour'd. I knew the King of Spain to be the proudeſt Prince in Chriſtendom; but now he cometh creeping to the King my Maſter for Peace. I knew, whereas before he had in his Port ſix or ſeven ſcore Sail of Ships, he hath now but ſix or ſeven. I knew of twenty five Millions he had from his Indies, he hath ſcarce one left. I knew him to be ſo poor, that the Jeſuits in Spain, who were wont to have ſuch large Allowance, were fain to beg at the Church-Door. Was it ever read or heard, that any Prince ſhould diſburſe ſo much Mony without a ſufficient Pawn? I knew her own Subjects, the Citizens of London, would not lend her Majeſty Mony, without Lands in Mortgage. I knew the Queen did not lend the States Mony, without Fluſhing, Brill, and other Towns for a Pawn. And can it be thought, that he would let Cobham have ſo great a Sum?

I never came to the Lord Cobham's, but about Matters of his Profit; as, the ordering of his Houſe, paying of his Servants Board-Wages, &c. I had of his, when I was examined, four thouſand Pounds worth of Jewels for a Purchaſe; a Pearl of three thouſand Pound; and a Ring worth five hundred Pound. If he had had a fancy to run away, he would not have left ſo much to have purchas'd a Leaſe in Fee-Farm. I ſaw him buy three hundred Pounds worth of Books to ſend to his Library at Canterbury, and a Cabinet of thirty Pound, to give to Mr. Attorney, for drawing the Conveyances: and God in Heaven knoweth, not I, whether he intended to travel or no. But for that Practice with Arabella, or Letters to Aremberg framed, or any Diſcourſe with him, or in what Language he ſpake unto him; if I knew any of theſe things, I would abſolutely confeſs the Indictment, and acknowledg my ſelf worthy ten thouſand Deaths.

Cobham's ſecond Examination read.

The Lord Cobham being requir'd to ſubſcribe to an Examination, there was ſhewed a Note under Sir Wal. Raleigh's hand; the which when he had perus'd, he paus'd, and after brake forth into theſe Speeches: Oh Villain! Oh Traitor! I will now tell you all the Truth; and then ſaid, His Purpoſe was to go into Flanders, and into Spain, for the obtaining the aforeſaid Mony, and that Raleigh had appointed to meet him in Jerſey as he return'd home, to be adviſed of him about the Diſtribution of the Mony.

L. C. J. Popham. When Cobham anſwer'd to the Interrogatories, he made ſcruple to ſubſcribe; and being urged to it, he ſaid, if he might hear me affirm, that a Perſon of his Degree ought to ſet his hand, he would: I lying then at Richmond for fear of the Plague, was ſent for, and I told he ought to ſubſcribe; otherwiſe it were a Contempt of a high nature: then he ſubſcrib'd. The Lords queſtion'd with him further, and he ſhewed them a Letter, as I thought written to me, but it was indeed written to my Lord Cecil: he deſired to ſee the Letter again, and then ſaid, Oh Wretch! Oh Traitor! whereby I perceiv'd you had not perform'd that Truſt he had repoſed in you.

Raleigh. He is as paſſionate a Man as lives; for he hath not ſpared the beſt Friends he hath in England in his Paſſion. My Lords, I take it, he that has has been examined, has ever been asked at the time of his Examination, if it be according to his meaning, and then to ſubſcribe. Methinks, my Lords, when he accuſes a Man, he ſhould give ſome Account and Reaſon of it: It is not ſufficient to ſay, we talked of it. If I had been the Plotter, would not I have given Cobham ſome Arguments, whereby to perſuade the King of Spain, and anſwer his Objections? I knew Weſtmoreland and Bothwell, Men of other Underſtandings than Cobham, were ready to beg their Bread.

Sir Tho. Fowler, one of the Jury. Did Sir Walter Raleigh write a Letter to my Lord before he was examined concerning him, or not?

Attorney. Yes.

Lord Cecil. I am in great diſpute with my ſelf to ſpeak in the Caſe of this Gentleman: A former Dearneſs between me and him, ty'd ſo firm a Knot of my Conceit of his Virtues, now broken by a Diſcovery of his Imperfections. I proteſt, did I ſerve a King that I knew would be diſpleaſed with me for ſpeaking, in this Caſe I would ſpeak, whatever came of it; but ſeeing he is compacted of Piety and Juſtice, and one that will not miſlike of any Man for ſpeaking a Truth, I will anſwer your Queſtion.

Sir Walter Raleigh was ſtaid by me at Windſor, upon the firſt News of Copley, that the King's Perſon ſhould be ſurprized by my Lord Grey, and Mr. George Brook; when I found Brook was in, I ſuſpected Cobham, then I doubted Raleigh to be a Partaker. I ſpeak not this, that it ſhould be thought I had greater Judgment than the reſt of my Lords, in making this haſte to have them examined. Raleigh following to Windſor, I met with him upon the Terras, and willed him, as from the King, to ſtay; ſaying, the Lords had ſomething to ſay to him: then he was examined, but not concerning my Lord Cobham, but of the ſurprizing Treaſon. My Lord Grey was apprehended, and likewiſe Brook; by Brook we found, that he had given notice to Cobham of the ſurprizing Treaſon, as he deliver'd it to us; but with as much ſparingneſs of a Brother, as he might. We ſent for my Lord Cobham to Richmond, where he ſtood upon his Juſtification, and his Quality; ſometimes being forward, he ſaid he was not bound to ſubſcribe, wherewith we made the King acquainted. Cobham ſaid, if my Lord Chief Juſtice would ſay it were a Contempt, he would ſubſcribe; whereof being reſolv'd, he ſubſcrib'd. There was a Light given to Aremberg, that Lawrency was examined; but that Raleigh knew that Cobham was examined, is more than I know.

Raleigh. If my Lord Cobham had truſted me in the Main, was not I as fit a Man to be truſted in the Bye?

Lord Cecil. Raleigh did by his Letters acquaint us, that my Lord Cobham had ſent Lawrency to Aremberg, when he knew not he had any Dealings with him.

Lord Hen. Howard. It made for you, if Lawrency had been only acquainted with Cobham, and not with you. But you knew his whole Eſtate, and were acquainted with Cobham's Practice with Lawrency; and it was known to you before, that Lawrency depended on Aremberg.

Attorney. 1. Raleigh proteſted againſt the ſurprizing Treaſon. 2. That he knew not of the Matter touching Arabella. I would not charge you, Sir Walter, with a Matter of Falſhood: You ſay you ſuſpected the Intelligence that Cobham had with Aremberg, by Lawrency.

Raleigh. I thought it had been no other Intelligence, but ſuch as might be warranted.

Attorney. Then it was but lawful Suſpicion. But to that whereas you ſaid, that Cobham had accuſed you in Paſſion, I anſwer three ways: 1. I obſerved when Cobham ſaid, Let me ſee the Letter again, he paus'd; and when he did ſee that Count Aremberg was touched, he cry'd out, Oh Traitor! Oh Villain! now will I confeſs the whole Truth. 2. The Accuſation of a Man on hear-ſay, is nothing: Would he accuſe himſelf on Paſſion, and ruinate his Cauſe and Poſterity, out of malice to accuſe you? 3. Could this be out of Paſſion? Mark the Manner of it; Cobham had told this at leaſt two Months before to his Brother Brook, You are Fools, you are on the Bye, Raleigh and I are on the Main; we mean to take away the King and his Cubs: this he deliver'd two months before. So mark the Manner and the Matter; he would not turn the Weapon againſt his own Boſom, and accuſe himſelf to accuſe you.

Raleigh. Hath Cobham confeſſed that?

Ld. Ch. Juſt. This is ſpoken by Mr. Attorney, to prove that Cobham's Speech came not out of Paſſion.

Raleigh. Let it be proved that Cobham ſaid ſo.

Attorney. Cobham ſaith, he was a long time doubtful of Raleigh, that he would ſend him and the Mony to the King. Did Cobham fear leſt you would betray him in Jerſey? then of neceſſity there muſt be Truſt between you. No Man can betray a Man, but he that is truſted, in my underſtanding. This is the greateſt Argument to prove that he was acquainted with Cobham's Proceedings. Raleigh has a deeper reach, than to make himſelf, as he ſaid, Robin Hood, a Kett, or Cade, yet I never heard that Robin Hood was a Traitor; they ſay he was an Outlaw. And whereas he ſaith that our King is not only more wealthy and potent than his Predeceſſors, but alſo more politick and wiſe, ſo that he could have no hope to prevail; I anſwer, There is no King ſo potent, wiſe and active, but he may be overtaken thro Treaſon. Whereas you ſay Spain is ſo poor, diſcourſing ſo largely thereof; it had been better for you to have kept in Guiana, than to have been ſo well acquainted with the State of Spain. Beſides, if you could have brought Spain and Scotland to have joined, you might have hoped to prevail a great deal the better. For his ſix Overthrows, I anſwer, he hath the more Malice, becauſe Repulſes breed Deſire of Revenge. Then you ſay, you never talked with Cobham, but about Leaſes, and letting Lands, and ordering his Houſe; I never knew you Clerk of the Kitchen, &c. If you had fallen on your knees at firſt, and confeſſed the Treaſon, it had been better for you. You ſay, he meant to have given me a Cabinet of thirty Pound; perhaps he thought by thoſe means to have anticipated me therewith. But you ſay all theſe are Circumſtances: I anſwer, all this Accuſation in Circumſtance is true. Here now I might appeal to my Lords, that you take hold of this, that he ſubſcribed not to the Accuſation.

Lord Hen. Howard. Cobham was not then preſſed to ſubſcribe.

Attorney. His Accuſation being teſtify'd by the Lords, is of as great force, as if he had ſubſcrib'd. Raleigh ſaith again, if the Accuſer be alive, he muſt be brought face to face to ſpeak; and alledges 25 Edward III. that there muſt be two ſufficient Witneſſes, that muſt be brought face to face before the Accuſed; and alledgeth 10 and 13 Elizabeth.

Raleigh. You try me by the Spaniſh Inquiſition, if you proceed only by the Circumſtances, without two Witneſſes.

Attorney. This is a treaſonable Speech.

Raleigh. Evertere Hominem juſtum in Cauſa ſua injuſtum eſt. Good my Lords, let it be proved, either by the Laws of the Land, or the Laws of God, that there ought not to be two Witneſſes appointed; yet I will not ſtand to defend this Point in Law, if the King will have it ſo: It is no rare thing for a Man to be falſly accuſed. A Judge condemn'd a Woman in Sarum for killing her Husband, on the Teſtimony of one Witneſs; afterwards his Man confeſſed the Murder, when ſhe was executed: who after being touch'd in Conſcience for the Judgment, was uſed to ſay, Quod nunquam de hoc facto animam in vita ſua purgaret. It is alſo commanded by the Scripture; Allocutus eſt Jehova Moſen, In Ore duorum aut trium Teſtium, &c.

If Chriſt requireth it, as it appeareth, Mat. 18. if by the Canon, Civil Law, and God's Word, it be required, that there muſt be two Witneſſes at the leaſt; bear with me if I deſire one.

I would not deſire to live, if I were privy to Cobham's Proceedings. I had been a Slave, a Villain, a Fool, if I had endeavour'd to ſet up Arabella, and refus'd ſo gracious a Lord and Sovereign. But urge your Proofs.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. You have offer'd Queſtions on diverſe Statutes, all which mention two Accuſers in caſe of Indictments: you have deceiv'd your ſelf, for the Laws of 25 Edward III. and 5 Edward VI. are repeal'd. It ſufficeth now if there be Proofs made either under Hand, or by Teſtimony of Witneſſes, or by Oaths; it needs not the Subſcription of the Party, ſo there be Hands of credible Men to teſtify the Examination.

Raleigh. It may be an Error in me; and if thoſe Laws be repeal'd, yet I hope the Equity of them remains ſtill: but if you affirm it, it muſt be a Law to Poſterity. The Proof of the Common Law is by Witneſs and Jury; let Cobham be here, let him ſpeak it. Call my Accuſer before my Face, and I have done.

Attorney. Scientia Sceleris eſt mera Ignorantia. You have read the Letter of the Law, but underſtand it not. Here was your Anchor-hold, and your Rendezvouz: you truſt to Cobham, either Cobham muſt accuſe you, or no body; if he did, then it would not hurt you, becauſe he is but one Witneſs; if he did not, then you are ſafe.

Raleigh. If ever I read a Word of the Law or Statute, before I was Priſoner in the Tower, God confound me.

Attorney. Now I come to prove the Circumſtances of the Accuſation to be true. Cobham confeſſed he had a Paſs-port to travel, hereby intending to preſent Overtures to the Arch-Duke, and from thence to go to Spain, and there to have conference with the King for Mony: You ſay he promiſed to come home by Jerſey, to make merry with you and your Wife.

Raleigh. I ſaid, in his Return from France, not Spain.

Attorney. Further, in his Examination he ſaith, nothing could be ſet down for the Diſtribution of the Mony to the Diſcontented, without Conference with Raleigh. You ſaid it ſhould have been for Procurement of Peace, but it was for raiſing Rebellion. Further, Cobham ſaith, he would never have enter'd into theſe Courſes, but by your Inſtigation, and that you would never let him alone. Your Scholar was not apt enough to tell us all the Plots, that is enough for you to do, that are his Maſter. You intended to truſt Sir Arthur Savage, whom I take to be an honeſt and true Gentleman, but not Sir Arthur Gorge.

Raleigh. All this is but one Accuſation of Cobham's, I hear no other thing; to which Accuſation he never ſubſcribed nor avouched it. I beſeech you, my Lords, let Cobham be ſent for, charge him on his Soul, on his Allegiance to the King; if he affirm it, I am guilty.

Lord Cecil. It is the Accuſation of my Lord Cobham, it is the Evidence againſt you; muſt it not be of force without his Subſcription? I deſire to be reſolv'd by the Judges, whether by the Law it is not a forcible Argument of Evidence.

Judges. My Lord, it is.

Raleigh. The King at his Coronation is ſworn, In omnibus Judiciis ſuis Æquitatem, non Rigorem Legis, obſervare. By the Rigour and Cruelty of the Law it may be a forcible Evidence.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. That is not the Rigour of the Law, but the Juſtice of the Law; elſe when a Man hath made a plain Accuſation, by Practice he might be brought to retract it again.

Raleigh. Oh my Lord, you may uſe Equity.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. That is from the King; you are to have Juſtice from us.

Lord Anderſon. The Law is, if the Matter be proved to the Jury, they muſt find you guilty; for Cobham's Accuſation is not only againſt you, there are other things ſufficient.

Lord Cecil. Now that Sir Walter Raleigh is ſatisfy'd, that Cobham's Subſcription is not neceſſary, I pray you, Mr. Attorney, go on.

Raleigh. Good Mr. Attorney be patient, and give me leave.

Lord Cecil. An unneceſſary Patience is a Hindrance, let him go on with his Proofs, and then reſel them.

Raleigh. I would anſwer particularly.

Lord Cecil. If you would have a Table, and Pen and Ink, you ſhall.

Then Paper and Ink was given him.

Here the Clerk of the Crown read the Letter, which the Lord Cobham did write in July, which was to the effect of his former Examination; further ſaying, I have diſclos'd all: To accuſe any one falſly, were to burden my own Conſcience.

Attorney. Read Copley's Confeſſion the 8th of June; he ſaith, He was offer'd 1000 Crowns to be in this Action.

Here Watſon's Additions were read.

The great Maſs of Mony from the Count was impoſſible, ſaith Brook, &c.

Brook's Confeſſion read.

There have Letters paſſed, ſaith he, between Cobham and Aremberg, for a great Sum of Mony, to aſſiſt a ſecond Action, for the ſurprizing of his Majeſty.

Attorney. It is not poſſible it was of Paſſion; for it was in talk before three Men, being ſeverally examined, who agreed in the Sum to be beſtow'd on diſcontented Perſons; That Grey ſhould have 12000 Crowns, and Raleigh ſhould have 8000, or 10000 Crowns.

Cobham's Examination, July 18.

If the Mony might be procur'd (ſaith he) then a Man may give Penſions. Being asked if a Penſion ſhould not be given to his Brother Brook, he deny'd it not.

Law-

Lawrency's Examination.

Within five days after Aremberg arrived, Cobham reſorted unto him. That Night that Cobham went to Aremberg with Lawrency, Raleigh ſupped with him.

Attorn. Raleigh muſt have his part of the Mony, therefore now he is a Traytor. The Crown ſhall never ſtand one Year on the Head of the King (my Maſter) if a Traytor may not be condemned by Circumſtances: For if A. tells B. and B. tells C. and C. D. &c. you ſhall never prove Treaſon by two Witneſſes.

Raleigh's Examination was read.

He confeſſeth Cobham offered him 8000 Crowns, which he was to have for the furtherance of the Peace between England and Spain; and that he ſhould have it within three days. To which, he ſaid, he gave this anſwer; When I ſee the Mony, I will tell you more: for I had thought it had been one of his ordinary idle Conceits, and therefore made no account thereof.

Raleigh. The Attorney hath made a long Narration of Copley, and the Prieſts, which concerns me nothing, neither know I how Cobham was alter'd. For he told me, if I would agree to further the Peace, he would get me 8000 Crowns. I asked him, Who ſhall have the reſt of the Mony? He ſaid, I will offer ſuch a Nobleman (who was not named) ſome of the Mony. I ſaid, he will not be perſuaded by you, and he will extremely hate you for ſuch a Motion. Let me be pinched to death with hot Irons, if ever I knew there was any Intention to beſtow the Mony on diſcontented Perſons. I had made a Diſcourſe againſt the Peace, and would have printed it: If Cobham changed his mind, if the Prieſts, if Brook had any ſuch intent, what is that to me? They muſt anſwer for it. He offered me the Mony before Aremberg came, that is difference of time.

Serj. Philips. Raleigh confeſſeth the matter, but avoideth it by diſtinguiſhing of Times. You ſaid it was offer'd you before the coming of Aremberg, which is falſe. For you being examined whether you ſhould have ſuch Mony of Cobham, or not; you ſaid, yea, and that you ſhould have it within two or three days. Nemo moriturus præſumitur mentiri.

Ld Henry Howard. Alledge me any Ground or Cauſe, wherefore you gave ear to my Lord Cobham for receiving Penſions, in matters you had not to deal with.

Raleigh. Could I ſtop my Lord Cobham's Mouth?

Ld Cecil. Sir Walter Raleigh preſſeth, that my Lord Cobham ſhould be brought Face to Face. If he ask things of Favour and Grace, they muſt come only from him that can give them. If we ſit here as Commiſſioners, how ſhall we be ſatisfied whether he ought to be brought, unleſs we hear the Judges ſpeak?

Ld. Ch. Juſt. This thing cannot be granted, for then a number of Treaſons ſhould flouriſh: The Accuſer may be drawn by Practice, whilſt he is in Perſon.

Judge Gawdy. The Statute you ſpeak of, concerning two Witneſſes in Caſe of Treaſon, is found to be inconvenient, therefore by another Law it was taken away.

Raleigh. The common Tryal of England is by Jury and Witneſſes.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. No, by Examination: If three conſpire a Treaſon, and they all confeſs it; here is never a Witneſs, yet they are condemned.

Judge Warburton. I marvel, Sir Walter, that you being of ſuch Experience and Wit, ſhould ſtand on this Point; for ſo many Horſe-ſtealers may eſcape, if they may not be condemned without Witneſſes. If one ſhould ruſh into the King's Privy-Chamber, whilſt he is alone, and kill the King (which God forbid) and this Man be met coming with his Sword drawn all bloody; ſhall not he be condemned to Death? My Lord Cobham hath, perhaps, been laboured withal; and to ſave you, his old Friend, it may be that he will deny all that which he hath ſaid.

Raleigh. I know not how you conceive the Law.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. Nay, we do not conceive the Law, but we know the Law.

Raleigh. The Wiſdom of the Law of God is abſolute and perfect, Hæc fac, & vives, &c. But now by the Wiſdom of the State, the Wiſdom of the Law is uncertain. Indeed where the Accuſer is not to be had conveniently, I agree with you; but here my Accuſer may, he is alive, and in the Houſe. Suſanna had been condemned, if Daniel had not cried out, Will you condemn an innocent Iſraelite, without Examination or Knowledge of the Truth? Remember, it is abſolutely the Commandment of God: If a falſe Witneſs riſe up, you ſhall cauſe him to be brought before the Judges; if he be found falſe, he ſhall have the Puniſhment which the Accuſed ſhould have had. It is very ſure for my Lord to accuſe me is my certain Danger, and it may be a means to excuſe himſelf.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. There muſt not ſuch a Gap be opened for the Deſtruction of the King, as would be if we ſhould grant this. You plead hard for your ſelf, but the Laws plead as hard for the King. I did never hear that Courſe to be taken in a Caſe of Treaſon, as to write one to anothetr, or ſpeak one to another during the time of their Impriſonment. There hath been Intelligence between you; and what underhand Practices there may be, I know not. If the Circumſtances agree not with the Evidence, we will not condemn you.

Raleigh. The King deſires nothing but the knowledge of the Truth, and would have no advantage taken by Severity of the Law. If ever we had a gracious King, now we have; I hope, as he is, ſuch are his Miniſters. If there be but a Tryal of five Marks at common Law, a Witneſs muſt be depoſed. Good my Lords, let my Accuſer come Face to Face, and be depoſed.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. You have no Law for it: God forbid any Man ſhould accuſe himſelf upon his Oath.

Attorn. The Law preſumes, a Man will not accuſe himſelf to accuſe another. You are an odious Man: For Cobham thinks his Cauſe the worſe that you are in it. Now you ſhall hear of ſome Stirs to be raiſed in Scotland.

Part of Copley's Examination.

'Alſo Watſon told me, that a ſpecial Perſon 'told him, that Aremberg offer'd to him 1000 'Crowns to be in that Action; and that Brook 'ſaid, the Stirs in Scotland came out of Raleigh's 'Head.

Raleigh. Brook hath been taught his Leſſon.

Ld Hen. Howard. This Examination was taken before me; did I teach him his Leſſon?

Raleigh. I proteſt before God, I meant it not by any Privy Counſellor; but becauſe Mony is ſcant, he will juggle on both ſides.

Raleigh's

Raleigh's Examination.

'The way to invade England, were to begin 'with Stirs in Scotland.

Raleigh. I think ſo ſtill: I have ſpoken it to divers of the Lords of the Council, by way of Diſcourſe and Opinion.

Attorn. Now let us come to thoſe words, of deſtroying the King and his Cubs.

Raleigh. O barbarous! if they, like unnatural Villains, ſhould uſe thoſe words, ſhall I be charged with them? I will not hear it, I was never any Plotter with them againſt my Country, I was never falſe to the Crown of England. I have ſpent 4000 Pounds of my own againſt the Spaniſh Faction, for the Good of my Country. Do you bring the words of theſe helliſh Spiders, Clark, Watſon, and others, againſt me?

Attorn. Thou haſt a Spaniſh Heart, and thy ſelf art a Spider of Hell; for thou confeſſeſt the King to be a moſt ſweet and gracious Prince, and yet haſt conſpired againſt him.

Watſon's Examination read.

'He ſaid, that George Brook told him twice, 'That his Brother, the Lord Cobham, ſaid to him, 'that you are but on the Bye, but Raleigh and I 'are on the Main.

Brook's Examination read.

'Being ask'd what was meant by this Jargon, the 'Bye and the Main? he ſaid, That the Lord 'Cobham told him, that Grey and others were in 'the Bye, he and Raleigh were on the Main. Be-'ing ask'd what Expoſition his Brother made of 'theſe Words? he ſaid, he is loth to repeat it. 'And after ſaith, by the Main was meant the 'taking away of the King and his Iſſue; and 'thinks on his Conſcience, it was infuſed into 'his Brother's Head by Raleigh.

Cobham's Examination read.

'Being ask'd, if ever he had ſaid, It will never 'be well in England, till the King and his Cubs were 'taken away; he ſaid, he had anſwered before, 'and that he would anſwer no more to that Point.

Raleigh. I am not named in all this: There is a Law of two ſorts of Accuſers, one of his own Knowledge, another by Hear-ſay.

E. of Suffolk. See the Caſe of Arnold.

Ld. Ch. Juſt. It is the Caſe of Sir Wil. Thomas, and Sir Nicholas Arnold.

Raleigh. If this may be, you will have any Man's Life in a Week.

Attorn. Raleigh ſaith, that Cobham was in a Paſſion when he ſaid ſo. Would he tell his Brother any thing of Malice againſt Raleigh, whom he lov'd as his Life?

Raleigh. Brook never loved me; until his Brother had accuſed me, he ſaid nothing.

Ld Cecil. We have heard nothing that might lead us to think that Brook accuſed you, he was only in the ſurprizing Treaſon; for by accuſing you he ſhould accuſe his Brother.

Raleigh. He doth not care much for that.

Ld Cecil. I muſt judge the beſt. The Accuſation of his Brother was not voluntary; he pared every thing as much as he could, to ſave his Brother.

Cobham's Examination read.

'He ſaith he had a Book written againſt the 'Title of the King, which he had of Raleigh, and 'that he gave it to his Brother Brook: and Raleigh 'ſaid it was fooliſhly written.

Attorn. After the King came within twelve Miles of London, Cobham never came to ſee him; and intended to travel without ſeeing the Queen and the Prince. Now in this Diſcontentment you gave him the Book, and he gave it his Brother.

Raleigh. I never gave it him, he took it off my Table. For I well remember a little before that time I received a Challenge from Sir Amias Preſton, and for that I did intend to anſwer it, I reſolved to leave my Eſtate ſettled, therefore laid out all my looſe Papers, amongſt which was this Book.

Ld Howard. Where had you this Book?

Raleigh. In the old Lord Treaſurer's Study, after his Death.

Ld Cecil. Did you ever ſhew or make known the Book to me?

Raleigh. No, my Lord.

Ld Cecil. Was it one of the Books which was left to me or my Brother?

Raleigh. I took it out of the Study in my Lord Treaſurer's Houſe in the Strand.

Ld Cecil. After my Father's deceaſe, Sir Walter Raleigh deſired to ſearch for ſome Coſmographical Deſcriptions of the Indies, which he thought were in his Study, and were not to be had in Print, which I granted, and would have truſted Sir Walter Raleigh as ſoon as any Man; tho ſince for ſome Infirmities, the Bands of my Affection to him have been broken; and yet reſerving my Duty to the King my Maſter, which I can by no means diſpenſe with, by God I love him, and have a great Conflict within my ſelf: But I muſt needs ſay, Sir Walter uſed me a little unkindly, to take the Book away without my Knowledge; nevertheleſs, I need make no Apology in behalf of my Father, conſidering how uſeful and neceſſary it is for Privy Counſellors, and thoſe in his Place, to intercept and keep ſuch kind of Writings; for whoſoever ſhould then ſearch his Study, may in all likelihood find all the notorious Libels that were writ againſt the late Queen; and whoſoever ſhould rumage my Study, at leaſt my Cabinet, may find ſeveral againſt the King, our Sovereign Lord, ſince his Acceſſion to the Throne.

Raleigh. The Book was in Manuſcript, and the late Lord Treaſurer had wrote in the beginning of it with his own Hand, theſe Words, This is the Book of Robert Snagg. And I do own, as my Lord Cecil has ſaid, that I believe they may alſo find in my Houſe, almoſt all the Libels that have been writ againſt the late Queen.

Attorn. You were no Privy Counſellor, and I hope never ſhall be.

Ld Cecil. He was not a ſworn Counſellor of State, but he has been called to Conſultations.

Raleigh. I think it a very ſevere Interpretation of the Law, to bring me within Compaſs of Treaſon for this Book, writ ſo long ago, of which no body had read any more than the Heads of the Chapters, and which was burnt by G. Brook without my Privity; admitting I had delivered the ſame to the Lord Cobham, without allowing or approving, but diſcommending it, according to Cobham's firſt Accuſation: and put the Caſe, I ſhould come to my Lord Cecil, as I have often done, and find a ſtronger with him, with a Packet of Libels, and my Lord ſhould let me have one or two of them to peruſe: This I hope is no Treaſon.

Attorn.

Attorn. I obſerve there was Intelligence between you and Cobham in the Tower; for after he ſaid, it was againſt the King's Title, he denied it again.

Sir Wil. Wade. Firſt my Lord Cobham confeſſeth it, and after he had ſubſcribed it, he revoked it again: To me he always ſaid, that the Drift of it was againſt the King's Title.

Raleigh. I proteſt before God, and all his Works, I gave him not the Book.

Nota, Sir Robert Wroth ſpeaketh, or whiſpereth ſomething ſecretly.

Attorn. My Lords, I muſt complain of Sir Robert Wroth, he ſays this Evidence is not material.

Sir Rob. Wroth. I never ſpake the words.

Attorn. Let Mr. Serjeant Philips teſtify, whether he heard him ſay the words or no.

Ld Cecil. I will give my Word for Sir Robert Wroth.

Sir Rob. Wroth. I will ſpeak as truly as you, Mr. Attorney, for by God I never ſpake it.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Wherefore ſhould this Book be burnt?

Raleigh. I burned it not.

Serj. Philips. You preſented your Friend with it, when he was diſcontented. If it had been before the Queen's Death, it had been a leſs matter; but you gave it him preſently when he came from the King, which was the time of his Diſcontentment.

Raleigh. Here is a Book ſuppoſed to be Treaſonable; I never read it, commended it, or delivered it, nor urged it.

Attorn. Why this is cunning.

Raleigh. Every thing that doth make for me is cunning, and every thing that maketh againſt me is probable.

Attorn. Lord Cobham ſaith, that Kemiſh came to him with a Letter torn, and did wiſh him not to be diſmay'd, for one Witneſs could not hurt him.

Raleigh. This poor Man hath been cloſe Priſoner theſe eighteen Weeks; he was offered the Rack to make him confeſs. I never ſent any ſuch Meſſage by him, I only writ to him, to tell him what I had done with Mr. Attorney; having of his at that time a great Pearl and a Diamond.

Ld H. Howard. No Circumſtance moveth me more than this. Kemiſh was never on the Rack, the King gave charge that no Rigour ſhould be uſed.

Commiſſioners. We proteſt before God, there was no ſuch matter intended to our knowledges.

Raleigh. Was not the Keeper of the Rack ſent for, and he threatned with it?

Sir W. Wade. When Mr. Sollicitor and my ſelf examined Kemiſh, we told him he deſerved the Rack, but did not threaten him with it.

Commiſ. It was more than we knew.

Cobham's Examination read.

He ſaith, Kemiſh brought him a Letter from Raleigh, and that part which was concerning the Lords of the Council was rent out; the Letter contained that he was examined, and cleared himſelf of all; and that the Lord H. Howard ſaid, becauſe he was diſcontent, he was fit to be in the Action. And further, that Kemiſh ſaid to him from Raleigh, that he ſhould be of good Comfort, for one Witneſs could not condemn a Man for Treaſon.

Ld Cecil. Cobham was ask'd, whether, and when he heard from you? he ſaid, every day.

Raleigh. Kemiſh added more, I never bade him ſpeak thoſe Words.

Note, Mr. Attorny here offered to interrupt him.

Ld Cecil. It is his laſt Diſcourſe. Give him leave, Mr. Attorney.

Raleigh. I am accuſed concerning Arabella, concerning Mony out of Spain. My Lord Chief Juſtice ſaith, a Man may be condemned with one Witneſs, yea, without any Witneſs. Cobham is guilty of many things, Conſcientia mille Teſtes; he hath accuſed himſelf, what can he hope for but Mercy? My Lords, vouchſafe me this Grace: Let him be brought, being alive, and in the Houſe; let him avouch any of theſe things, I will confeſs the whole Indictment, and renounce the King's Mercy.

Ld Cecil. Here hath been a touch of the Lady Arabella Stuart, a near Kinſwoman of the King's. Let us not ſcandal the innocent by Confuſion of Speech: She is as innocent of all theſe things as I, or any Man here; only ſhe received a Letter from my Lord Cobham, to prepare her; which ſhe laugh'd at, and immediately ſent it to the King. So far was ſhe from Diſcontentment, that ſhe laugh'd him to ſcorn. But you ſee how far the Count of Aremberg did conſent.

The Lord Admiral (Nottingham) being by in a Standing, with the Lady Arabella, ſpake to the Court.

The Lady doth here proteſt upon her Salvation, that ſhe never dealt in any of theſe things; and ſo ſhe willed me to tell the Court.

Ld Cecil. The Lord Cobham wrote to my Lady Arabella, to know if he might come to ſpeak with her, and gave her to underſtand, that there were ſome about the King, that laboured to diſgrace her; ſhe doubted it was but a Trick. But Brook ſaith, his Brother moved him to procure Arabella to write Letters to the King of Spain; but he ſaith, he never did it.

Raleigh. The Lord Cobham hath accuſed me, you ſee in what manner he hath forſworn it. Were it not for his Accuſation, all this were nothing. Let him be asked, if I knew of the Letter which Lawrency brought to him from Aremberg. Let me ſpeak for my Life, it can be no hurt for him to be brought; he dares not accuſe me. If you grant me not this Favour, I am ſtrangely uſed. Campian was not denied to have his Accuſers face to face.

Ld Ch. Juſt. Since he muſt needs have Juſtice, the acquitting of his old Friend may move him to ſpeak otherwiſe than the Truth.

Raleigh. If I had been the Infuſer of all theſe Treaſons into him; you Gentlemen of the Jury, mark this, he ſaid I have been the Cauſe of all his Miſeries, and the Deſtruction of his Houſe, and that all Evil hath happened unto him, by my wicked Counſel. If this be true, whom hath he cauſe to accuſe, and to be revenged on, but on me? And I know him to be as revengeful as any Man on Earth.

Attorn. He is a Party, and may not come; the Law is againſt it.

Raleigh. It is a Toy to tell me of Law; I defy ſuch Law, I ſtand on the Fact.

Ld Cecil. I am afraid my often ſpeaking (who am inferiour to my Lords here preſent) will make the the World think I delight to hear my ſelf talk. My Affection to you, Sir Walter Raleigh, was not extinguiſhed, but ſlaked, in regard of your deſerts. You know the Law of the Realm (to which your Mind doth not conteſt) that my Lord Cobham cannot be brought.

Raleigh. He may be, my Lord.

Ld Cecil. But dare you challenge it?

Raleigh. No.

Ld. Cecil. You ſay that my Lord Cobham, your main Accuſer, muſt come to accuſe you. You ſay, he hath retracted: I ſay, many particulars are not retracted. What the Validity of all this is, is merely left to the Jury. Let me ask you this, If my Lord Cobham will ſay you were the only Inſtigator of him to proceed in the Treaſons, dare you put your ſelf on this?

Raleigh. If he will ſpeak it before God and the King, that ever I knew of Arabella's Matter, or the Mony out of Spain, or of the ſurpriſing Treaſon; I put my ſelf on it, God's Will and the King's be done with me.

Ld H. Howard. How! if he ſpeak things equivalent to that you have ſaid?

Raleigh. Yes, in a main Point.

Ld Cecil. If he ſay, you have been the Inſtigator of him to deal with the Spaniſh King, had not the Council cauſe to draw you hither?

Raleigh. I put my ſelf on it.

Ld Cecil. Then Sir Walter Raleigh, call upon God, and prepare your ſelf; for I do verily believe my Lords will prove this. Excepting your faults (I call them no worſe) by God I am your Friend. The Heat and Paſſion in you, and the Attorney's Zeal in the King's Service makes me ſpeak this.

Raleigh. Whoſoever is the Workman, it is reaſon he ſhould give an account of his Work to the Workmaſter. But let it be proved that he acquainted me with any of his Conferences with Aremberg: he would ſurely have given me ſome account.

Ld Cecil. That follows not: If I ſet you on work, and you give me no account, am I therefore innocent?

Attorn. For the Lady Arabella, I ſaid ſhe was never acquainted with the matter. Now that Raleigh had Conference in all theſe Treaſons, it is manifeſt: The Jury hath heard the matter. There is one Dyer, a Pilot, that being in Lisbon, met with a Portugal Gentleman, who ask'd him if the King of England was crown'd yet? To whom he anſwered, I think not yet, but he ſhall be ſhortly. Nay, ſaith the Portugal, that ſhall never be, for his Throat will be cut by Don Raleigh and Don Cobham before he be crowned.

Dyer was called and ſworn, and delivered this Evidence.

Dyer. I came to a Merchant's Houſe in Lisbon, to ſee a Boy that I had there; there came a Gentleman into the Houſe, and enquiring what Countryman I was, I ſaid, an Engliſhman. Whereupon he asked me, if the King was crowned? And I anſwered, No, but that I hoped he ſhould be ſo ſhortly. Nay, ſaith he, he ſhall never be crowned; for Don Raleigh and Don Cobham will cut his Throat e'er that Day come.

Raleigh. What infer you upon this?

Attorn. That your Treaſon hath Wings.

Raleigh. If Cobham did practiſe with Aremberg, how could it not but be known in Spain? Why did they name the Duke of Buckingham with Jack Straw's Treaſon, and the Duke of York with Jack Cade, but that it was to countenance his Treaſon?

Conſider you Gentlemen of the Jury, there is no Cauſe ſo doubtful which the King's Counſel cannot make good againſt the Law. Conſider my Diſability, and their Ability: They prove nothing againſt me, only they bring the Accuſation of my Lord Cobham, which he hath lamented and repented as heartily, as if it had been for an horrible Murder: for he knew that all this Sorrow which ſhould come to me, is by his means. Preſumptions muſt proceed from precedent or ſubſequent Facts. I have ſpent 40000 Crowns againſt the Spaniard. I had not purchaſed 40 Pound a Year. If I had died in Guiana, I had not left 300 Marks a Year to my Wife and Son. I that have always condemned the Spaniſh Faction, methinks it is a ſtrange thing that now I ſhould affect it! Remember what St. Auſtin ſays, Sic judicate tanquam ab alio mox judicandi; unus judex, unum Tribunal. If you would be contented on Preſumptions to be delivered up to be ſlaughtered, to have your Wives and Children turned into the Streets to beg their Bread; if you would be contented to be ſo judged, judge ſo of me.

Serj. Philips. I hope to make this ſo clear, as that the Wit of Man ſhall have no Colour to anſwer it. The Matter is Treaſon in the higheſt Degree, the End to deprive the King of his Crown. The particular Treaſons are theſe: Firſt, To raiſe up Rebellion, and to effect that, to procure Mony; to raiſe up Tumults in Scotland, by divulging a treaſonable Book againſt the King's Right to the Crown; the Purpoſe, to take away the Life of his Majeſty and his Iſſue. My Lord Cobham confeſſeth Sir Walter Raleigh to be guilty of all theſe Treaſons. The Queſtion is, Whether he be guilty as joining with him, or inſtigating of him? The Courſe to prove this, was by my Lord Cobham's Accuſation. If that be true, he is guilty; if not, he is clear. So whether Cobham ſay true, or Raleigh, that is the Queſtion. Raleigh hath no Anſwer, but the Shadow of as much Wit, as the Wit of Man can deviſe. He uſeth his bare Denial; the Denial of a Defendant muſt not move the Jury. In the Star-Chamber, or in the Chancery, for matter of Title, if the Defendant be called in queſtion, his Denial on his Oath is no Evidence to the Court to clear him, he doth it in propria cauſa; therefore much leſs in Matters of Treaſon. Cobham's Teſtification againſt him before then, and ſince, hath been largely diſcourſed.

Raleigh. If Truth be conſtant, and Conſtancy be in Truth, why hath he forſworn that that he hath ſaid? You have not proved any one thing againſt me by direct Proofs, but all by Circumſtances.

Attorn. Have you done? The King muſt have the laſt.

Raleigh. Nay, Mr. Attorney, he which ſpeaketh for his Life, muſt ſpeak laſt. Falſe Repetitions and Miſtakings muſt not mar my Cauſe. You ſhould ſpeak ſecundum allegata & probata. I appeal to God and the King in this Point, whether Cobham's Accuſation be ſufficient to condemn me?

Attorn. The King's Safety and your Clearing cannot agree. I proteſt before God, I never knew a clearer Treaſon.

Raleigh. I never had Intelligence with Cobham ſince I came to the Tower.

Attorn. Go to, I will lay thee upon thy Back, for the confidenteſt Traytor that ever came at a Bar. Why ſhould you take 8000 Crowns for a Peace?

Ld.

Ld Cecil. Be not ſo impatient, good Mr. Attorney, give him leave to ſpeak.

Attorney. If I may not be patiently heard, you will encourage Traitors, and diſcourage us. I am the King's ſworn Servant, and muſt ſpeak: If he be Guilty, he is a Traitor; if not, deliver him.

Nota, Here Mr. Attorney ſat down in a Chafe, and would ſpeak no more, until the Commiſſioners urged and intreated him. After much ado, he went on, and made a long Repetition of all the Evidence, for the Direction of the Jury; and at the repeating of ſome things, Sir Walter Raleigh interrupted him, and ſaid, he did him wrong.

Attorney. Thou art the moſt vile and execrable Traitor that ever lived.

Raleigh. You ſpeak indiſcreetly, barbarouſly and uncivilly.

Attorney. I want Words ſufficient to expreſs thy viperous Treaſons.

Raleigh. I think you want Words indeed, for you have ſpoken one thing half a dozen times.

Attorney. Thou art an odious Fellow, thy Name is hateful to all the Realm of England for thy Pride.

Raleigh. It will go near to prove a meaſuring Caſt between you and me, Mr. Attorney.

Attorney. Well, I will now make it appear to the World, that there never lived a viler Viper upon the face of the Earth than thou. And therewithal he drew a Letter out of his Pocket, ſaying further, My Lords, you ſhall ſee, this is an Agent that hath writ a Treatiſe againſt the Spaniard, and hath ever ſo deteſted him; this is he that hath ſpent ſo much Money againſt him in Service; and yet you ſhall all ſee whether his Heart be not wholly Spaniſh. The Lord Cobham, who of his own Nature was a good and honourable Gentleman, till overtaken by this Wretch, now finding his Conſcience heavily burdened with ſome Courſes which the Subtilty of this Traitor had drawn him into; my Lords, he could be at no reſt with himſelf, nor quiet in his thoughts, until he was eaſed of that heavy Weight: out of which Paſſion of his Mind, and Diſcharge of his Duty to his Prince, and his Conſcience to God; taking it upon his Salvation that he wrote nothing but the Truth, with his own Hands he wrote this Letter. Now, Sir, you ſhall ſee whether you had Intelligence with Cobham, within four days before he came to the Tower. If he be wholly Spaniſh, that deſired a Penſion of 1500 l. a Year from Spain, that Spain by him might have Intelligence, then Raleigh is a Traitor: He hath taken an Apple, and pinned a Letter unto it, and threw it into my Lord Cobham's Window; the Contents whereof were this, It is doubtful, whether we ſhall be proceeded with or no, perhaps you ſhall not be tried. This was to get a Retractation. Oh! it was Adam's Apple, whereby the Devil did deceive him. Further, he wrote thus, Do not as my Lord of Eſſex did; take heed of a Preacher; for by his Perſuaſion he confeſſed, and made himſelf guilty. I doubt not but this day God ſhall have as great a Conqueſt by this Traitor, and the Son of God ſhall be as much glorified, as when it was ſaid, Viciſti Galilæe; you know my Meaning. What though Cobham retracted, yet he could not reſt nor ſleep till he confirmed it again. If this be not enough to prove him a Traitor, the King my Maſter ſhall not live three years to an end.

Nota, Here Mr. Atorney produced the Lord Cobham's Letter, and as he read it, inſerted ſome Speeches.

'I Have thought fit to ſet down this to my 'Lords, wherein I proteſt on my Soul to write 'nothing but the Truth. I am now come near 'the period of my time, therefore I confeſs the 'whole Truth before God and his Angels. Ra- 'leigh, four days before I came from the Tow-'er, cauſed an Apple (Eve's Apple) to be thrown 'in at my Chamber-Window; the effect of it was, 'to intreat me to right the Wrong that I had done 'him, in ſaying, that I ſhould have come home by Jer-'ſey; which under my hand to him I have retracted. 'His firſt Letter I anſwered not, which was thrown 'in the ſame manner; wherein he prayed me to 'write him a Letter, which I did. He ſent me 'word, that the Judges met at Mr. Attorney's 'Houſe, and that there was good hope the Pro-'ceedings againſt us ſhould be ſtayed: He ſent 'me another time a little Tobacco. At Aremberg's 'coming, Raleigh was to have procured a Penſion 'of fifteen hundred Pounds a Year; for which he 'promiſed, that no Action ſhould be againſt Spain, 'the Low-Countries, or the Indies, but he would 'give knowledge before-hand. He told me, the 'States had Audience with the King. (Attor-ney, Ah! is not this a Spaniſh Heart in an Engliſh Body?) 'He hath been the original Cauſe 'of my Ruin; for I had no dealing with Aremberg, 'but by his Inſtigation. He hath alſo been the 'cauſe of my Diſcontentment; he adviſed me, 'not to be overtaken with Preachers, as Eſſex 'was; and that the King would better allow of 'a conſtant Denial, than to accuſe any.

Attorney. Oh damnable Atheiſt! He hath learned ſome Text of Scripture to ſerve his own purpoſe, but falſly alledg'd. He counſels him not to be counſelled by Preachers, as Eſſex was: He died the Child of God, God honoured him at his Death; thou waſt by when he died: Et Lupus & turpes inſtant morientibus Urſæ. He died indeed for his Offence. The King himſelf ſpake theſe Words; He that ſhall ſay, Eſſex died not for Treaſon, is puniſhable.

Raleigh. You have heard a ſtrange Tale of a ſtrange Man. Now he thinks, he hath Matter enough to deſtroy me; but the King and all of you ſhall witneſs, by our Deaths, which of us was the Ruin of the other. I bid a poor Fellow throw in the Letter at his Window, written to this purpoſe; You know you have undone me, now write three Lines to juſtify me. In this I will die, that he hath done me wrong: Why did not he acquaint him with my Diſpoſitions?

Ld Ch. Juſt. But what ſay you now of the Letter, and the Penſion of 1500 l. per annum?

Raleigh. I ſay, that Cobham is a baſe, diſhonourable, poor Soul.

Attorney. Is he baſe? I return it into thy Throat on his behalf: But for thee, he had been a good Subject.

Ld Ch. Juſt. I perceive you are not ſo clear a Man, as you have proteſted all this while; for you ſhould have diſcovered theſe Matters to the King.

Nota, Here Raleigh pulled a Letter out of his Pocket, which the Lord Cobham had written to him, and deſired my Lord Cecil to read it, becauſe he only knew his Hand; the effect of it was as follows:

Cobham's Letter of Juſtification to Raleigh.

'Seeing my ſelf ſo near my End, for the diſ-
'charge of my own Conſcience, and freeing my
'ſelf from your Blood, which elſe will cry Ven-
'geance againſt me; I proteſt upon my Salvation,
'I never practiſed with Spain by your Procure-
'ment; God ſo comfort me in this my Affliction,
'as you are a true Subject, for any thing that I 'know. I will ſay as Daniel, Purus ſum a ſanguine
'hujus. So God have mercy upon my Soul, as I 'know no Treaſon by you.

Raleigh. Now I wonder how many Souls this Man hath! He damns one in this Letter, and another in that.

Here was much ado; Mr. Attorney alledged, that his laſt Letter was politickly and cunningly urged from the Lord Cobham, and that the firſt was ſimply the Truth; and that leſt it ſhould ſeem doubtful that the firſt Letter was drawn from my Lord Cobham by promiſe of Mercy, or hope of Favour, the Lord Chief Juſtice willed that the Jury might herein be ſatisfied.

Whereupon the Earl of Devonſhire delivered, that the ſame was meer voluntary, and not extracted from the Lord Cobham upon any Hopes or Promiſe of Pardon.

Nota, This was the laſt Evidence: whereupon a Marſhal was ſworn to keep the Jury private. The Jury departed, and ſtaid not a quarter of an hour, but returned, and gave their Verdict, Guilty.

Serj. Heale demanded Judgment againſt the Priſoner.

Clerk of the Crown. Sir Walter Raleigh, Thou haſt been indicted, arraigned, and pleaded, Not Guilty, for all theſe ſeveral Treaſons; and for Tryal thereof, haſt put thy ſelf upon thy Country; which Country are theſe, who have found thee Guilty. What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment and Execution of Death ſhould not paſs againſt thee?

Raleigh. My Lords, the Jury have found me Guilty: They muſt do as they are directed. I can ſay nothing why Judgment ſhould not proceed. You ſee whereof Cobham hath accuſed me: You remember his Proteſtations, thas I was never Guilty. I deſire the King ſhould know of the Wrongs done unto me ſince I came hither.

Ld Ch. Juſt. You have had no Wrong, Sir Walter.

Raleigh. Yes, of Mr. Attorney. I deſire my Lords to remember three things to the King: 1. I was accuſed to be a Practiſer with Spain: I never knew that my Lord Cobham meant to go thither; I will ask no Mercy at the King's hands, if he will affirm it. 2. I never knew of the Practice with Arabella. 3. I never knew of my Lord Cobham's Practice with Aremberg, nor of the ſurprizing Treaſon.

Ld Ch. Juſt. In my Conſcience, I am perſuaded that Cobham hath accuſed you truly. You cannot deny, but that you were dealt with to have a Penſion to be a Spy for Spain; therefore you are not ſo true to the King as you have proteſted your ſelf to be.

Raleigh. I ſubmit my ſelf to the King's Mercy; I know his Mercy is greater than my Offence. I recommend my Wife, and Son of tender years, unbrought up, to his Compaſſion.

Ld Ch. Juſt. I thought I ſhould never have ſeen this Day, to have ſtood in this Place to give Sentence of Death againſt you; becauſe I thought it impoſſible, that one of ſo great Parts ſhould have fallen ſo grievouſly. God hath beſtowed on you many Benefits. You had been a Man fit and able to have ſerved the King in good Place. You had brought your ſelf into a good State of Living, if you had enter'd into a good Conſideration of your Eſtate, and not ſuffered your own Wit to have intrapped your ſelf, you might have lived in good Comfort. It is beſt for Man not to ſeek to climb too high, leſt he fall; nor yet to creep too low, leſt he be trodden on. It was the Poeſy of the wiſeſt and greateſt Counſellor of our time in England, In medio ſpatio mediocria firma locantur. You might have lived well with 3000 l. a Year, for ſo I have heard your Revenues to be. I know nothing might move you to be diſcontented; but if you had been down, you know Fortune's Wheel, when it is turned about, riſeth again. I never heard that the King took away any thing from you, but the Captainſhip of the Guard, which he did with very good reaſon, to have one of his own Knowledge, whom he might truſt, in that Place. You have been taken for a wiſe Man, and ſo have ſhewed Wit enough this day. Again, for Monopolies for Wine, &c. if the King had ſaid, It is a Matter that offends my People, ſhould I burden them for your private Good? I think you could not well take it hardly, that his Subjects were eaſed, tho by your private Hindrance. Two Vices have lodged chiefly in you; one is an eager Ambition, the other corrupt Covetouſneſs. Ambition, in deſiring to be advanced to equal Grace and Favour, as you have been before-time; that Grace you had then, you got not in a Day or Year. For your Covetouſneſs, I am ſorry to hear that a Gentleman of your Wealth ſhould become a baſe Spy for the Enemy, which is the vileſt of all other; wherein on my Conſcience Cobham hath ſaid true: by it you would have increaſed your Living 1500 l. a Year. This Covetouſneſs is like a Canker, that eats the Iron Place where it lives. Your Caſe being thus, let it not grieve you, if I ſpeak a little out of Zeal, and Love to your Good. You have been taxed by the World, with the Defence of the moſt heatheniſh and blaſphemous Opinions, which I liſt not to repeat, becauſe Chriſtian Ears cannot endure to hear them, nor the Authors and Maintainers of them ſuffered to live in any Chriſtian Commonwealth. You know what Men ſaid of Harpool. You ſhall do well, before you go out of the World, to give Satisfaction therein, and not to die with theſe Imputations on you. Let not any Devil perſuade you to think there is no Eternity in Heaven: for if you think thus, you ſhall find Eternity in Hell-Fire. In the firſt Accuſation of my Lord Cobham, I obſerved his Manner of ſpeaking; I proteſt before the Living God, I am perſuaded he ſpoke nothing but the Truth. You wrote, that he ſhould not in any caſe confeſs any thing to a Preacher, telling him an Example of my Lord of Eſſex, that noble Earl that is gone; who, if he had not been carried away with others, had lived in Honour to this day among us: He confeſſed his Offences, and obtained Mercy of the Lord, for I am verily perſuaded in my Heart, he died a worthy Servant of God. Your Conceit of not confeſſing any thing, is very inhuman and wicked. In this World is the time of confeſſing, that that we may be absolv'd at the Day of Judgment. You have shewed a fearful Sign of denying God, in advising a Man not to confess the Truth. It now comes in my mind, why you may not have your Accuser come face to face: for such an one is easily brought to retract, when he seeth there is no hope of his own Life. It is dangerous that any Traitors should have Access to, or Conference with one another; when they see themselves must die, they will think it best to have their Fellow live, that he may commit the like Treason again, and so in some sort seek Revenge.

Now it resteth to pronounce the Judgment, which I wish you had not been this day to have received of me: For if the Fear of God in you had been answerable to your other great Parts, you might have lived to have been a singular good Subject. I never saw the like Tryal, and hope I shall never see the like again.

The Judgment.

But since you have been found guilty of these horrible Treasons, the Judgment of this Court is, That you shall be had from hence to the Place whence you came, there to remain until the day of Execution; and from thence you shall be drawn upon a Hurdle through the open Streets to the Place of Execution, there to be hanged and cut down alive, and your Body shall be opened, your Heart and Bowels pluck'd out, and your Privy Members cut off, and thrown into the Fire before your Eyes; then your Head to be strucken off from your Body, and your Body shall be divided into four Quarters, to be disposed of at the King's Pleasure: And God have Mercy upon your Soul.

Sir Walter Raleigh besought the Earl of Devonshire, and the Lords, to be Suiters on his behalf to the King; that in regard of Places of Estimation he did bear in his Majesty's time, the Rigour of his Judgment might be qualified, and his Death be honourable, and not ignominious.

Wherein after they had promised him to do their utmost Endeavours, the Court rose, and the Prisoner was carried up again to the Castle.

Fourteen Years Sir Walter had spent in the Tower, and being weary of a State wherein he could be only serviceable by his Pen, but not in a Capacity of serving and enriching his Country any other way, (of whom Prince Henry would say, that no King but his Father would keep such a Bird in a Cage;) at length he fell upon an Enterprize of a Golden Mine in Guiana in the Southern Parts of America.

The Proposition of this was presented and recommended to his Majesty by Sir Ralph Winwood the Secretary of State, as a Matter not in the Air, or Speculative, but Real, and of Certainty: for that Sir Walter had seen of the Ore of the Mine, and tried the Richness of it, having gotten a Pound from thence by the hands of Captain Kemish's antient Servant.

Sir Ralph Winwood's Recommendations of the Design, and the earnest Sollicitations for his Enlargement by the Queen and Prince, and the French Leiger (with much affection to his Deserts, not without some politick Designs on Spain) together with the Asseverations of Sir Walter of the Truth of the Mine, work'd upon his Majesty, who thought himself in honour obliged, nay, in a manner ingaged (as the Declaration which he published after the Death of Sir Walter tells us) not to deny unto his People the Adventure and Hope of so great Riches to be sought and atchieved at the Charge of Voluntiers, especially since it stood so well with his Majesty's Politick and Magnanimous Courses in these his flourishing times of Peace, to nourish and encourage noble and generous Enterprizes for Plantations, Discoveries, and opening of a new Trade.

Count Gondamor (an active and subtle Instrument to serve his Master's ends) took alarm at this, and represented to his Majesty the Enterprize of Sir Walter to be hostile and predatory, intending a breach of the Peace between the two Crowns. But notwithstanding, Power at last is granted to Sir Walter to set forth Ships and Men for that Service. However, the King commanded him, upon pain of his Allegiance, to give him under his hand (promising, on the Word of a King, to keep it secret) the Number of his Men, the Burden and Strength of his Ships, together with the Country and River which he was to enter: Which being done accordingly by Sir Walter, that very original Paper was found in the Spanish Governor's Closet at St. Thomas's. So active were the Spanish Ministers, that advertisement was sent to Spain, and thence to the Indies, before the English Fleet got out of the Thames.

But as we have just Cause to admire the more than usual Activity of the Spanish Agents, so may we wonder no less at the Miscarriage of his Majesty's present Ministers, who, notwithstanding he had pass'd his Royal Word to the contrary, yet they did help Count Gondamor to that very Paper; so much both King and Court were at Gondamor's Service.

A Commission indeed is granted, but by Gondamor's means is limited, That the Fleet should commit no Outrages upon the King of Spain's Subjects by Land, unless they began first.

With this Commission, and the Company of several brave Captains, and other Knights and Gentlemen of great Blood and Worth, he set out in quest of the Mine, with a compleat Fleet of twelve Sail; letting fall a Speech at his Departure, which was rather an Argument of his Wit than his Wisdom; That his whole History of the World had not the like Precedent, Of a King's Prisoner to purchase Freedom, and his Bosom-Favourite to have the Halter; but in Scripture, Mordecai and Haman: Meaning himself and the Earl of Somerset. To which he was told, that the King replied, He might die in that Deceit. Which he did, for Somerset was saved. Of whom was made good what Sir Walter used to say of Favourites, That Minions were not so happy as vulgar Judgments thought them, being frequently commanded to uncomely, and sometimes to unnatural Employments.

On the 17th of November, he arriv'd at Guiana, having been much retarded by contrary Winds, and having lost several of his Voluntiers in the Voyage, by a violent Calenture.

When Sir Walter was returned to Plymouth, Sir Lewis Steukly, Vice-Admiral of the County of Devon, seiz'd him, being commission'd by his Majesty to bring him to London; which could add no Terror to a Person who could expect nothing less.

When he was brought to London, he was permitted the confinement of his own House: But finding the Court wholly guided by Gondamor, he could hope for little Mercy; therefore he wisely contriv'd the design of an Escape into France; which Sir Lewis Steukly betrayed.

The Voyage proving unſucceſsful, King James was willing to ſacrifice the Life of Sir Walter to the Advancement of Peace with Spain, but not upon ſuch grounds as the Embaſſador had deſign'd: for he deſir'd a Judgment upon the pretended Breach of Peace, that by this Occaſion he might ſlily gain from the Engliſh an Acknowledgement of his Maſter's Right in thoſe Places, and hereafter both ſtop their Mouths, and quench their Heat and Valour.

Hence upon his old Condemnation (for having had Experience upon a former Tryal, they cared not to run the hazard of a ſecond) he was ſentenc'd; the old Judgment being only averred againſt him: and from Weſtminſter-Hall he was carried to the Gate-houſe; and from thence the next morning to the Parliament-Yard, where he had the favour of the Ax granted him.

But all Perſons have wonder'd how that old Sentence, that had lain dormant ſixteen years and upwards againſt Sir Walter, could have been made uſe of to take off his Head afterwards: Conſidering the then Lord Chancellor Verulam told him poſitively, (as Sir Walter was acquainting him with that Proffer of Sir William St. Geon for a Pecuniary Pardon, which might have been obtained for a leſs Sum than his Guiana Preparations amounted to) in theſe words: 'Sir, the Knee-'Timber of your Voyage is Money; ſpare your 'Purſe in this Particular, for upon my life you 'have a ſufficient Pardon for all that is paſſed al-'ready, the King having, under his Broad Seal, 'made you Admiral of your Fleet, and given you 'power of the Martial Law over the Officers 'and Soldiers.

It was the Opinion of moſt Lawyers, That he, who by his Majeſty's Patent had power of Life and Death over the King's Leige People, ſhould be eſteemed or judged Rectus in Curia, and free from all old Convictions

But Sir Walter hath made the beſt Defence for his Guiana Actions, in his Letter to his Majeſty, which I have here inſerted.

May it pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſty,

'IN my Journey outward-bound, I had my 'Men murdered at the Iſland, and yet ſpared 'to take Revenge: If I did diſcharge ſome Spaniſh 'Barques taken, without Spoil; if I did forbear 'all parts of the Spaniſh Indies, wherein I might 'have taken twenty of their Towns on the Sea-'Coaſts, and did only follow the Enterprize I 'undertook for Guiana, where, without any Di-'rections from me, a Spaniſh Village was burnt, 'which was new ſet up within three Miles of the 'Mine; by your Majeſty's favour, I find no rea-'ſon why the Spaniſh Embaſſador ſhould complain 'of me. If it were lawful for the Spaniards to 'murder twenty-ſix Engliſhmen, binding them 'back to back, and then cutting their Throats, 'when they had traded with them a whole month, 'and came to them on the Land without ſo much 'as one Sword; and that it may not be lawful 'for your Majeſty's Subjects being charged firſt 'by them, to repel Force by Force; we may juſt-'ly ſay, O miſerable Engliſh! If Parker and Me-'tham took Campeach and other Places in the Hon-'duraes, ſeated in the Heart of the Spaniſh Indies, 'burn'd Towns, killed the Spaniards, and had 'nothing ſaid to them at their Return, and my 'ſelf forbore to look into the Indies becauſe I 'would not offend; I may juſtly ſay, O miſerable 'Sir Walter Raleigh! If I ſpent my poor Eſtate, 'loſt my Son, ſuffered by Sickneſs, and otherwiſe, 'a world of Miſeries; if I have reſiſted with the 'manifeſt hazard of my Life, the Robberies and 'Spoils which my Company would have made; 'if when I was poor, I might have made my ſelf 'rich; if when I had gotten my Liberty, which 'all Men, and Nature itſelf do ſo much prize, 'I voluntarily loſt it; if, when I was ſure of my 'Life, I render'd it again; if I might elſewhere 'have ſold my Ship and Goods, and put five or 'ſix thouſand Pounds in my Pocket, and yet have 'brought her into England: I beſeech your Ma-'jeſty to believe, that all this I have done, be-'cauſe it ſhould not be ſaid to your Majeſty, that 'your Majeſty had given Liberty and Truſt to a 'Man whoſe end was but the recovery of his 'Liberty, and who had betrayed your Majeſty's 'Truſt. My Mutineers told me, that if I return-'ed for England I ſhould be undone; but I be-'lieved in your Majeſty's Goodneſs, more than 'in all their Arguments. Sure I am, that I am 'the firſt that being free, and able to enrich my 'ſelf, have embraced Poverty and Peril: And as 'ſure I am, that my Example ſhall make me the 'laſt. But your Majeſty's Wiſdom and Good-'neſs I have made my Judge; who have ever been, 'and ſhall ever be,

Your Majeſty's moſt humble Vaſſal,

Walter Raleigh.

But this Apology, though never ſo perſuaſive, could not ſatisfy Gondamor's Rage, who was reſolv'd to ſacrifice the only Favourite left of Queen Elizabeth, to the Spaniſh Intereſt: And who, as Osburn remarks, was the only Perſon of Eſſex's Enemies that died lamented; and the only Man of Note left alive, that had help'd to beat the Spaniard in the Year 1588.

Upon Thurſday the 29th of Octob. 1618. Sir Walter Raleigh was conveyed by the Sheriffs of London to a Scaffold in the Old Palace-Yard at Weſtminſter, where he was executed about nine of the Clock in the morning of the ſame day.

The Effect of the Indictment legal.

THAT whereas our Sovereign Lord the King had, by the Advice and Aſſent of his Council, for divers weighty and urgent Occaſions concerning his Majeſty, the State, and Defence of the Church and Kingdom of England, appointed a Parliament to be holden at his City of Weſtminſter; That Henry Garnet, Superior of the Jeſuits within the Realm of England, (called alſo by the ſeveral names of Wally, Darcy, Roberts, Farmer, and Henry Philips) Oſwald Teſmond Jeſuit, otherwiſe called Oſwald Greenwell, John Gerrard Jeſuit, (called alſo by the ſeveral names of Lee and Brooke) Robert Winter, Thomas Winter, Gentlemen, Guy Fawkes Gent. otherwiſe called Guy Johnſon, Robert Keyes Gent. and Thomas Bates Yeoman, late Servant to Robert Catesby Eſquire; together with the ſaid Robert Catesby and Thomas Percy Eſquires, John Wright and Chriſtopher Wright Gentlemen, in open Rebellion and Inſurrection againſt his Majeſty, lately ſlain, and Francis Treſham Eſq; lately dead; as falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, did traitorouſly meet and aſſemble themſelves together; and being ſo met, the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, and other Jeſuits, did maliciouſly, falſly, and traitorouſly move and perſuade as well the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, That our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, the Nobility, Clergy, and whole Commonalty of the Realm of England, (Papiſts excepted) were Hereticks; and that all Hereticks were accurſed and excommunicate; and that none Heretick could be a King; but that it was lawful and meritorious to kill our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and all other Hereticks within this Realm of England, for the Advancing and Enlargement of the pretended and uſurped Authority and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome, and for the reſtoring of the ſuperſtitious Romiſh Religion within this Realm of England. To which traitorous Perſuaſions, the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, Thomas Bates, Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, traitorouſly did yield their Aſſents: And that thereupon the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, and divers other Jeſuits; Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as alſo the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, traitorouſly amongſt themſelves did conclude and agree, with Gunpowder, as it were with one blaſt, ſuddenly, traitorouſly and barbarouſly to blow up and tear in pieces our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, the excellent, virtuous, and gracious Queen Anne, his deareſt Wife, the moſt noble Prince Henry, their eldeſt Son, and future Hope and Joy of England; and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Reverend Judges of the Realm, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of Parliament, and divers other faithful Subjects and Servants of the King in the ſaid Parliament, for the Cauſes aforeſaid, to be aſſembled in the Houſe of Parliament; and all them, without any reſpect of Majeſty, Dignity, Degree, Sex, Age or Place, moſt barbarouſly, and more than beaſtly, traitorouſly and ſuddenly to deſtroy and ſwallow up. And further did moſt traitorouſly conſpire and conclude among themſelves, That not only the whole Royal Iſſue-Male of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King ſhould be deſtroyed and rooted out; but that the Perſons aforeſaid, together with divers other falſe Traitors, traitorouſly with them to be aſſembled, ſhould ſurprize the Perſons of the Noble Ladies Elizabeth and Mary, Daughters of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and falſly and traitorouſly ſhould proclaim the ſaid Lady Elizabeth to be Queen of this Realm: And thereupon ſhould publiſh a certain traitorous Proclamation in the name of the ſaid Lady Elizabeth; wherein, as it was eſpecially agreed by and between the ſaid Conſpirators, That no mention ſhould be made at the firſt, of the alteration of Religion eſtabliſhed within this Realm of England; neither would the ſaid falſe Traitors therein acknowledge themſelves to be Authors, or Actors, or Deviſers of the aforeſaid moſt wicked and horrible Treaſons, until they had got ſufficient Power and Strength for the aſſured Execution and Accompliſhment of their their ſaid Conſpiracy and Treaſon; and that then they would avow and juſtify the ſaid moſt wicked and horrible Treaſons, as Actions that were in the number of thoſe, Quæ non laudantur, niſi peracta, which be not to be commended before they be done: but by the ſaid feign'd and traitorous Proclamation they would publiſh, That all and ſingular Abuſes and Grievances within this Realm of England, ſhould, for ſatisfying of the People, be reform'd. And that as well for the better concealing, as for the more effectual accompliſhing of the ſaid horrible Treaſons, as well the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, by the traitorous Advice and Procurement of the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, and other Jeſuits, traitorouſly did further conclude and agree, that as well the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, thereupon ſeverally and traitorouſly ſhould receive ſeveral corporal Oaths upon the holy Evangeliſts, and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, That they the Treaſons aforeſaid would traitorouſly conceal and keep ſecret, and would not reveal them, directly or indirectly, by Words nor Circumſtances, nor ever would deſiſt from the Execution and final Accompliſhment of the ſaid Treaſons, without the conſent of ſome three of the aforeſaid falſe Traitors firſt in that behalf traitorouſly had: And that thereupon as well the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſt. Wright, and Francis Treſham, did traitorouſly take the ſaid ſeveral corporal Oaths ſeverally, and did receive the Sacrament of the Euchariſt aforeſaid, by the Hands of the ſaid Henry Garnet, John Gerrard, Oſwald Teſmond, and other Jeſuits. And further, that the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, together with the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, by the like traitorous Advice and Counſel of the ſaid Henry Garnet, John Gerrard, Oſwald Teſmond, and other Jeſuits, for the more effectual compaſſing and final execution of the ſaid Treaſons, did traitorouſly among themſelves conclude and agree to dig a certain Mine under the ſaid Houſe of Parliament, and there ſecretly, under the ſaid Houſe, to beſtow and place a great Quantity of Gunpowder; and that according to the ſaid traitorous Concluſion, the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, together with the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, and Chriſtopher Wright, afterwards ſecretly, not without great labour and difficulty, did dig and make the ſaid Mine unto the midſt of the Foundation of the Wall of the ſaid Houſe of Parliament, the ſaid Foundation being of the Thickneſs of three yards, with a traitorous Intent to beſtow and place a great Quantity of Gunpowder in the Mine aforeſaid, ſo as aforeſaid traitorouſly to be made for the traitorous accompliſhing of their traitorous Purpoſes aforeſaid. And that the ſaid Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, together with the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, and Chriſtopher Wright, finding and perceiving the ſaid Work to be of great difficulty, by reaſon of the Hardneſs and Thickneſs of the ſaid Wall; and underſtanding a certain Cellar under the ſaid Houſe of Parliament, and adjoining to a certain Houſe of the ſaid Thomas Percy, then to be letten to farm for a yearly Rent, the ſaid Thomas Percy, by the traitorous Procurement, as well of the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, and other Jeſuits, Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as of the ſaid Robert Catesby, John Wright, and Chriſtopher Wright, traitorouſly did hire the Cellar aforeſaid for a certain yearly Rent and Term: and then thoſe Traitors did remove twenty Barrels full of Gunpowder out of the ſaid Houſe of the ſaid Thomas Percy, and ſecretly and traitorouſly did beſtow and place them in the Cellar aforeſaid, under the ſaid Houſe of Parliament, for the traitorous effecting of the Treaſon, and traitorous Purpoſes aforeſaid. And that afterwards the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, and other Jeſuits, Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes and Thomas Bates, together with the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright and Chriſtopher Wright, traitorouſly did meet with Robert Winter, John Grant, and Ambroſe Rookwood, and Francis Treſham, Eſquires; and traitorouſly did impart to the ſaid Robert Winter, John Grant, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Francis Treſham, the Treaſons, traitorous Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid; and did require the ſaid Robert Winter, John Grant, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Francis Treſham, to join themſelves as well with the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as with the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, and Chriſtopher Wright, in the Treaſons, traitorous Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid; and traitorouſly to provide Horſe, Armour, and other Neceſſaries, for the better accompliſhment and effecting of the ſaid Treaſons. To which traitorous Motion and Requeſt, the ſaid Robert Winter, John Grant, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Francis Treſham, did traitorouſly yield their Aſſents, and as well with the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, Robert Winter, Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, and Thomas Bates, as with the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, in the ſaid Treaſons, traitorous Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid, traitorouſly did adhere and unite themſelves: And thereupon ſeveral corporal Oaths, in form aboveſaid, traitorouſly did take, and the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, by the hands of the ſaid Jeſuits did receive, to ſuch Intent and Purpoſe, as is aforeſaid; and Horſes, Armour, and other Neceſſaries, for the better effecting of the ſaid Treaſons, according to their traitorous Aſſents aforeſaid, traitorouſly did provide. And that afterwards all the ſaid falſe Traitors did traitorouſly provide, and bring into the Cellar aforeſaid, ten other Barrels full of Gunpowder, newly bought, fearing leſt the former Gunpowder, ſo as aforeſaid beſtow'd and placed there, was become dankiſh; and the ſaid ſeveral Quantities of Gunpowder aforeſaid, with Billets and Faggots, leſt they ſhould be ſpy'd, ſecretly and traitorouſly did cover. And that afterwards the ſaid falſe Traitors traitorouſly provided, and brought into the Cellar aforeſaid, four Hogſheads full of Gunpowder, and laid divers great Iron Bars and Stones upon the ſaid four Hogſheads, and the aforeſaid other Quantities of Gunpowder: And the ſaid Quantities of Gunpowder, Bars, and Stones, with Billets and Faggots, leſt they ſhould be eſpy'd, ſecretly and traitorouſly did likewiſe cover. And that the ſaid Guy Fawkes, afterwards, for a full and final Accompliſhment of the ſaid Treaſons, traitorous Intentions and Purpoſes aforeſaid, by the traitorous Procurement, as well of the ſaid

Henry

Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, and other Jeſuits, Robert Winter, Thomas Winter, Robert Keyes, Thomas Bates, John Grant, and Ambroſe Rookwood, as of the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, and Francis Treſham, traitorouſly had prepared, and had upon his Perſon Touchwood and Match, therewith traitorouſly to give fire to the ſeveral Barrels, Hogſheads, and Quantities of Gunpowder aforeſaid, at the time appointed for the Execution of the ſaid horrible Treaſons. And further, that after the ſaid horrible Treaſons were, by the great Favour and Mercy of God, in a wonderful manner diſcover'd, not many hours before it ſhould have been executed, as well the ſaid Henry Garnet, Oſwald Teſmond, John Gerrard, Robert Winter, Thomas Winter, Robert Keyes, Thomas Bates, John Grant, and Ambroſe Rookwood, as the ſaid Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, and Chriſtopher Wright, traitorouſly did fly and withdraw themſelves, to the intent traitorouſly to ſtir up and procure ſuch Popiſh Perſons, as they could, to join with them in actual, publick, and open Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King; and to that end did publiſh divers feigned and falſe Rumours, that the Papiſts Throats ſhould have been cut: and that thereupon divers Papiſts were in Arms, and in open, publick, and actual Rebellion againſt our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, in divers Parts of this Realm of England.

To this Indictment they all pleaded, Not guilty; and put themſelves upon God and the Country.

Then did Sir Edward Philips, Kt. his Majeſty's Serjeant at Law, open the Indictment to this effect, as followeth.

The Matter that is now to be offer'd to you my Lords the Commiſſioners, and to the Tryal of you the Knights and Gentlemen of the Jury, is Matter of Treaſon; but of ſuch Horror, and monſtrous Nature, that before now,

The Tongue of Man never deliver'd,
The Ear of Man never heard,
The Heart of Man never conceited,
Nor the Malice of helliſh or earthly Devil ever practiſed.

For, if it be abominable to murder the leaſt;
If to touch God's Anointed be to oppoſe themſelves againſt God;
If (by Blood) to ſubvert Princes, States and Kingdoms, be hateful to God and Man, as all true Chriſtians muſt acknowledg:
Then, how much more than too too monſtrous ſhall all Chriſtian Hearts judg the Horror of this Treaſon; to murder and ſubvert

Such a King,
Such a Queen,
Such a Prince,
Such a Progeny,
Such a State,
Such a Government,
So complete and abſolute,
That God approves,
The World admires,
All true Engliſh Hearts honour and reverence,
The Pope and his Diſciples only envies and maligns?

The Proceeding wherein, is properly to be divided into three general Heads.
Firſt, Matter of Declaration.
Secondly, Matter of Aggravation.
Thirdly, Matter of Probation.

My ſelf am limited to deal only with the Matter of Declaration, and that is contain'd within the Compaſs of the Indictment only.

For the other two I am to leave to him to whoſe Place it belongeth.

The Subſtance of which Declaration conſiſteth in four Parts.

Firſt, In the Perſons and Qualities of the Conſpirators.

Secondly, In the Matter conſpired.

Thirdly, In the Mean and Manner of the Proceeding and Execution of the Conſpiracy.

And Fourthly, Of the End and Purpoſe why it was ſo conſpired.

As concerning the firſt, being the Perſons; they were, Garnet, Gerrard, Teſmond, Jeſuits not then taken. Thomas Winter, Guy Fawkes, Robert Keyes, Thomas Bates, Everard Digby, Ambroſe Rookwood, John Graunt, Robert Winter, at the Bar. Robert Catesby, Thomas Percy, John Wright, Chriſtopher Wright, ſlain in Rebellion. Francis Treſham, lately dead. All grounded Romaniſts and corrupted Scholars of ſo irreligious and traitorous a School.

As concerning the ſecond, which is the Matter conſpired; it was,

Firſt, To deprive the King of his Crown.

Secondly, To murder the King, the Queen, and the Prince.

Thirdly, To ſtir Rebellion and Sedition in the Kingdom.

Fourthly, To bring a miſerable Deſtruction amongſt the Subjects.

Fifthly, To change, alter, and ſubvert the Religion here eſtabliſhed.

Sixthly, To ruinate the State of the Commonwealth, and to bring in Strangers to invade it.

As concerning the third, which is the Mean and Manner how to compaſs and execute the ſame; they did all conclude,

Firſt, That the King, and his People (the Papiſts excepted) were Hereticks.

Secondly, That they were all curſed, and excommunicate by the Pope.

Thirdly, That no Heretick could be King.

Fourthly, That it was lawful and meritorious to kill and deſtroy the King, and all the ſaid Hereticks.

The Mean to effect it, they concluded to be, that,

Firſt, The King, the Queen, the Prince, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Knights and Burgeſſes of the Parliament, ſhould be blown up with Powder.

Secondly, That the whole Royal Iſſue Male ſhould be deſtroy'd.

Thirdly, That they would take into their Cuſtody Elizabeth and Mary the King's Daughters, and proclaim the Lady Elizabeth Queen.

Fourthly, That they ſhould feign a Proclamation in the name of Elizabeth, in which no mention ſhould be made of Alteration of Religion, nor that they were Parties to the Treaſon, until they had raiſed Power to perform the ſame; and then to proclaim, All Grievances in the Kingdom ſhould be reformed.

That they alſo took ſeveral Oaths, and receiv'd the Sacrament; Firſt, for Secrecy; Secondly, for Proſecution; except they were diſcharg'd thereof by three of them.

That after the Deſtruction of the King, the Queen, the Prince, the Royal Iſſue Male, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Knights and Burgeſſes, they ſhould notify the ſame to foreign States;

States; and thereupon Sir Edmund Baynam an attainted Perſon of Treaſon, and ſtiling himſelf Prime of the damned Crew, ſhould be ſent and make the ſame known to the Pope, and crave his Aid: an Embaſſador fit both for the Meſſage and Perſons, to be ſent betwixt the Pope and the Devil.

That the Parliament being prorogued till the 7th of February, they in December made a Mine under the Houſe of Parliament, purpoſing to place their Powder there; but the Parliament being then further adjourned till the 3d of October, they in Lent following hired the Vault, and placed therein 20 Barrels of Powder.

That they took to them, Robert Winter, Graunt and Rookwood, giving them the Oaths and Sacrament as aforeſaid, as to provide Munition.

July 20. They laid in more ten Barrels of Powder, laying upon them divers great Bars of Iron, and pieces of Timber, and great maſſy Stones, and covered the ſame with Faggots, &c.

September 20. They laid in more, 4 Hogſheads of Powder, with other Stores and Bars of Iron thereupon.

November 4. (The Parliament being prorogued to the 5th) at 11 a Clock at Night, Fawkes had prepared (by the procurement of the reſt) Touchwood and Match, to give Fire to the Powder the next Day.

That the Treaſon being miraculouſly diſcovered, they put themſelves, and procured others to enter into open Rebellion; and gave out moſt untruly, It was for that the Papiſts Throats were to be cut.

The Effect of that which Sir Edward Coke Kt. his Majeſty's Attorney General, ſaid at the former Arraignment, ſo near to his own words as it could be taken.

It appeareth to your Lordſhips, and the reſt of this moſt honourable and grave Aſſembly, even by that which Mr. Serjeant hath already opened, that theſe are the greateſt Treaſons that ever were plotted in England, and concern the greateſt King that ever was of England. But when this Aſſembly ſhall further hear, and ſee diſcovered the Roots and Branches of the ſame, not hitherto publiſhed; they will ſay indeed, Quis hæc poſteris ſic narrare poterit, ut facta non ficta eſſe videantur? That when theſe things ſhall be related to Poſterity, they will be reputed matters feigned, not done. And therefore in this ſo great a Cauſe, upon the Carriage and Event whereof the Eye of all Chriſtendom is at this day bent; I ſhall deſire that I may with your Patience be ſomewhat more copious, and not ſo ſuccinct, as my uſual manner hath been; and yet will I be no longer than the very Matter it ſelf ſhall neceſſarily require. But before I enter into the particular Narration of this Cauſe, I hold it fit to give Satisfaction to ſome, and thoſe well affected amongſt us, who have not only marvelled, but grieved, that no ſpeedier Expedition hath been uſed in theſe Proceedings, conſidering the Monſtrouſneſs and continual Horror of this ſo deſperate a Cauſe.

1. It is, Ordo Naturæ, agreeable to the Order of Nature, that things of great weight and magnitude ſhould ſlowly proceed, according to that of the Poet, Tarda ſolet magnis rebus adeſſe fides. And ſurely of theſe things we may truly ſay, Nunquam ante dies noſtros talia acciderunt; neither hath the Eye of Man ſeen, nor the Ear of Man heard the like things to theſe.

2. Veritas temporis filia, Truth is the Daughter of Time; eſpecially in this Caſe, wherein by timely and often Examinations, Firſt, Matters of greateſt moment have been lately found out. Secondly, ſome known Offenders, and thoſe Capital, but lately apprehended. Thirdly, Sundry of the principal Arch-Traitors before unknown, now manifeſted, as the Jeſuits. Fourthly, Heretical, treaſonable and damnable Books lately found out; one of Equivocation, and another, De officio Principis Chriſtiani, of Francis Treſham's.

3. There have been already twenty and three ſeveral days ſpent in Examinations.

4. We ſhould otherwiſe have hanged a Man unattainted, for Guy Fawkes paſſed for a time under the name of John Johnſon: So that if by that name greater Expedition had been made, and he hanged, though we had not miſſed of the Man, yet the Proceeding would not have been ſo orderly or juſtifiable.

5. The King out of his Wiſdom and great Moderation, was pleaſed to appoint this Tryal in time of Aſſembly in Parliament, for that it concerned eſpecially thoſe of the Parliament.

Now touching the Offences themſelves, they are ſo exorbitant and tranſcendent, and aggregated of ſo many bloody and fearful Crimes, as they cannot be aggravated by any Inference, Argument or Circumſtance whatſoever; and that in three reſpects:

Firſt, Becauſe this Offence is Primæ impreſſionis, and therefore ſine Nomine, without any name which might be adæquatum ſufficient to expreſs it, given by any Legiſt, that ever made or writ of any Laws. For the higheſt Treaſon that all they could imagine, they called it only Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis, the violating of the Majeſty of the Prince. But this Treaſon doth want an apt name, as tending not only to the Hurt, but to the Death of the King; and not the Death of the King only, but of his whole Kingdom, Non Regis ſed Regni, that is to the Deſtruction and Diſſolution of the Frame and Fabrick of this antient, famous, and ever-flouriſhing Monarchy; even the Deletion of our whole Name and Nation: And therefore hold not thy Tongue, O God, keep not ſtill ſilence, refrain not thy ſelf, O God; for loe thine Enemies make a murmuring, and they that hate thee have lift up their Heads; They have ſaid come, and let us root them out, that they be no more a People, and that the Name of Iſrael may be no more in remembrance. Pſal. 83. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

Secondly, It is, Sine exemplo, beyond all Examples, whether in Fact or Fiction, even of the tragick Poets, who did beat their Wits to repreſent the moſt fearful and horrible Murders.

Thirdly, It is, Sine modo, without all meaſure or ſtint of Iniquity; like a Mathematical Line, which is, diviſibilis in ſemper diviſibilia, infinitely diviſible.

It is Treaſon to imagine or intend the Death of the King, Queen, or Prince.

For Treaſon is like a Tree whoſe Root is full of Poiſon, and lieth ſecret and hid within the Earth, reſembling the Imagination of the Heart of Man, which is ſo ſecret as God only knoweth it. Now the Wiſdom of the Law provideth for the blaſting and nipping, both of the Leaves, Bloſſoms, and Buds which proceed from this Root of Treaſon; either by Words, which are like to Leaves, or by ſome overt Act, which may be reſembled to Buds or Bloſſoms, before it cometh to ſuch Fruit and Ripeneſs, as would bring utter Deſtruction and Deſolation upon the whole State.

It

It is likewiſe Treaſon to kill the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treaſurer, or any Juſtice of the one Bench or other; Juſtices of Aſſize, or any other Judge mentioned in the Statute of 25 Edw. III. ſitting in their judicial Places, and exerciſing their Offices. And the reaſon is, for that every Judge ſo ſitting by the King's Authority, repreſenteth the Majeſty and Perſon of the King; and therefore it is Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis, to kill him, the King being always in Judgment of Law preſent in Court. But in the high Court of Parliament, every Man by virtue of the King's Authority, by Writ under the Great Seal, hath a judicial Place; and ſo conſequently the killing of every of them had been a ſeveral Treaſon, and Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis. Beſides, that to their Treaſons were added open Rebellion, Burglary, Robbery, Horſeſtealing, &c. So that this Offence is ſuch, as no Man can expreſs it, no Example pattern it, no Meaſure contain it.

Concerning foreign Princes; there was here a Proteſtation made for the clearing of them from all Imputation and Aſperſion whatſoever.

Firſt, For that whilſt Kingdoms ſtood in Hoſtility, hoſtile Actions are holden Honourable and Juſt.

Secondly, It is not the King's Serjeant, Attorney, or Sollicitor, that in any ſort touch or mention them: For we know that great Princes and Perſonages are reverently and reſpectively to be ſpoken of; and that there is Lex in ſermone tenenda. But it is Fawkes, Winter, and the reſt of the Offenders, that have confeſſed ſo much as hath been ſaid: And therefore the King's Counſel Learned doth but repeat the Offender's Confeſſion, and charge or touch no other Perſon. They have alſo ſlander'd unjuſtly our great Maſter King James, which we only repeat, to ſhew the Wickedneſs and Malice of the Offenders.

Thirdly, So much as is ſaid concerning foreign Princes, is ſo woven into the matter of the Charge of theſe Offenders, as it cannot be ſever'd, or ſingled from the reſt of the matter; ſo as it is inevitable, and cannot be pretermitted.

Now as this Powder-Treaſon is in it ſelf prodigious and unnatural, ſo it is in the Conception and Birth moſt monſtrous, as ariſing out of the dead Aſhes of former Treaſons. For it had three Roots, all planted and watered by Jeſuits, and Engliſh Romiſh Catholicks: The firſt Root in England, in December and March; the ſecond in Flanders, in June; the third in Spain, in July. In England it had two Branches, one in December was twelve Months before the death of the late Queen of bleſſed Memory; another in March wherein ſhe died.

Firſt in December, Anno Dom. 1601. do Henry Garnet Superior of the Jeſuits in England, Robert Teſmond Jeſuit, Robert Catesby (who was bono ſubacto & verſuto ingenio & profunda perfidia) together with Francis Treſham and others, in the names, and for the behalf of all the Engliſh Romiſh Catholicks, imploy Thomas Winter into Spain, as for the general good of the Romiſh Catholick Cauſe; and by him doth Garnet write his Letters to Father Creſwell, Jeſuit reſiding in Spain, in that behalf. With Thomas Winter doth Teſmond, alias Greeneway the Jeſuit, go as an Aſſociate and Confederate in that Conſpiracy. The Meſſage (which was principally committed unto the ſaid Winter) was, that he ſhould make a Propoſition and Requeſt to the King of Spain, in the behalf and names of the Engliſh Catholicks, That the King would ſend an Army hither into England, and that the Forces of the Catholicks in England ſhould be prepared to join with him, and do him Service. And further, that he ſhould move the King of Spain to beſtow ſome Penſions here in England, upon ſundry Perſons Catholicks, and devoted to his Service: And moreover, to give Advertiſement, that the ſaid King of Spain, making uſe of the general Diſcontentment that young Gentlemen and Soldiers were in, might no doubt, by relieving their Neceſſities, have them all at his devotion.

And becauſe that in all Attempts upon England, the greateſt difficulty was ever found to be the Tranſportation of Horſes; the Catholicks in England would aſſure the King of Spain to have always in readineſs for his Uſe and Service, 1500 or 2000 Horſes, againſt any occaſion or enterprize. Now Thomas Winter undertaking this Negotiation, and with Teſmond the Jeſuit coming into Spain, by means of Father Creſwell the Legier Jeſuit there, as hath been ſaid, had readily Speech with Don Pedro Franceſa ſecond Secretary of State, to whom he imparted his Meſſage, as alſo to the Duke of Lerma; who aſſured him, that it would be an Office very grateful to his Maſter, and that it ſhould not want his beſt Furtherance.

Concerning the Place for landing of the King of Spain's Army, which from the Engliſh Romiſh Catholicks he deſired might be ſent to invade the Land; it was reſolved, That if the Army were great, then Eſſex and Kent were judged fitteſt, (where note by the way, who was then Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports:) If the Army were ſmall, and truſted upon Succour in England, then Milford-haven was thought more convenient.

Now there being at that time Hoſtility betwixt both Kingdoms, the King of Spain willingly imbraced the Motion, ſaying, that he took the Meſſage from the Catholicks very kindly, and that in all things he would reſpect them with as great Care as his proper Caſtilians. But for his further anſwer and full diſpatch, Thomas Winter was appointed to attend the Progreſs. In the end whereof, being in Summer time, Count Miranda gave him this anſwer in the behalf of his Maſter, That the King would beſtow 100000 Crowns to that uſe, half to be paid that Year, and the reſt the next Spring following; and withal required that we ſhould be as good as our Promiſe: for the next Spring he meant to be with us, and ſet foot in England. And laſtly, he deſired on the King's behalf, of Winter, that he might have certain Advertiſement and Intelligence, if ſo it ſhould in the mean time happen that the Queen did die. Tho. Winter laden with theſe Hopes, returns into England about a Month before Chriſtmas, and delivered anſwer of all that had paſſed, to Henry Garnet, Robert Catesby, and Francis Treſham. But ſoon after ſet that glorious Light, her Majeſty died: Mira cano; Sol occubuit, Nox nulla ſecuta eſt.

Preſently after whoſe Death was Chriſtopher Wright, another Meſſenger, ſent over into Spain by Garnet, (who likewiſe did write by him to Creſwell, for the furtherance of the Negotiation) Catesby and Treſham, in the name and behalf of all the Romiſh Catholicks in England; as well to carry News of her Majeſty's Death, as alſo to continue the aforeſaid Negotiation for an Invaſion and Penſions, which by Tho. Winter had before been dealt in. And in the Spaniſh Court, about two Months after his arrival there, doth Chriſtopher Wright meet with Guy Fawkes; who upon the 22d of June was imployed out of Flanders from Bruſſels by Sir William Stanley, Hugh Owen, (whoſe Finger hath been in every Treaſon which hath been of late Years detected) and Baldwyn the Legier Jeſuit in Flanders; from whom likewiſe the ſaid Fawkes carried Letters to Creſwell in Spain, for the countenancing and furtherance of his Affairs.

Now the End of Fawkes's imployment was, to give Advertiſement to the King of Spain, how the King of England was like to proceed rigorouſly with the Catholicks, and to run the ſame courſe which the late Queen did; and withal to intreat that it would pleaſe him to ſend an Army into England to Milford-haven, where the Romiſh Catholicks would be ready to aſſiſt him; and then the Forces that ſhould be tranſported in Spinola's Gallies, ſhould be landed where they could moſt conveniently. And theſe their ſeveral Meſſages did Chriſtopher Wright and Guy Fawkes in the end intimate and propound to the King of Spain. But the King as then very honorably anſwered them both, that he would not in any wiſe further liſten to any ſuch Motion, as having before diſpatched an Embaſſy into England, to treat concerning Peace. Therefore this Courſe by foreign Forces failing, they fell to the Powder-Plot, Catesby and Treſham being in at all; in the Treaſon of the Earl of Eſſex, in the Treaſon of Watſon and Clarke Seminary Prieſts, and alſo in this of the Jeſuits; ſuch a greedy Appetite had they to practiſe againſt the State.

The reſt of that which Mr. Attorney then ſpake continuedly, was by himſelf divided into three general parts. The firſt containing certain Conſiderations concerning this Treaſon. The ſecond Obſervations about the ſame. The third a Compariſon of this Treaſon of the Jeſuits, with that of the Seminary Prieſts, and that other of Raleigh and others.

For the Conſiderations concerning the Powder-Treaſon, they were in Number eight: That is to ſay, 1. The Perſons by whom. 2. The Perſons againſt whom. 3. The Time when. 4. The Place where. 5. The Means. 6. The End. 7. The ſecret Contriving. And laſtly, The admirable Diſcovery thereof.

1. For the Perſons offending, or by whom, they are of two ſorts; either of the Clergy, or Laity: and for each of them there is a ſeveral Objection made. Touching thoſe of the Laity, it is by ſome given out, that they are ſuch Men, as admit juſt Exception, either deſperate in Eſtate, or baſe, or not ſettled in their Wits; ſuch as are Sine Religione, Sine Sede, Sine Fide, Sine Re, & Sine Spe; without Religion, without Habitation, without Credit, without Means, without Hope. But (that no Man, tho never ſo wicked, may be wronged) true it is, they were Gentlemen of good Houſes, of excellent Parts, howſoever moſt perniciouſly ſeduced, abuſed, corrupted, and jeſuited, of very competent Fortunes and States. Beſides that Piercy was of the Houſe of Northumberland, Sir William Stanley, who principally imployed Fawkes into Spain, and John Talbot of Grafton, who at the leaſt is in Caſe of Miſpriſion of High Treaſon, both of great and honourable Families. Concerning thoſe of the Spiritualty, it is likewiſe falſly ſaid, That there is never a religious Man in this Action. For I never yet knew a Treaſon without a Romiſh Prieſt; but in this there are very many Jeſuits, who are known to have dealt and paſſed through the whole Action: Three of them are Legiers and Stateſmen, as Henry Garnet, alias Walley, the Superior of the Jeſuits, Legier here in England; Father Creſwell Legier Jeſuit in Spain, Father Baldwyn Legier in Flanders, as Parſons at Rome; beſides their curſory Men, as Gerrard, Oſwald, Teſmond alias Greeneway, Hamond, Hall, and other Jeſuits. So that the principal Offenders are the ſeducing Jeſuits; Men that uſe the Reverence of Religion, yea, even the moſt ſacred and bleſſed Name of Jeſus, as a Mantle to cover their Impiety, Blaſphemy, Treaſon and Rebellion, and all manner of Wickedneſs, as by the help of Chriſt ſhall be made moſt apparent to the Glory of God, and the Honour of our Religion. Concerning this Sect, their Studies and Practices principally conſiſt in two DD's, to wit, in depoſing of Kings, and diſpoſing of Kingdoms: their Profeſſion and Doctrine is a Religion of Diſtinctions, the greateſt part of them being without the Text, and therefore in very deed, idle and vain Conceits of their own Brains: not having Membra dividentia, that is, all the parts of the diviſion warranted by the Word of God; and ubi lex non diſtinguit, nec nos diſtinguere debemus. And albeit that Princes hold their Crowns immediately of and from God, by Right of lawful Succeſſion and Inheritance inherent by Royal Blood; yet think theſe Jeſuits with a Gooſe-quill, within four diſtinctions to remove the Crown from the Head of any King chriſtened, and to deal with them, as the old Romans are ſaid to have done with their Viceroys, or petty Kings, who in effect were but Lieutenants unto them, to crown and uncrown them at their pleaſures. Neither ſo only, but they will proſcribe and expoſe them to be butchered by Vaſſals, which is againſt their own Canons, for Prieſts to meddle in cauſe of Blood. And by this means they would make the Condition of a King far worſe than that of the pooreſt Creature that breatheth. Firſt ſaith Simanca; Hæretici omnes ipſo jure ſunt Excommunicati, & à Communione fidelium diris proſcriptionibus ſeparati, & quotannis in cœna Domini excommunicantur à Papa: So then every Heretick ſtands and is reputed with them as excommunicated and accurſed, if not de Facto, yet de Jure, in Law and Right, to all their Intents and Purpoſes; therefore may he be depoſed, proſcribed and murdered. I but ſuppoſe he be not a profeſſed Heretick, but dealeth reſervedly, and keepeth his Conſcience to himſelf; how ſtands he then? Simanca anſwers, Quæri autem ſolet an Hæreticus occultus excommunicatus ſit ipſo Jure, & in alias etiam pœnas incidat contra Hæreticos ſtatutas? Cui quæſtioni ſimpliciter Juriſperiti reſpondent, quod etſi hæreſis occulta ſit, nihilominus occultus Hæreticus incidit in illas pœnas. Whether he be a known or a ſecret Heretick all is one, they thunder out the ſame Judgment and Curſe for both; whereas Chriſt ſaith, Nolite judicare, judge not, which is, ſaith Auguſtine, Nolite judicare de occultis, of thoſe things which are ſecret. But ſuppoſe that a Prince thus accurſed and depoſed, will eftſoons return and conform himſelf to their Romiſh Church, ſhall he then be reſtored to his State, and again receive his Kingdom? nothing leſs: For ſaith Simanca, Si Reges aut alii Principes Chriſtiani facti ſint Hæretici, protinus ſubjecti & vaſſalli ab eorum dominio liberantur; nec jus hoc recuperabunt, quamvis poſtea reconcilientur Eccleſiæ. O but, Sancta Mater Eccleſia nunquam claudit gremium redeunti; our Holy Mother the Church never ſhuts her Boſom to any Convert. It is true, ſay they, but with a diſtinction, Quoad Animam: Therefore ſo he may, and ſhall be reſtored; that is, ſpiritually, in reſpect of his Soul's health. Quoad Animam, he ſhall again be taken into the Holy Church; but not Quoad Regnum, in reſpect of of his Kingdom or State Temporal, he muſt not be reſtored. The reaſon is, becauſe all hold only thus far, Modo non ſit ad damnum Eccleſiæ, ſo that the Church receive thereby no detriment. I but ſuppoſe that ſuch an unhappy depoſed Prince have a Son, or lawful and right Heir, and he alſo not to be touched or ſpotted with his Father's Crime, ſhall not he at the leaſt ſucceed, and be inveſted into that princely Eſtate? Neither will this down with them; Hereſy is a Leproſy, and hereditary Diſeaſe: Et ex leproſis parentibus leproſi generantur filii; Of leprous Parents, come leprous Children. So that ſaith Simanca, Propter Hereſim Regis, non ſolum Rex regno privatur, ſed & ejus filii a regni ſucceſſione pelluntur, ut noſter Lupus (who is indeed, Vir ſecundum nomen ejus, a Wolf as well in Nature as Name) luculenter probat. Now if any Man doubt whom they here mean by an Heretick, Creſwell in his Book called Philopater, gives a plain Reſolution; Regnandi jus amittit (ſaith he) qui Religionem Romanam deſerit, he is the Heretick we ſpeak of; even whoſoever forſakes the Religion of the Church of Rome, he is accurſed, deprived, proſcribed, never to be abſolved but by the Pope himſelf, never to be reſtored either in himſelf or his Poſterity.

One place amongſt many out of Creſwell's Philopater, ſhall ſerve to give a Taſte of the jeſuitical Spirits and Doctrine; which is, Sect. 2. pag. 109. Hinc etiam infert univerſa Theologorum ac Juriſconſultorum Eccleſiaſticorum ſchola, (& eſt certum & de fide) quemcunq; Principem Chriſtianum, ſi a Religione Catholica manifeſto diflexerit, & alios avocare voluerit, excidere ſtatim omni poteſtate ac dignitate, ex ipſa vi juris tum humani tum divini, hocq; ante dictam ſententiam ſupremi paſtoris ac judicis contra ipſum prolatam, & ſubditos quoſcunq; liberos eſſe ab omni Juramenti obligatione, quod de obedientia tanquam Principi legitimo præſtitiſſent; poſſeq; & debere (ſi vires habeant) iſtiuſmodi hominem tanquam Apoſtatam, Hæreticum, ac Chriſti Domini Deſertorem, & Reipub. ſuæ inimicum hoſtemq; ex hominum Chriſtianorum dominatu eijcere, ne alios inficiat, vel ſuo exemplo aut Imperio a fide avertat. Atque hæc certa, definita & indubitata virorum doctiſſimorum ſententia. That is, this inference alſo doth the whole School both of Divines and Lawyers make, (and it is a Poſition certain, and to be undoubtedly believed) that if any Chriſtian Prince whatſoever, ſhall manifeſtly turn from the Catholick Religion, and deſire or ſeek to reclaim other Men from the ſame, he preſently falleth from all princely Power and Dignity; and that alſo by virtue and force of the Law it ſelf, both divine and human, even before any Sentence pronounced againſt him by the ſupreme Paſtor and Judge. And that his Subjects of what Eſtate or Condition ſoever, are freed from all bond of Oath of Allegiance, which at any time they had made unto him as to their lawful Prince. Nay, that they both may and ought (provided they have competent Strength and Force) caſt out ſuch a Man from bearing Rule amongſt Chriſtians, as an Apoſtate, an Heretick, a Backſlider and Revolter from our Lord Chriſt, and an Enemy to his own State and Commonwealth, leſt perhaps he might infect others, or by his Example or Command turn them from the Faith. And this is the certain, reſolute, and undoubted Judgment of the beſt learned Men. But Treſham in his Book, De officio Principis Chriſtiani, goeth beyond all the reſt; for he plainly concludeth and determineth, that if any Prince ſhall but favour, or ſhew countenance to an Heretick, he preſently loſeth his Kingdom. In his fifth Chapter, he propoundeth this Problem, An aliqua poſſit ſecundum Conſcientiam ſubditis eſſe Ratio, cur legitimo ſuo Regi, bellum ſine ſcelere moveant? Whether there may be any lawful Cauſe, juſtifiable in Conſcience, for Subjects to take Arms without Sin, againſt their lawful Prince and Sovereign? The Reſolution is, Si Princeps hæreticus ſit & obſtinate ac pertinaciter intolerabilis, ſummi Paſtoris divina poteſtate deponatur, & aliud caput conſtituatur, cui ſubditi ſe jungant, & legitimo ordine & authoritate tyrannidem amoveant. Princeps indulgendo hæreticos non ſolum Deum offendit, ſed perdit & regnum & gentem. Their Concluſion therefore is, that for Hereſy as above is underſtood, a Prince is to be depoſed, and his Kingdom beſtowed by the Pope at pleaſure, and that the People upon pain of Damnation, are to take part with him whom the Pope ſhall ſo conſtitute over them. And thus whilſt they imagine with the Wings of their light-feathered Diſtinctions to mount above the Clouds and Level of vulgar Conceits, they deſperately fall into a Sea of groſs Abſurdities, Blaſphemy, and Impiety. And ſurely the Jeſuits were ſo far ingaged in this Treaſon, as that ſome of them ſtick not to ſay, that if it ſhould miſcarry, that they were utterly undone, and that it would overthrow the State of the whole Society of the Jeſuits: And I pray God that in this, they may prove true Prophets, that they may become like the Order of Templarii, ſo called for that they kept near the Sepulchre at Jeruſalem, who were by a general and univerſal Edict in one Day throughout Chriſtendom quite extinguiſhed, as being Ordo Impietatis, an Order of Impiety. And ſo from all Sedition and privy Conſpiracy, from all falſe Doctrine and Hereſy, from Hardneſs of Heart and Contempt of thy Word and Commandment, Good Lord deliver us. Their Proteſtations and Pretences, are to win Souls to God; their Proofs weak, light, and of no value; their Concluſions falſe, damnable, and damned Hereſies: The firſt mentioneth God, the ſecond favoureth of weak and frail Man, the laſt of the Devil; and their Practice eaſily appeareth out of the Dealing of their Holy Father.

Henry III. of France for killing a Cardinal, was excommunicated, and after murdered by James Clement a Monk: That Fact doth Sixtus Quintus then Pope, inſtead of orderly cenſuring thereof, not only approve, but commend in a long conſiſtory Oration. That a Monk, a religious Man ſaith he, hath ſlain the unhappy French King in the midſt of his Hoſt, it is rarum, inſigne, memorabile Facinus, a rare, a notable, and a memorable Act; yea further, it is, Facinus non ſine Dei optimi Maximi particulari providentia & diſpoſitione, &c. A Fact done not without the ſpecial Providence and Appointment of our Good God, and the ſuggeſtion and aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit; yea, a far greater work than was the ſlaying of Holofernes by Holy Judith.

Verus Monachus fictum occiderat, a true Monk had killed the falſe Monk; for that, as was reported, Henry III. ſometimes would uſe that Habit when he went in Proceſſion: And for France, even that part thereof which entertaineth the Popiſh Religion, yet never could of antient time brook this uſurped Authority of the See of Rome; namely, that the Pope had Power to excommunicate Kings, and abſolve Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance: which Poſition is ſo directly oppoſite to all the Canons of the Church of France, and to all the Decrees of the King's Parliament there, as that the very Body of Sorbonne, and the whole Univerſity of Paris, condemned it as a moſt ſchiſmatical, peſtilent and pernicious Doctrine of the Jeſuits; as may appear in a Treatiſe made to the French King, and ſet out 1602. intitled, Le franc Diſcours. But to return to the Jeſuits, Catesby was reſolved by the Jeſuits, that the Fact was both lawful and meritorious; and herewith he perſuaded and ſettled the reſt, as any ſeemed to make doubt.

Concerning Thomas Bates, who was Catesby's Man, as he was wound into this Treaſon by his Maſter, ſo was he reſolved, when he doubted of the Lawfulneſs thereof, by the Doctrine of the Jeſuits. For the manner, it was after this ſort: Catesby noting that his Man obſerved him extraordinarily, as ſuſpecting ſomewhat of that which he the ſaid Catesby went about, called him to him at his Lodging in Puddle-wharfe; and in the preſence of Thomas Winter, asked him what he thought the buſineſs was they went about, for that he of late had ſo ſuſpiciouſly and ſtrangely marked them. Bates anſwered, that he thought they went about ſome dangerous matter, whatſoever the particular were: whereupon they asked him again what he thought the buſineſs might be; and he anſwered that he thought they intended ſome dangerous matter about the Parliament-Houſe, becauſe he had been ſent to get a Lodging near unto that place. Then did they make the ſaid Bates take an Oath to be ſecret in the Action; which being taken by him, they then told him that it was true, that they were to execute a great matter; namely, to lay Powder under the Parliament Houſe to blow it up. Then they alſo told him that he was to receive the Sacrament for the more aſſurance, and thereupon he went to Confeſſion, to the ſaid Teſmond the Jeſuit; and in his Confeſſion told him, that he was to conceal a very dangerous piece of work, that his Maſter Catesby and Thomas Winter had imparted unto him, and ſaid he much feared the matter to be utterly unlawful, and therefore therein deſired the Counſel of the Jeſuit; and revealed unto him the whole intent and purpoſe of blowing up the Parliament-Houſe upon the firſt Day of the Aſſembly; at what time the King, the Queen, the Prince, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Judges, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, ſhould all have been there convented and met together. But the Jeſuit being a Confederate therein before, reſolved and incouraged him in the Action; and ſaid that he ſhould be ſecret in that which his Maſter had imparted unto him, for that it was for a good Cauſe. Adding moreover, that it was not dangerous unto him, nor any Offence to conceal it: and thereupon the Jeſuit gave him Abſolution, and Bates received the Sacrament of him, in the Company of his Maſter Robert Catesby and Thomas Winter. Alſo when Rookewood in the preſence of ſundry of the Traytors (having firſt received the Oath of Secrecy) had by Catesby imparted unto him the Plot of blowing up the King and State; the ſaid Rookewood being greatly amazed thereat, anſwered, that it was a matter of Conſcience to take away ſo much Blood: but Catesby replied, that he was reſolved, and that by good Authority (as coming from the Superior of the Jeſuits) that in Conſcience it might be done, yea, though it were with the Deſtruction of many Innocents, rather than the Action ſhould quaile. Likewiſe Father Hammond abſolved all the Traytors at Robert Winter's Houſe, upon Thurſday after the diſcovery of the Plot, they being then in open Rebellion: And therefore, Hos, O Rex magne, caveto; and let all Kings take heed, how they either favour or give allowance or connivance unto them.

2. The ſecond Conſideration reſpecteth the Perſons againſt whom this Treaſon was intended; which are, 1. The King, who is God's Anointed. Nay, it hath pleaſed God to communicate unto him his own Name. Dixi, Dii eſtis, not ſubſtantially or eſſentially ſo, neither yet on the other ſide Uſurpativè, by unjuſt Uſurpation, as the Devil and the Pope; but Poteſtativè, as having his Power derived from God within his Territories. 2. Their natural liege Lord, and dread Sovereign, whoſe juſt Intereſt and Title to this Crown, may be drawn from before the Conqueſt; and if he were not a King by Deſcent, yet deſerved he to be made one for his rare and excellent Endowments and Ornaments both of Body and Mind. Look into his true and conſtant Religion and Piety, his Juſtice, his Learning above all Kings chriſtened, his Acumen, his Judgment, his Memory; and you will ſay that he is indeed, Solus praeteritis major, meliorque futuris. But becauſe I cannot ſpeak what I would, I will forbear to ſpeak what I could. Alſo againſt the Queen, a moſt gracious and graceful Lady, a moſt vertuous, fruitful, and bleſſed Vine, who hath happily brought forth ſuch Olive-branches, as that in benedictione erit Memoria ejus, her Memory ſhall be bleſſed of all our Poſterity. Then againſt the Royal Iſſue Male, next under God, and after our Sovereign the future Hope, Comfort, Joy, and Life of our State. And as for preſerving of the good Lady Elizabeth the King's Daughter, it ſhould only have been for a time to have ſerved their Purpoſes, as being thought a fit Project to keep others in Appetite for their own further Advantage; and then God knoweth what would have become of her. To conclude, againſt all the moſt honourable and prudent Counſellors, and all the true-hearted and worthy Nobles, all the Reverend and Learned Biſhops, all the grave Judges and Sages of the Law, all the principal Knights, Gentry, Citizens and Burgeſſes of Parliament, the Flower of the whole Realm. Horret Animus, I tremble even to think of it: Miſerable Deſolation! no King, no Queen, no Prince, no Iſſue Male, no Counſellors of State; no Nobility, no Biſhops, no Judges! O barbarous, and more than Scythian or Thracian Cruelty! No mantle of Holineſs can cover it, no pretence of Religion can excuſe it, no ſhadow of good Intention can extenuate it; God and Heaven condemn it, Man and Earth deteſt it, the Offenders themſelves were aſhamed of it; wicked People exclaim againſt it, and the Souls of all true Chriſtian Subjects abhor it: miſerable, but yet ſudden had their Ends been, who ſhould have died in that fiery Tempeſt, and Storm of Gunpowder. But more miſerable had they been that had eſcaped; and what horrible Effects the blowing up of ſo much Powder and Stuff would have wrought, not only amongſt Men and Beaſts, but even upon inſenſible Creatures, Churches, and Houſes, and all places near adjoining; you who have been martial Men beſt know. For my ſelf, Vox faucibus haeret: So that the King may ſay with the kingly Prophet David; O Lord, the Proud are riſen againſt me, and the Congregation, even Synagoga, the Synagogue of naughty Men have ſought after my Soul, and have not ſet thee before their Eyes, Pſal. 86. 14 The Proud have laid a Snare for me, and ſpread a Net abroad, yea, and ſet Traps in my way, Pſal. 140. 5. But let the Ungodly fall into their own Nets together, and let me ever eſcape them, Pſal. 141. 11. We may ſay, If the Lord himſelf had not been on our ſide; yea, if the Lord himself had not been on our side, when Men rose up against us, they had swallowed us up quick, when they were so wrathfully displeased at us: But praised be the Lord, which hath not given us over for a Prey unto their Teeth. Our Soul is escaped even as a Bird out of the Snare of the Fowler, the Snare is broken, and we are delivered; our help standeth in the name of the Lord which hath made Heaven and Earth. Psal. 124.

yea,

3. The third Consideration respects the Time when this Treason was conspired; wherein note that it was Primo Jacobi, even at that time when his Majesty used so great Lenity towards Recusants, in that by the space of a whole Year and four Months, he took no Penalty by Statute of them. So far was his Majesty from Severity, that besides the benefit and grace before specified, he also honoured all alike with Advancement and Favours; and all this was continued until the Priests Treason, by Watson and Clarke. But as there is Misericordia puniens, so is there likewise Crudelitas parcens: For they were not only by this not reclaimed, but (as plainly appeareth) became far worse. Nay, the Romish Catholicks did at that very time certify that it was very like, the King would deal rigorously with them, and the same do these Traytors now pretend, as the chiefest Motive; whereas indeed they had Treason on foot against the King, before they saw his Face in England: Neither afterwards for all the Lenity he used towards them, would any whit desist or relent from their wicked Attempts. Nay, (that which cometh next to be remembred in this part of their Arraignment) they would pick out the time of Parliament for the Execution of their hideous Treasons, wherein the Flower of the Land being assembled, for the Honour of God, the Good of his Church, and this Commonwealth; they might as it were with one Blow, not wound, but kill and destroy the whole State: So that with these Men, Impunitas continuum affectum tribuit peccandi, Lenity having once bred a hope of Impunity, begat not only Insolency, but Impenitency and Increase of Sin.

4. We are to consider the Place, which was the sacred Senate, the House of Parliament. And why there? For that, say they, unjust Laws had formerly been there made against Catholicks: Therefore that was the fittest place of all others to revenge it, and to do Justice in. If any ask who should have executed this their Justice, it was Justice Fawkes, a Man like enough to do according to his Name. If by what Law they meant to proceed; it was Gunpowder Law, fit for Justices of Hell. But concerning those Laws which they so calumniate as unjust, it shall in few words plainly appear, that they were of the greatest both Moderation and Equity that ever were any. For from the Year 1 Eliz. unto 11. all Papists came to our Church and Service without Scruple. I my self have seen Cornwallis, Beddingfield, and others at Church: so that then for the space of 10 Years, they made no Conscience nor doubt to communicate with us in Prayer. But when once the Bull of Pope Pius Quintus was come and published, wherein the Queen was accursed and deposed, and her Subjects discharged of their Obedience and Oath, yea cursed if they did obey her; then did they all forthwith refrain the Church, then would they have no more Society with us in Prayer: So that Recusancy in them is not for Religion, but in an acknowledgment of the Pope's Power, and a plain manifestation what their Judgment is concerning the Right of the Prince in respect of Regal Power and Place. Two years after, viz. 13 Eliz. was there a Law made against the bringing in of Bulls, &c. Anno 18. came Mayne a Priest to move Sedition. Anno 20. came Campion the first Jesuit, who was sent to make a Party here in England, for the Execution of the former Bull: Then follows treasonable Books. Anno 23 Eliz. after so many Years sufferance, there were Laws made against Recusants, and seditious Books. The Penalty or Sanction for Recusancy, was not loss of Life, or Limb, or whole State, but only a pecuniary Mulct and Penalty, and that also until they would submit and conform themselves, and again come to Church, as they had done for 10 years before the Bull. And yet afterwards the Jesuits and Romish Priests both coming daily into, and swarming within the Realm, and infusing continually this Poison into the Subjects Hearts, that by reason of the said Bull of Pius Quintus, her Majesty stood excommunicated and deprived of her Kingdom, and that her Subjects were discharged of all Obedience to her, endeavouring by all means to draw them from their Duty and Allegiance to her Majesty, and to reconcile them to the Church of Rome; then 27 Eliz. a Law was made, that it should be Treason for any (not to be a Priest and an Englishman, born the Queen's natural Subject, but for any) being so born her Subject, and made a Romish Priest, to come into any of her Dominions, to infect any her loyal Subjects with their treasonable and damnable Persuasions and Practices: yet so, that it concerned only such as were made Priests, sithence her Majesty came to the Crown, and not before.

Concerning the Execution of these Laws, it is to be observed likewise, that whereas in the Quinquenny, the five years of Queen Mary, there were cruelly put to death about 300 Persons for Religion; in all her Majesty's time by the space of 44 years and upwards, there were for treasonable Practices executed, in all not 30 Priests, nor above five Receivers and Harbourers of them; and for Religion not any one. And here by the way, I desire those of Parliament to observe, that it is now questioned and doubted, whether the Law of Recusants and reconciled Persons do hold for Ireland also, and the parts beyond the Seas: That is, whether such as were there reconciled be within the compass of the Statute or not, to the end it may be cleared and provided for.

Now against the usurped Power of the See of Rome, we have of former times about 13 several Acts of Parliament: So that the Crown and King of England is no ways to be drawn under the Government of any foreign Power whatsoever, neither oweth Duty to any, but is immediately under God himself. Concerning the Popes, for 33 of them, namely unto Sylvester, they were famous Martyrs. But Quicunque desiderat primatum in terris, inveniet confusionem in cœlis: He that desires Primacy upon Earth, shall surely find Confusion in Heaven.

5. The fifth Consideration is of the End, which was to bring a final and fatal Confusion upon the State. For howsoever they sought to shadow their Impiety with the Cloke of Religion, yet they intended to breed a Confusion fit to get new Alterations, for they went to join with Romish Catholicks, and discontented Persons.

6. Now the sixth Point, which is the Means to compass and work these Designs, were damnable; by Mining, by 36 Barrels of Powder, having Crows of Iron, Stones and Wood laid upon the Barrels, to have made the Breach the greater.

Lord,

Lord, what a Wind, what a Fire, what a Motion and Commotion of Earth and Air would there have been! But as it is in the Book of Kings, when Elias was in the Cave of the Mount Horeb, and that he was called forth to ſtand before the Lord, behold a mighty ſtrong Wind rent the Mountains, and brake the Rocks; ſed non in vento Dominus, but the Lord was not in the Wind. And after the Wind, came a Commotion of the Earth and Air; Et non in Commotione Dominus, the Lord was not in that Commotion: And after the Commotion come Fire; & non in igne Dominus, the Lord was not in the Fire. So neither was God in any part of this monſtrous Action. The Authors whereof were in this reſpect worſe than the very damned Spirit of Dives, who, as it is in the Goſpel, deſired that others ſhould not come in locum tormentorum.

7. The next Conſideration is, the ſecret Continuing and Carriage of this Treaſon; to which purpoſe there were four means us'd:

Firſt, Catesby was commended to the Marquiſs for a Regiment of Horſe in the Low-Countries, (which is the ſame that the Lord Arundel now hath) that under that pretence he might have furniſhed this Treaſon with Horſes without Suſpicion.

The Second means was an Oath, which they ſolemnly and ſeverally took, as well for Secrecy, as Perſeverance and Conſtancy in the execution of their Plot. The Form of the Oath was as follows:

YOU ſhall ſwear by the bleſſed Trinity, and by the Sacrament you now purpoſe to receive, never to diſcloſe directly nor indirectly, by Word or Circumſtance, the matter that ſhall be propoſed to you to keep ſecret, nor deſiſt from the Execution thereof, until the reſt ſhall give you leave.

This Oath was, by Gerrard the Jeſuit, given to Catesby, Percy, Chriſtopher Wright, and Thomas Winter at once; and by Greenwel the Jeſuit, to Bates at another time, and ſo to the reſt.

The Third, was the Sacrament; which they impiouſly and deviliſhly prophaned to this end.

But the Laſt, was their perfidious and perjurious Equivocating, abetted, allowed, and juſtified by the Jeſuits, not only ſimply to conceal or deny an open Truth, but religiouſly to aver, to proteſt upon Salvation, to ſwear that which themſelves know to be moſt falſe; and all this, by reſerving a ſecret and private Senſe inwardly to themſelves: whereby they are, by their Ghoſtly Fathers, perſuaded, That they may ſafely and lawfully delude any Queſtion whatſoever.

And here was ſhewed a Book written not long before the Queen's death, at what time Thomas Winter was employed into Spain, entituled, A Treatiſe of Equivocation. Which Book being ſeen and allowed by Garnet, the Superior of the Jeſuits, and Blackwel the Archprieſt of England, in the beginning thereof, Garnet with his own hand put out thoſe words in the Title of Equivocation, and made it thus; A Treatiſe againſt Lying, and fraudulent Diſſimulation. Whereas indeed and truth it makes for both, Speciosaque nomina Culpæ imponis, Garnette, tuæ. And in the end thereof, Blackwel beſprinkles it with his Bleſſing, ſaying, Tractatus iſte, valde doctus & vere pius, & Catholicus eſt; certe S. Scripturarum, Patrum, Doctorum, Scholaſticorum, Canoniſtarum & optimarum Rationum preſidiis pleniſſime firmat æquitatem æquivocationis; ideoque digniſſimus eſt qui Typis propagetur, ad conſolationem afflictorum Catholicorum, & omnium piorum inſtructionem. That is, This Treatiſe is very learned, godly, and Catholick, and doth moſt fully confirm the Equity of Equivocation, by ſtrong Proofs out of holy Scriptures, Fathers, Doctors, Schoolmen, Canoniſts, and ſoundeſt Reaſons; and therefore worthy to be publiſhed in Print, for the Comfort of afflicted Catholicks, and Inſtruction of all the Godly.

Now, in this Book there is Propoſitio mentalis, verbalis, ſcripta, and mixta, diſtinguiſhing of a mental, a verbal, a written, and a mixed Propoſition, a very Labyrinth to lead Men into Error and Falſhood.

For example, to give you a little taſte of this art of Couzening: A Man is asked upon Oath this Queſtion, Did you ſee ſuch a one to-day? He may by this Doctrine anſwer, No, though he did ſee him, viz. reſerving this ſecret Meaning, not with purpoſe to tell my Lord Chief Juſtice: Or, I ſee him not viſione beatifica, or, not in Venice, &c. Likewiſe to anſwer thus; I was in the company; reſerving and intending ſecretly as added, this word Not: As Strange the Jeſuit did to my Lord Chief Juſtice and my ſelf. Take one or two of theſe out of that very Book, as for purpoſe: A Man cometh unto Coventry in time of a ſuſpicion of Plague, and at the Gates the Officers meet him, and upon his Oath examine him, Whether he came from London or no, where they think certainly the Plague to be: This Man knowing for certain the Plague not to be at London, or at leaſt knowing that the Air is not there infectious, and that he only rid through ſome ſecret place of London, not ſtaying there, may ſafely ſwear, he came not from London; anſwering to their final Intention in their Demand, that is, whether he came ſo from London, that he may endanger their City of the Plague, although their immediate Intention were to know, whether he came from London or no. That Man (ſaith the Book) the very Light of Nature would clear from Perjury.

In like manner, One being convented in the Biſhop's Court, becauſe he refuſeth to take ſuch a one to his Wife, as he had contracted with, per verba de præſenti, having contracted with another privily before, ſo that he cannot be Husband to her that claimeth him; may anſwer, That he never contracted with her per verba de præſenti: underſtanding, that he did not ſo contract that it was a Marriage; for that is the final Intention of the Judge, to know whether there were a ſufficient Marriage between them or no.

Never did Father Cranmer, Father Latimer, Father Ridley, thoſe bleſſed Martyrs, know theſe Shifts, neither would they have uſed them to have ſaved their Lives. And ſurely let every good Man take heed of ſuch Jurors or Witneſſes, there being no Faith, no Bond of Religion or Civility, no Conſcience of Truth in ſuch Men; and therefore the Concluſion ſhall be that of the Prophet David, Domine libera Animam meam a labiis iniquis & a lingua doloſa; Deliver me, O Lord, from lying Lips, and from a deceitful Tongue.

S. P. Q. R. was ſometimes taken for theſe Words, Senatus Populuſque Romanus; the Senate and People of Rome: but now they may truly be expreſſed thus, Stultus Populus quærit Romam; A fooliſh People that runneth to Rome. And here was very aptly and delightfully inſerted and related the Apologue or Tale of the Cat and the Mice: The Cat having a long time preyed upon the Mice, the poor Creatures at laſt, for their Safety, contained themſelves within their Holes; but the Cat finding his Prey to ceaſe, as being known to the Mice, that he was indeed their Enemy and a Cat, deviſeth ſeth this Courſe following, viz. Changeth his Hue, getteth on a Religious Habit, ſhaveth his Crown, walks gravely by their Holes: And yet perceiving that the Mice kept their Holes, and looking out, ſuſpected the worſt, he formally, and father-like, ſaid unto them, Quod fueram non ſum, frater; caput aſpice tonſum! Oh Brother, I am not as you take me for, no more a Cat; ſee my Habit and ſhaven Crown! Hereupon ſome of the more credulous and bold among them, were again, by this Deceit, ſnatched up; and therefore, when afterwards he came as before to entice them forth, they would come out no more, but anſwered, Cor tibi reſtat idem, vix tibi præſto fidem: Talk what you can, we will never believe you, you have ſtill a Cat's Heart within you: You do not watch and pray, but you watch to prey. And ſo have the Jeſuits, yea, and Prieſts too, for they are all joined in the Tails like Sampſon's Foxes, Ephraim againſt Manaſſes, and Manaſſes againſt Ephraim, but both againſt Judah.

8. The laſt Conſideration is concerning the admirable Diſcovery of this Treaſon, which was by one of themſelves, who had taken the Oath and Sacrament, as hath been ſaid, againſt his own will: The Means was by a dark and doubtful Letter ſent to my Lord Mounteagle.

And thus much as touching the Conſiderations; the Obſervations follow, to be conſidered in this Powder-Treaſon, and are briefly thus:

1. If the Cellar had not been hired, the Mine-work could hardly, or not at all have been diſcovered; for the Mine was neither found nor ſuſpected until the Danger was paſt, and the capital Offenders apprehended, and by themſelves, upon Examination, confeſſed.

2. How the King was divinely illuminated by Almighty God, the only Ruler of Princes, like an Angel of God, to direct and point as it were to the very Place, to cauſe a ſearch to be made there, out of thoſe dark Words of the Letter concerning a terrible Blow.

3. Obſerve a miraculous Accident which befel in Stephen Littleton's Houſe, called Holbach, in Staffordſhire, after they had been two days in open Rebellion, immediately before the Apprehenſion of theſe Traitors: For ſome of them ſtanding by the Fire-ſide, and having ſet two pound and an half of Powder to dry in a Platter before the Fire, and underſet the ſaid Platter with a great Linen Bag full of other Powder, containing ſome fifteen or ſixteen pounds; it ſo fell out, that one coming to put more Wood into the Fire, and caſting it on, there flew a Coal into the Platter, by reaſon whereof the Powder taking fire and blowing up, ſcorched thoſe who were neareſt, as Catesby, Graunt, and Rookewood, blew up the Roof of the Houſe; and the Linen-Bag which was ſet under the Platter being therewith ſuddenly carried out through the Breach, fell down in the Court-yard whole and unfir'd: which if it had took fire in the Room, would have ſlain them all there, ſo that they never ſhould have come to this Tryal: and Lex juſtior ulla eſt, quam necis artifices arte perire ſua.

4. Note, that Gunpowder was the Invention of a Fryar, one of the Romiſh Rabble, as Printing was of a Soldier.

5. Obſerve the ſending of Bainham, one of the damned Crew, to the High-Prieſt of Rome, to give ſignification of this Blow, and to crave his Direction and Aid.

6. That for all their ſtirring and riſing in open Rebellion, and notwithſtanding the falſe Rumours given out by them, That the Throats of all Catholicks ſhould be cut; ſuch is his Majeſty's bleſſed Government, and the Loyalty of his Subjects, as they got not any one Man to take their parts beſides their own Company.

7. Obſerve, the Sheriff, the ordinary Miniſter of Juſtice, according to the Duty of his Office, with ſuch Power as he on a ſudden by Law collected, ſuppreſſed them.

8. That God ſuffered their intended Miſchief to come ſo near the Period, as not to be diſcovered, but within few hours before it ſhould have been executed.

9. That it was in the entring of the Sun into the Tropick of Capricorn, when they began their Mine; noting, that by Mining, they ſhould deſcend; and by Hanging, aſcend.

10. That there never was any Proteſtant Miniſter in any Treaſon and Murder as yet attempted within this Realm.

I am now come to the laſt part, which I propoſed in the beginning of this Diſcourſe; and that is, touching certain Compariſons of this Powder-Treaſon of the Jeſuits, with that of Raleigh, and the other of the Prieſts Watſon and Clarke.

1. They had all one End, and that was the Romiſh Catholick Cauſe.

2. The ſame Means, by Popiſh and Diſcontented Perſons, Prieſts and Lay-men.

3. They all plaid at hazard: The Prieſts were at the Bye, Raleigh at the Main, but theſe in at all; as purpoſing to deſtroy all the King's Royal Iſſue, and withal the whole Eſtate.

4. They were all alike obliged by the ſame Oath and Sacrament.

5. The ſame Proclamations were intended (after the Fact) to be publiſhed for reformation of Abuſes.

6. The like Army provided for invading, to land at Milford-Haven, or in Kent.

7. The ſame Penſions of Crowns promiſed.

8. The agreeing of the Times of the Treaſon of Raleigh and theſe Men, which was when the Conſtable of Spain was coming hither: and Raleigh ſaid, there could be no ſuſpicion of any Invaſion, ſeeing that the Conſtable of Spain was then expected for a Treaty of Peace; and the Navy might be brought to the Groin under pretence of the Service in the Low-Countries. And Raleigh further ſaid, That many more were hanged for Words, than for Deeds. And before Raleigh's Treaſon was diſcovered, it was reported in Spain, that Don Raleigh and Don Cobham ſhould cut the King of England's Throat.

I ſay not, that we have any Proofs, that theſe of the Powder-Plot were acquainted with Raleigh, or Raleigh with them: but as before was ſpoken of the Jeſuits and Prieſts, ſo they all were joined in the Ends, like Sampſon's Foxes in the Tails, howſoever ſever'd in their Heads.

The Concluſion ſhall be from the admirable Clemency and Moderation of the King, in that howſoever theſe Traitors have exceeded all others their Predeceſſors in Miſchief, and ſo Creſcente malitia, creſcere debuit & Pœna; yet neither will the King exceed the uſual Puniſhment of Law, nor invent any new Torture or Torment for them; but is graciouſly pleaſed to afford them as well an

an ordinary Courſe of Tryal, as an ordinary Puniſhment, much inferior to their Offence. And ſurely worthy of Obſervation is the Puniſhment by Law provided and appointed for High-Treaſon, which we call Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis. For firſt, after a Traitor hath had his juſt Tryal, and is convicted and attainted, he ſhall have his Judgment to be drawn to the place of Execution from his Priſon, as being not worthy any more to tread upon the face of the Earth, whereof he was made: Alſo for that he hath been retrograde to Nature, therefore is he drawn backward at a Horſe-Tail. And whereas God hath made the Head of Man the higheſt and moſt ſupreme part, as being his chief Grace and Ornament, Pronaque cum ſpectent Animalia cætera terram, Os homini ſublime dedit; he muſt be drawn with his Head declining downward, and lying ſo near the ground as may be, being thought unfit to take benefit of the common Air. For which cauſe alſo he ſhall be ſtrangled, being hanged up by the Neck between Heaven and Earth, as deemed unworthy of both, or either; as likewiſe, that the Eyes of Men may behold, and their Hearts contemn him. Then is he to be cut down alive, and to have his Privy Parts cut off and burnt before his Face, as being unworthily begotten, and unfit to leave any Generation after him. His Bowels and inlay'd Parts taken out and burnt, who inwardly had conceived and harboured in his Heart ſuch horrible Treaſon. After, to have his Head cut off, which had imagined the Miſchief. And laſtly, his Body to be quartered, and the Quarters ſet up in ſome high and eminent Place, to the View and Deteſtation of Men, and to become a Prey for the Fowls of the Air.

And this is a Reward due to Traitors, whoſe Hearts be hardned: For that it is Phyſick of State and Government, to let out corrupt Blood from the Heart. But, Pœnitentia vera nunquam ſera, ſed pœnitentia ſera raro vera: True Repentance is indeed never too late; but late Repentance is ſeldom found true: which yet I pray the merciful Lord to grant unto them, that having a ſenſe of their Offences, they may make a true and ſincere Confeſſion both for their Souls Health, and for the Good and Safety of the King and this State. And for the reſt that are not yet apprehended, my Prayer to God is, Ut aut convertantur ne pereant, aut confundantur ne noceant; that either they may be converted, to the end they periſh not, or elſe confounded that they hurt not.

After this, by the direction of Maſter Attorney-General, were their ſeveral Examinations (ſubſcribed by themſelves) ſhewed particularly unto them, and acknowledged by them to be their own, and true, wherein every one had confeſſed the Treaſon. Then did Maſter Attorney deſire, That albeit that which had been already done and confeſſed at the Bar, might be all-ſufficient for the Declaration and Juſtification of the Courſe of Juſtice then held, eſpecially ſeeing we have Reos confitentes, the Traitor's own voluntary Confeſſions at the Bar; yet for further Satisfaction to ſo great a Preſence and Audience, and their better Memory of the Carriage of theſe Treaſons, the voluntary and free Confeſſions of all the ſaid ſeveral Traitors in writing ſubſcribed with their own proper Hands, and acknowledged at the Bar by themſelves to be true, were openly and diſtinctly read: by which, amongſt other things, it appeared that Bates was reſolved for what he undertook concerning the Powder-Treaſon, and being therein warranted by the Jeſuits. Alſo it appeared, that Hammond the Jeſuit, after that he knew the Powder-Treaſon was diſcovered, and that theſe Traitors had been in actual Rebellion, confeſſed them, and gave them Abſolution: and this was on Thurſday the 7th of November.

Here alſo was mention made by Maſter Attorney of the Confeſſions of Watſon and Clarke, Seminary Prieſts, upon their Apprehenſion; who affirmed, that there was ſome Treaſon intended by the Jeſuits, and then in hand; as might appear,

1. By their continual negotiating at that time with Spain, which they aſſured themſelves tended to nothing but a Preparation for a foreign Commotion.

2. By their collecting and gathering together ſuch great Sums of Money, as then they had done, therewith to levy an Army when time ſhould ſerve.

3. For that ſundry of the Jeſuits had been tampering with Catholicks, as well to diſſuade them from Acceptance of the King at his firſt coming, ſaying, That they ought rather to die, than to admit of any Heretick (as they continually termed his Majeſty) to the Crown: And that they might not, under pain of Excommunication, accept of any but a Catholick for their Sovereign; as alſo to diſſuade Catholicks from their Loyalty after the State was ſettled.

Laſtly, In that they had both bought up ſtore of great Horſes throughout the Country, and conveyed Powder and Shot, and Artillery, ſecretly to their Friends; wiſhing them not to ſtir, but keep themſelves quiet until they heard from them.

After the reading of their ſeveral Examinations, Confeſſions, and voluntary Declaration as well of themſelves, as of ſome of their dead Confederates, they were all by the Verdict of the Jury found Guilty of the Treaſons contained in their Indictment.

And then being ſeverally asked, What they could ſay, wherefore Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt them? There was not one of theſe (except Rookewood) who would make any continued Speech, either in Defence or Extenuation of the Fact.

Thomas Winter only deſired, that he might be hanged both for his Brother and himſelf.

Guy Fawkes being asked, Why he pleaded Not Guilty? Having nothing to ſay for his Excuſe, anſwered, That he had ſo done in reſpect of certain Conferences mention'd in the Indictment, which he ſaid that he knew not of: which were anſwered to have been ſet down according to Courſe of Law, as neceſſarily pre-ſuppoſed before the Reſolution of ſuch a Deſign.

Keys ſaid, That his Eſtate and Fortunes were deſperate, and as good now as at another time, and for this Cauſe rather than for another.

Bates craved Mercy.

Robert Winter, Mercy.

John Grant was a good while mute; yet after, ſubmiſſively ſaid, He was Guilty of a Conſpiracy intended, but never effected.

But Ambroſe Rookewood firſt excuſed his denial of the Indictment, for that he had rather loſe his Life than give it. Then did he acknowledge his Offence to be ſo heinous, that he juſtly deſerved the Indignation of the King, and of the Lords, and the Hatred of the whole Commonwealth; yet could he not deſpair of Mercy at the hands of a Prince, ſo abounding in Grace and Mercy: And the rather, becauſe his Offence, though it were incapable pable of any Excuſe, yet not altogether incapable of ſome Extenuation, in that he had been neither Author nor Actor, but only perſuaded and drawn in by Catesby, whom he loved above any worldly Man: and that he had concealed it not for any Malice to the Perſon of the King or to the State, or for any ambitious Reſpect of his own, but only drawn with the tender Reſpect, and the faithful and dear Affection he bare to Mr. Catesby his Friend, whom he eſteemed more dearer than any thing elſe in the World. And this Mercy he deſired not for any fear of the Image of Death, but for grief that ſo ſhameful a Death ſhould leave ſo perpetual a blemiſh and blot unto all Ages, upon his Name and Blood. But howſoever that this was his firſt Offence, yet he humbly ſubmitted himſelf to the Mercy of the King, and prayed that the King would herein imitate God, who ſometimes doth puniſh corporaliter, non mortaliter, corporally yet not mortally.

Then was related how that on the Friday immediately before this Arraignment, Robert Winter having found opportunity to have Conference with Fawkes in the Tower, in regard of the nearneſs of their Lodgings, ſhould ſay to Fawkes, as Robert Winter and Fawkes confeſſed, That he and Catesby had Sons, and that Boys would be Men, and that he hoped they would revenge the Cauſe: Nay, that God would raiſe up Children to Abraham out of Stones. Alſo that they were ſorry, that no body did ſet forth a Defence or Apology of their Action, but yet they would maintain the Cauſe at their Deaths.

Here alſo was reported Robert Winter's Dream, which he had before the blaſting with Powder in Littleton's Houſe, and which he himſelf confeſſed and firſt notified, viz. That he thought he ſaw Steeples ſtand awry, and within thoſe Churches ſtrange and unknown Faces. And after, when the foreſaid Blaſt had the Day following ſcorched divers of the Confederates, and much disfigured the Faces and Countenances of Grant, Rookewood, and others; then did Winter call to mind his Dream, and to his remembrance thought, that the Faces of his Aſſociates ſo ſcorched, reſembled thoſe which he had ſeen in his Dream. And thus much concerning the former Indictment.

Then was Sir Everard Digby arraigned, and after his Indictment was read; wherein he was charged, not only to have been acquainted with the Powder-Treaſon, and concealed it, and taken the double Oath of Secrecy and Conſtancy therein, but likewiſe to have been an Actor in this Conſpiracy; and laſtly to have expoſed, and openly ſhewed himſelf in the Rebellion in the Country amongſt the reſt of the Traytors. All which after he had attentively heard and marked, knowing that he had confeſſed it, and the Strength and Evidence of the Proofs againſt him, and convicted with the Teſtimony of his own Conſcience, ſhewed his diſpoſition to confeſs the principal part of the ſaid Indictment, and ſo began to enter into a Diſcourſe. But being advertiſed that he muſt firſt plead to the Indictment directly, either Guilty, or not Guilty; and that afterwards he ſhould be licenſed to ſpeak his Pleaſure; he forthwith confeſſed the Treaſon contained in the Indictment, and ſo fell into a Speech, whereof there were two parts, viz. Motives, and Petitions. The firſt Motive which drew him into this Action, was not Ambition or Diſcontentment of his Eſtate, neither Malice to any in Parliament, but the Friendſhip and Love he bare to Catesby, which prevailed ſo much, and was ſo powerful with him, as that for his ſake he was ever contented and ready to hazard himſelf and his Eſtate. The next Motive was the cauſe of Religion, which alone, ſeeing (as he ſaid) it lay at the ſtake, he entred into Reſolution to neglect in that behalf, his Eſtate, his Life, his Name, his Memory, his Poſterity, and all worldly and earthly Felicity whatſoever; though he did utterly extirpate, and extinguiſh all other hopes, for the reſtoring of the Catholick Religion in England. His third Motive was, that Promiſes were broken with the Catholicks. And laſtly, That they generally feared harder Laws from this Parliament againſt Recuſants, as that Recuſants Wives, and Women ſhould be liable to the Mulct as well as their Husbands and Men. And further, that it was ſuppoſed, that it ſhould be made a Præmunire, only to be a Catholick.

His Petitions were, That ſithence his Offence was confined and contained within himſelf, that the Puniſhment alſo of the ſame might extend only to himſelf, and not be transferred either to his Wife, Children, Siſters, or others: and therefore for his Wife he humbly craved, that ſhe might enjoy her Jointure; his Son, the benefit of an Entail made long before any thought of this Action; his Siſters, their juſt and due Portions, which were in his hands; his Creditors their rightful Debts, which that he might more juſtly ſet down under his Hand, he requeſted that before his Death, his Man (who was better acquainted both with the Men, and the Particulars than himſelf) might be licenſed to come unto him. Then prayed he Pardon of the King and Lords for his Guilt. And laſtly, he entreated to be beheaded; deſiring all Men to forgive him, and that his Death might ſatisfy them for his Treſpaſs.

To this Speech forthwith anſwered Sir Edward Coke Attorney General; but in reſpect of the time (for it grew now dark) very briefly:

1. For his Friendſhip with Catesby, that it was mere Folly and wicked Conſpiracy.

2. His Religion, Error, and Hereſy.

3. His Promiſes, idle and vain Preſumptions, as alſo his Fears, falſe Alarms. Concerning Wives that were Recuſants, if they were known ſo to be before their Husbands (though they were good Proteſtants) took them, and yet for outward and worldly Reſpects whatſoever, any would match with ſuch; great reaſon there is, that he or they ſhould pay for it, as knowing the penalty and burden before: for volenti & ſcienti non fit Injuria; No Man receives Injury in that, to which he willingly and knowingly agreeth and conſenteth. But if ſhe were no Recuſant at the time of Marriage, and yet afterwards he ſuffer her to be corrupted and ſeduced, by admitting Prieſts and Romaniſts into his Houſe; good Reaſon likewiſe that he, be he Papiſt or Proteſtant, ſhould pay for his Negligence and Miſgovernment.

4. Concerning the Petitions for Wife, for Children, for Siſters, &c. O how he doth now put on the bowels of Nature and Compaſſion, in the peril of his private and domeſtical Eſtate! But before, when the publick State of his Country, when the King, the Queen, the tender Princes, the Nobles, the whole Kingdom were deſigned to a perpetual Deſtruction; where was then this Piety, this religious Affection, this Care? All Nature, all Humanity, all Reſpect of Laws both divine and human, were quite abandoned; then was there no Conſcience made to extirpate the whole Nation, and all for a pretended Zeal to the Catholick Religion, and the Juſtification of ſo deteſtable and damnable a Fact.

Here did Sir Everard Digby interrupt Mr. Attorney, and ſaid that he did not juſtify the Fact, but confeſſed that he deſerved the vileſt Death, and moſt ſevere Puniſhment that might be: But he was an humble Petitioner for Mercy, and ſome Moderation of Juſtice. Whereupon Mr. Attorney replied, that he ſhould not look by the King to be honoured in the manner of his Death, having ſo far abandoned all Religion and Humanity in his Action: But that he was rather to admire the great Moderation and Mercy of the King, in that for ſo exorbitant a Crime, no new Torture anſwerable thereunto was deviſed to be inflicted upon him. And for his Wife and Children, whereas he ſaid that for the Catholick Cauſe he was content to neglect the Ruin of himſelf, his Wife, his Eſtate, and all; he ſhould have his deſire as it is in the Pſalm, Let his Wife be a Widow, and his Children Vagabonds, let his Poſterity be deſtroyed, and in the next Generation let his Name be quite put out. For the paying of your Creditors, it is equal and juſt; but yet fit the King be firſt ſatisfied and paid, to whom you owe ſo much, as that all you have is too little: yet theſe things muſt be left to the Pleaſure of his Majeſty, and the Courſe of Juſtice and Law.

My Lord of Northampton's Speech, as it was taken at the Arraignment of Sir Everard Digby, by T. S.

You muſt not hold it ſtrange, Sir Everard Digby, though at this time being preſſed in Duty, Conſcience and Truth, I do not ſuffer you to wander in the Labyrinth of your own idle Conceits, without oppoſition, to ſeduce others, as your ſelf have been ſeduced, by falſe Principles, or to convey your ſelf by Charms of Imputation, by Clouds of Error, and by Shifts of lately deviſed Equivocation, out of that ſtrait wherein your late ſecure and happy Fortune hath been unluckily entangled, but yet juſtly ſurprized by the Rage and Revenge of your own raſh Humours. If in this Crime (more horrible than any Man is able to expreſs) I could lament the Eſtate of any Perſon upon Earth, I could pity you; but thank your ſelf and your bad Counſellors for leading you into a Crime of ſuch a kind, as no leſs benumbeth in all faithful, true and honeſt Men, the Tenderneſs of Affection, than did in you the Senſe of all Humanity.

That you were once well thought of, and eſteemed by the late Queen, I can witneſs, having heard her ſpeak of you with that Grace, which might have encouraged a true Gentleman to have run a better Courſe. Nay, I will add further, that there was a time wherein you were as well affected to the King our Maſter's Expectation, though perhaps upon falſe Rumours and Reports, that he would have yielded Satisfaction to your unprobable and vaſt Deſires; but the Seed that wanted moiſture (as our Saviour himſelf reporteth) took no deep Root: that Zeal which hath no other End or Object than the pleaſing of it ſelf, is quickly ſpent; and Trajan, that worthy and wiſe Emperor, had reaſon to hold himſelf diſcharged of all Debts to thoſe that had offended more by Prevarication, than they could ever deſerve by Induſtry.

The Grace and Goodneſs of his Majeſty in giving Honour at his firſt coming unto many Men of your own Affection, and (as I think) unto your ſelf; his Facility in admitting all without diſtinction of Trojan or of Tyrian, to his Royal Preſence, upon juſt occaſions of Acceſs; his Integrity in ſetting open the Gate of civil Juſtice unto all his Subjects equally and indifferently, with many other Favours that ſucceeded by the progreſſion of Peace; are ſo palpable and evident to all Men, that have either Eyes of Underſtanding, or Underſtanding of Capacity, as your ſelf and many others have been driven of late to excuſe and countenance your execrable Ingratitude with a falſe and ſcandalous Report of ſome further Hope and Comfort yielded to the Catholicks for Toleration or Connivance, before his coming to the Crown, than ſince hath been performed, made good or ſatisfied.

I am not ignorant, that this ſeditious and falſe Alarm hath awaked and incited many working Spirits to the prejudice of the preſent State, that might otherwiſe have ſlept as before with ſilence and ſufferance; it hath ſerved for a Shield of Wax againſt a Sword of Power: it hath been uſed as an Inſtrument of Art to ſhadow falſe Approaches, till the Trojan Horſe might be brought within the Walls of the Parliament, with a Belly ſtuffed, not as in old time with armed Greeks, but with helliſh Gunpowder. But howſoever God had blinded you and others in this Action, as he did the King of Egypt and his Inſtruments, for the brighter Evidence of his own powerful Glory; yet every Man of Underſtanding could diſcern, that a Prince whoſe Judgment had been fixed by Experience of ſo many Years upon the Poles of the North and the South, could not ſhrink upon the ſudden: no nor ſince with fear of that Combuſtion which Catesby that Arch-Traytor, like a ſecond Phaeton, would have cauſed in an inſtant in all the Elements. His Majeſty did never value Fortunes of the World, in leſſer matter than Religion, with the freedom of his Thoughts: he thought it no ſafe Policy (profeſſing as he did, and ever will) to call up more Spirits into the Circle than he could put down again; he knew, that omne regnum in ſe diviſum deſolabitur. Philoſophy doth teach, that whatſoever any Man may think in ſecret thought, that where one doth hold of Cephas, another of Apollo, openly Diſſenſion enſues, Quod inſitum alieno ſolo eſt, in id quo alitur natura vertente degenerat; and the World will ever apprehend, that Quorum eſt commune ſymbolum, facillimus eſt tranſitus.

Touching the Point it ſelf of promiſing a kind of Toleration to Catholicks, as it was divulged by theſe two Limbs of Lucifer, Watſon and Piercy, to raiſe a ground of Practice and Conſpiracy againſt the State and Perſon of our dear Sovereign; let the Kingdom of Scotland witneſs for the ſpace of ſo many Years before his coming hither, whether either Flattery or Fear (no not upon that Enterprize of the 17th of November, which would have put the patience of any Prince in Europe to his proof) could draw from the King the leaſt Inclination to this diſpenſative Indifference, that was only believed, becauſe it was eagerly deſired.

Every Man doth know how great Art was uſed, what ſtrong Wits ſublimed, and how many Miniſters ſuborned and corrupted many Years both in Scotland and in foreign Parts, to ſet the King's Teeth an edge with fair Promiſes of future Helps and Supplies, to that happy End of attaining his due Right in England, when the Sun ſhould ſet, to riſe more glorioully in the ſame Hemiſphere, to the wonder both of this Iſland and of the World. But all in vain; for jacta erat alea, the King's Compaſs Compaſs had been ſet before, and by a more certain Rule, and they were commonly caſt off as forlorn Hopes in the King's Favour, that ran a Courſe of ranking themſelves in the foremoſt Front of foreign Correſpondency.

Upon notice given to his Majeſty from hence ſome years before the Death of the late Queen, that many Men were grown ſuſpicious of his Religion, by Rumours ſpread abroad, that ſome of thoſe in foreign Parts, that ſeemed to be well-affected to his future Expectation, had uſed his Name more audaciouſly, and ſpoken of his Favour to the Catholicks, more forwardly than the King's own Conſcience and unchangeable Decree could acknowledge or admit (either with a purpoſe to prepare the Minds of foreign Princes, or for a practice to eſtrange and alienate Affections at home) not only utterly renounced and condemned theſe Encroachments of blind Zeal, and raſh Proceedings, by the Voices of his own Miniſters, but was careful alſo for a Caution to ſucceeding Hopes, ſo far as lay in him, that by the Diſgrace of the Delinquents in this kind, the Minds of all Engliſh Subjects chiefly might be ſecured, and the World ſatisfied.

No Man can ſpeak in this Caſe more confidently than my ſelf, that received in the Queen's time, for the ſpace of many Years, Directions and Warnings to take heed, that neither any further Comfort might be given to Catholicks, concerning future Favours, than he did intend, which was to bind all Subjects in one Kingdom to one Law, concerning the Religion eſtabliſhed, howſoever in Civil Matters he might extend his Favour as he found juſt cauſe: nor any Seeds of Jealouſy and Diffidence ſown in the Minds of Proteſtants by Semeis and Achitophels, to make them doubtful of his Conſtancy, to whom he would confirm with his deareſt Blood, that Faith which he had ſucked from the Breaſt of his Nurſe, apprehended from the Cradle of his Infancy, and maintained with his uttermoſt Endeavour, Affection and Strength; ſince he was more able out of reading and diſputing, to give a reaſon of thoſe Principles which he had now digeſted and turned to Nutriment.

He that wrote the Book of Titles before the late Queen's Death, declares abundantly by ſeeking to poſſeſs ſome foreign Prince of the King's Hereditary Crowns, when the Cauſe ſhould come to the proof, and may witneſs inſtead of many; what hope there was of the King's Favour or Affection to Catholicks inthe caſe of Toleration or Diſpenſation, with Exerciſe of Conſcience. For every Man may gueſs that it was no ſleight or ordinary degree of deſpair, that made him and other of his Suit renounce their Portion in the Son and Heir of that renowned and rare Lady, Mary Queen of Scotland, a Member of the Roman Church; as ſome did in David, Nulla nobis pars in David, nec hæreditas in filio Iſa: For hereof by Letters intercepted in their Paſſage into Scotland, the Records and Proofs are evident. His Majeſty, ſo long as he was in expectation of that which by the Work and Grace of God he doth now poſſeſs, did ever ſeek to ſettle his Eſtabliſhment upon the Faith of Proteſtants in generality, as the moſt aſſured Shoot-Anchor. For tho he found a number on the other ſide, as faithful and as well-affected to his Perſon, Claim and Intereſt, as any Men alive, as well in reſpect of their dependency upon the Queen his Mother, as for the taſte which they had of the ſweetneſs of himſelf; yet finding with what ſtrength of Blood many have been over-carried out of a Fervency in Zeal in former Times, obſerving to what Cenſures they were ſubject, both in Points of Faith, and Limitation of Loyalty: And laſt of all, forecaſting to what end their former Proteſtation would come, when preſent Satisfaction ſhould ſhrink; he was ever fearful to embark himſelf for any further Voyage and Adventure in this Strait, than his own Compaſs might ſteer him, and his Judgment level him.

If any one green Leaf for Catholicks could have been viſibly diſcerned by the Eye of Catesby, Winter, Garnet, Fawkes, &c. they would neither have entred into Practice with foreign Princes during the Qeeen's time for prevention of the King's Lawful and Hereditary Right, nor have renewed the ſame both abroad and at home by Miſſions and Combinations, after his Majeſty was both applauded and entered.

It is true, that by Confeſſions we find, that falſe Prieſt Watſon, and Arch-Traytor Piercy, to have been the firſt Deviſers and Divulgers of this ſcandalous Report, as an accurſed Ground, whereon they might with ſome advantage, as it was conceived, build the Caſtles of their Conſpiracy.

Touching the firſt, no Man can ſpeak more ſoundly to the point than my ſelf: for being ſent into the Priſon by the King to charge him with this falſe Alarm, only two days before his Death, and upon his Soul to preſs him in the preſence of God, and as he would anſwer it at another Bar, to confeſs directly whether at either of both theſe times he had acceſs unto his Majeſty at Edinborough, his Majeſty did give him any Promiſe, Hope or Comfort of Encouragement to Catholicks concerning Toleration; he did there proteſt upon his Soul that he could never win one Inch of Ground, or draw the ſmalleſt Comfort from the King in thoſe degrees; nor further than that he would have them apprehend, that as he was a Stranger to this State, ſo till he underſtood in all Points how thoſe matters ſtood, he would not promiſe Favour any way; but did proteſt that all the Crowns and Kingdoms in this World, ſhould not induce him to change any jot of his Profeſſion, which was the Paſture of his Soul, and Earneſt of his eternal Inheritance. He did confeſs that in very deed, to keep up the Hearts of Catholicks in Love and Duty to the King, he had imparted the King's words to many, in a better Tune, and a higher kind of Deſcant, than his Book of plain Song did direct; becauſe he knew that others like ſly Bargemen looked that way, when their ſtroke was bent another way. For this he craved Pardon of the King in humble manner, and for his main Treaſons of a higher Nature than theſe Figures of Hypocriſy; and ſeemed penitent, as well for the Horror of his Crime, as for the Falſhood of his Whiſperings.

It hindered not the Satisfaction which may be given to Piercy's Shadow (the moſt deſperate Boute-feu in the Pack) that as he died impenitent, for any thing we know; ſo likewiſe he died ſilent in the Particulars. For firſt, it is not ſtrange that ſuch a Traytor ſhould deviſe ſo ſcandalous a Slander out of the Malice of his Heart, intending to deſtroy the King by any means, and to advance all means that might remove obſtructions and impediments to the Plot of Gunpowder. The more odious that he could make him to the Party Malecontent, and the more ſharply that he could ſet the Party Malecontent upon the point and Humour of Revenge; the ſtronger was his Hope at the giving of the laſt Blow, to be glorified and juſtified. But touching the truth of the matters, it will be witneſſed by many, that this Traytor Piercy after both the firſt and ſecond return from the King, brought to the Catholicks no ſpark of Comfort, of Encouragement, of Hope; whereof no ſtronger Proof of Argument doth need, than that Fawkes and others were imployed both into Spain and other Parts, for the reviving of a Practice ſuſpended and covered, after Piercy's coming back; as in likelihood they ſhould not have been, in caſe he had returned with a Branch of Olive in his Mouth, or yielded any Ground of Comfort to reſolve upon.

Therefore I thought it thus far needful to proceed, for the clearing of thoſe Scandals that were caſt abroad, by theſe forlorn Hopes and graceleſs Inſtruments. It only remains that I pray for your Repentance in this World for the Satisfaction of many, and Forgiveneſs in the next World, for the ſaving of your ſelf; having had by the King's favour ſo long a time to caſt up your Account, before your appearance at the Seat of the great Auditor.

H. Northampton.

Then ſpake the Earl of Salisbury, eſpecially to that Point, of his Majeſty's breaking of Promiſe with Recuſants, which was uſed and urged by Sir Everard Digby, as a motive to draw him to participate in this ſo hideous a Treaſon. Wherein his Lordſhip after acknowledgment that Sir Everard Digby was his Ally, and having made a zealous and religious Proteſtation concerning the Sincerity and Truth of that which he would deliver; ſhortly and clearly defended the Honour of the King herein, and freed his Majeſty from all Imputation and Scandal of Irreſolution in Religion, and in the conſtant and perpetual maintaining thereof; as alſo from having at any time given the leaſt hope, much leſs promiſe of Toleration. To which purpoſe he declared how his Majeſty, as well before his coming to this Crown, as at that very time, and always ſince, was ſo far from making of Promiſe, or giving Hope of Toleration, that he ever profeſſed he ſhould not endure the very Motion thereof from any.

And here his Lordſhip ſhewed what was done at Hampton-Court at the time of Watſon's Treaſon, where ſome of the greater Recuſants were conventedd; and being found then not to have their Fingers in Treaſon, were ſent away again with Encouragement to perſiſt in their dutiful Carriage, and with Promiſe only of thus much Favour, That thoſe mean Profits which had accrued ſince the King's time to his Majeſty for their Recuſancy, ſhould be forgiven to the principal Gentlemen, who had both at his Entry ſhewed ſo much Loyalty, and had kept themſelves ſo free ſince from all Conſpiracies.

Then did his Lordſhip alſo (the rather to ſhew how little truth Sir Everard Digby's words did carry in any thing which he had ſpoken) plainly prove, that all his Proteſtations wherein he denied ſo conſtantly to be privy to the Plot of Powder, were utterly falſe, by the Teſtimony of Fawkes (there preſent at the Bar) who had confeſſed, that certain Months before that Seſſion, the ſaid Fawkes being with Digby at his Houſe in the Country, about what time there had fallen much wet; Digby taking Fawkes aſide after Supper, told him, that he was much afraid that the Powder in the Cellar was grown dank, and that ſome new muſt be provided, leſt that ſhould not take fire.

Next, the ſaid Earl did juſtly and greatly commend the Lord Monteagle for his Loyal and Honourable Care of his Prince and Country, in the ſpeedy bringing forth of the Letter ſent unto him; wherein he ſaid, that he had ſhewed both his Diſcretion and Fidelity. Which Speech being ended, Digby then acknowledged, that he ſpake not that of the Breach of Promiſe out of his own Knowledge, but from their Relation whom he truſted; and namely from Sir Tho. Treſham.

Now were the Jury returned, who having delivered their Verdict, whereby they jointly found thoſe ſeven Priſoners, arraigned upon the former Indictment, Guilty; Serjeant Philips craved Judgment againſt thoſe ſeven upon their Conviction, and againſt Sir Everard Digby upon his own Confeſſion.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, after a grave and prudent Relation and Defence of the Laws made by Queen Elizabeth againſt Recuſants, Prieſts, and Receivers of Prieſts, together with the ſeveral Occaſions, Progreſſes and Reaſons of the ſame; and having plainly demonſtrated and proved that they were all neceſſary, mild, equal, moderate, and to be juſtified to all the World; pronounced Judgment.

Upon the riſing of the Court, Sir Everard Digby bowing himſelf towards the Lords, ſaid, If I may but hear any of your Lordſhips ſay, you forgive me, I ſhall go more cheerfully to the Gallows. Whereunto the Lords ſaid, God forgive you, and we do.

And ſo according to the Sentence, on Thurſday following Execution was done upon Sir Everard Digby, Robert Winter, John Graunt, and Thomas Bates, at the Weſt end of Paul's Church; and on Friday following, upon Thomas Winter, Ambroſe Rookewood, Robert Keyes, and Guy Fawkes, within the old Palace-yard at Weſtminſter, not far from the Parliament-Houſe.

The Arraignment of HENRY GARNET, Superior of the Jeſuits in England; on Friday the 28*th of* March, 1606. at Guildhall in the City of London: Before the Lords Commiſſioners there preſent; Viz.

Sir. Leonard Holyday, Lord Mayor.
The Earl of Nottingham.
The Earl of Suffolk.
The Earl of Worceſter.
The Earl of Northampton.
The Earl of Salisbury.

The Lord Chief Juſtice of England, Sir John Popham.
The Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer.
Sir Chriſtopher Yelverton Kt. one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the King's-Bench.

THE Subſtance and Effect of the Indictment of Henry Garnet, Superior of the Jeſuits in England, appeareth before in the Relation of the former Arraignment, and therefore unneceſſary to be repeated again; which Indictment was ſummarily and effectually repeated by Sir John Croke Kt. his Majeſty's Serjeant at Law, in this manner.

This Perſon and Priſoner here at the Bar, this Place, and this preſent Occaſion and Action do prove that true, which the Author of all Truth hath told us; That nihil eſt occultum quod non manifeſtabitur, & nihil eſt ſecretum, quod non revelabitur & in palam veniet: There is nothing hid that ſhall not be made manifeſt, there is nothing ſecret that ſhall not be revealed and come in publick. And that God by whom Kings do reign, Conſilium Pravorum diſſipat, doth ſcatter and bring to nought the Counſel of the Wicked.

That he ſpake with fear and trembling, and with horror and amazedneſs, againſt that rotten Root of that hideous and hateful Tree of Treaſon, and of that deteſtable and unheard-of Wickedneſs, he did crave Pardon for it; affirming that no Fleſh could mention it without Aſtoniſhment.

He ſhewed that Henry Garnet of the Profeſſion of the Jeſuits, otherwiſe Walley, otherwiſe Darcy, otherwiſe Roberts, otherwiſe Farmer, otherwiſe Philips (for by all thoſe Names he called himſelf) ſtood indicted of the moſt barbarous and damnable Treaſons, the like whereof was never heard of: That he was a Man, Multorum Nominum, but not boni Nominis; of many Names, as appeared by the Indictment, but of no good Name; adorned by God and Nature, with many Gifts and Graces, if the Grace of God had been joined with them: But that wanting, quanto ornatior in other Gifts, tanto nequior.

That this Garnet (his Majeſty ſummoning his Parliament to be holden at Weſtminſter the 19th of March, in the firſt Year of his Reign, and by divers Prorogations continuing it till the third of October laſt) together with Catesby lately ſlain in open Rebellion, and with Oſwald Teſmond a Jeſuit, otherwiſe Oſwald Greenwell, as a falſe Traytor againſt the moſt mighty and moſt renowned King our Sovereign Lord King James; the 9th of June laſt, traitorouſly did conſpire and compaſs,

To depoſe the King, and to deprive him of his Government;

To deſtroy and kill the King, and the noble Prince Henry his eldeſt Son: Such a King, and ſuch a Prince, ſuch a Son of ſuch a Father, whoſe Vertues are rather with amazed ſilence to be wondred at, than able by any Speech to be expreſſed.

To ſtir Sedition and Slaughter throughout the Kingdom.

To ſubvert the true Religion of God, and whole Government of the Kingdom.

To overthrow the whole State of the Commonwealth.

The Manner how to perform theſe horrible Treaſons, the Serjeant ſaid Horreo dicere, his Lips did tremble to ſpeak it, but his Heart praiſed God for his mighty Deliverance. The Practice ſo inhuman, ſo barbarous, ſo damnable, ſo deteſtable, as the like was never read nor heard of, or ever entred into the Heart of the moſt wicked Man to imagine. And here he ſaid he could not but mention that religious Obſervation ſo religiouſly obſerved by his religious Majeſty, wiſhing it were engraven in Letters of Gold, in the Hearts of all his People; The more helliſh the Imagination, the more Divine the Preſervation.

This Garnet, together with Catesby and Teſmond, had Speech and Conference together of theſe Treaſons, and concluded moſt traitorouſly, and deviliſhly,

That Catesby, Winter, Fawkes, with many other Traytors lately arraigned of High Treaſon, would blow up with Gunpowder in the Parliament-Houſe, the King, the Prince, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the Judges of the Realm, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, and many other Subjects and Servants of the King aſſembled in Parliament at one Blow, traitorouſly and deviliſhly to deſtroy them all, and piece-meal to tear them in ſunder, without reſpect of Majeſty, Dignity, and Degree, Age or Place.

And

And for that purpoſe, a great Quantity of Gunpowder was traitorouſly and ſecretly placed, and hid by theſe Conſpirators under the Parliament-Houſe.

This being the Subſtance and the Effect of the Indictment, Garnet did plead, Not guilty to it; and a very diſcreet and ſubſtantial Jury, with allowance of Challenges unto the Priſoner, were ſworn at the Bar for the Tryal of him.

To whom the Serjeant ſhew'd that they ſhould have Evidences to prove him guilty, that ſhould be Luce clariores, that every Man might read them running.

They ſhould have Teſtimonia Rerum, and Loquentia ſigna, Witneſſes and Teſtimonies of the things themſelves.

Reum confitentem, or rather Reos confitentes, accuſantes invicem.

That every one may ſay unto him, Serve nequam, thou wicked Subject, thou wicked Servant, ex ore tuo te judico, of thine own Mouth I judg thee, of thine own Mouth I condemn thee.

And this ſhall be made ſo manifeſt by him that beſt can do it, as ſhall ſtop the mouth of all contradiction.

The Effect of that which Sir Edward Coke Knt. his Majeſty's Attorney General, ſaid at the Arraignment of Henry Garnet, Superior of the Jeſuits in England, as near to his own Words as the ſame could be taken.

Your Lordſhips may perceive by the Parts of the Indictment which have been ſuccinctly open'd, that this is but a latter Act of that heavy and woful Tragedy, which is commonly called the Powder-Treaſon, wherein ſome have already play'd their parts, and according to their Demerits ſuffer'd condign Puniſhment and Pains of Death. We are now to proceed againſt this Priſoner for the ſame Treaſon; in which reſpect the neceſſary Repetition of ſome things before ſpoken, ſhall at the leaſt ſeem tolerable: for that, Nunquam nimis dicitur, quod nunquam ſatis dicitur; It is never ſaid too often, that can never be ſaid enough. Nay, it may be thought juſtifiable to repeat in this Caſe; for that in reſpect of the Confluence and Acceſs of People at the former Arraignment, many could not hear at that time: And yet, becauſe I fear it would be tedious; for that moſt of all my Lords Commiſſioners, and of this honourable and great Aſſembly, were preſent at the Arraignment, and for that I am now to deal with a Man of another Quality, I will only touch, and that very little, of the former Diſcourſe or Evidence; and that little alſo ſhall be mingled with ſuch new Matter, as ſhall be worth the hearing, as being indeed of weight and moment: and all this with very great brevity.

But before I further proceed to the opening of this ſo great a Cauſe, I hold it fit and neceſſary to give ſatisfaction to two divers and adverſe ſorts of Men, who, according to the divers Affections of their Hearts, have divined and conjectur'd diverſly of the Cauſe of the Procraſtination and Delay of Proceeding, eſpecially againſt this Perſon; the Matter wherewith he ſtands charged being ſo tranſcendent and exorbitant as it is. The firſt ſort of theſe, out of their hearty Love and Loyalty to their natural Liege Lord and King, and to their dear Country and this State, have feared the Iſſue of this Delay, leſt that others might be animated by ſuch Protraction of Judgment, to perpetrate the like: for they ſay (and it is moſt true) Quia non profertur cito contra malos ſententia, abſq; timore ullo filii hominum perpetrant mala; Becauſe ſpeedy Juſtice is not executed againſt wicked Men, the People without all Fear commit Wickedneſs. And pity it were that theſe good Men ſhould not be ſatisfy'd. The other ſort are of thoſe, who in reſpect no greater Expedition hath been uſed againſt this Priſoner at the Bar, fall to excuſing of him, as gathering theſe Preſumptions and Conjectures: Firſt, that if he, or any of the Jeſuits, had indeed been juſtly to be touched with this moſt damnable and damned Treaſon, ſurely they ſhould have been brought forth and try'd before this time. Secondly, That there was a Bill exhibited in Parliament concerning this Treaſon, and this Traitor, but that it was defer'd and proceeded not, for want of juſt and ſufficient Proofs. Nay, Thirdly, There was a particular Apology ſpread abroad for this Man, and another general for all Jeſuits and Prieſts, together with this Imputation, That King-killing and Queen-killing was not indeed a Doctrine of theirs, but only a Fiction and Policy of our State, thereby to make the Popiſh Religion to be deſpiſed and in diſgrace.

Now for theſe Men, pity it were that the Eye of their Underſtanding ſhould not be enlightned and clear'd, that ſo being by demonſtrative and luculent Proofs convinced, they may be to their Prince and Country truly converted. Firſt therefore concerning the Delay, (tho it be true, Quod flagellatur in corde, qui laudatur in ore) yet muſt I remember the great Pains of my Lords the Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Privy Council in this Cauſe: for Garnet being firſt examined upon the 13th of the laſt Month, hath ſithence been again examined and interrogated above twenty ſeveral times, which laſted to the 26th of March, within two days of this Arraignment. Touching the Bill in Parliament, it was indeed exhibited before Garnet was apprehended; but his Majeſty's gracious Pleaſure was, that albeit this Treaſon be without all Precedent and Example, yet they ſhould quietly and equally be indicted, arraigned, publickly heard, and proceeded withal in a moderate, ordinary, and juſt Courſe of Law. Concerning their Apologies, and the Fictions of State (as they term them) anſwer ſhall be made, by God's Grace, in the proper Place, when I come to lay open the Plots and Practices of the Jeſuits, to the ſatisfaction of all this honourable and great Aſſembly. But firſt I have an humble Petition to preſent to your Lordſhips, and the reſt of this grave Auditory for my ſelf, in reſpect that I am neceſſarily to name great Princes, yet with Proteſtation and Caution, that no Blot is intended to be laid upon any of them. I know there is Lex in ſermone tenenda, A Law and Rule to be obſerved in ſpeaking, eſpecially in this kind; and that Kings and great Princes, and the mighty Men of this Earth are to be reverently and reſpectfully dealt withal: and therefore I humbly recommend unto you theſe Conſiderations, concerning this Point of mentioning foreign States.

1*ſt*, That the Kingdoms were at thoſe times in open Enmity and Hoſtility, and that might be honourable at one time which was not ſo at another: ſo that hoſtile Actions were then juſtifiable and honourable, as being in times of Hoſtility and War.

2*dly*, In theſe things it is not the King's Attorney that ſpeaks, but Garnet the Jeſuit: As alſo that it proceedeth from an inevitable Neceſſity; for that the Examinations as well of this, as of the reſt of the Traitors, Traitors, cannot otherwiſe be open'd and urged againſt them: ſo is the mention of great Men, by the Impudency of theſe wicked Traitors, woven into their Confeſſions, as they cannot be ſever'd.

And with this Comfort I conclude the Preface, That I hope in God, this Day's Work, in the Judgment of ſo many as ſhall be attentive and well diſpoſed, ſhall tend to the Glory of Almighty God, the Honour of our Religion, the Safety of his moſt excellent Majeſty and his royal Iſſue, and the Security of the whole Commonwealth.

For Memory and Method, all that I ſhall ſpeak may be contracted to two general Heads.

Firſt, I will conſider the Offences, together with certain Circumſtances,

Precedent before the Offence,
Concurrent with the Offence,
Subſequent after the Offence.

Secondly, I will lay down ſome Obſervations concerning the ſame.

For the proper Name of this Offence, becauſe I muſt ſpeak of ſeveral Treaſons, for diſtinction and ſeparation of this from the other, I will name it the Jeſuits Treaſon, as belonging to them both ex congruo & condigno; they were the Proprietaries, Plotters and Procurers of it: and in ſuch Crimes plus peccat author, quam Actor; The Author or Procurer, offendeth more than the Actor or Executer: as may appear by God's own Judgment given againſt the firſt Sin in Paradiſe, where the Serpent had three Puniſhments inflicted upon him, as the original Plotter; the Woman two, being as the mediate Procurer; and Adam but one, as the Party ſeduc'd.

Circumſtances precedent and ſubſequent ſo termed here, are indeed in their proper Natures all High Treaſons; but yet in reſpect of the Magnitude, nay Monſtrouſneſs of this Treaſon, may comparatively, without any diſcountenance to them in this Caſe, be uſed as Circumſtances. And becauſe I am to deal with the Superior of the Jeſuits, I will only touch ſuch Treaſons, as have been plotted and wrought by the Jeſuits, of whom this Man was Superior; and thoſe Treaſons alſo ſithence this Garnet his coming into England, whereof he may truly ſay, Et quorum pars magna fui.

The coming of this Garnet into England (which very Act was a Treaſon) was about twenty years paſt, viz. in July 1586. in the twenty eighth Year of the Reign of the late Queen, of famous and bleſſed Memory: whereas the Year before, namely the twenty ſeventh Year of Elizabeth, there was a Statute made, whereby it was Treaſon for any, who was made a Romiſh Prieſt by any Authority from the See of Rome, ſithence the firſt Year of her Reign, to come into her Dominions: which Statute the Romaniſts calumniate as a bloody, cruel, unjuſt, and a new upſtart Law, and abuſe that Place of our Saviour, O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, thou that killeſt the Prophets, and ſtoneſt them that are ſent unto thee, &c. Mat. 23. 37. to that purpoſe: But indeed it is both mild, merciful and juſt, and grounded upon the antient fundamental Laws of England. For (as hath already in the former Arraignments been touched) before the Bull of Impius Pius Quintus, in the eleventh Year of the Queen, wherein her Majeſty was excommunicated and depoſed, and all they accurſed who ſhould yield any obedience unto her, &c. there were no Recuſants in England, all came to Church (howſoever popiſhly inclin'd, or perſuaded in moſt Points) to the ſame divine Service we now uſe; but thereupon preſently they refuſed to aſſemble in our Churches, or join with us in publick Service, not for conſcience of any thing there done, againſt which they might juſtly except out of the Word of God, but becauſe the Pope had excommunicated and depoſed her Majeſty, and curſed thoſe who ſhould obey her: and ſo upon this Bull enſued open Rebellion in the North, and many Garboils. But ſee the Event: Now moſt miſerable in reſpect of this Bull, was the State of Romiſh Recuſants; for either they muſt be hanged for Treaſon, in reſiſting their lawful Sovereign, or curs'd for yielding due Obedience unto her Majeſty. And therefore of this Pope it was ſaid by ſome of his own Favourites, that he was Homo pius & doctus, ſed nimis credulus; A holy and a learned Man, but over-credulous; for that he was informed and believ'd that the Strength of the Catholicks in England was ſuch, as was able to have reſiſted the Queen. But when the Bull was found to take ſuch an effect, then was there a Diſpenſation given, both by Pius Quintus himſelf, and Gregory the Thirteenth, That all Catholicks here might ſhew their outward Obedience to the Queen, ad redimendam vexationem, & ad oſtendendam externam obedientiam; but with theſe Cautions and Limitations: 1. Rebus ſic ſtantibus, Things ſo ſtanding as they did. 2. Donec publica Bullæ executio fieri poſſet; that is to ſay, They might grow into Strength, until they were able to give the Queen a Mate, that the publick Execution of the ſaid Bull might take place. And all this was confeſſed by Garnet under his own hand, and now again openly confeſs'd at the Bar.

In the twentieth Year of Queen Elizabeth, came Campion the Jeſuit and many others of his Profeſſion with him, purpoſely to make a Party in England for the Catholick Cauſe, to the end that the Bull of Pius Quintus might be put in execution. And tho all this while Recuſancy, being grounded upon ſuch a diſloyal Cauſe, were a very dangerous and diſloyal thing; yet was there no Law made in that behalf until the twenty third Year of her Majeſty's Reign; and that alſo impoſing only a Mulct or Penalty upon it, until Conformity were offer'd and ſhew'd. Anno 26 Eliz. came Parry with a Reſolution from Cardinal de Como, and others, that it was lawful to kill her Majeſty, as being excommunicated and depoſed. Whereupon her Majeſty entring into Conſultation how (together with her Safety, and the Protection of her Subjects) ſhe might avoid the imminent Dangers, and yet draw no Blood from theſe Prieſts and Jeſuits, found out this moderate and mild Courſe, as the beſt Means to prohibit their coming at all into her Land; there never being any King who would endure, or not execute any ſuch Perſons, within their Dominions, as ſhould deny him to be lawful King, or go about to withdraw his Subjects from their Allegiance, or incite them to reſiſt or rebel againſt him. Nay, the bringing in of a Bull by a Subject of this Realm againſt another, in the time of Edward I. was adjudged Treaſon. But by the way, for that Garnet hath exclaim'd, ſaying, Shew us where was your Church before Luther, deſign the Place, name the Perſons, and ſo forth; it is anſwer'd by a Compariſon of a Wedg of pure Gold, which coming into the hands of Impoſtors, is by their Sophiſtications and Mixtures, for Gain and worldly Reſpects, increaſed and augmented into a huge Body and Maſs, and retaining ſtill an outward fair Shew and Tincture of Gold. Where is now the pure Gold, ſaith one, ſhew me the Place? I anſwer, in that Maſs; but for the extracting thereof, and purifying it from Droſs, that muſt be done by the Art of the Workman, and the Tryal of the Touchſtone. So the true Religion and Service of Almighty God, being for human Reſpects, and worldly Pomp, mixed and overladen with a number of ſuperſtitious Ceremonies and Inventions of Man; yet ever had God his true Church, holding his Truth, which hath been by skilful Workmen, with the Touchſtone of the Word of God, refined and ſeparate from the Droſs of Man's Inventions.

But to proceed: In the twenty eighth Year of Queen Elizabeth, being the Year 1586, in June, came Garnet into England, breaking thro the Wall of Treaſon; being in truth, Totus compoſitus ex proditione: And this was at that time when the great Armado of Spain, which the Pope bleſſed, and chriſten'd by the Name of The invincible Navy, was by the Inſtigation of that High Prieſt of Rome, preparing and collecting together of many Parcels, out of divers Parts, where they could be bought, or hired or borrow'd; and therefore may be called a compounded Navy, having in it 158 great Ships. The Purveyors, and Forerunners of this Navy and Invaſion, were the Jeſuits; and Garnet among them being a Traitor, even in his very entrance and footing in the Land. But the Queen with her own Ships, and her own Subjects, did beat this Armado, God himſelf (whoſe Cauſe indeed it was) fighting for us againſt them, by Fire, and Seas, and Winds, and Rocks, and Tempeſts, ſcattering all, and deſtroying moſt of them: for offenſo Creatore, offenditur omnis Creatura; The Creator being offended, ever Creature is readily armed to revenge his Quarrel: in which reſpect he is called the Lord of Hoſts. So that of 158, ſcarce 40 of their Ships returned to the Bar of their own Haven; and as it is reported, moſt of them alſo periſhed: inſomuch, that in this reſpect, we may ſay of Queen Elizabeth, as the Poet writeth of the Chriſtian Emperor:

O nimium dilecta Deo, cui militat æther,
Et conjurati veniunt ad claſſica venti.

Obſerve here, that about the time of this Invaſion, there being in Spain met in Conſultation about that Buſineſs, the Cardinal of Auſtria, the Duke of Medina, Count Fuentes, two Iriſh Biſhops, with ſundry Military Men, and amongſt others Winſlade, an Engliſhman; the Iriſh Biſhops perceiving that they expected a Party of Catholicks in England, reſolv'd that true it was, that it was not poſſible to do any good here in England, unleſs there there were a Party of Catholicks made beforehand. But ſuch, ſaid they, was the Policy of England, as that could never be effected; for if any Suſpicion or Fear aroſe, the Catholicks ſhould quickly be either ſhut up, or quite cut off. Oh, ſaith an old Soldier there preſent, Hoc facit pro nobis, That makes for us; for by that means their Souls ſhall go to Heaven for their Religion, their Bodies to the Earth for their Treaſon, and their Lands and Goods to us as Conquerors: this was indeed that they principally aim'd at.

Note here, that ſithence the Jeſuits ſet foot in this Land, there never paſſed four Years without a moſt peſtilent and pernicious Treaſon, tending to the Subverſion of the whole State.

After that hoſtile Invaſion in 88, the Jeſuits fell again to ſecret and treaſonable Practices: for then, in the Year 92, came Patrick Cullen, who was incited by Sir William Stanly, Hugh Owen, Jaques Fraunces, and Holt the Jeſuit, and reſolv'd by the ſaid Holt to kill the Queen; to which purpoſe he receiv'd Abſolution, and then the Sacrament, at the hands of the ſaid Jeſuit, together with this ghoſtly Counſel, That it was both lawful and meritorious to kill her. Nay, ſaid Jaques, that baſe Laundreſs's Son, (who was a continual Practiſer both with this Cullen and others, to deſtroy her Majeſty) The State of England is and will be ſo ſettled, that unleſs Miſtreſs Elizabeth be ſuddenly taken away, all the Devils in Hell will not be able to prevail againſt it, or ſhake it.

Now Cullen's Treaſon was accompany'd with a Book called Philopater, written for the abetting and warranting of ſuch a deviliſh Act in general, by Creſwel the legier Jeſuit in Spain, under the Name of Philopater.

Anno 94. came Williams and Yorke to the ſame end, viz. to kill the Queen; being wrought to undertake ſo vile and deteſtable a Fact by Father Holt the Jeſuit, and other his Complices: And thereupon the ſaid Williams and Yorke in the Jeſuits College receiv'd the Sacrament together of Father Holt, and other Jeſuits, to execute the ſame. And that Treaſon likewiſe was accompany'd with a Book written by the legier Jeſuit and Rector at Rome, Parſons, under the Name of Doleman, concerning Titles, or rather Tittles; a leud and a lying Book, full of Falſhood, Forgery and Malediction.

Anno 97. came Squire from Spain, to poiſon her Majeſty, incited, directed, and warranted by Walpole a Jeſuit, then reſiding there: at whoſe hands likewiſe, after Abſolution, he receiv'd the Sacrament, as well to put the Practice in execution, as to keep it ſecret. All theſe Treaſons were freely and voluntarily confeſſed by the Parties themſelves under their own hands, and yet remain extant to be ſeen.

In the Year 1601. when Practices fail'd, then was foreign Force again attempted; for then (as in the former Arraignment hath been declared) was Thomas Winter employ'd to the King of Spain, togegether with Teſmond the Jeſuit, by this Garnet, who wrote his Letters to Arthur, alias Joſeph Creſwell, (the only Man whom I have heard of, to change his Chriſtian Name) the legier Jeſuit in Spain, for the furtherance of that Negotiation; which was, as hath been ſaid, to offer the Services of the Engliſh Catholicks to the King, and to deal further concerning an Invaſion, with Promiſe from the Catholicks here of Forces, both of Men and Horſes, to be in a readineſs to join with him. This Negotiation, by the means of Creſwel, to whom Garnet wrote, took ſuch effect, that the two Kingdoms ſtanding then in Hoſtility, the Propoſition of the Engliſh Romiſh Catholicks was accepted and entertain'd; an Army to invade (as hath been ſpecify'd in the former Arraignment) promiſed, and 100000 Crowns to be diſtributed amongſt Romaniſts and diſcontented Perſons, making of a Party in England, and for the furtherance of the ſaid Service granted. In the mean time the King earneſtly deſired, That if the Queen of England ſhould happen to die, he might receive preſent and certain Advertiſement thereof.

Now this Treaſon was accompany'd with the Pope's own Writing: For now doth the Holy Father cauſe to be ſent hither to Garnet two Briefs or Bulls, one to the Clergy, and another to the Laity; wherein obſerve the Title, the Matter, the Time. The Title of the one was, Dilectis Filiis, Principibus, & Nobilibus Catholicis Anglicanis, Salutem & Apoſtolicam Benedictionem: that is, To our beloved Sons the Nobles and Gentlemen of England, which are Catholicks, Greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction. The Title of the other was, Dilectis Filiis, Archipresbytero, & reliquo Clero Anglicano, &c. To our beloved Sons, the the Archprieſt, and the reſt of the Catholick Clergy. The matter was, That after the Death of her Majeſty, whether by Courſe of Nature, or otherwiſe, whoſoever ſhould lay Claim or Title to the Crown of England, though never ſo directly and nearly intereſted therein by Deſcent and Blood Royal; yet unleſs he were ſuch an one as would not only tolerate the Catholick (Romiſh) Religion, but by all his beſt Endeavours and Force promote it, and according to the antient Cuſtom would, by a ſolemn and ſacred Oath, religiouſly promiſe and undertake to perform the ſame, they ſhould admit or receive none to be King of England: His words are theſe, Quantumcunque propinquitate ſanguinis niterentur, niſi ejuſmodi eſſent qui fidem Catholicam non modo tolerarent, ſed omni ope ac ſtudio promoverent, & more Majorum Jurejurando ſe id præſtituros ſuſciperent, &c.

As for King James (at whom the Pope aimed) he hath indeed both Propinquitatem and Antiquitatem Regalis Sanguinis, Propinquity and Antiquity of Blood Royal, for his juſt juſt Claim and Title to this Crown both before and ſince the Conqueſt.

To inſiſt upon the Declaration and Deduction of this point, and paſs along through the Series and Courſe of ſo many Ages and Centuries, as it would be over long for this Place, ſo further I might herein ſeem as it were to gild Gold: Only in a word, His Majeſty is lineally deſcended from Margaret the Saint, Daughter of Edward, Son of King Edmund, Grandchild of Great Edgar the Britain Monarch. Which Margaret, ſole Heir of the Engliſh-Saxon King, was married to Malcolme King of Scotland; who by her had Iſſue David the Holy their King, from whom that Race Royal at this day is deduced; and Maud the Good, Wife of the firſt and learned Henry King of England, from whom his Majeſty directly and lineally proceedeth, and of whom a Poet of that time wrote:

Nec decor effecit fragilem, non ſceptra ſuperbam,
Sola potens humilis, ſola pudica decens.

And laſtly, his Majeſty cometh of Margaret alſo the eldeſt Daughter of Henry VII. who was deſcended of that famous Union of thoſe two fair Roſes, the White and the Red, York and Lancaſter; the effecting of which Union coſt the Effuſion of much Engliſh Blood, over and beſides fourſcore or thereabouts of the Blood-Royal. But a more famous Union is by the Goodneſs of the Almighty perfected in his Majeſty's Perſon of divers Lions, two famous, antient, and renowned Kingdoms, not only without Blood, or any Oppoſition, but with ſuch an univerſal Acclamation and Applauſe of all ſorts and degrees (as it were with one Voice) as never was ſeen or read of. And therefore moſt Excellent King, for to him I will now ſpeak,

Cum triplici fulvum conjunge leone leonem,
Ut varias Atavus junxerat ante Roſas:
Majus opus varios ſine pugna unire leones,
Sanguine quam varias conſociaſſe Roſas.

Theſe four noble and magnanimous Lions, ſo firmly and individually united, are able, without any Difficulty or great Labour, to ſubdue and overthrow all the Letters and Bulls (and their Calves alſo) that have been, or can be ſent into England.

Now for the Time, obſerve that theſe Bulls or Briefs came upon the aforeſaid Negotiation of Thomas Winter into Spain, at what time an Army ſhould ſhortly after have been ſent to invade the Land: and this was to be put in execution, Quandocunque contingeret miſeram illam fœminam ex hac vita excedere; Whenſoever it ſhould happen that that miſerable Woman (for ſo it pleaſed the High Prieſt of Rome to call great Queen Elizabeth) ſhould depart this Life. Was Queen Elizabeth miſerable? It is ſaid that Miſeria conſtat ex duobus contrariis, ſcilicet, Copia & Inopia: Ex Copia tribulationis, & Inopia conſolationis. Was ſhe, I ſay, miſerable, whom Almighty God ſo often and ſo miraculouſly protected, both from the Arrow that flieth by day, their great Armado, and from the Peſtilence that walketh in the darkneſs, their ſecret and treacherous Conſpiracies? that did beat her moſt potent Enemies? that ſet up a King in his Kingdom? that defended Nations, and harboured and protected diſtreſſed People? that protected her Subjects in Peace and Plenty, and had the Hearts of the moſt and the beſt of her Subjects? that reigned Religiouſly and Glorioufly, and died Chriſtianly and in Peace? Oh bleſſed Queen, our late dear Sovereign, ſemper honos nomenque tuum laudeſque manebunt. But Queen Elizabeth of famous Memory, (for Memoria ejus ſemper erit in benedictione) as a bright Morning-Star in fulneſs of time loſt her natural Light, when the great and glorious Sun appeared in our Horizon.

And now ſithence the coming of great King James, there have not paſſed, I will not ſay four, nay not two months, without ſome Treaſon.

Firſt, in March 1603. upon the death of her Majeſty, and before they had ſeen his Majeſty's Face, was Chriſtopher Wright employed into Spain, by Garnet, Catesby, and Treſham, to give advertiſement of the Queen's death, and to continue the former Negotiation of Thomas Winter: And by him alſo doth this Garnet write to Creſwell the Jeſuit, in Commendation, and for Aſſiſtance and Furtherance of his Buſineſs.

As alſo on the 22d of June following, was Guy Fawkes ſent out of Flanders, by Baldwin the Jeſuit, by Sir William Stanley, and Hugh Owen, about the ſame Treaſon; and by Letters from Baldwin directed and commended to Creſwell the Legier Jeſuit in Spain, for the procuring of his Diſpatch, as in the former Arraignment hath been declared.

In the ſame June doth Garnet the Superior, together with Gerrard and other Jeſuits and Jeſuited Catholicks, labour not only in providing of Horſes, which by Thomas Winter and Chriſtopher Wright, upon their ſeveral Negotiations, they, in the names of all the Catholicks in England, had promiſed the King of Spain, to aſſiſt and do him Service withal, at ſuch time as the ſaid King ſhould ſend his Forces to invade, either at Milford-Haven, or in Kent, as hath before been ſhewed; but alſo did, by force of the ſaid two Bulls or Briefs, diſſuade the Romiſh Catholicks from yielding their due Obedience to his Majeſty, for that he was not of the Roman Religion: contrary to the Practice of the true Church and Churchmen, that undergo Wars, ferendo, non feriendo, with Patience, not with Strokes; their Weapons being properly Orationes & Lachrymæ, Prayers and Tears.

On the ſame June 9, which was in 1603. primo Jacobi, brake out likewiſe the Treaſon of the Romiſh Prieſts, Watſon and Clarke, as alſo that other of Sir Walter Raleigh and others. But the Jeſuits ſeeing that the Peace was now in great forwardneſs, and having advertiſement alſo, that the King of Spain did now diſtaſte their Propoſitions, ſo that there was no further hope left for Force; then fell they again to ſecret Practice. As for the Bulls for Briefs before-mention'd, when Catesby had informed Garnet, that King James was proclaimed, and the State ſettled, they were by Garnet, as himſelf hath affirmed, burnt. But to proceed:

In March 1603. Garnet and Catesby, (a peſtilent Traitor) confer together, and Catesby in general telleth him (though moſt falſly) That the King had broken Promiſe with the Catholicks, and therefore aſſuredly there would be Stirs in England before it were long. In September following, meets Catesby and Thomas Piercy, and after an unjuſt, but a grievous Complaint made by Catesby of the King's Proceedings, for that contrary to their Expectations, his Majeſty both did hold, and was like continually to run the ſame Courſe, which the Queen before had held; Piercy preſently breaks forth into this deviliſh Speech, That there was no way but to kill the King, which he the ſaid Piercy would undertake to do. But Catesby, as being verſuto ingenio & profunda perfidia, a cunning, a wily, and a deep Traitor, intending to uſe this ſo furious and fiery a Spirit to a further Purpoſe, doth as it were ſtroke him for his great forwardneſs, yet with ſage and ſtayed Counſel tells him; No, Tom, thou ſhalt not adventure thy ſelf to ſo ſmall purpoſe: If thou wilt be a Traitor, there is a Plot to greater advantage, and ſuch a one as can never be diſcovered, viz. the Powder-Treaſon.

In January, in the firſt Year of his Majeſty, Garnet took out a General Pardon under the Great Seal of England, of all Treaſons, (which Pardon his Majeſty of his Grace granted to all Men at his firſt entrance into his Kingdom) under the name of Henry Garnet of London Gent. but therein he never uſed any of his alias dictus Walley, Farmer, or any other of his feigned names. But Catesby fearing leſt any of thoſe whom he had or ſhould take into Confederacy, being touched in Conſcience with the horror of ſo damnable a Fact, might give it over, and endanger the Diſcovery of the Plot, ſeeks to Garnet, (as being the Superior of the Jeſuits, and therefore of high Eſtimation and Authority amongſt all thoſe of the Romiſh Religion) to have his Judgment and Reſolution in Conſcience, concerning the Lawfulneſs of the Fact, that thereby he might be able to give Satisfaction to any who ſhould in that behalf make doubt or ſcruple to go forward in that Treaſon. And therefore Catesby coming to Garnet, propoundeth unto him the Caſe, and asketh, Whether for the Good and Promotion of the Catholick Cauſe againſt Hereticks, (the neceſſity of Time and Occaſion ſo requiring) it be lawful or not, amongſt many Nocents, to deſtroy and take away ſome Innocents alſo. To this Queſtion, Garnet adviſedly and reſolvedly anſwered, That if the Advantage were greater to the Catholick part, by taking away ſome Innocents together with many Nocents, then doubtleſs it ſhould be lawful to kill and deſtroy them all. And to this purpoſe he alledged a Compariſon of a Town or City which was poſſeſſed by an Enemy, if at the time of taking thereof there happen to be ſome few Friends within the place, they muſt undergo the Fortune of the Wars in the general and common Deſtruction of the Enemy. And this Reſolution of Garnet, the Superior of the Jeſuits, was the ſtrongeſt, and the only Bond, whereby Catesby, afterwards kept and retained all the Traitors in that ſo abominable and deteſtable a Confederacy: For in March following, Catesby, Thomas Winter, and others, reſolve upon the Powder-Plot; and Fawkes as being a Man unknown, and withal a deſperate Perſon and a Soldier, was reſolved upon as fit for the executing thereof; to which purpoſe he was in April following by Thomas Winter ſought and fetched out of Flanders into England.

In May, in the 2d Year of his Majeſty, Cateſby, Piercy, John Wright, Thomas Winter, and Fawkes meet, and having, upon the Holy Evangeliſts, taken an Oath of Secrecy and Conſtancy to this effect;

YOU ſhall ſwear by the bleſſed Trinity, and by the Sacrament you now purpoſe to receive, never to diſcloſe directly or indirectly, by Word or Circumſtance, the matter that ſhall be propoſed to you to keep ſecret, nor deſiſt from the Execution thereof, until the reſt ſhall give you leave:

They all were confeſſed, had Abſolution, and received thereupon the Sacrament, by the hands of Gerrard the Jeſuit then preſent.

In June following, Catesby and Greenwell the Jeſuit confer about the Powder-Treaſon. And at Midſummer, Catesby having ſpeech with Garnet of the Powder-Treaſon, they ſaid, that it was ſo ſecret, as that it muſt prevail before it could be diſcovered. Then Garnet ſeemed to deſire that the Pope's Conſent might be obtained: but Catesby anſwered, that he took that as granted by the Pope in the two Bulls or Briefs before; for that, ſaid he, if it were lawful not to receive, or to repel him, as the ſaid Bulls or Briefs did import, then is it lawful alſo to expel or caſt him out.

Upon the 7th of July, 1604. was the Parliament prorogued until the 7th of February: And in November following, Thomas Bates, being (as hath been declared more at large in the former Arraignment) fetched in by Catesby, his Maſter, to participate in the Powder-Treaſon, for better Aſſurance of his Secrecy, and Proſecution thereof, is by Greenwell the Jeſuit confeſſed, encouraged, and told, That being for a good Cauſe, he might and ought, not only conceal it, as committed unto him in ſecret by his Maſter; but further ſaid, That it was no Offence at all, but juſtifiable and good.

About this time was Robert Keyes taken into the Confederacy, and by Catesby reſolved of the Lawfulneſs thereof from the Jeſuits.

On the 11th of December, they enter'd the Mine: and in March following, which was in 1605. was Guy Fawkes ſent over to Sir William Stanley, with Letters from Garnet, to Baldwin the Legier Jeſuit there, to take order, That againſt the time of the Blow, the Forces might be brought near to the Sea-ſide, to the end that they might ſuddenly be tranſported into England: And there doth Fawkes, by conſent of the Confederates, give Owen the Oath of Secrecy and Perſeverance, and then acquaints him with the whole Treaſon: Who having been a moſt malicious and inveterate Traitor, greatly applauded it, and gave his Conſent and Counſel for the furtherance thereof.

In May 1605. fell out certain Broils in Wales by the Romiſh Catholicks; at what time alſo Rookwood was by Catesby acquainted with the Powder-Treaſon, and reſolv'd of the Lawfulneſs of the Fact by him as from the Jeſuits.

Now doth Garnet write to the Pope, That Commandment might come from his Holineſs, or elſe from Aquaviva the General of the Jeſuits, for the ſtaying of all Commotions of the Catholicks here in England, intending indeed to ſet their whole Reſt of the Catholick Romiſh Cauſe, upon the the Powder-Plot, and in the mean time to lull us asleep in Security, in respect of their dissembled Quietness and Conformity; as also lest Impediment might be offer'd to this main Plot by reason of any suspicion of the stirring of Papists, or of inquiry after them upon occasion of any petty Commotions or Broils. But when he further desired, that it might be so enjoin'd upon Censures, that latter Request was not granted, lest it might indeed be an Impediment to the Powder-Plot.

In June following doth Greenwel the Jesuit consult with Garnet his Superiour, of the whole Course of the Powder-Treason at large; wherein observe the politick and subtle Dealing of this Garnet. First, he would not (as he saith) confer of it with a Layman, (other than Catesby whom he so much trusted) Why so? because that might derogate from the Reverence of his Place, That a Jesuit, and a Superiour of them, should openly join with Laymen in cause of so much Blood. And therefore, Secondly, as he would consult of it with a Priest and a Jesuit, one of his own Order, and his Subject; so for his further security, he would consult thereof with Greenwel the Jesuit, as in a disguised Confession. And being inform'd that the Discourse would be too long to repeat kneeling, he answer'd that he would consult with him of it in Confession walking; and so accordingly in an ambulatory Confession, he at large discoursed with him of the whole Plot of the Powder-Treason; and that a Protector (after the Blow given, should be chosen out of such of the Nobility as should be warned and reserved.

In this Month likewise was there a great Conference and Consultation betwixt Garnet, Catesby, and Francis Tresham, concerning the Strength of the Catholicks in England, to the end that Garnet might by Letters send direct Advertisement thereof to the Pope; for that his Holiness would not be brought to shew his Inclination concerning any Commotion or Rising of the Catholick Party, until such time as he should be certainly inform'd that they had sufficient and able Force to prevail.

And in August following, Garnet in a conference had about the acquainting of the Pope with the Powder-Treason, named and appointed Sir Edmund Baynam for to carry that Message to the Pope; yet not to him as Pope, but to him as a temporal Prince: and by him doth Garnet write Letters in that behalf; as also for staying of Commotions, under pain of Censures, well knowing that before his Letters could be answer'd, the House of Parliament (according to their Designs) should have been blown up, and the whole State overthrown. But this Trick he used like a Thief, that going to steal and take Partridges with a Setting-Dog, doth rate his Dog for questing, or going too near, until he have laid his Net over them, for fear the Game should be sprung, and the Purpose defeated.

In this Month also doth Garnet write to Baldwine the legier Jesuit in the Low Countries, in the behalf of Catesby, that Owen should move the Marquiss for a Regiment of Horses for him the said Catesby; not with any intent, as it was agreed, that Catesby should undertake any such charge, but that under colour of it, Horses and other Necessaries might be provided without suspicion to furnish the Traitors.

In September following doth Parsons the Jesuit write to Garnet, to know the Particulars of the Project in hand, for the Journy to St. Winifred's Well in this Month. It was but a Jargon, to have better opportunity, by colour thereof, to confer and retire themselves to those parts.

In October doth Garnet meet the other Traitors at Coughton in Warwickshire, which was the Place of Rendezvous, whither they resorted out of all Countries.

Upon the first of November, Garnet openly prayeth for the good Success of the great Action, concerning the Catholick Cause in the beginning of the Parliament: and Prayer is more than Consent; for Nemo orat, sed qui sperat & credit. He in the Prayer used two Verses of a Hymn, Gentem auferte perfidam credentium de finibus, ut Christo laudes debitas persolvamus alacriter.

Now was the Letter with the Lord Monteagle, whose Memory shall be blessed, on the fourth of November; by the Providence of the Almighty, not many hours before the Treason should have been executed, was it fully discover'd.

On the fifth of November, being the time when the Traitors expected that their devilish Practice should have taken effect, they convented at Dunchurch, under colour of a great Hunting-Match, appointed by Sir Everard Digby, as being a Man of Quality and Account thereabout; purposing by this means to furnish themselves with Company for their intended Insurrection and Rebellion: for that Men being gather'd together, and a Tumult suddenly raised, the Traitors thought that every or most of them would follow the present Fortune, and be easily persuaded to take part with them; and that they might easily surprize the Person of the Lady Elizabeth, then being in those Parts, in the L. Harrington's House.

Upon the sixth of November, early in the Morning, Catesby and the said Confederates dispatch'd Tho. Bates with a Letter to Garnet the Superior of the Jesuits, who was (as they well knew) then ready at Coulton, near unto them, earnestly entreating his Help and Assistance for the raising of Wales, and putting so many as he could into open Rebellion. At what time Garnet, and Greenwell (who then of purpose was there with Garnet) then certainly perceiving that the Plot was indeed discover'd, and knowing themselves to be the chiefest Authors thereof, prophesy'd the Overthrow of the whole Order of the Jesuits; saying, That they feared that the Discovery and Miscarrying of this Practice, would utterly undo and overthrow the whole Society of the Jesuits. But Greenwel the Jesuit being carry'd with a more violent and fiery Spirit, posteth up and down to incite such as he could to rise up in open Rebellion: And meeting in Master Abington's House with Hall, another Jesuit, adviseth him the said Hall likewise to lose no time, but forthwith to seek to raise and stir up so many as he could: But Hall seeming to deliberate thereof, whether seeing no end of so rash an Attempt, or fearing by that means to be himself apprehended, Tesmond told him that he was a flegmatick Fellow; and said, a Man may herein see the difference betwixt a flegmatick Man (such as he meant Hall was) and a cholerick, as he said himself was: And further added, that he was resolv'd to do his best Endeavours for the raising of a Rebellion, under this false Pretext and Colour, That it was concluded that the Throats of all the Catholicks in England should be cut; so persuading himself to incite them to take Arms for to stand upon their guard and defence: and with this Device he posted away into the County of Lancaster. Afterwards Hall the Jesuit, otherwise called Oldcorn, being urged by Humphry Littleton with the evil Success of their intended Treason, that surely God was displeased and offended with such bloody and barbarous Courses, instead of an humble Acknowledgment of the Juſtice of God, and a Senſe of the Wickedneſs of the Treaſon, fell rather ſatanically to argue for the Juſtification of the ſame; and ſaid, Ye muſt not judg the Cauſe by the Event; for the eleven Tribes of Iſrael were by God himſelf commanded to go and fight againſt Benjamin, yet were they twice overthrown: So Lewis of France fighting againſt the Turk, his Army was ſcatter'd, and himſelf died of the Plague: And laſtly, the Chriſtians defending of Rhodes, were by the Turks overcome. And theſe he apply'd to the Powder-Treaſon, and perſuaded Littleton not to judge it ungodly or unlawful by the Event.

Obſerve here a double Conſequent of this Powder-Treaſon. Firſt, open Rebellion, as hath been ſhewed both immediately before, and more at large in the former Arraignment; and ſince that, Blaſphemy in Garnet the Superior of the Jeſuits: for, he having liberty in the Tower to write, and ſending a Letter (which Letter was openly ſhewed in the Court before him) to an Acquaintance of his in the Gate-houſe, there was nothing therein to be ſeen but ordinary Matter, and for certain Neceſſaries: but in the Margin, which he made very great and ſpacious, and underneath, where there remained clean Paper, he wrote cunningly with the Juice of an Orange, or of a Lemon, to publiſh his Innocency, and concerning his Uſage; and there denieth thoſe things which before he had freely and voluntarily confeſſed: and ſaid, that for the Spaniſh Treaſon, he was freed by his Majeſty's Pardon; and as for the Powder-Treaſon, he hoped, for want of Proof againſt him, to avoid that well enough: but concludeth blaſphemouſly, applying the Words which were ſpoken of our Bleſſed Saviour, to himſelf, in this damnable Treaſon, and ſaith, Neceſſe eſt ut unus Homo moriatur pro Populo; It is neceſſary that one Man die for the People. Which Words Caiaphas ſpake of Chriſt: Wherein note his Prevarication and Equivocation; for before the Lords Commiſſioners, he truly and freely confeſſed his Treaſons, being (as himſelf, under his own hand, confeſſeth) overwhelmed tanta nube teſtium; and yet ad faciendum populum, in his Letters which he wrote abroad, he cleareth himſelf of the Powder-Treaſon. And thus much concerning the two Circumſtances ſubſequent, which were Rebellion and Blaſphemy.

The Circumſtances concurring, are concerning the Perſons both offending and offended. For the principal Perſon offending, here at the Bar, he is, as you have heard, a Man of many Names, Garnet, Wally, Darcy, Roberts, Farmer, Philips: and ſurely I have not commonly known or obſerved a true Man, that hath had ſo many falſe Appellations: He is by Country an Engliſhman, by Birth a Gentleman, by Education a Scholar, afterwards a Corrector of the Common Law Print, with Mr. Tottle the Printer; and now is to be corrected by the Law. He hath many Gifts and Endowments of Nature, by Art learned, a good Linguiſt, and by Profeſſion a Jeſuit, and a Superior, as indeed he is ſuperior to all his Predeceſſors in deviliſh Treaſon; a Doctor of Jeſuits, that is, a Doctor of five DD's, as Diſſimulation, Depoſing of Princes, Diſpoſing of Kingdoms, Daunting and Deterring of Subjects, and Deſtruction.

Their Diſſimulation appeareth out of their Doctrine of Equivocation: Concerning which it was thought fit to touch ſomething of that which was more copiouſly delivered in the former Arraignment, in reſpect of the Preſence of Garnet there, who was the Superior of the Jeſuits in England, concerning the Treatiſe of Equivocation ſeen and allowed by Garnet, and by Blackwell the Archprieſt; wherein, under the pretext of the Lawfulneſs of a mixt Propoſition to expreſs one part of a Man's Mind, and retain another, People are indeed taught not only ſimple Lying, but fearful and damnable Blaſphemy. And whereas the Jeſuits ask, why we convict and condemn them not for Hereſy; it is for that they will equivocate, and ſo cannot that way be try'd or judg'd according to their words.

Now for the Antiquity of Equivocation, it is indeed very old, within little more than three hundred years after Chriſt, uſed by Arius the Heretick, who having in a General Council been condemned, and then by the Commandment of Conſtantine the Emperor ſent into Exile, was by the ſaid Emperor, upon inſtant Interceſſion for him, and Promiſe of his future Conformity to the Nicene Faith, recalled again: who returning home, and having before craftily ſet down in writing his heretical Belief, and put it into his Boſom, when he came into the Preſence of the Emperor, and had the Nicene Faith propounded unto him, and was thereupon asked, whether he then did indeed, and ſo conſtantly would hold that Faith; he (clapping his Hand upon his Boſom where his Paper lay) anſwered and vowed that he did, and ſo would conſtantly profeſs and hold that Faith (laying his Hand on his Boſom where the Paper of his Hereſy lay) meaning fraudulently (by way of Equivocation) that Faith of his own, which he had written and carried in his Boſom.

For theſe Jeſuits, they indeed make no Vow of ſpeaking Truth, and yet even this Equivocating and Lying is a kind of Unchaſtity, againſt which they vow and promiſe: For as it hath been ſaid of old, Cor linguæ fœderat naturæ ſanctio, veluti in quodam certo Connubio: Ergo cum diſſonent cor & loquutio, Sermo concipitur in Adulterio; that is, The Law and Sanction of Nature, hath (as it were) married the Heart and Tongue, by joining and knitting of them together in a certain kind of Marriage; and therefore when there is Diſcord between them two, the Speech that proceeds from them, is ſaid to be conceived in Adultery, and he that breeds ſuch Baſtard-Children offends againſt Chaſtity.

But note the heavy and woeful Fruit of this Doctrine of Equivocation: Francis Treſham being near his natural Death in the Tower, had of charity his Wife permitted (for his Comfort) to come unto him: who underſtanding that her Husband had before directly and truly accuſed Garnet of the Spaniſh Treaſon, leſt belike her Husband ſhould depart this Life, with a Conſcience that he had revealed any thing concerning the Superior of the Jeſuits, a very little before he died, drew him to this; that his own Hand being ſo feeble as that he could not write himſelf, yet he cauſed his Servant then attending on him, to write that which he did dictate, and therein proteſted upon his Salvation, That he had not ſeen the ſaid Garnet of ſixteen years before, and thereupon prayed that his former Confeſſion to the contrary might in no wiſe take place; and that this Paper of his Retractation which he had weekly and dyingly ſubſcribed, might, after his Death, be delivered to the Earl of Salisbury: Whereas Maſter Garnet himſelf hath clearly confeſſed the Spaniſh Treaſon, and now acknowledged the ſame at the Bar; and he and Mrs. Fawkes, and others, directly confeſs and ſay, That Garnet and Treſham had, within two years ſpace,

ſpace, been very often together, and alſo many times before: But, Qualis vita, finis ita. And Garnet himſelf being at the Bar afterwards urged to ſay what he thought of ſuch the Departure of Francis Treſham out of this Life, anſwered only this; I think he meant to equivocate.

Thus were they ſtained with their own Works, and went a whoring with their own Inventions, as it is in the Pſalm. So that this is indeed Gens perfida, according to the Hymn, a perfidious People; and therefore Jurat? crede minus; non Jurat? credere noli. Jurat, non jurat hoſtis, ab hoſte cave.

For their Doctrine of Depoſing of Princes, Simanca and Philopater are plain, (as hath in the former Arraignment been more amply declared, and was now again at large to Garnet's face repeated:) If a Prince be an Heretick, then is he excommunicated, curſed, and depoſed; his Children deprived of all their Right of Succeſſion, himſelf not to be reſtored to his Temporal Eſtate upon Repentance. And by an Heretick, they profeſs, that he is intended and meant, namely, whoſoever doth not hold the Religion of the Church of Rome. Nay, there is an eaſier and a more expedite way than all theſe to fetch off the Crown from off the Head of any King chriſtned whatſoever; which is this, That Princeps indulgendo hæreticis, amittit Regnum; If any Prince ſhall but tolerate or favour Hereticks, he loſeth his Kingdom. Nay, whereas Garnet, in defence of this uſurped Power of the High Prieſt of Rome, alledged, Nos Sanctorum, &c. out of the Decretals; in the very next Title before that, there is another Decree that paſſeth all we have recited; wherein it is ſhewed, That Zachary the Pope depoſed Childerick of France, for nothing elſe there ſpecified, ſed quia Inutilis, but only for that he was reputed unprofitable to govern.

Now as concerning their Daunting and Deterring of Subjects, which is a part of the Jeſuits Profeſſion; it were good that they would know and remember, how that the moſt noble and famous Kings of England never were afraid of Popes Bulls, no not in the very Midnight of Popery, as Edward the Confeſſor, Henry I. Edward I. Richard II. Henry IV. Henry V. &c. And in the time of Henry VII. and in all their times, the Pope's Legate never paſſed Calais, but ſtay'd there, and came not to England, until he had taken a ſolemn Oath to do nothing to the detriment of the Crown or State.

For the Perſons offended, they were theſe:

Firſt, The King, of whom I have ſpoken often, but never enough: A King of high and moſt noble antient Deſcent, as hath been briefly declared; and in himſelf full of all Imperial Virtues, Religion, Juſtice, Clemency, Learning, Wiſdom, Memory, Affability, and the reſt.

Secondly, The Queen; and ſhe, in reſpect of her happy Fruitfulneſs, is a great Bleſſing, inſomuch that of her, in that reſpect, may be ſaid, ſhe is Ortu magna, Viro major, ſed maxima Prole; great in Birth, greater in her Marriage, but to all Poſterity greateſt, in the bleſſed Fruit of her Womb, as having brought forth the greateſt Prince that ever England had.

Thirdly, The noble Prince, of whom we may ſay with the Poet, Quæ te tam læta tulere ſecula? Qui tanti talem genuere parentes? Never Prince, true Heir-Apparent to the Imperial Crown, had ſuch a Father, nor ever King had ſuch a Son.

Fourthly, Then the whole Royal Iſſue, the Council, the Nobility, the Clergy, nay our Religion it ſelf, and eſpecially this City of London, that is famous for her Riches, more famous for her People, (having above five hundred thouſand Souls within her and her Liberties) moſt famous for her Fidelity, and more than moſt famous of all the Cities in the World for her true Religion and Service of God. Hold up thy Head, noble City, and advance thy ſelf, for that never was thy Brow blotted with the leaſt taint or touch, or ſuſpicion of Diſloyalty: Thou mayſt truly ſay with the Prophet David, I will take no wicked thing in hand, I hate the ſin of unfaithfulneſs, there ſhall no ſuch cleave unto me. Therefore for thy Fidelity thou art honoured with the Title of The King's Chamber, as an inward place of his greateſt Safety: And for thy comfort and joy this day, hath Britain's great King honoured thee with the proceeding upon this great and honourable Commiſſion; after the heavy and doleful Rumours this other day, when it was certainly known that King James was in ſafety, well did the Fidelity of this City appear, (whereof I was an Eye-witneſs) Una voce conclamaverunt omnes, Salva Londinum, ſalva Patria, ſalva Religio, Jacobus Rex noſter ſalvus; Our City, our Country, our Religion is ſafe, for our King James is in ſafety.

The Obſervations are many, and only in a word to be touched:

1. That in the Spaniſh Treaſon before-mention'd, and this Powder-Treaſon, there was the ſame Order, Cauſe and End. The Order was, firſt, to deal by ſecret Practice and Treaſon, and then by Force and Invaſion. The Cauſe which they pretend, was the Romiſh Catholick Religion. The End was the final Deſtruction of the Royal Succeſſion, yea, even occidere Regnum, to overthrow and diſſolve the whole Kingdom.

2. Note, that even the Enemy hath acknowledged, That our State is ſo ſettled and eſtabliſhed, as neither Strength nor Stratagem can prevail, unleſs there be a Party made in England.

3. We ſhall never have Bull more to come from Rome to England, becauſe they ſhall never have a Party ſtrong enough to encounter with ſo many Lions.

4. All their Canons, Decrees, and new-found Doctrines tend to one of theſe two Ends; either worldly Pride, or wicked Policy; for the amplitude and enlargement of the Pope's Authority, and for the ſafety of the Jeſuits, Prieſts, &c.

5. Obſerve that Baynam, a Layman, and one of the damned Crue, and ſo naming himſelf, was ſent to inform the Pope as a Temporal Prince.

6. I conceive their Fall to be near at hand, both by Divinity and by Philoſophy. For the firſt, there are now in England about four hundred Prieſts: ſo many were there in Iſrael in the days of Achab; Who, ſaith God, ſhall go and deceive Achab, that he may fall? A lying Spirit in the mouths of his four hundred Prophets undertook and effected it; their Fall was near, when once a lying Spirit had poſſeſſed the Prieſts, according to the Viſion of Micheas, as now it hath poſſeſſed the Jeſuits. 2dly, The Imitation of Good for the moſt part comes ſhort of the Pattern; but the Imitation of Evil ever exceeds the Example. Now no Imitation can exceed this Fact, and therefore their time is at an end.

7. Many condemn it now, that would have commended it, if it had taken effect; for this, ſay they, is E numero eorum quæ non laudantur niſi peracta.

8. They and their Adherents ſpread abroad falſe Rumours; as that the King ſhould have broken Promiſe with them concerning Toleration: which mixture of God's Service, rather than he would ſuffer, ſuffer, he would loſe Children, Crown, Life, and all. Nay, they may ſee there is no ſuch hope left, for that his Majeſty bringeth up his Royal Iſſue in the true Religion and Service of the Almighty.

Laſtly, Obſerve the wonderful Providence of God in the admirable Diſcovery of this Superior Jeſuit to be party to this Treaſon; and that in two reſpects:

1. In reſpect of the Means of Secrecy, uſed by him in conference only with Catesby of the Laity. (2) They had a ſtrong and a deep Oath given them both for Secrecy and Perſeverance. (3) They hereupon received the holy Sacrament. (4) They were allowed and taught by the Jeſuits, to equivocate upon Oath, Salvation or otherwiſe: And how then ſhould it be diſcovered? (5) Their ſecret Intelligence was ſuch, as that it was impoſſible by the Wit of Man to be found out. And therefore,

2. The ſecond thing is, How this Treaſon being long ſithence plotted, the Providence of God did continually, from time to time, divert and put off the executing thereof, by unexpected putting off the times of aſſembly in Parliament. For the Parliament began the 19th of March, in the firſt Year of his Majeſty's Reign, and continued till the 7th of July following, before which time the Conſpirators could not be ready: from thence it was prorogued until the 7th of February, againſt which time they could not make the Mine ready, in reſpect that they could not dig there, for that the Commiſſioners of the Union ſate near the place, and the Wall was thick, and therefore they could not be provided before the 7th of February; and on the 7th of February the Parliament was prorogued until the 5th of October. After this, they found another Courſe, and altered the place from the Mine to the Cellar. O bleſſed Change of ſo wicked a Work! Oh! but theſe fatal Engineers are not yet diſcovered, and yet all things are prepared. Oh prorogue it once more! And accordingly, God put it into his Majeſty's heart (having then not the leaſt ſuſpicion of any ſuch matter) to prorogue the Parliament; and further, to open and enlighten his Underſtanding, out of a myſtical and dark Letter, like an Angel of God, to point to the Cellar, and command that to be ſearched; ſo that it was diſcovered thus miraculouſly, but even a few hours before the Deſign ſhould have been executed.

The Concluſion thereof ſhall be this; Qui cum Jeſu itis, non itis cum Jeſuitis: For, They encourage themſelves in miſchief, and commune among themſelves ſecretly, how they may lay ſnares, and ſay, that no man ſhall ſee them. But God ſhall ſuddenly ſhoot at them with a ſwift arrow, that they ſhall be wounded; inſomuch that whoſo ſeeth it ſhall ſay, This hath God done; for they ſhall perceive that it is his work.

Then were repeated the Proofs for every of the particular Accuſations aforeſaid, by the expreſs and voluntary Confeſſions of Garnet, and of his Complices themſelves, and of two credible Witneſſes ſworn at the Bar, and openly heard viva voce, and acknowledged by Garnet himſelf to be Men without exception.

Then Mr. Garnet having Licence of the Court to anſwer what he could for himſelf, ſpake, and divided all which had been objected, to his remembrance, into four parts, viz.

Containing matter of,
1*ſt*, Doctrine.
2*dly*, Recuſants.
3*dly*, Jeſuits in general.
4*thly*, Himſelf in particular.

1*ſt*, In Doctrine, he remembred two points:

1. Concerning Equivocation; whereunto he anſwered, That their Church condemned all Lying, but eſpecially if it be in cauſe of Religion and Faith, that being the moſt pernicious Lye of all others, and by S. Auguſtine condemned in the Priſcillianiſts: Nay, to lye in any cauſe is held a Sin and Evil; howſoever, of eight degrees which St. Auguſtine maketh, the loweſt indeed is to lye for to procure the Good of ſome, without hurting of any. So then our Equivocation is not to maintain Lying, but to defend the uſe of certain Propoſitions: For a Man may be asked of one, who hath no Authority to interrogate, or examined concerning ſomething which belongeth not to his Cognizance who asketh, As what a Man thinketh, &c. So then no Man may equivocate, when he ought to tell the Truth, otherwiſe he may. And ſo St. Auguſtine upon John ſaith, That Chriſt denied he knew the Day of Judgment, viz. with purpoſe to tell it to his Diſciples; and ſo St. Thomas and others who handle this Matter, chiefly under the title of Confeſſion.

2. For the ſecond Point, which was the Power of the Pope in depoſing of Princes, his anſwer was threefold. (1) That therein he only propounded and followed the the general Doctrine of the Church. (2) That this Doctrine of the Power of the Pope, was by all other Catholick Princes tolerated without Grievance. (3) That yet for his own part, he always made a difference in the matter of Excommunicating and Depoſing of Princes, betwixt the Condition and State of our King and of others, who having ſometimes been Catholicks, did or ſhall afterwards fall back. As for Simanca, and other Writers, whatſoever they ſet down of the depoſing of Hereticks, it is to be underſtood of thoſe Princes, who having ſometimes profeſſed the Faith of the Church of Rome, do afterwards make a defection from the ſame.

2*dly*, For Recuſants; 1. I deſire them not to impute any Offence or Crime of mine, to the Prejudice of the Cauſe of Religion. 2. Concerning their not going to Church; whereas it was urged by Mr. Attorney, that the ground of their not going to Church, was the Excommunication and Bull of Pius Quintus; and that now they may go, for that his Majeſty is not denounced Excommunicate: I anſwer, That it followeth not; for the Arians and Catholicks had the ſame Service in their Churches, yet came they not together; and I know divers my ſelf, who, before that Bull, refuſed to go to Church all the time of Queen Elizabeth, though perhaps moſt Catholicks did indeed go to Church before. It was about the end of the Council of Trent, where this matter was diſcuſſed by twelve learned Men, and concludeed not lawful. And this was occaſioned, for that Calvin himſelf held it not lawful for any Proteſtant to be preſent, not only at our Maſs, wherein perhaps they may ſay there is Idolatry, but not at our Even-ſong, being the ſame with theirs.

3*dly*, Concerning the Jeſuits, he ſaid, That if any were privy to ſuch horrible Treaſons, it was impious, eſpecially in Men of their Profeſſion: But ſaid, that he talked with ſome of them about it, and that they denied it.

4*thly*, Touching my ſelf, The Negotiation into Spain was indeed propounded unto me, and I was alſo acquainted with the Negotiation for Money, ney, but ever intended it ſhould be beſtowed for the relief of poor Catholicks: But when they were there, they moved for an Army; which when they afterwards acquainted me withal, I miſliked it, and ſaid, it would be much diſliked at Rome: only I muſt needs confeſs I did conceal it after the example of Chriſt, who commands us, when our Brother offends, to reprove him, for if he do amend, we have gained him; yet I muſt needs confeſs, that the Laws made againſt ſuch Concealing, are very good and juſt, for it is not fit the Safety of a Prince ſhould depend upon any other Man's Conſcience. So that I am verily perſuaded, if they yielded to me, it had been good: but what their Intent and Meaning was, in deſiring an Army, I knew not, and I was charged not to meddle therein, no not with the Money which was to be ſent for Penſions, though it was to maintain the Title of the King.

The Earl of Salisbury then demanded, To maintain whoſe Title?

Garnet anſwered, The Title of the King of Spain.

The Earl of Northampton asked him, Why he did not oppoſe himſelf againſt it, and forbid it, as he might have done? For, Qui cum poſſit non prohibet, jubet.

Whereupon Garnet anſwered, That he might not do it: and for ſending of Letters, and commending ſome Perſons thereby, he confeſſed he did it often, as they were commended to him, without knowing either their Purpoſes, or ſome of their Perſons; for he never knew Mr. Wright, for whom he writ.

The Earl of Salisbury then replyed to Garnet, I muſt now remember you, how little any of your Anſwers can make for your Purpoſe, when you would ſeek to colour your dealing with Baynham, by profeſſing to write to Rome to procure a Countermand of Conſpiracies; and yet you know, when he took his journey towards Rome, the Blow muſt needs have been paſſed, before the time he could have arrived to the Pope's Preſence, (ſuch being your Zeal and his Haſte for any ſuch Prevention) as it was about the 20th of our October when he paſſed by Florence towards Rome.

To which Garnet made no great anſwer, but let it paſs; and then went on with his Defence of ſending Letters in Commendation of many of thoſe with which he had been formerly charged, and ſo confeſſed that he had written Commendation of Fawkes, thinking that he went to ſerve as a Soldier, not knowing then of any other Purpoſe he had in hand. And as for Sir Edmund Baynham, what he or Mr. Catesby intended, he knew not in particular; only Mr. Catesby asked him in general, the queſtion of the Lawfulneſs to deſtroy Innocents with Nocents, as had been before objected againſt him; which at firſt, I thought, ſaid Garnet, had been an idle Queſtion, though afterwards I did verily think, he intended ſomething that was not good. Whereupon having ſhortly after this, received Letters from Rome, to prohibit all Inſurrections intended by Catholicks, which might perturb this State; Garnet informed Catesby thereof, and told him, That if he proceeded againſt the Pope's will, he could not prevail: but Catesby refuſed and ſaid, He would not take notice of the Pope's pleaſure by him. Notwithſtanding, he ſhewed to Catesby the general Letter which he had received from Rome, but ſaid he would inform the Pope, and tell Garnet alſo in particular, what Attempt he had in hand, if he would hear it; which afterwards he offered to do, but Garnet refuſed to hear him, and at two ſeveral times requeſted him to certify the Pope what he intended to do.

And when Sir Edmund Baynham (as he pretended) was to go over into Flanders for a Soldier, Garnet thought good to ſend him to the Pope's Nuncio, and to commend him to other Friends of his, That they ſhould ſend him to inform the Pope of the diſtreſſed Eſtate of Catholicks in England: The rather, that the Pope having a Lay-man there, might be acquainted with all their Proceedings; and that Baynham might then learn of the Pope, what courſe he would adviſe the Catholicks in England to take for their own Good: but wiſhed Baynham in no caſe to uſe Garnet's name to the Nuncio in that behalf.

Then were the two Witneſſes called for; both of them Perſons of good Eſtimation, that overheard the Interlocution, betwixt Garnet and Hall the Jeſuit, viz. Mr. Fauſet a Man learned and a Juſtice of Peace, and Mr. Lockerſon: but Mr. Fauſet being not preſent, was ſent for to appear; and in the mean time Mr. Lockerſon, who being depoſed before Garnet, delivered upon his Oath, that they heard Garnet ſay to Hall, They will charge me with my Prayer for the good Succeſs of the great Action, in the beginning of the Parliament, and with the Verſes which I added in the end of my Prayer,

Gentem auferte perfidam
Credentium de finibus,
Ut Chriſto Laudes debitas
Perſolvamus alacriter.

It is true indeed (ſaid Garnet) that I prayed for the good Succeſs of that great Action; but I will tell them, that I meant it in reſpect of ſome ſharper Laws, which I feared they would then make againſt Catholicks: and that Anſwer ſhall ſerve well enough.

Here Garnet replied, That for the two Gentlemen that heard the Interlocution, he would not charge them with Perjury, becauſe he knew them to be honeſt Men; yet he thought they did miſtake ſome things, though in the ſubſtantial parts, he confeſſed, he could not deny their Relation. And for the main Plot, he confeſſed, that he was therewithal acquainted by Greenwell particularly; and that Greenwell came perplexed unto him to open ſomething, which Mr. Catesby with divers others intended: to whom he ſaid, He was contented to hear by him what it was, ſo as he would not be acknown to Mr. Catesby, or to any other, that he was made privy to it. Whereupon Father Greenwell told him the whole Plot, and all the Particulars thereof, with which he proteſted, that he was very much diſtempered, and could never ſleep quietly afterwards, but ſometimes prayed to God, that it ſhould not take effect.

To that the Earl of Salisbury replied, That he ſhould do well to ſpeak clearly of his Devotion in that point; for otherwiſe he muſt put him in remembrance, that he had confeſſed to the Lords, that he had offered ſacrifice to God for ſtay of that Plot, unleſs it were for the good of the Catholick Cauſe; and in no other faſhion (ſaid his Lordſhip) was this State beholden to you for your Maſſes and Oblations. Adding thus much farther, That he wonder'd why he would not write to his Superior Aquaviva, as well of this particular Powder-Treaſon, as to procure prohibition for other ſmaller matters.

Garnet

Garnet faintly anſwered, He might not diſcloſe it to any, becauſe it was matter of ſecret Confeſſion, and would endanger the Life of divers Men.

Whereunto the Earl of Northampton replied, That that matter of Confeſſion, which before he refuſed to confeſs, becauſe he would ſave Lives, he confeſſed it now to endanger his own Life; and therefore his former Anſwer was idle and frivolous.

Then Garnet told the Lords, That he commanded Greenwell to diſſuade Catesby, which he thought he did; and if Catesby had come to him upon Alhallow-day, he thought he could ſo far have ruled him, as he would have been perſuaded to deſiſt.

Then ſaid the Earl of Salisbury, Why did you refuſe to hear Catesby tell you all the Particulars, when he would have told you, if you had been deſirous to prevent it?

Garnet replied, That after Greenwell had told him, what it was which Catesby intended, and that he called to mind what Catesby ſaid to him, at his firſt breaking with him in general Terms, his Soul was ſo troubled with miſlike of that Particular, as he was loth to hear any more of it.

Well then (ſaid the Earl of Salisbury) you ſee his Heart: and then turning to the Lords Commiſſioners, he deſired leave of them, that he might uſe ſome ſpeech concerning the proceeding of the State in this great Cauſe, from the firſt beginning until that hour; and ſo began to this effect: That although the Evidence had been ſo well diſtributed and opened by Mr. Attorney, as he had never heard ſuch a maſs of Matter better contracted, nor made more intelligible to the Jury, to whom it was not his part to ſpeak, nor his purpoſe to meddle with Mr. Garnet in Divinity, or in the Doctrine of Equivocation, in which latter he ſaw how he had played his Maſter-prize; yet becauſe he had been particularly uſed in this Service with other of the Lords Commiſſioners, by whom nothing was more deſired, next the Glory of God, than to demonſtrate to the World, with what Sincerity and Moderation his Majeſty's Juſtice was carried in all points, he would be bold to ſay ſomewhat of the Manner of this Arraignment, and of the Place where it was appointed. For the firſt, he ſaid, That ſeeing there was nothing to which this State might more attribute the infinite Goodneſs and Bleſſings of God, than to the Protection of the true Religion, which had groaned ſo long under the bitter Perſecutions of Men of his Profeſſion; he confeſſed, that he held himſelf greatly honoured to be an Aſſiſtant amongſt ſo many great Lords at the Seat of Juſtice, where God's Cauſe ſhould receive ſo much Honour, by diſcrediting the Perſon of Garnet, on whom the common Adverſary had thought to confer the Uſurpation of ſuch an eminent Juriſdiction: For otherwiſe, Who did not know, that the Quality of poor Henry Garnet might have undergone a more ordinary Form of Tryal, and happily in ſome other place of leſs Note and Obſervation? And ſo his Lordſhip took an occaſion to declare, That the City of London was ſo dear to the King, and his Majeſty ſo deſirous to give it all Honour and Comfort, as when this Opportunity was put into his hands, whereby there might be made ſo viſible an Anatomy of Popiſh Doctrine, from whence theſe Treaſons have their Source and Support, he thought he could not chuſe a fitter Stage, than the City of London, which was not only rightly termed, The Chamber of his Empire, but was by his Majeſty eſteemed as his greateſt and ſafeſt Treaſury; who accounteth no Riches comparable to his Subjects Hearts, and acknowledgeth that ſuch a Circuit did never contain ſo many faithful Subjects within the Walls: A Matter well appearing to his own Eyes amongſt others, upon the deceaſe of the late Queen of precious Memory, when he attending moſt of the Peers and Privy-Counſellors of this Kingdom, who were accompanied with no ſmall number of noble and faithful Gentlemen, had ſeen them all ſtayed from entry within the Gates of this City, until they had publickly declared with one Voice, That they would live and die with the King our Sovereign Lord. To you therefore, Mr. Garnet (ſaid the Earl of Salisbury) muſt I addreſs my ſelf, as the Man in whom it appeareth beſt what horrible Treaſons have been covered under the Mantle of Religion, which heretofore had been Petty Treaſon for a Proteſtant to have affirmed. Such hath been the Iniquity of falſe Tongues, who have always ſought to prove the Truth a Lyar. Of which impudent Calumnies, the State is ſo tender, as you do beſt know, (Mr. Garnet) that ſince your Apprehenſion, even till this Day, you have been as chriſtianly, as courteouſly, and as carefully uſed, as ever Man could be, of any Quality, or any Profeſſion: yea, it may truly be ſaid, that you have been as well attended for Health or otherwiſe, as a Nurſe-Child. Is it true or no, ſaid the Earl?

It is moſt true (my Lord) ſaid Garnet, I confeſs it.

Well then (ſaid the Earl) if your ſtrange Doctrine of Equivocation be obſerved, and your Hardneſs of Heart to deny all things; let it not be forgotten, that this Interlocution of yours with Hall, over-heard by others, appears to be digitus Dei: for thereby had the Lords ſome light, and proof of matter againſt you, which muſt have been diſcovered otherwiſe by Violence and Coercion, a matter ordinary in other Kingdoms, though now forborn here: but it is better as it is, for the Honour of the State, for ſo were your own Words, that you thought it beſt to tell the truth at laſt, when you ſaw you were confounded tanta nube teſtium. In which I proteſt, that I do confidently aſſure my ſelf, that you would as eaſily have confeſſed your ſelf to be Author of all the Action, as the Concealer, but that his Majeſty and my Lords were well contented to draw all from you without Racking, or any ſuch bitter Torments.

Then ſpeaking to Garnet, he ſaid; I pray you, Mr. Garnet, what encouraged Catesby that he might proceed, but your reſolving him in the firſt Propoſition? What warranted Fawkes, but Catesby's Explication of Garnet's Arguments? as appears infallibly by Winter's Confeſſion, and by Fawkes, that they knew the Point had been reſolved to Mr. Catesby, by the beſt Authority.

Then Garnet anſwered, That Mr. Catesby was to blame to make ſuch Application.

To that the Earl replied, That he muſt needs be bold with him, to drive him from the Truſt he had, to ſatisfy the World by his Denials, by putting him in mind, how after the Interlocution betwixt him and Hall, when he was called before all the Lords, and was asked, not what he ſaid, but whether Hall and he had conference together, deſiring him not to equivocate; how ſtiffly he deny'd it upon his Soul, reiterating it with ſo many deteſtable Execrations, as the Earl ſaid, it wounded their Hearts to hear him: and yet aſſoon as Hall had confeſſed it, he grew aſhamed, cried the the Lord's Mercy, and ſaid, he had offended, if Equivocation did not help him.

To this Garnet anſwered, That when one is asked a queſtion before a Magiſtrate, he was not bound to anſwer before ſome Witneſſes be produced againſt him, Quia nemo tenetur prodere ſeipſum. Then Garnet falling into ſome Profeſſions of his welwiſhing to his Majeſty, and being put in mind of the Anſwer he made concerning the Excommunication of Kings, wherein he referred himſelf to the Canon of Nos Sanctorum, he anſwered that his Majeſty was not yet excommunicated.

Then the Earl of Salisbury bade him deal plainly, for now was the time, Whether in caſe the Pope, per Sententiam Orthodoxam, ſhould excommunicate the King's Majeſty of Great Britain, his Subjects were bound to continue their Obedience?

To this Garnet denied to anſwer, by which the Hearers might ſee his Mind.

From that Matter he began to make requeſt, That where he had confeſſed the receiving of two Briefs or Bulls from the Pope, in the Queen's time, by which all Catholicks were forbidden to adhere to any Succeſſor that was not obedient to the Church of Rome, his Majeſty would be pleaſed to make a favourable Interpretation, becauſe he had ſhewed them to very few Catholicks in England, in the Queen's time; and when he underſtood that the Pope had changed his Mind, then he burnt the Bulls.

To that it was ſaid, That belike the Pope changed his Mind, when the King was ſo ſafely poſſeſſed of his Eſtate, and Garnet with his Complices began to feel their own Impiety, and ſo as Catesby ſaid to Piercy, did reſolve roundly of that Treaſon, which would ſpeed all at once.

Then Garnet began to uſe ſome Speeches, that he was not conſenting to the Powder-Treaſon.

Whereupon the Earl of Salisbury ſaid, Mr. Garnet, give me but one Argument that you were not conſenting to it, that can hold in any indifferent Man's Ear or Senſe, beſides your bare Negative. But Garnet replyed not.

Then Mr. Attorney-General ſpake in anſwer of Garnet more particularly, to this effect:

1. For Equivocation, it is true indeed, that they do outwardly to the World condemn Lying and Perjury, becauſe the contrary were too palpable, and would make them odious to all Men: But it is open and broad Lying and Forſwearing, not ſecret and cloſe Lying and Perjury, or ſwearing a Falſhood, which is moſt abominable, and without Defence or Example. And if they allow it not generally in others, yet at leaſt in themſelves, their Confederates and Aſſociates in Treaſonable Practices, they will both warrant and defend it, eſpecially when it may ſerve their turn for ſuch Purpoſes and Ends as they look after.

2. Concerning the uſurped Power of the Pope in Depoſing of Princes; neither is it the general Doctrine of the Church, as he falſly ſaid, neither allowed or tolerated by all Princes, who are otherwiſe of their Religion, as may appear out of the French Diſcourſe written to the French King againſt the re-admitting of the Jeſuitical Faction. And whereas he would pick a thanke in ſeeming to ſpare and exempt King James our Sovereign, it is not poſſible to avoid their Diſtinction of being excommunicated de Jure, if not de Facto, howſoever it be true alſo, that the Pope doth de Facto curſe all Hereticks. For Recuſants not going to Church, the example of the Catholicks not joining in Service and Prayer with the Arians, who denied a main Article of the Chriſtian Creed, doth no ways hold, neither can it agree to us, of whom no ſuch impious Blaſphemy can be ſhewed or imagined. That Garnet ſaid, he knew ſome, who before the Bull came, went not to Church, it may be true perhaps in ſome one or two perverted and perverſe Men like himſelf; but whereas he produced the Council of Trent, as if there the Matter had been determined, and thereupon inferreth, that after that all Romiſh Catholicks refuſed to meet with us at Church in time of Prayer, it is a groſs Error: for the laſt Seſſion of that Council was in the Year of our Lord 1563. which was in the fifth Year of Queen Elizabeth; whereas I ſhewed, and am able to juſtify and prove, That their Romiſh Engliſh Catholicks came to our Service in our Churches until the nineteenth Year of her Majeſty, which was many Years after that Council was ended.

Concerning Garnet himſelf; 1*ſt*, For that Anſwer of his, That he knew of the Powder-Treaſon by Confeſſion, it is true which before was ſpoken, that ſuch Acts as this is, Non laudantur niſi peracta, are then only commended, when they are performed: but otherwiſe, Firſt, Greenwell's was no Sacramental Confeſſion, for that the Confitent was not penitent: nay, himſelf hath clearly delivered under his hand, That the Powder-Treaſon was told him, not as a Fault, but by way of Conſultation and Advice. 2*dly*, It was a future thing to be done, and not already then executed. 3*dly*, Greenwell told it not of himſelf, that he ſhould do it, but of Fawkes, Piercy, Catesby, Winter, and others; and therefore he ought to have diſcovered them, for that they were no Confitents. 4*thly*, He might and ought to have diſcovered the Miſchief, for Preſervation of the State, though he had concealed the Perſons. 5*thly*, Catesby told it unto him extra Confeſſionem, out of Confeſſion; ſaying, They might as well turn him out, as have kept him out. Laſtly, By the Common Law, howſoever it were (it being crimen læſæ Majeſtatis) he ought to have diſcloſed it.

Now for that Garnet denied that he was a principal Author and Procurer of this Treaſon, but only that he had received knowledge thereof; the contrary is clear and manifeſt, both out of his own Confeſſions, by himſelf acknowledged, and apparently proved, in that he reſolved Catesby concerning the Lawfulneſs and Merit thereof, and that he prayed for the good Succeſs of the Powder-Treaſon, which is more than either Conſultation or Conſent. Beſides, he muſt remember him of the old Verſicle, Qui non prohibet quod prohibere poteſt, conſentire videtur. Garnet might have commanded Greenwell, that told him of the Powder-Treaſon, to have deſiſted, but did not: But Greenwell went ſtill on with the Treaſon, and when it was diſcloſed, went into the Country to move Rebellion, which doubtleſs he would never have done, if Garnet had forbidden him; therefore he ſaid, he might ſay with the Orator Tully, Cui adſunt teſtimonia rerum, quid opus eſt verbis? Moreover, Mr. Attorney added, How Garnet writ firſt for Thomas Winter, then for Kit Wright, after that for Guy Fawkes, then for Sir Edward Baynham, and afterwards for Catesby, for a Regiment of Horſe; and that Garnet was for the Infanta, and by his Briefs intended to keep out the King, except he ſhould tolerate and ſwear to maintain the Romiſh Religion.

Then Mr. Attorney ſpake of the Interlocution betwixt Garnet and Hall, and ſaid, That in all their Speeches they never named God, nor confeſ-ſed their Innocency: But as ſoon as they ſpake together, Hall ſpake firſt; and then Garnet ſaid, he ſuſpected one, whoſe Name they that were ſet to overhear them, could not hear, to have diſcloſed ſomething againſt them: But it may be otherwiſe, for he ſaid he was much ſubject to that Frailty of Suſpicion. He ſaid he received a Note from Rookwood, that Greenwell was gone over Seas; and another, that Gerrard was gone to Father Parſons, and that Miſtreſs Anne was in Town (meaning Miſtreſs Anne Fawkes) and many other things were by them uttered in that Conference.

By this time came in Mr. Forſet, who being depoſed, affirmed likewiſe, that their Examination, and the matter therein contained, were true: ſaying further, that both of them took Notes of that which they heard from Garnet and Hall, as near as poſſibly they could, and ſet down nothing in their Examinations, but thoſe things, wherein both their Notes and perfect Memories agreed and aſſented; and that many things that were very material, and of great moment, were left out of their Examinations, becauſe both their Notes and Memories did not perfectly agree therein.

And now one of the Letters, which were written with Sack, was ſhewed to the Court; by which appeared that Hall and Garnet had Interlocution together. Mr. Attorney here inferred that the neceſſary End of Juſtice was, ut pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat; and urged the Examination of Garnet, wherein he confeſſed that when Teſmond alias Greenwell, made relation to him of the great Blow by the Powder-Treaſon, who ſhould have the Protection, Greenwell ſaid, the Lords that ſhould be left alive ſhould chuſe a Protector. And further, Mr. Attorney urged the writing of another Letter written with Sack to Sayer alias Rookwood, a Prieſt in the Gatehouſe: But of this point much is formerly mentioned.

Here Mr. Attorney ending; my Lord of Northampton ſpake to the Priſoner this Speech following.

Though no Man alive can be leſs apt or willing than my ſelf, to add the leaſt grain or ſcruple of Improvement to the weight of any Man's Calamity, that groans under the heavy burden of a diſtreſſed State, Vel gravatis addere gravamina, whereof I have as many Witneſſes as the World hath Eyes; yet as the Caſe ſtands now in this Tryal, Mr. Garnet, between my dear Sovereign, ex cujus ſpiritu, as one of Alexander ſaid, nos omnes ſpiritum ducimus; and you that were ſo well content, to let the courſe of Conſpiracy run forward to the ſtopping of this breath before the time, which God by Nature doth preſcribe between his Honour and your Error, his juſt Proceedings and your painted Shows, his Sincerity and your Hypocriſy; I could wiſh it poſſible that in a Perſon of ſome other Quality, you might hear the Echoes of your unperfect and weak Anſwers, and thereupon judge more indifferently and evenly of the true ſtate of the Cauſe than you have done hitherto; being diſtracted with Fear, or foreſtall'd by Prejudice, or, to borrow your own Phraſe, which is more proper to the Point than any I can uſe, oppreſſed tanta nube teſtium, with ſo thick a Cloud of Witneſſes, as concur with one Voice, Heart and Spirit, for the Confuſion of your Audacity.

I confeſs that never any Man in your State gave leſs hold or advantage to Examiners, than you have done in the whole courſe of Proceeding to us that were in Commiſſion; ſometime by forſwearing, as upon the Confeſſion of Hall your Fellow; ſometime by diſſembling, as about the places of your Rendezvous, which was the Lapwing's Neſt; ſometimes by earneſt Expoſtulation; ſometime by artificial Equivocation; ſometime by ſophiſticating true Subſtances; ſometime by adding falſe Qualities: yet ſat ſupereſt, as may appear, to the defeat of your Inventions, and the defence of the King's Majeſty; quia magna eſt veritas, & prævalet.

Your Parts by Nature ſimply conſidered, and in another Perſon, would rather move Compaſſion, than exaſperate Humanity; for whom would not the Ruin of ſuch a Perſon touch, as is in Appearance temperate, and in Underſtanding ripe? But our End at this time is the ſame with Decius in Livy, ut quem vos obrutum reliquiſtis ignem, &c. that we may quench that Fire by prevention, which you have only raked up in Aſhes; ut novum daret incendium, that it might cauſe a new Combuſtion ſo ſoon as it might hit upon matter that were fit and ſutable. Wherefore I muſt rather draw your Anſwers to the true touch for diſcharge of Rumors, than verberare aerem, beat the Air: For the ſubſtance of all your Evaſions and ſly Shifts, is as the Inn-keeper of Chalcus confeſſed of his Diſhes to his Gueſts, admiring tantam ferculorum diverſitatem, that they were only compounded of Pork, howſoever your fine Cookery may vary them.

The two Bulls that in the late Queen's time entred the Land (with a purpoſe by their loud Lowing to call all their Calves together, for the making of a ſtrong Party, at the ſhutting up of the Evening, againſt your dread Sovereign) were grazed in your Paſtures, Mr. Garnet; or to ſpeak more properly (becauſe they durſt neither endure the Light, nor admit the Air) they were ſtall-fed at your Crib, as your ſelf confeſs; and therefore, Serve nequam, ex ore tuo te judico. And what anſwer make you to this? marry that the Purpoſe was imparted to very few; ſo much the worſe: For out of Publication grows Diſcovery; and yet Experience hath juſtified, that thoſe very few were the very Souls and Spirits of that pack of Conſpirators, and ſuch as for want of Patience and Temperance to tarry the time, when the Game had been brought to bearing, ſhould have played the chiefeſt parts in the late ſmoaking Tragedy. You ſay the Bulls were after ſacrificed in the Fire by your ſelf: But not before the King's good Angel had cut their Throats, and the beſt part of their Proof were paſt, and your Hopes dead of that good which in likelihood they ſhould have brought with them. For to what uſe could theſe dumb Beaſts ſerve, in ſeeking to prevent that lawful and undoubted Right, which Heaven had now proclaimed, and Earth acknowledged? But let the proof be what it will, I look into the Root. I wonder, Mr. Garnet, what Apoſtle warrants you in undertaking wicked Plots, in hope that good may follow; neglecting what all Laws (and the Laws of England above all) what all States and Nations conclude of Men, that ſlily practiſe and combine for Anticipation of the future Rights of lawful Succeſſors.

In excuſe of Letters written with your own Hand by Thomas Winter to Father Creſwell, when he was employed about the procurement of an Army to invade with ſupplys of Treaſure proportionable for the quicker Execution of ſo deſperate an Enterprize; you anſwer, that the Perſons were commended in your Letters, not the Plot: ſpectatum admiſſi, riſum teneatis amici? as though the Miniſter niſter had any other Errand or Inſtruction, than the main Plot it ſelf: as though you, Mr. Garnet, being then Magiſter in Iſrael and Rector Chori, could or would be ignorant of their prefixed End; as though ſo grave a Perſon as your ſelf, were likely to ſet his hand to blanks like a Baby, and to leave the reſt to the diſpoſition of a Man wholly tranſported with fiery Humours: Or as though in this very point other Mens Confeſſions in particular, beſide your own in generality, had not left us Marks and Traces evident and plain enough to deſcry doubleneſs with diverſity. You confeſs privity to a Practice, but not for an Army; Foreknowledge of a Courſe for getting Treaſure, but with a purpoſe, as you conceived, to employ it wholly for the relief of Catholicks. So as the reaſon of the reſervedneſs of Catesby, Winter and the reſt toward you, muſt be undoubtedly their Suſpicion of your over-great Affection and Duty to the Queen: For otherwiſe it is certain they would have truſted you as well with their Intention, as with their Means; with their Hopes, as with their Inſtruments; eſpecially conſidering how hard it was for them to compaſs their own vaſt Deſires, without help both of your Credit, and of your Induſtry.

Wright was in like manner, and with like Expedition, commended by you afterward for the quickening of Winter's Project, if any Life were in it, upon the ſlacking of the Paſſions of Spain, with the Propoſitions of Peace, that no time might be loſt, no Stone left unremoved that might give a knock to the Peace of our Policy; your Head wrought upon all Offers, your Hand walked in all Regions, your Spirit ſteered all Attempts and Undertakings: and yet if Proteſtations, qualified and protected by Equivocations, may carry weight, all this while your Mind was as good Paſtors ought to be, patient, your Thoughts were obedient, and your Counſels innocent. But now to ſearch your cunning ſomewhat nearer to the quick, we muſt obſerve, that when your Hopes of Invaſion began to cool by likelihood of Peace, your Deſires of Supplies by the cold Anſwers that came from Spain, your Expectation of new Miſchief to be wrought at home without Complots abroad; when Malice it ſelf was caſt into ſo deſperate a Swoon, as neither Roſa-ſolis when Spain relented, nor Iſcobah when Tyrone ſubmitted, nor Diſſenſion within the Kingdom when Diſcontentments ended, could put it by any freſh adventure into Life; when you for your own part, Mr. Garnet, having been once waſhed and regenerated in the Fountain of the King's free Pardon, from the leprous Spots of former Treaſons, were determined to begin upon another Stock, and return as a Dog to the Vomit: though waſhing can avail no Man (as the Preacher warns) that iterum tangit mortuum, toucheth the dead the ſecond or third time after he hath been made clean; for ſecretly Catesby reſorts to you, as Mahomet might to Sergius, (for now I ſpeak according to the Matter, and not the Men) to enquire whether it were lawful, conſidering the neceſſity of the time, to undertake an Enterprize for the advancement of the Catholick Religion, though it were likely that among many that were Nocent, ſome ſhould periſh that were Innocent. A Man that is religious in any kind, or but morally honeſt in his own kind, would expect that a Prieſt, a Jeſuit, (which Title doth imply Salvation, and not Deſtruction; nay, the Superior of Engliſh Jeſuits) upon this raſh demand, ſhould have reſorted for a ſafe Reſolution to God's own Book; where he ſhould have found that God was pleaſed to withdraw his wrathful Hand from Sodom, ſo as there had been only decem juſti, ten juſt Men within that Town, and for their ſakes; that the wiſe Houſholder in St. Matthew, marking how hard it would be when the Corn was ripe to make Separation, gave Order to his Servants to abſtain from plucking up the Tares, ne ſimul eradicarent triticum, leſt withal they plucked up the Wheat by the Roots. Ye ſhould have found in the Stories of the Church, that the godly Biſhops in the firſt ſpring of Religion, ſuſpended proceſs againſt the Priſcillian Hereticks, ne Catholici cum illis perirent, leſt the Catholicks might alſo periſh with them. And the Church of Millan taxed Theodoſius the Emperor, quod inſontes una cum ſontibus trucidaſſet, that he had proceeded both againſt the Guilty and the Guiltleſs with one Stroke, and in one meaſure of Severity. But far beſide the warrant either of Holy Writ, or Holy Precedents, your anſwer, Mr. Garnet, was ſuch, as I both abhor to think, and quake to utter; that if any great advantage were to grow to the Church this way, they might deſtroy them all.

Tantæne animis cœleſtibus iræ? O Mr. Garnet, be not offended though I ask of you, as a worthy Emperor did once of a Traytor in a Caſe by many degrees inferior to this, Quid facit in pectore humano lupi feritas, canis rabies, ſerpentis venenum? But that which ought moſt to torture and afflict the Spirit (if you be the Child of him, whoſe Name and Badge you bear) is, that your Doctrine was confidently delivered, and ſo ſpeedily digeſted, and converted to Nutriment from ſuch a Mouth as yours, conſidering that (according to the Prophet) Knowledge ſhould depend upon the Lips of a Prieſt, as Rookewood, Bates and others, that did ſhrink at the horror of the Project when it was firſt laid down, received Satisfaction upon the very ſound of your Aſſent, though masked with the Title of a Man, as grave and learned as any in the Land. And Catesby doubting of the fickleneſs of Men's Affections, in Caſes that concern the Soul, uſed your admittance as a Charm or Spell, to keep quick Spirits within the Circle of combined Faith; which otherwiſe perhaps, when Hell brake looſe, would have ſought Liberty. Your Charter only (whereupon I beſeech you for your own Soul's Health, to meditate for the time you tarry in this World) was the Baſe whereon ſome grounded their bad Conſcience in proceeding with this Plot, not only to the Deſtruction of their Bodies, but to the Peril of their Souls, without ſound and true Repentance, which by the merit of Chriſt's Paſſion will ſerve in quacunque hora peccator ingemuerit. For tho Chriſt were joyful that he had not loſt one of thoſe whom his Father gave him in charge, and came to ſave and not to deſtroy; yet your Advice was to deſtroy them all: Such was your burning Charity!

Some Man ſurprized with a Queſtion upon the ſudden, might anſwer ſharply and ſhrewdly at ſome time, I confeſs, without thinking or intending ill: But this Man, Mr. Garnet, cannot be you, that have confeſſed clearly under your own Hand, your ſuſpicion and fear of ſome Miſchief purpoſed and intended in their Hearts, by this quick Queſtion of Nocents and Innocents: and therefore quod dubitas ne feceris. It ſeems the Heart of Catesby was a fertile Soil for ſprouting of ſtinking Weeds haſtily, into which the Seed of your ſecuring Confidence was caſt. For the Powder-Plot, which in January was barely embryo, became formatus fœtus in the March next following; it quickened the next December, when the Pioneers began to dig in the thick Wall: Catesby not long after imparted his Conceit ſecretly to you of the great likelihood he foreſaw of a lucky time of Birth; and thereupon was Guy Fawkes ſent over by your Knowledge and Encouragement, to deal with Sir William Stanley, about the drawing down of Forces ſomewhat nearer to the Sea-ſide for ſpeedy Tranſport, which if need were, might carry Torches at the Solemnity. But what is your anſwer to this Employment of Guy Fawkes? Forſooth, that your purpoſe was only to commend him as a Soldier, but not as a Conſpirator. O unlucky Treaſon, that comes to be excuſed by ſo poor an Advocate! when Fawkes himſelf meant nothing leſs than to be a Soldier, having ſo ſtrange a part to play ſoon after in the Powder Train, but uſed this Retreat as a Colour to diſguiſe the ſecret Purpoſe that did only tarry time, and to eſchew thoſe watchful Eyes, that nearer hand would have obſerved both his Inlets and his Outlets in that place more narrowly. The Point is clear, the Confeſſions are direct, the Purpoſe is palpable. All the Lines of your Level are drawn to the Center of the Powder Mine. All Letters are either drawn or interlined manu Scorpionis, to uſe the word of Hierome; and yet under pain of Cenſure we muſt believe, That all this while you were in Charity, becauſe all this while (which it grieves me to remember) you were not afraid to communicate.

But now to weigh your Anſwers that concern the Powder Plot it ſelf; which is paramount in reſpect of the Longitude and Latitude to all that have been, or ever ſhall be: Your ſelf cannot deny, Mr. Garnet, that Greenwell's Overture as you ſay in Confeſſion, coming after the notice which you took of Catesby's Queſtion about Innocents, was but a Fruit of your own Doctrine, an Effect of your own Inſtruction, and a Concluſion drawn wholly out of your own Propoſitions and Principles. Now when we preſs to know what Reaſon drew you to the concealment of a Project ſo pernicious both to Prince and State, without revealing it either to the King himſelf, tanquam præcellenti, to uſe St. Peter's Term, or to his Miniſters ſubordinate; you ſtart to the ſhift of Confeſſion for a formal help, which comes too ſhort in reſpect of Catesby's firſt Diſcovery, which your own words aver plainly to have wrought with you. I will not argue in this place what Courſe a Confeſſor ſhould take, or how far he ought to ſtrain for the ſecuring of a Prince's Life, that otherwiſe is ſure to periſh by the Rage and Ignorance invincible of a baſe Villain, (whoſe Life anſwers not in value the leaſt hair of a Prince's Head) becauſe time ſuffers not: But I am ſure that for a matter of leſs weight than this, and a Crime of leſs importance than the Life both of Prince and State; Confeſſion received a deep wound for a long time, more than a thouſand Years paſt, in the Church of Conſtantinople. For God forbid that matters of ſuch weight, ſhould hang by ſuch feeble Threds. But to this excuſe of tenderneſs in the point of Confeſſion, I would anſwer, by making a great doubt, Whether this courſe of Conference were a Confeſſion or not; for againſt your bare words, which Equivocation ſupports, I object ſome likelihood, That ſince you kneeled ſometimes, and ſometimes walked up and down; ſince matter of Conſpiracy were enterlaced with matter of Confeſſion, not for eaſe of Conſcience as ſhould appear, but for advice in Execution; ſince Greenwell was abſolved inſtantly, which excludes the ſhift of Reference; and Greenwell ſhould be found to lye to the Holy Ghoſt in caſe this were a true Confeſſion: in promiſing (Mr. Garnet) as you ſay, to diſſuade the Project which he proſecuted even to the laſt Point, as is evident; and after the Powder Camp brake up: I conclude, that though this diſcovery were by Confeſſion, yet it was no Superſedeas to your former knowledge from Catesby your truſty Friend; and if it were none, then it can be no Protection for Faith putrified. What need we ſeek Light through Cobweb-Lawnes, when the driſt of your whole Device in ſeeking to conclude from one, what you learned of another, and from all what you affected and abetted in your Heart, doth evidently prove your Counſels to have been carried along with ſuch a temper of reſervedneſs, as whenſoever Miſchief ſhould be brought to light, the World might rather wonder at your Caution, than commend your Fidelity?

By ſhaping ſuch weak Anſwers to Demonſtrations ſo manifeſt, you muſt either work by the Ring of Gyges, in making your Audacity and Preſumption inviſible, or hold a very weak Conceit of our Capacities, in ſuppoſing that they can be either dazled or deluded by ſuch poor Sophiſtry. For though you pretend to have received a deep Wound in Conſcience at the firſt revealing of the Plot, to have loſt your Sleep with vexation of Spirit, to have offered and prayed to God for his preventing Grace, to have required Greenwell's help and furtherance in croſſing and diverting the deſign; yet all this while you ſuffered the Project to proceed, you helped and aſſiſted their Endeavours that were Labourers, you wrote earneſt Letters both to Baldwin and to Creſwell for their furtherance of ordinary Means; you gave order for a Prayer to be ſaid by Catholicks for their proſperous Succeſs; you kept meaſure with the two firſt Dimenſions of Fryar Bacon's Brazen-head; Time is, Time was, till (thanks be to God) the third Time was paſt: you had ever an Ear open to liſten for the Crack, and were in the ſame Agony for the Powder-Plot, that Charles V. was for the Pope's dureſs, giving order in all his Dominions, that Prayers ſhould be made for his releaſe, when in the mean time he kept and held him in his own hand Priſoner. The leaſt Word of your Mouth, or Labour of your Pen might have ſecured both Prince and State, while you pretend to have broken both your Sleeps and your Brains, and that with a greater advantage to the Cauſe which you would advance, than can ever grow by Combuſtion and Conſpiracy. But your Tenderneſs herein was ſutable with another dutiful deſire of yours to diſſuade Catesby from the Plot, at his coming into Warwickſhire, who never meant to come thither, but as to the Rendezvous, when the Parliament had been blown up, and the Storm had been blown over. It may be that your Mind was perplexed and diſquieted upon the meditation of ſtrange Events; for ſo was the mind of Cain, Achitophel, and Judas that betrayed his Maſter; the Reaſon is very pregnant in the Word of God it ſelf, That cum ſit timida nequitia dat teſtimonium condemnationis, ſince Wickedneſs is cowardly and timorous, it gives Evidence of Condemnation againſt it ſelf; & ſemper præſumit ſæva perturbata Conſcientia: but Satan prevailing, his Angels execute.

I will now conclude this Addreſs to you, Mr. Garnet, by obſerving ſome ſpecial Points how ſtrangely and prepoſterouſly the Devil in his laſt Project of Powder hath altered his old Properties. For the Curſe that God laid upon the Serpent after the firſt Tranſgreſſion was, ut gradiretur ſuper pectus ſuum, to creep upon his Breaſt: but now we find him mounted upon the Wings of an Eſpraie to the higheſt Region of the Air, and among the Fire-works. The other part of his Curſe was, that he ſhould ſhould eat Pulverem; that is, Duſt or Powder: but now ſince Sodom was deſtroyed by Sulphur, and the Wife of Lot tranſmuted into Salt, the proper materials of that mean by which Satan wrought in this hot Fire; it appears that the Serpent from eating Powder (which was a plain device) fell, for a worſe purpoſe, to ſnuff Gunpowder. Then the Serpent did inſidiari calcaneo, now capiti, from which the Body draweth both Senſe and Influence. Then he began to Eve, with a modeſt queſtion, Cur præcepit Deus? why hath God commanded? now with a Reſolution, Præcepit Deus, God hath commanded. His words in thoſe carried a flouriſh of great Comfort, Nequaquam moriemini, but now Terror, Moriemini, For a great Advantage deſtroy them all. The Devil at that time did only nibble about the Text of Holy Writ, tanquam mus ponticus, as Tertullian terms Martian: but now he draws the grounds of Equivocation concerning Princes Lives out of the very Scripture, and by ſcholaſtical Authority Satan tempted Chriſt with a fair offer, dandi omnia, of giving all upon the top of the Pinacle: But now he ſets upon the great Lieutenant of God's Authority and Dignity, with an auferam tibi omnia, both Life and Crown, ex penetralibus ubi Chriſtus non eſt, as we are taught by his Evangeliſt. The Dragon's Ambition extended no further than the ſweeping away with his Tail of the third part of the Stars in the Firmament: But now the Plot of him and his Diſciples, was to ſweep away the Sun, the Moon, and the Stars, both out of Star-Chamber and Parliament, that no Light be given in this Kingdom to the beſt Labourers. In the time of Saul, the Devil was ſo modeſt, as to ſuſpend his Illuſions and Oracles till the Viſions of the Prophets began to ceaſe: But now though we have both Moſes and the Prophets, & firmiorem ſermonem propheticum, yet he ruffles among the Robes, & inaudita fundit oracula. In the beginning of the Chriſtian Church, the very Name of Chriſt was ſufficient to make Satan pack, and to quit the Poſſeſſion of tormented Men; but he hath learned a more cunning Trick of late, under the Banner of Chriſt to fight againſt the Lieutenants of his Imperial Majeſty. In one point I find no Change; that is, in labouring and working by all means to draw Men from their Truſt in God's Direction, to a tickle kind of Confidence in themſelves, and their own weak Knowledge of Good and Ill. And as that Error was the Cauſe of Adam's Exile from Paradiſe, which was hortus concluſus; ſo had ſuch another almoſt divided us and our Heirs both from our Lives and Eſtates: Et penitus toto diviſos orbe Britannos.

I have ſtood the longer on this Point, to let you know how idly, and yet how wilfully you ſtrive both againſt the Providence of God, and the Juſtice of the Land, Quæ tuo te jugulavit gladio: The more you labour to get out of the Wood, having once loſt the right way, the further you creep in. For the Wiſdom of the World is Folly before God; and unpoſſible it is, that thoſe Counſels or Proceedings ſhould either have good Proof in this World, or Reward in the next, that are embrued with Blood, and purſued with Tyranny. If then there be no other way to Heaven, than by the Deſtruction of God's Anointed and their Heirs, I will conclude with you Mr. Garnet, as Conſtantius did with Aſceſius, Erigito tibi ſcalam, & in cœlum ſolus aſcendito; Set up a Ladder for your ſelf, and climb up to Heaven alone; for loyal Minds will not ſute themſelves with ſuch bad Company. The worſt I wiſh to your Perſon ſtanding now to be convicted at the Bar, is Remorſe and Repentance for the ſafeguard of your Soul; and for the reſt, Fiat juſtitia, currat lex, & vincat veritas.

Hereunto Garnet ſaid, That he had done more than he could excuſe, and he had dealt plainly with them, but he was bound to keep the Secrets of Confeſſion, and to diſcloſe nothing that he heard in Sacramental Confeſſion.

Whereupon the Earl of Nottingham asked him, if one confeſſed this day to him, that to-morrow Morning he meant to kill the King with a Dagger; if he muſt conceal it?

Whereunto Garnet anſwered, that he muſt conceal it.

Then the Earl of Salisbury deſired Liberty of him to ask him ſome queſtions of the nature of Confeſſions.

Garnet ſaid, His Lordſhip might, and he would anſwer him as well as he could.

Why then (ſaid he) muſt there not be Confeſſion and Contrition before Abſolution?

Yes (ſaid Garnet.)

Then he demanded, whether Greenwell were abſolved by him, or no?

Garnet ſaid, He was.

The Earl then asked him, What Greenwell had done, to ſhew that he was ſorry for it, and whether did he promiſe to deſiſt?

Garnet anſwered, that Greenwell ſaid, He would do his beſt.

To that the Earl replied, that it could not be ſo; for as ſoon as Catesby and Piercy were in Arms, Greenwell came to them from Garnet, and ſo went from them to Hall at Mr. Abington's Houſe, inviting them moſt earneſtly to come and aſſiſt thoſe Gentlemen in that Action. Hereby, ſaith he, it appears, that either Greenwell told you out of Confeſſion, and then there needs no Secrecy; or if it were in Confeſſion, he profeſſed no Penitency, and therefore you could not abſolve him. To which the Earl added, That this one Circumſtance muſt ſtill be remembred, and cannot be cleared; That when Greenwell told you what Catesby meant in particular, and you then called to mind alſo what Catesby had ſpoken to you in the general before, if you had not been ſo deſirous to have the Plot take effect, you might have diſcloſed it out of your general knowledge from Catesby: but when Catesby offered to deliver you the particulars himſelf, as he had done to Greenwell, you refuſed to hear him, leſt your Tongue ſhould have betrayed your Heart.

To this Garnet weakly replied, That he did what he could to diſſuade it, and went into Warwickſhire with a purpoſe to diſſuade Mr. Catesby, when he ſhould have come down. And for Mr. Greenwell's going to Father Hall, to perſuade him to join, Garnet ſaid he did very ill in ſo doing.

To that the Earl of Salisbury replied, That his firſt Anſwer was moſt abſurd, ſeeing he knew Catesby would not come down till the ſixth of November, which was the Day after the Blow ſhould have been given, and Garnet went in the Country ten days before. And for the ſecond, he ſaid, That he was only glad, that the World might now ſee, that Jeſuits were condemned by Jeſuits; and Treaſon and Traytors laid naked by the Traytors themſelves: yea, Jeſuits by that Jeſuit, that governs all Jeſuits here, and without whom no Jeſuit in England can do any thing.

Garnet (as it ſhould ſeem) being here mightily touched with Remorſe of his Offence, prayed God and and the King, that other Catholicks might not fare the worſe for his ſake.

Then the Earl of Salisbury ſaid, Mr. Garnet, is it not a lamentable thing, that if the Pope, or Claudius Aquaviva, or your ſelf, command poor Catholicks any thing, that they muſt obey you, tho it be to endanger both Body and Soul? And if you maintain ſuch Doctrine amongſt you, how can the King be ſafe? Is it not time therefore, the King and the State ſhould look to you, that ſpend your time thus in his Kingdom?

Garnet ſaid very paſſionately, My Lord, I would to God I had never known of the Powder-Treaſon.

Hereupon the Lord Chief Juſtice of England ſaid, Garnet, you are Superiour of the Jeſuits; and if you forbid, muſt not the reſt obey? Was not Greenwel with you half an hour at Sir Everard Digby's Houſe, when you heard of the Diſcovery of your Treaſon? And did you not there confer and debate the Matter together? Did you not ſend him to Hall, to Mr. Abington's Houſe, to ſtir him up to go to the Rebels, and encourage them? yet you ſeek to colour all this; but that's but a mere ſhift in you. And notwithſtanding all this, you ſaid, No Man living, but one, did know that you were privy to it: then belike ſome that are dead did know it. Catesby was never from you (as the Gentlewoman that kept your Houſe with you confeſſed) and by many apparent Proofs, and evident Preſumptions, you were in every particular of this Action, and directed and commanded the Actors; nay, I think verily you were the chief that moved it.

Garnet ſaid, No, my Lord, I did not.

Then it was exceedingly well urged by my Lord Chief Juſtice, how he writ his Letters for Winter, Wright, Fawkes, Baynham, and Catesby, principal Actors in this matchleſs Treaſon. Beſides, his Lordſhip told him of his keeping the two Bulls to prejudice the King, and to do other miſchief in the Realm; which when he ſaw the King peaceably to come in, then being out of hope to do any good, he burnt them.

Here Mr. Attorney cauſed to be read the Confeſſion of Hall, alias Oldcorne, the Jeſuit, under his own hand (which he ſaid was Omni exceptione majus) againſt him; wherein he confeſſed, that Humphrey Littleton told him, that Catesby and others were ſore hurt with Powder, and ſaid that he was exceeding ſorry that things took no better effect; whereat Hall wiſhed him not to be diſcouraged, nor to meaſure the Cauſe by the Event: For tho the eleven Tribes of Iſrael went twice by the ſpecial Commandment of God againſt the Tribe of Benjamin, yet they both times receiv'd the Overthrow. So Lewis the French King, in his Voyage into the Holy Land againſt the Infidels, was overthrown, and his whole Army diſcomfited, tho his Cauſe were good. And ſo likewiſe the Chriſtians, when they defended Rhodes againſt the Turks, loſt the City, and the Turks had the upper hand. And this he confeſſed, and apply'd to the Fact of Catesby and others for the Powder-Treaſon; and ſaid, It would have been commendable when it had been done, tho not before.

After this, Mr. Attorney open'd, how Francis Treſham, a delinquent Romaniſt, even in articulo mortis (a fearful thing) took it upon his Salvation, That he had not ſeen Garnet in ſixteen years before, when Garnet himſelf had confeſſed he had ſeen him often within that time; and likewiſe, that Garnet knew not of the Spaniſh Invaſion, which Garnet himſelf confeſſed alſo, and which two things Treſham himſelf had formerly confeſſed to the Lords: yet for a Recantation of theſe two things upon his Death-bed, he commanded Vavaſor, his Man, whom I think (ſaid Mr. Attorney) deeply guilty in this Treaſon, to write a Letter to the Earl of Salisbury. And to ſhew this his deſperate Recantation, Mr. Treſham's Letter was offer'd to be read.

But before the reading thereof, my Lord of Saliſbury ſaid, Becauſe there was Matter incident to him, and to that which ſhould be read, he thought fit to ſay ſomething. To which purpoſe he ſaid his Deſire was, truly to lay open what cauſe there was for any faith to be given to theſe Mens Proteſtations; when they, to colour their own Impieties, and to ſlander the King's Juſtice, would go about to excuſe all Jeſuits, how foul ſoever, out of an Opinion that it is meritorious ſo to do, at ſuch time as they had no hope of themſelves. Such is it to be doubted, that Sir Everard Digby's Proteſtations might be at the Bar, who ſought to clear all Jeſuits of thoſe Practices which they themſelves have now confeſſed ex ore proprio. That ſuch was alſo Treſham's Labour, who being viſited with Sickneſs, and his Wife in charity ſuffered to come to him, this Letter was hatch'd by them, and ſign'd by himſelf ſome few hours before his death, wherein he taketh that upon his Salvation, which ſhall now by Garnet be diſprov'd.

Then the Letter was read, being to this effect: That whereas ſince the King's time he had had his pardon, and that to ſatisfy the Lords who heretofore examined him, he had accuſed Garnet; that now, he being weak, deſired that his former Examinations might be called in, becauſe they were not true; and ſet down upon his Salvation, that he had not ſeen Garnet in ſixteen years before.

Then my Lord of Salisbury ſhewed and ſaid, it was a lamentable thing; for within three hours after he had done this, he died: and asked Garnet what Interpretation he made of this teſtamental Proteſtation?

Garnet anſwer'd, It may be, my Lord, he meant to equivocate. Here was the Examination and Confeſſion of Mrs. Anne Fawkes offer'd to be read alſo to confirm Treſham's Perjury, who confeſſed that ſhe had ſeen Mr. Treſham with Garnet at her Houſe three or four times ſince the King's coming in, and divers times before, and that he had dined with him; and that Garnet always gave him good counſel, and would ſay ſometimes to him, and others, Good Gentlemen, be quiet; for we muſt obtain that which you deſire by Prayer. She confeſſed alſo, that they were at Erith together the laſt Summer.

After all this, Garnet being demanded if theſe Examinations were true, he affirmed they were. And then were his own Examinations likewiſe read to the ſame effect; wherein he both confeſſed the ſeeing of Mr. Treſham, and his ſending into Spain about an Invaſion.

Here my Lord of Salisbury concluded, That that which was ſaid of Mr. Treſham, and others, was not done againſt Charity to the Dead, but upon inevitable neceſſity, to avoid all their ſlanderous Reports and Practices; for he ſaid that even now there was current throughout the Town, a Report of a Retractation under Bates's hand, of his Accuſation of Greenwel, which are ſtrange and grievous Practices to think upon. But this Day ſhall witneſs to the World, that all is falſe, and your ſelf condemned not by any but your ſelf, your own Con-

Confeſſions and Actions. Alas! Mr. Garnet, why ſhould we be troubled all this day with you poor Man, were it not to make the Cauſe appear as it deſerveth? wherein God ſend you may be ſuch an Example, as you may be the laſt Actor in this kind.

Hereupon my Lord Admiral ſaid to Garnet, that he had done more good this day in that Pulpit which he ſtood in (for it was made like unto a Pulpit wherein he ſtood) than he had done all the days of his Life-time in any other Pulpit.

Then was another Examination of Mrs. Anne Fawkes read, wherein ſhe confeſſed that Mr. Garnet and ſhe were not long ſince with Mr. Treſham, at his Houſe in Northamptonſhire, and ſtayed there.

After this, my Lord of Salisbury ſaid, Mr. Garnet, if you have not yet done, I would have you to underſtand, that the King hath commanded, that whatſoever made for you, or againſt you, all ſhould be read, and ſo it is; and we take of you what you will. This Gentlewoman that ſeems to ſpeak for you in her Confeſſions, I think would ſacrifice her ſelf for you to do you good, and you likewiſe for her: Therefore, good Mr. Garnet, whatſoever you have to ſay, ſay on in God's Name, and you ſhall be heard.

Then Garnet deſired the Jury, that they would allow of, and believe thoſe things he had denied and affirmed; and not to give credit unto thoſe things whereof there was no direct proof againſt him, nor to condemn him by Circumſtances or Preſumptions.

The Earl of Salisbury demanded of him, ſaying, Mr. Garnet, is this all you have to ſay? if it be not, take your time, no Man ſhall interrupt you.

To whom Garnet anſwer'd, Yea, my Lord.

Mr. Attorney humbly deſired all the Lords Commiſſioners, that if he had forgotten to ſpeak of any thing material, that their Lordſhips would be pleaſed to put him in mind of it; who was aſſured by my Lord of Salisbury, that he had done very well, painfully, and learnedly.

Then Mr. Attorney deſired the Jury might go together, who upon his Motion going together forth of the Court, within leſs than a quarter of an hour return'd, and found Henry Garnet guilty.

Whereupon Mr. Serjeant Crooke pray'd Judgment.

Then Mr. Waterhouſe, the Clerk of the Crown, demanding what he could ſay for himſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be given againſt him?

Garnet made anſwer, that he could ſay nothing, but referred himſelf to the Mercy of the King, and God Almighty.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice making a pithy Preamble of all the apparent Proofs and Preſumptions of his Guiltineſs, gave Judgment, that he ſhould be drawn, hanged, and quarter'd.

And my Lord of Salisbury demanded, if Garnet would ſay any thing elſe?

Garnet anſwer'd, no my Lord; but I humbly deſire your Lordſhips all to commend my Life to the King's Majeſty: ſaying, That at his pleaſure he was ready either to die or live, and do him ſervice.

And ſo the Court aroſe.

The Proceedings between the Lady FRANCES HOWARD and ROBERT Earl of Eſſex, before the King's Delegates, George Archbiſhop of Canterbury, John Biſhop of London, Lancelot Biſhop of Ely, Richard Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry, Dr. Cæſar, Thomas Parrey, Dr. Donne, John Bennet, Francis James, and Thomas Edwards; authoriz'd under the King's Broad-Seal. Anno 1613. 11 Jac. I.

The Allegations.

I. THAT ſhe, at the time of the Marriage, was thirteen years old, and is at this time twenty two or twenty three.

II. That ſhe and Robert Earl of Eſſex were marry'd by publick Rites and Ceremonies of the Church in January 1603.

III. That the aforeſaid Robert, at the time of the pretended Marriage, was about fourteen, and is about twenty two or twenty three at this time; and ever ſince, and at this preſent, is a Man (as far forth as a Man may judge) and hath been in good Health, and perfect Eſtate of Body, not any way hinder'd by any Ague or Sickneſs, but that he might have carnal Copulation with a Woman.

IV. That ſince the pretended Marriage, at leaſt by the ſpace of whole and continuate three years after the ſaid Robert had fully attained the Age of eighteen Years, as Time and Place did ſerve, after the faſhion of other married Folks, the ſaid Frances Howard in hope of lawful Iſſue, and deſirous to be made a Mother, liv'd together with the ſaid Robert, at bed and board, and lay both naked and alone in the ſame Bed, as married Folks uſe: And deſirous to be made a Mother, from time to time, again and again, yielded her ſelf to his power, and as much as lay in her, offer'd her ſelf and her Body to be known; and earneſtly deſired Conjunction and Copulation.

V. And alſo the ſaid Earl, in the ſame time very often, again and again, did try to have Copulation, as with his lawful Wife, which ſhe refus'd not, but uſed the beſt means ſhe could: notwithſtanding all this, this, the ſaid Earl could never carnally know her, nor have that Copulation in any ſort which the married Bed alloweth.

VI. Yet before the ſaid pretended Marriage, and ſince, the ſaid Earl hath had, and hath Power and Ability of Body to deal with other Women, and to know them carnally, and ſometimes hath felt the Motion and Pricks of the Fleſh carnally, and tending to carnal Copulation, as he ſaith and believeth; and peradventure, by a perpetual and natural Impediment hath been hindred all the former time, and is at this preſent, that he can have no Copulation with the ſaid Lady Frances.

VII. Furthermore, the ſaid Lady Frances hath been, and is fit and able to have Copulation with a Man, and ſuch a one as may be carnally known; neither hath in this regard any Impediment.

VIII. Moreover, the ſaid Lady Frances remaineth, and is at this preſent, a Virgin. Alſo at the time of the pretended Marriage, the ſaid Lady Frances was unacquainted with the Earl's want of Ability and Impediment, formerly mention'd.

IX. And furthermore the ſaid Earl, long before this Suit commenced, hath very often, and at ſundry times confeſſed in good earneſt, before Witneſſes of good Credit, and his Friends and Kinſfolks, that although he did his beſt endeavour, yet he never could, nor at this time can, have Copulation with the ſaid Lady Frances, no not once.

X. And laſtly, in regard of womaniſh Modeſty, the Lady Frances hath conceal'd all the former Matters, and had a purpoſe ever to conceal them, if ſhe had not been forced through falſe Rumours of Diſobedience to the ſaid Earl to reveal them.

She requireth, ſince this pretended Matrimony is but a Fact, and not in Right, it may be pronounced, declared, and adjudged as none, and of none effect; and ſhe may be quit and free from all Knots and Bonds of the ſame, by your Sentence and Authority.

The Earl of Eſſex replieth, 5th July, 1614.

The firſt and ſecond he anſwereth affirmatively.

To the third, he thinketh that at the time of his Marriage, he was full fourteen Years, and is now twenty two and upwards, neither ſince hath had, or hath any Sickneſs or Impediment to hinder him, but that he might have had Copulation with a Woman, ſaving in the time of his Sickneſs of the Small-Pox, for two or three Years after his Marriage, which continued for a Month or ſix Weeks, and at another time, when he had a few Fits of an Ague.

To the fourth, he affirmeth, that for one Year he divers times attempted; that the two other Years, when he was willing, ſhe ſhewed herſelf ſometimes willing, but other times refuſed, and he lay in Bed moſt commonly with her, but felt no Motions or Provocations, and therefore attempted the firſt Year.

To the fifth, he anſwereth, that he never carnally knew her, but found not any defect in himſelf, yet was not able to penetrate in her Womb, nor enjoy her.

To the ſixth, he believeth, that before and after the Marriage, he hath found an Ability of Body to know any other Woman, and hath oftentimes felt Motions and Provocations of the Fleſh, tending to carnal Copulation; but for perpetual and natural Impediments, he knoweth not what the Words mean; but that he hath lain by the Lady Frances two or three Years laſt paſt, and had no Motion to know her, and he believes never ſhall.

To the ſeventh, he believeth not that the ſaid Lady Frances is a Woman able and fit for carnal Copulation, becauſe he hath not found it.

To the eighth and ninth, he believeth them both to be true, and thinketh that once before ſome Witneſſes of Credit, he did ſpeak to this purpoſe, That he oftentimes had endeavoured carnally to know her, but that he did not, nor could not.

Doubts conceived out of the Fact and Proceſs in the Suit between the Lady Frances Howard, and the Earl of Eſſex.

1. Whether the Libel be defective, eſpecially in the fourth Article, where it is ſaid, that Dominus Comes Eſſex pluribus & iteratis vicibus (which may be verified and ſatisfied in two or three times) dictam dominam Franciſcam ejus uxorem prætenſam cognoſcere tentavit, &c.

2. Whether the Anſwer of my Lord of Eſſex to the ſaid fourth Article in that behalf, being but thus, That he did divers times attempt, &c. be full, certain and ſufficient.

3. Whether in this caſe my Lord of Eſſex his Oath (cum 7 manu propinquorum) be not by Law requiſite, as well as my Lady's.

4. Whether my Lord of Eſſex would be inſpected by Phyſicians, to certify (ſo far as they can by Art) the true Cauſe and Nature of the Impediment.

5. Whether by triennial Cohabitation, there having been no carnal Copulation between them (Impedimentum maleficii being accidental) præſumatur præceſſiſſe vel potius ſubſecutum fuiſſe matrimonium contractum & ſolemnizatum.

6. Whether they ought poſt præceptum Judicis (notwithſtanding their triennial Cohabitation before the Suit begun) to cohabit together, ſaltem per aliquod temporis ſpatium arbitrio Judicis moderandum, for further Tryal, &c.

His G. Arguments.

The Lord Archbiſhop's Speech to his Majeſty.

Inaſmuch as we firmly believe, that the Scripture doth directly, or by conſequence, contain in it ſufficient matter to decide all Controverſies, eſpecially in things appertaining to the Church, as that Marriage among Chriſtians can be no leſs accounted than a ſacred Thing, as being inſtituted by God himſelf in Paradiſe, honoured by the preſence of our Saviour himſelf, declared by St. Paul to be a Sign of the ſpiritual Conjunctions between Chriſt and the Church:

I would be glad to know, and by what Text of Scripture, either by the Old or New Teſtament, a Man may have a Warrant to make a Nullity of a Marriage ſolemnly celebrated, Propter maleficium verſus hanc.

Which I do the rather ask, becauſe I find warrant expreſly in the Scriptures to make a Nullity of a Marriage propter frigiditatem, by the Words of our Saviour, Mat. 19. 12. For there be ſome chaſte, or Eunuchs, which are ſo born of their Mothers Belly, and there be ſome which are made chaſte of Men, and there be ſome which have made themſelves chaſte for the Kingdom of Heaven.

I would alſo know gladly what antient Father amongſt the Greeks or Latins by occaſion of Interpretation of Scripture, or any Diſputation, hath mentioned maleficium verſus hanc.

The

The like I demand touching antient Councils, either General or Provincial, and concerning Stories Eccleſiaſtical, whether any ſuch matter be to be found in them.

If for ought that appeareth never mention was made of this, till Hircanus Rhemiſis Epiſcopus, who lived four hundred Years after Chriſt; it may well be conceived that this was a Concomitant of Darkneſs or Popiſh Superſtition, which about that time grew to ſo great an height (God permitting them) that puniſhment might fall upon the Children of Unbelief.

But ſince the Light of the Goſpel is now in ſo great a meaſure broken forth again, why ſhould not I hope that thoſe, who have imbraced the Goſpel, ſhould be free from this Maleficium; eſpecially ſince amongſt a Million of Men in our Age, there is but one found in all our Country, who is clearly and evidently known to be troubled with the ſame? and if there ſhould be any which ſhould ſeem to be moleſted, we are taught to uſe two Remedies, the one temporal Phyſick, the other eternal.

For the firſt, our Saviour ſaid, hoc genus Dæmoniorum non ejicitur, niſi per orationem & jejunium: and St. Peter ſpeaking of the Devil, Cui reſiſtite firme in fide; and the Canoniſts themſelves preſcribe Alms, Faſting and Prayer to be uſed in this Caſe; but that they join Supplication and their Exorciſms thereunto, and for corporeal Medicine to be applied therewith as againſt a Diſeaſe: ſo is the Judgment of our late Divines, whether they ſpeak of Maleficium or not.

Now admit the Earl of Eſſex might be imagined to be troubled with maleficium verſus hanc; I demand what Alms hath been given, what Faſting hath been uſed, and what Prayers have been poured forth to appeaſe the Wrath of God towards him or his Wife; or what Phyſick hath been taken, or Medicine hath been applied for three Years together? Not one of theſe things: but the firſt hearing muſt be to pronounce a Nullity in the Marriage, of which Declaration we know the beginning, but no mortal Man's Wit can foreſee the end, either in his Perſon, or in the Example.

Then the Archbiſhop for Confirmation of his Opinion ſhewed the Teſtimony of Melanchthon, Pezelius, Hemingius, Polanus, Arcularius, Beza, Zanchius.

Judicium Philippi Melanchthonis de divortiis ex impotentia.

PErſonæ quæ non ſunt idoneæ ad commixtionem conjugalem nequaqam fiunt conjuges, ſed cum explorata eſt frigiditas, Judex pronunciet illas perſonas liberas eſſe. Nec fit tunc divortium, quia non erat conjugium, juxta dictum, Mat. 19. ſed fit declaratio, ut alii ſciant, illam ſocietatem non eſſe conjugium, & perſonæ quæ habet naturæ vires integras, concedi aliam faltciorem copulationem legitimam. Sed ad explorandam frigiditatem Jura tempus conſtituunt, ſi res dubia eſt, ne ante triennium fiat ſejunctio. Eodem modo pronunciant de iis in quibus natura ita læſa eſt faſcino aut veneficio, ut ope medica ſanari non poſſit, ſi toto triennio fruſtra tentata eſt medicatio.

Tanta autem eſt virtus aliquarum mulierum, ut occultent imbecillitatem virorum, ſicuti viri doctiſſimi Simonis Grynei ſoror narravit, ſe, mortua prima conjuge, duxiſſe viduam virginem, quæ undecem annos nupta fuerit viro frigido, nec unquam ulli ante mortem viri hanc rem patefecit. Hæc Melanchthon in locis: Loco de conjugio, quæ Chriſtopherus Pezelius ſuis in Melachthonis examen explicationibus inſeruit, & eis adjecit hanc annotationem. Impotentia alia naturalis, alia accidentalis eſt. Naturalis, cum quis natura non eſt idoneus ad commixtionem conjugalem. Accidentalis, cum quis eſt caſtratus, aut veneficio corruptus. Rurſus quæ ex veneficio accedit impotentia, aut curari poteſt medicamentis, aut eſt perpetua. Ex his diſtinctionibus ſumiturexplicatio quæſtionis, an & quomodo impotentia ſit cauſa divortii. Nam inter impotentes, non poteſt conſtare conjugium, quia deeſt cauſa ſufficiens & finalis. Primum, ni perſona illa quæ ſana eſt, decepta fuit, & ignorans duxit impotentem, non igitur potuit eſſe conſenſus, qui eſt cauſa efficiens Matrimonii. Secundo, duplex eſt finis conjugii, unus eſt generatio ſobolis, ſicut dicitur, Creſcite & multiplicamini: Alter finis eſt Vitatio confuſionis libidinum, juxta dictum: Vitandæ fornicationis cauſa unuſquiſq; habeat uxorem. Hæc Pezelius 2 parte explicat. in Examen Melanchthon.

In eadem Cauſa Hemingii Judicium.

INhabilitas corporum ad uſum matrimonii divortii cauſa eſt, & nonnunquam faſcino & veneficio adeo inhabiles redduntur viri, ut nunquam ſanari poſſint. Sed plura ſunt judicii perpendenda, antequam divortii ſententiam ferat. Primum, an impotentia præceſſerit Nuptias. Secundum, an ſit ſubſecuta Nuptias. Tertium, an ſit curabilis. Quartum, an ejus rei mulier conſcia fuerit ante Nuptias. Si præceſſerit Nuptias, poteſt liberari perſona ſana divortium petens, non enim fuit verum conjugium, ſiquidem non legitime conſentiunt, cum unus fallit, alter errat, fallit impotens, errat potens. Cum ergo Deus nec fallaciam nec errorem probat, non eſt dicendus eos conjunxiſſe. Proinde Judex, ſi intellexerit ex probationibus incurabile eſſe vitium, mox declarabit ſuo teſtimonio, non fuiſſe Matrimonium; verum ſi ſpes ſit curationis, triennium ſtatuatur, in quo patienter expectetur curatio; quæ ſi fruſtra tentata fuerit, Judex pronunciabit Conjugium nullum fuiſſe.

Si ſubſecutum eſt vitium poſt nuptias & complexum maritalem conjugum, nullo pacto permittendum eſt divortium: fortuna enim afflicta, ſi abſit culpa, patienter in conjugio ferenda eſt. Si alter fuerit conſcius infirmitatis alterius ante nuptias, cogantur ſimul habitare, & alia officia ſibi mutuo præſtare: Nam perſona conſcia vitii alterius abſque dubio fraudem meditata eſt, quæ fraus non debet illi prodeſſe, ſi poſtea divortium petat. Hæc Hemingius libello de Conjugio, Repudio, & Divortio.

Polani profeſſoris Theo. nuper in Academia Baſilienſi Judicium.

COnjugium inire poſſum, qui non ſunt natura vel arte Spadonis, aut quibus natura non eſt læſa faſcino aut veneficio. Tales enim perſonæ nequaquam fiunt conjuges. Ideo etiam nuptiis celebratis, cum trienni ſpatio explorata eſt ſpadonis frigiditas, aut toto triennio tentata eſt naturæ læſæ medicatio, Judex pronunciare poteſt illas perſonas liberas eſſe. Polanus lib. 10. Syntag. cap. 53.

* Arcularii nuper profeſſoris Theol. in Academia Marpurgenſi Judicium.

* Sive Treularii.

INter perſonas quæ propter frigiditatem aliudve naturæ vitium ad uſum conjugii ſunt ineptæ, cum non ſit conjugium, teſte Chriſto, Mat. 19. divortium hic locum habere poterit. Si quam igitur perſonam talem alteri jungi contingat, Judex, explorata frigiditate aut naturæ vitio, utramque perſonam liberam pronunciabit. Porro ad explorandam frigiditatem Jura triennii tempus præſcribunt, præſertim ſi res dubia ſit. Idem judicium eſt de eis quorum natura vel faſcino vel veneficio ita ſit læſa, ut ad conjugii uſum reddantur inepti; & omnem medicorum operam intra triennium inanem fuerint experti. Hæc Arcularius in arcu fœderis, cap. 28.

Theodori Bezæ Judicium.

SPonſalia cum perſonis paralyſi immedicabili, quæ corpus prorſus enervavit, frigiditate inſanabili, genitalium partium privatione, vel adeo inſigni læſione, ut perpetua coitus impotentia neceſſario conſequetur, affectis, contracta prorſus inutilia ſunt, cum ad matrimonium a Deo vocati videri non poſſint, qui fidem in ſponſalibus datam præſtare, naturali objecto vitio nequeunt. Quod ſi ſponſalibus factis, conjugio tamen nondum reipſa conſummato, ejuſmodi malum ſupervenerit, ſentio ejuſmodi ſponſalia, veluti Deo ipſo jubente, dirimenda; ut, quid objecto perpetuo impedimento, palam demonſtret, ſibi iſtiuſmodi ſponſalia non placere. Beza lib. de Divort. & Repud. pag. 91. Genev. 1591. impreſſ.

Atque hanc ſuam doctrinam Beza multis ex ſacræ ſcripturæ teſtimoniis probat: ſed tantum pag. 94. ei duas cautiones adjecit. Primam, ſi frigidus poſtea convaluit, repetere priorem uxorem, errore, viz. Separatam oportet, etiamſi alteri poſtea eſſet conjuncta: ſecundam cautionem, recte omnino in iſtiuſmodi controverſiis conſtitutum eſt: (ne quod videlicet fieret, quod poſtea mutari ſine magno offendiculo non poſſet) ut triennium ſaltem ab ipſo copulationis, i. e. ductæ uxoris die expectaretur, priuſquam iſti morbi inſanabiles eſſe, & ſponſalia conjugiave dirimenda pronunciarentur. Hoc autem omnino de iis vitiis accipendum eſt quæ per ſe non patent. Nam alioqui, ut in exectione, vel ſiquis naturæ vitio, teſtibus aut genitali membro careat, quorſum ullum temporis intervallum?

Zanchii Judicium.

QUemadmodum Beza, ſic nec Canchius impotentiam ex veneficio attigit, ſed tantum docet, quoſdam eſſe caſus, quibus matrimonia in ipſa Eccleſia benedicta nulla ſint, & ſubinde hæc exempla ſubjungit. Si cum eo contrahitur, qui vir non erat, ſed ſpado, aut propter perpetuum ei inſanabilem morbum, officium conjugis præſtare nullo modo poteſt. Hæc Zanchius lib. 4. de op. Dei, cap. 3. ſed illam nec ſcripturæ teſtimoniis nec rationibus confirmat.

The KING's Anſwer.

TO the Firſt Article that the Scripture doth directly or by conſequence contain ſufficient matter to decide all Controverſies, eſpecially in this appertaining to the Church: This in my Opinion is prepoſterous, and one of the Puritans Arguments, without a better Diſtinction or Explanation.

For the Orthodox Propoſition is, That the Scripture doth directly, or by conſequence, contain in it ſufficient Matter to decide all Controverſies in Points of Faith and Salvation, of which ſort a Nullity of Marriage cannot be accounted for one; and therefore your Conſequence upon the former Propoſition muſt fail.

For further ſatisfaction of your following Queſtion (I ſay) your ſecond Queſtion doth anſwer it, if there be warrant in Scripture for pronouncing a Nullity propter frigiditatem, then all the means which may make him frigidus verſus hanc, muſt be comprehended therein; for why doth our Church juſtly condemn the Marriage of a Man with his Siſter's Daughters, or the Marriage of two Siſters, but ut paritate rationis, for none of them are in terminis prohibited by the Scripture, only the Concluſion is gathered a paritate rationis. For if it be not lawful to marry the Father's Wife, becauſe thereby you diſcover your Father's Shame; nor his Siſter, becauſe ſhe is his Kinſwoman; nor your own Siſter, becauſe thereby you diſcover your Father's and your Mother's Shame: it can no more be lawful to marry your Siſter's Daughter, for thereby alſo you diſcover your own Shame; as alſo the ſame Reaſon ſerves for aſcending or deſcending in Points of Conſanguinity, quid par eſt ratio.

The like is in this caſe; for although Chriſt ſpake only of three ſorts of Eunuchs, yet Ratio eſt quia non poteſt eſſe Copulatio inter Eunuchum & Mulierem; and therefore St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. telleth us clearly, that it is not Conjugium ſine Copulatione. I conclude, therefore, a paritate rationis, that Chriſt did comprehend under theſe three ſorts all Inability which doth perpetually hinder Copulationem verſus hanc, whether it be natural or accidental; for what difference is there between cutting off the Hand, and being made impotent thereof? Amputatio & Mutilatio membri, is all one in the Civil Law; and that is a like defrauding of the Woman, when either he who is to be her Husband is gelded, or when the uſe of that Member towards her is by any unlawful means taken from him. Neither is it any way needful to crave the particular Warrant of Scripture for a Nullity, no more than of Warrant in this place for any Nullity at all; for Chriſt doth not directly ſay, that a Marriage ſo married ſhall be nullified, neither doth he teach us what form or proceſs ſhall be uſed in that, neither makes he mention of the triennial Probation, no more than he forbiddeth Marriage within the fourth Degree, without leave obtained of the Biſhop of the Dioceſs. It is then ſufficient to all moderate Chriſtians to be taught out of the Word of God, that Marriage is nulla ſine Copulatione; and theſe words, quos Deus conjunxit, are never found in Scripture, where & erunt eis doth not proceed, viz. they two ſhall be one Fleſh.

But whether the Impediment be univerſal, or verſus hanc only; or whether the Fault thereof hath been born with him, or done to him by Violence, or fallen unto him by Diſeaſe, or Diſproportion, or Inaptitude betwixt the Parties, or unnatural Practices, that is ever par ratio, he is Eunuchus verſus hanc & omnes alias, ſeeming to him only was ſhe married.

Then Paritate rationis, ſuch Nullities are grounded upon the aforeſaid warrant of Scripture, neither had Chriſt any occaſion to ſpeak of the Jews Marriage concerning Maleficium verſus hanc: for though it be appa rent that God made King Abimelech and his Servants unable to abuſe Sarah, Abraham's Wife, and ſo was he made by God himſelf Eunuchus verſus hanc, and that be not improbable that the Devil being God's Ape, ſhould imitate God's Works, by his filthy Witchcraft, by making ſuch as God will permit him, unable verſus hanc; howbeit, it is very probable that it was long after that time the Devil put that trick upon the Earth.

As for the third and fourth Queſtions, what mention the Fathers and Councils do make of Maleficium verſus hanc, I anſwer, that it may be (if they were well ſearched) that either ſomething to this purpoſe in them, or at the leaſt Aliquid analogum, with a paritate rationis, or by conſequence, may ſerve to decide the Queſtion.

But leaving this to Search, my main Anſwer is, That we muſt diſtinguiſh oft-times: for in all the firſt Ages, as long as Perſecution lay heavy upon the Church, and before the Empire became Chriſtian, the Church did not meddle with any thing, which drew a Conſequence after it of Poſſeſſions, or Inheritance, as Marriage doth; nay, even divers hundred Years after the Converſion of the Emperors, the Judgment and Deciſion of all ſuch Queſtions did ſtill remain in foro Civili, till the Popedom began to wax great, and aſſume, or rather uſurp to her ſelf a ſupreme and independent Judicatory in all Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: and therefore the Fathers and Councils had no occaſion to make mention of that which was not de præſori at that time.

And beſides, that is an evil Argument to ſay ſuch a thing is not lawful, becauſe the Fathers and Councils made no mention of it: for you know much better than I, divers and many Points betwixt the Papiſts and us are never mentioned by the Fathers, becauſe they could never have dreamed that ſuch Queſtions would ariſe; and therefore are the Fathers exact only in ſuch Queſtions as were agitated upon the State at that time, as De Trinitate, de duabus in Chriſto Naturis, and ſuch like: and therefore 'tis ſufficient that there can be nothing found which may juſtly be underſtood to contradict this Opinion.

And it is very probable (as I ſaid before) that this trick of Maleficium had not then been put in practice in the World, and therefore not known or mentioned by them; for why may not the Devil as well find out new tricks of Witchcraft (when God will permit him) as he did daily new Sects of Hereſies? for his Malice can never end until the end of times.

To the fifth Argument, my former Anſwer doth alſo ſerve; for till the 400th Year after Chriſt, it may be that deviliſh trick came never to be diſcovered. You know the old Proverb, ex malis moribus bonæ leges: and it is not unlikely that the time of Darkneſs gave the Devil occaſion to deviſe ſuch new Tricks (look my Dæmonology) and yet was that Law for which you cite Hircanus, by Charles the Great, who in many great Points (as you know) had ſo great light, as I do ſcarce term this time a time of Blindneſs; but howſoever the Darkneſs was in points of Superſtition, I will ſtill maintain (as I have ever done) that for matters of Order and Policy, all the World ſhall never be able to find out any ſo good and ſo old an Order of Argument to be put in the place of it: in ſign whereof there is no well governed Commonwealth in the Chriſtian World, wherein the Common-Law is not received to judge in Queſtions of that nature; and it is certain, that this Queſtion now in hand, is only a Queſtion of Order and Policy: for the ground of this Queſtion, that the eſſential point of Matrimony cannot be accompliſhed ſine copula, is warranted by expreſs Scripture, and confeſſed by your ſelf.

To your ſixth Argument (or rather Hope) I fear that Hope ſhall prove contrary to Faith; for as ſure as God is, there be Devils, and ſome Devils muſt have ſome Power, and their Power is in this World, neither are the Elect exempted from this Power; Job was not, Paul was not, Chriſt ſaid to all his Diſciples, Gribaverit vos Sathanas; and if the Devil hath any Power, it is over the Fleſh, rather over the filthieſt and moſt ſinful part thereof, whereunto original Sin is ſoldred: as God, before and under the Law, to ſhew officialem of purging Man's original Sin, ordained the Præputium of the Foreskin, and to exempt this of our Profeſſion from the Power of Witchcraft, is a Paradox never yet maintained by any learned or wiſe Man.

That the Devil's Power is not ſo univerſal againſt us, that I freely confeſs; but that it is utterly reſtrained quoad nos, how was then a Miniſter of Geneva bewitched to death, and were the Witches daily puniſhed by our Law; if they can harm none but the Papiſts, we are too charitable for avenging of them only.

Satan is permitted to puniſh Man, as well for his breach of the Second as of the firſt Table, and thereof are we no leſs guilty than the Papiſts are; and if the Power of Witchcraft may reach to our Life, much more to a Member, not ſo governed by the Fancy, wherein the Devil hath his principal Operation; and he may ſo eſtrange the Huſband's Affection towards the Wife, as he cannot be able to perform that Duty to her; for that is a common thing in many Mens Natures, that they cannot do that thing but where they love, nor fight but where they are angry. God keep us therefore from putting the Tryal of our Profeſſion upon Miracles; let the Miracle-mongers live by their own Trade.

To the ſeventh Argument touching Remedies, what do you know, whether both Parties, or either of them hath uſed theſe means of Remedy or not? And that ſpecial Remedy ſhould be uſed publickly, for there I can ſee no Neceſſity, for Non intereſt Reipub. nec Eccleſ. and private Perſons are commanded to their Faſtings and Alms, ſecretly and in private; no ſuch Cure alſo is likely to ſucceed well, except the Parties own Hearts and Deſires be ſet thereupon.

And as for your Concluſion upon your Incommodum, whether upon his Perſon or the Example, I can ſee none in either, ſo as to the Couple, between them Marriage was never accompliſhed truly; they will peradventure both of them by the Declaration of the Nullity be capable to accompliſh Marriage with others, which they could never do between themſelves; wherein they may have the Satisfaction of their Hearts, and enjoy the Bleſſing of Procreation of Children.

And as for the Example, the Law ſhall be fulfilled with due Adminiſtration of Juſtice, which cannot prove for an Example or Precedent of a counterfeit Nullity hereafter, Authoritas facti, or rather non facti, ſed luce clarior in this caſe, beſides the many Probations and Confeſſions of the Parties which have been taken in this Proceſs: whereas by the contrary, they ſhall be forcibly kept together, but never their Perſons or Affections, and they ſtill be forced to live in perpetual Scandal, or Miſery, or both; and what ſuch a kind of forced Continency may avail, the Monks Continency may teach us: and for a precedent in time to come, that reacheth no further, than to open a way of lawful Relief, to any Perſon who ſhall chance to be diſtreſſed in that ſort.

And for legal Doubts, they concern none of their Calling; if your Conſcience be reſolved in points of Divinity, that is your part to give your conſent to the Nullity, and let the Lawyers take the burden of making that firm; and as for the Triennial Probation, I hope no Man can be ſo blind as to make a doubt, whether that be taken before or after the Suit begun: and in concluſion of Divine Solution of this Queſtion proved clearly, that this Reſolution of this doubt, howſoever it was in Blindneſs as you think, that is now proved in the greateſt time of Light and Purity of the Profeſſion of the Goſpel.

And for your Extract upon the late Divines Opinions, upon this Queſtion, I cannot gueſs what your Intent was in ſending them to me, for they all agree in Terms with my Opinion: but there is ſuch a thing as Maleficium, & Maleficiale verſus hanc; and your very interlude Paſſages prove that cleareſt: and for that Advice concerning the Remedies, that is but Conſilium non decretum, not impoſing a Neceſſity; but is to be uſed by Diſcretion, as occaſion ſhall prove and require it.

To conclude then, if this may ſatisfy your Doubts, I will end with our Saviour's Words to St. Peter, Cum converſus fueris, confirma fratres tuos; for on my Conſcience, all the Doubts I have yet ſeen, are nothing but nodos in ſcirpo quærere.

The Midwives appointed to make Inſpection upon the Lady's Body, gave in, That the Lady Eſſex is a Woman apt to have Copulation, and to bring forth Children, and that the ſaid Lady is a Virgin and Uncorrupted.

Three Ladies affirm, That they believe the ſame, for that they were preſent when the Midwives made the Inſpection, and did ſee them give good Reaſons for it.

There is a Sentence of Divorce given for the Nullity of the Marriage, and both Parties licens'd to be married again.

The Commiſſioners that gave Sentence; Winchester, Ely, Litchfield and Coventry, Rocheſter, Biſhops. Sir Julius Cæſar, Sir Thomas Parrey, Sir Daniel Dunne, Doctors.

The Tryal of Anne Turner Widow, at the King's-Bench Bar at Weſtminſter, the 7th day of November, 1615.

THE Indictment, whereupon Richard Weſton took his Tryal, being repeated verbatim, ſhe was indicted for comforting, aiding and aſſiſting the ſaid Weſton, in the poiſoning to death Sir Thomas Overbury; to which ſhe pleaded, Not Guilty, put her ſelf upon God and the Country. Whereupon a ſufficient Jury of two Knights, and the reſt Eſquires and Freeholders of Middleſex, were ſworn and impanelled for the Tryal, whereof Sir Thomas Fowler was Foreman.

Sir Ed. Coke, Lord Chief Juſtice, told her, That Women muſt be covered in the Church, but not when they are arraigned, and ſo cauſed her to put off her Hat; which done, ſhe covered her Hair with her Handkerchief, being before dreſſed in her Hair, and her Hat over it.

Sir Laurence Hide, the Queen's Attorney, open'd the Matter much to the effect, as he did at Weſton's Arraignment, ſhewing the Wickedneſs and Heinouſneſs of Poiſoning: He ſhewed further, That there was one Dr. Forman, dwelling in Lambeth, who died very ſuddenly, and a little before his Death, deſired that he might be buried very deep in the Ground, or elſe (ſaith he) I ſhall fear you all.

To him, in his Life-time, often reſorted the Counteſs of Eſſex and Mrs. Turner, calling him Father: their cauſe of coming to him, was, That by force of Magick, he ſhould procure the now Earl of Somerſet, then Viſcount Rocheſter, to love her, and Sir Arthur Manwaring to love Mrs. Turner, by whom (as it was there related) ſhe had three Children; about this Buſineſs, the Counteſs of Eſſex wrote two Letters, one to Mrs. Turner, another to Dr. Forman, as followeth:

The Counteſs's Letter to Mrs. Turner.

[Burn this Letter.]

Sweet Turner,

'I Am out of all hope of any Good in this World, 'for my Father, my Mother, and my Brother 'ſaid, I ſhould lie with him; and my Brother 'Howard was here, and ſaid, he would not come 'from this place all Winter; ſo that all Comfort 'is gone: and, which is worſt of all, my Lord 'hath complained, that he hath not lain with 'me, and I would not ſuffer him to uſe me. My 'Father and Mother are angry, but I had rather 'die a thouſand times over; for beſides the Suf-'ferings, I ſhall loſe his Love; if I lie with him, 'I will never deſire to ſee his Face, and if my 'Lord do that unto me, my Lord is very well as 'ever he was: ſo as you may ſee in what a miſe-'rable Caſe I am. You muſt ſend the Party word 'of all; he ſent me word all ſhould be well, but 'I ſhall not be ſo happy, as the Lord to love me. 'As you have taken pains all this while for me, 'ſo now do all you can, for never ſo unhappy as 'now, for I am not able to endure the Miſeries 'that are coming on me, but I cannot be happy 'ſo long as this Man liveth; therefore pray for 'me, for I have need, but I ſhould be better if I 'had your Company to eaſe my Mind: Let him 'know this ill News; if I can get this done, you 'ſhall have as much Mony as you can demand, this 'is fair play.

Your Siſter,

Frances Eſſex.

A Letter from the Counteſs to Dr. Forman.

Sweet Father,

'I Muſt ſtill crave your Love, although I hope 'I have it, and ſhall deſerve it better hereaf-'ter: Remember the Galls, for I fear, though 'I have yet no cauſe, but to be confident in you, 'yet I deſire to have it as it is yet remaining 'well; ſo continue it ſtill, if it be poſſible, and if 'you can you muſt ſend me ſome good fortune, 'alas I have need of it. Keep the Lord ſtill to me, 'for that I deſire; and be careful you name me 'not to any body, for we have ſo many Spies, that 'you muſt uſe all your wits, and all little enough,

'for

'for the World is againſt me, and the Heavens 'favour me not, only happy in your Love; I hope 'you will do me good, and if I be ungrateful, let 'all Miſchief come unto me. My Lord is luſty 'and merry, and drinketh with his Men; and all 'the Content he gives me, is to abuſe me, and uſe 'me as doggedly as before: I think I ſhall never 'be happy in this World, becauſe he hinders my 'Good, and will ever, I think ſo; remember (I 'beg for God's ſake) and get me from this vile 'Place.

Your affectionate loving Daughter,

Frances Eſſex.

'Give Turner warning of all things, but not the 'Lord: I would not have any thing come out 'for fear of the Lord Treaſurer, for ſo they may 'tell my Father and Mother, and fill their ears 'full of Toys.

There was alſo ſhewed in Court certain Pictures of a Man and Woman in Copulation, made in Lead, as alſo the Mould of Braſs, wherein they were caſt, a black Scarf alſo full of white Croſſes, which Mrs. Turner had in her Cuſtody. At the ſhewing of theſe and inchanted Papers and other Pictures in Court, there was heard a crack from the Scaffolds, which cauſed great Fear, Tumult and Confuſion among the Spectators, and throughout the Hall, every one fearing Hurt, as if the Devil had been preſent, and grown angry to have his Workmanſhip ſhewed, by ſuch as were not his own Scholars; and this Terror coming about a quarter of an hour after Silence proclaimed, the reſt of the cunning Tricks were likewiſe ſhewed.

Dr. Forman's Wife being Adminiſtratrix of her Husband, found Letters in Packets, by which much was diſcovered; ſhe was in Court, and depoſed that Mrs. Turner came to her Houſe immediately after her Husband's Death, and did demand certain Pictures which were in her Huſband's Study; namely, one Picture in Wax, very ſumptuouſly apparelled in Silks and Sattins, as alſo one other ſitting in form of a naked Woman, ſpreading and laying forth her Hair in a Looking-glaſs, which Mrs. Turner did confidently affirm to be in a Box, and that ſhe knew in what part or room of the Study they were.

Mrs. Forman further depoſeth, That Mrs. Turner and her Husband would be ſometimes three or four hours locked up in his Study together; ſhe did depoſe further, that her Husband had a Ring would open like a Watch.

There was alſo a Note ſhewed in the Court, made by Dr. Forman, and written in Parchment, ſignifying what Ladies loved what Lords in the Court; but the Lord Chief Juſtice would not ſuffer it to be read openly in the Court.

Mrs. Turner ſent Margaret her Maid to Mrs. Forman, and wiſhed that all ſuch Letters and Papers as concerned the Earl of Somerſet, or the Counteſs of Eſſex, or any other great Perſonages, ſhould be burnt; telling her, That the Council's Warrant ſhould come to ſearch the Study, and that all his Goods might be ſeized: whereupon ſhe and her Maid Margaret, with the Conſent of Mrs. Forman, burnt divers Letters and Papers, but yet ſhe kept ſome without their Privity.

There was alſo Enchantments ſhewed in Court, written in Parchment, wherein were contained all the Names of the Bleſſed Trinity, mentioned in the Scriptures; and in another Parchment, + B. + C. + D. + E. and in third likewiſe in Parchment, were written all the Names of the Holy Trinity, as alſo a Figure, in which was written this Word, Corpus; and upon the Parchment was faſtned a little piece of the Skin of a Man.

In ſome of theſe Parchments, the Devils particular Names, who were conjured to torment the Lord Somerſet and Sir Arthur Manwaring, if their Loves ſhould not continue, the one to the Counteſs, the other to Mrs. Turner.

Mrs. Turner alſo confeſſed, That Dr. Savories was uſed in ſucceſſion after Forman, and practiſed many Sorceries upon the Earl of Eſſex's Perſon.

Mrs. Turner being in a manner kept cloſe Priſoner in one of the Sheriff's Houſes in London, before ſhe was brought to the Bar, knew not that Weſton was executed; but by the Proceedings, having underſtanding thereof, and hearing divers Examinations read, it ſo much dejected her, that in a manner ſhe ſpake nothing for herſelf: alſo Examinations and Witneſſes, viva voce, that were produced at Weſton's Arraignment, and divers others, were now read again, as the Examinations of one Edward Pain, John Wright, and Robert Freeman.

Symcots, Rawlins, Payte and Williams, one of theſe Examinations, gave evidence, That one Franklin, being an Apothecary and Druggiſt, was the Provider of all the Poiſons given to Sir Thomas Overbury.

A Chirurgeon there depoſed, That he cured Franklin of the Pox; and that at ſeveral times he demanded of this Chirurgeon, What was the ſtrongeſt Poiſon? The Chirurgeon demanding of him what he would do with it, Franklin replies, Nothing but for his Experience, and to try Concluſions.

Another Examination of one Morcer, who had Conference with the ſaid Franklin, calling him Couſin, who demanded of this Examinant, What News? He anſwered, I hear ill News, I am ſorry that my old Lord and Maſter's Son is found inſufficient, and not able to content the Lady.

Franklin replies, I have a hand in that Buſineſs; I have a great Friend of my Lady of Eſſex, ſhe allows me 2 s. 6 d. a day for my Boat-hire, and 10 s. a week for my Diet, I could have any Money I would. Mercer replies, But, Couſin, how can God bleſs you in this Buſineſs? Franklin anſwers, Let them talk of God that have to do with him, my Lord of Somerſet and the Counteſs will bear me out in any thing I do; if you have any Suit, wherein you may do your ſelf any good, and I may gain by it, I will warrant you I will get it.

Frances depoſeth, That Franklin married his Siſter, and that he thinketh in his Conſcience ſhe was poiſoned; and that upon ſome Diſcontent, he heard him ſay, He would be hanged for never a Whore or Quean of them all.

The Lord Chief Juſtice made a Speech upon divers Examinations there read, That the Earl of Somerſet gave Directions, that of the Powder he ſent to Overbury, that which ſhould be left, ſhould be brought back again: his Pretext was, that it ſhould make him ſick; which ſhould be the Ground to make the King grant his Liberty, ſaying further, It would do Overbury good; and he had Tarts and Jellies likewiſe ſent him by the Counteſs, with expreſs Commandment, that none muſt eat of them but Sir Thomas, ſaying, they will do him no harm.

At another time, the Counteſs ſent Tarts, Jellies and Wine, with Directions, that thoſe which had been formerly ſent, ſhould be brought back again; and thoſe laſt brought, ſhould be given ven him at Supper, and then all ſhould be well; but Directions given, that neither the Lieutenant nor his Wife might eat of them, but they might drink of the Wine, for in the Tarts and Jellies there might be Letters, but in the Wine there might be none. And afterwards it was openly related, and proved by divers Witneſſes, that thoſe words Letters were private Tokens between the Counteſs, and the Lieutenant, and Weſton, to give notice what things were poiſoned, and what not.

In the Examinations that were of Weſton, it was related, That Mr. James told him, that the Earl his Maſter would pay him for his pains about Sir Thomas Overbury.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice gave in charge to the Jury, concerning the Evidence they had formerly heard, and told them, That Weſton, at his Examination, had confeſſed, that all he had ſaid formerly was true.

He further related, What a great Vexation and Grief it was to the King, that Somerſet only by making uſe of his Favour and Love, ſo foul a Fact was done: as, Firſt, To be the Occaſion to put Sir Thomas Overbury to Employment for the Embaſſage at Ruſſia: and, Secondly, To make him refuſe the ſame, and to give right Cauſe for his Commitment: Thirdly, To bear him in hand, that he would work his Liberty, but ſtill aggravated and laboured the contrary, and gave Directions to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to look ſurely to him, and to keep him cloſe Priſoner, and that he ſhould ſend to none of his Friends, or they to him, urging great Matters againſt him.

Sir Thomas Monſon was often employed to give Directions to the Lieutenant therein; which was a moſt barbarous Courſe to be ſo dealt withal, only for a Contempt: concluding that Overbury was a cloſe Priſoner to all his Friends, but open to all his Enemies, ſuch as Somerſet would have or ſend unto him.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice told Mrs. Turner, that ſhe had the ſeven deadly Sins; viz. a Whore, a Baud, a Sorcerer, a Witch, a Papiſt, a Felon, and a Murderer, the Daughter of the Devil; Forman wiſhing her to repent, and to become a Servant of Jeſus Chriſt, and to pray to him to caſt out of her thoſe ſeven Devils.

She deſired the Lord Chief Juſtice to be good unto her, ſaying, ſhe was ever brought up with the Counteſs of Somerſet, and had been of a long time her Servant, and knew not that there was Poiſon in any of thoſe things ſent to Sir Thomas Overbury.

Then the Jury went forth, and not long after returned, finding her Guilty.

Who being asked, What ſhe had to ſay for herſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be pronounced againſt her; ſhe only deſired Favour, but could not ſpeak any thing for weeping.

Then Judge Crook made another grave Speech, exhorting her to Repentance, and to prepare herſelf ready for Death; and that the little time which ſhould be aſſigned her to live, ſhe ſhould not ſpend it either in Hope or in Imagination to get Life, for that Hope was but a Witch. Upon concluſion of which Speech, he gave Judgment, and told her, ſhe had a very honourable Tryal, by ſuch Men as he had not ſeen for one of her Rank and Quality, and ſo was delivered to the Sheriffs.

Upon the Wedneſday following, ſhe was brought from the Sheriffs in a Coach to Newgate, and was there put into a Cart; and caſting Money often among the People as ſhe went, ſhe was carried to Tyburn, where ſhe was executed, and whither many Men and Women of faſhion came in Coaches to ſee her die: to whom ſhe made a Speech, deſiring them not to rejoice at her Fall, but to take example by her; ſhe exhorting them to ſerve God, and abandon Pride, and all other Sins, relating her breeding with the Counteſs of Somerſet, having had no other Means to maintain her and her Children, but what came from the Counteſs: and ſaid farther, That when her hand was once in this Buſineſs, ſhe knew the revealing of it would be her Overthrow. The which, with other like Speeches, and great Penitency there ſhewed, moved the Spectators to great Pity, and great Grief for her.

The Tryal of J. Franklin, at the King's-Bench Bar, the 27*th Day of* November, 1615.

AFTER he had put himſelf for his Tryal upon the Country, a Jury of Eſquires and Gentlemen was impanelled to paſs upon his Life: Then Weſton's Indictment was read, and Franklin accuſed as Acceſſary to the Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, and in his Examination formerly taken in theſe Words:

James Franklin's Confeſſion.

He confeſſeth, That in a Houſe near to Doctors-Commons, Mrs. Turner did firſt come unto him about the Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, and prayed him to provide that which ſhould not kill a Man preſently, but lie in his Body for a certain time, wherewith he might languiſh away by little and little; at the ſame time ſhe gave him four Angels, wherewith he bought a Water called Aqua fortis, and ſent it to Mrs. Turner, who, to try the Operation thereof, gave it to a Cat, wherewith the Cat languiſhed, and pitifully cried for the ſpace of two days, and then died.

Afterwards Mrs. Turner ſent for Franklin to come to the Counteſs, who told him, that Aqua fortis was too violent a Water; but what think you (quoth ſhe) of white Arſnick? He told her, it was too violent. What ſay you (quoth ſhe) to Powder of Diamonds? He anſwers, I know not the Nature of that. She ſaid, then he was a Fool; and gave him Pieces of Gold, and bade him buy ſome of that Powder for her. Franklin demands of the the Counteſs, what was the reaſon ſhe would poiſon Sir Thomas Overbury? She told him, He would pry ſo far into their Eſtate, that he would overthrow them all.

A little before Sir Thomas Overbury's Death, the Counteſs ſent for Franklin, and ſhewed him a Letter written from the Lord of Rocheſter, wherein he read theſe Words; I marvel at theſe Delays, that the Buſineſs is not yet diſpatched. Whereby Franklin thinketh in his Conſcience, was meant the Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury; and in another Letter from the Lord of Rocheſter, was written, that Sir Thomas was to come out of the Tower within two days, and they all ſhould be undone: whereupon the Counteſs ſent for Weſton, and was very angry with him that he had not diſpatched Sir Thomas Overbury. Weſton told her, that he had given him a thing that would have killed twenty Men.

Alſo, a Fortnight after Weſton's Apprehenſion, the Counteſs ſent for Franklin to her Houſe at St. James's Park, where he found the Earl and the Counteſs walking together; and as ſoon as he came, the Earl went apart into a Chamber; then ſhe told him, Weſton had been ſent for by a Purſuivant, and had confeſſed all, and we ſhall all be hanged: but on your Life (quoth ſhe) do not you confeſs that you brought any Poiſon to me, or to Mrs. Turner; for if you do, you ſhall be hanged, for I will not hang for you; and, ſays Mrs. Turner, I will not hang for you both.

The Counteſs told him, That the Lord who was to examine him, would promiſe him a Pardon to confeſs; but believe him not, for they will hang thee when all is done.

Weſton comes to Franklin's Houſe, and told him, Now the Counteſs's Turn is ſerv'd, ſhe uſed him unkindly, and they ſhould be poiſoned, and that two were ſet of purpoſe to poiſon him.

Franklin having confeſſed his former Examinations under his own Hand, being permitted to ſpeak for himſelf, ſaid, That at the Entreaty of the Counteſs and Mrs. Turner, he did buy theſe Poiſons, but proteſted his Ignorance what they meant to do with them; and for the reſt, he referred himſelf to the Conſcience of the Jury: who went from the Bar, and within a quarter of an hour, did return, and pronounc'd him Guilty.

Then Judge Crook, after a brief Exhortation, gave the Sentence of Death upon him.

The Lord Chief Juſtice made a ſhort Exhortation alſo, with addition of theſe Words; That knowing as much as he knew, if this had not been found out, neither the Court, City, nor any particular Family had eſcaped the Malice of this wicked Cruelty.

The Tryal of Sir Jervis Elvis Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower, at Guild-Hall, the 16th of November, 1615.

THE Form of the Indictment was the malicious Aiding, Comforting, and Abetting of Weſton in the Poiſoning and Murdering of Overbury; whereupon it was laid againſt him as follows:

Firſt, When Weſton received the Vial of Poiſon of two Inches long, to give Sir Thomas, he having the Glaſs in one Hand, and Broth for Sir Thomas in the other Hand, meeting the Lieutenant, asked him thus, Sir, ſhall I give it him now? The Lieutenant reproved him, yet that Night he gave it him in his Broth: Ergo, the Lieutenant knew of the Practice and Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury: & qui non propulſat injuriam cum poſſit, infert. Cicero.

After this was known to be Poiſon, yet he kept Weſton ſtill, he favoured, countenanced and graced him, and one time ſent him a Cup of Sack, and bid his Man tell him, that he loved him as well as ever he did; all this while he paid him no Wages, and as ſoon as Overbury died, Weſton was removed.

The Counteſs wrote a Letter to the Lieutenant, with the Letter ſhe ſent poiſoned Tarts to Overbury, and Wine to the Lieutenant's Wife, and bade him give the Tarts to Overbury, for there were Letters in them, but his Wife and Children might drink the Wine, for ſhe was ſure there were no Letters in it.

The Earl of Northampton writ a Letter to the Lieutenant, concerning the Impriſonment of Overbury; the ſaid Earl writ two Letters to Rocheſter concerning theſe Words.

The Earl of Northampton's Letter to Rocheſter.

Sweet Lord,

'THink not I find Pain in that which gives me 'ſweeteſt Pleaſure, which is any thing that 'falls from your Pen; three things concur to my 'exceeding joy in your worthy Letters, Proof of 'your Love, Comfort in your Words, and Judg-'ment in your Writing: you may believe the 'Words of him that will rather die than flatter 'you; my Heart is full of the Love of you; your 'Characters are no more Pain for me to peruſe, 'being as well acquainted with your Hand as my 'own, the Pain is no more than the cracking of a 'Nut for the ſweet Kernel, or my Niece's Pain, 'in the Silver-dropping Stream of your Pen.'—[There the Lord Chief Juſtice left off reading for the Bawdineſs of it; then after in the Letter followed]; 'I ſpent two Hours yeſterday, prompt-'ing the Lieutenant with Cautions and Conſidera-'tions; obſerving with whom he is to deal, tha 'he might the better act his Part, for the Adven-'ture in which he dealeth.

Henry Northampton.

Another Letter to Rocheſter.

Sweet Lord,

'I Cannot deliver unto you with what Caution and 'Conſideration, &c. and the Lieutenant look-'ing

'ing to his Buſineſs, which concerns no more 'than Text affords, that marched in his Affairs, 'I ſhall hold him diſcreet, and love him better 'whilſt I live, for this his Concluſion: For this 'Negro can no more change his Skin than a Leopard 'his Spots.

Henry Northampton.

Another Letter to Rocheſter.

Sweet Lord,

'Overbury being viewed, there was found in 'his Arm an Iſſue, and on his Belly twelve 'Kernels likely to break to iſſue, each as big as 'Three-Pence; one Iſſue on his Back, with a tawny 'Plaiſter on it; this was ſtrange and ugly. He 'ſtunk intolerably, inſomuch that he was caſt into 'the Coffin with a looſe Sheet over him. God is 'gracious in cutting off ill Inſtruments from off 'the factious Crew: If he had come forth, they 'would have made uſe of him. Thus, Sweet 'Lord, wiſhing you all Increaſe of Happineſs 'and Honour, I end,

Your Lordſhip's, more than any Man,

Henry Northampton.

The Lieutenant writ a Letter to the Earl of Northampton, certifying him, That he undertook Sir Thomas Overbury according to his Inſtructions: That as ſoon as he came to the Place, Sir Thomas proteſted his Innocency upon the Bible; and then (quoth he) he asked me what they meant to do with him. I anſwered, They mean to refine you, that your Pureneſs may appear a little better. After I walked with him in his Chamber, and adviſed him to give way to the Match between Rocheſter and the Counteſs; but then he grew hot againſt your Lordſhip and the Counteſs of Suffolk, ſaying, If he were the Counteſs of Suffolk's Priſoner, (as he thought he was) then (ſaid he) let her know that I care as little to die, as ſhe to be cruel. The Counteſs of Suffolk I find to be joined with you in this Plot, though the Chamberlain knows not of it, nor any one elſe. But Rocheſter's part I ſhall much fear, until I ſee the Event to be clearly conveyed. And ſo he concluded his Letter.

Jervis Elvis.

The Anſwer of Sir Jervis Elvis to the Points propoſed.

My Lord, Before I anſwer to the Matter of Charge againſt me, let me remember your Lordſhip of one Speech which I learned from your Mouth: I have heard you ſpeak it at the Council-Table, and you have delivered it at the Aſſizes in the Country, That when a Priſoner ſtands at the Bar for his Life, comfortleſs, allowed no Council, but ſtrong Council againſt him, perchance affrighted with the Fear of Death, his Wife and Children to be caſt forth out of Doors, and made to ſeek their Bread; you have always pitied the Cauſe of ſuch a one: You have proteſted you had rather hang in Hell for Mercy to ſuch a one, than for Judgment.

My Lord, you have not obſerved your own Rule in my Cauſe, you have paraphraſed upon every Examination, you have aggravated every Evidence, and applied it to me, ſo that I ſtand clearly condemned before I be found guilty: if I be ſo vile a Man as your Lordſhip conceives me, I were unworthy of any Favour, but I hope your Lordſhip ſhall not find it.

So I will deny nothing that hath Evidence of Truth againſt me, I will not tell a Lye to ſave my Life, and I beſeech your Lordſhip ſo to conceive of me, move your Charity towards me.

Then deſired he the Court, that the Heads of the Accuſations might be collected by the Council of the King, which were the ſame which were mentioned before; to which he ſeverally anſwered, &c.

To the firſt, Shall I give it him now? he anſwered, that when Weſton asked him the Queſtion, he ſaw no Poiſon in his Hand, and therefore ſaid he, in Weſton's and mine Examination, the Queſtion was, Shall I give it him now? not, Shall I give him this now? for there is a great difference between Hoc and Id in matter of Prevention.

But further, when Weſton had told me that it was Poiſon which he meant to give, I reproved and beat him down with God's Judgment; nay, I humbled him ſo, that upon his Knees he thanked God and me, and told me, that he and his had cauſe to bleſs God for me, for that I withheld him from doing that Act: and if you call this Comforting and Abetting, to terrify a Man for his Sins, and to make him ſo confeſs his Faults to God, and to abhor and deteſt the Act, then was I an Abettor and Comforter of Weſton.

To the ſecond, after I had thus terrified Weſton with God's Judgments, and ſaw him caſt down for his Offence, I could do him no better Office than of Charity, to raiſe him up, who was thus down, and therefore favoured him, I ſhewed him kindneſs, I drank to him, to the intent I might encourage the Intentions of his Mind, which I found then reſolved in abhorring the Fact: and that I gave him no Wages, it is true, I took him from the Commendations of my Lord of Northampton, and Sir Thomas Monſon, whom I took to be my Friends, and thought they would commend no Man to be a Keeper, which might any way endanger me.

To the third, I never knew any other meaning to the Counteſs's words in her Letters, but the bare literal meaning; and ſure (quoth he) after I had received the Tarts, and they had ſtood a while in my Kitchin, I ſaw them ſo black and foul, and of ſuch ſtrange Colours, that I did cauſe my Cook to throw them away, and to make other Tarts and Jellies for him.

To the fourth, he ſaid the Earl of Northampton's Letter to me, was not any thing touching the Poiſoning of Overbury, but for a cloſe Reſtraint; to the end, that Overbury might agree to their Purpoſes concerning the Marriage to be had between Rocheſter and the Counteſs: if the Earl of Northampton had any other Plot to take away his Life, I was not any thing of his Council, or had knowledge therein.

To the fifth, whereas it is ſaid, I received him according to my Inſtructions, I meant none other thing than I have delivered before, which was concerning the cloſeneſs of his Impriſonment. But being asked what he meant by theſe words; Rocheſter's part, I ſhall greatly fear, until I ſee the Event to be clearly carried; in this, he ſtaggered, and wavered much, and gave his Anſwer: It was long ſince I wrote this Letter, and for the particular Circumſtances that induced me to this Speech, I cannot now call to Memory; but ſure I am, that at that time, knowing my ſelf to be innocent, I could the better have ſatisfied my remembrance, ſo that I meant nothing the taking away of his Life: but becauſe I was a Stranger to Rocheſter, and had heard and known of of that great League that was between them; I might well think, ſuſpect, and fear, whether he would always countenance theſe Projects for his reſtraint. Theſe were the Anſwers he made to his Accuſations, and after he had made many Proteſtations between God and his Soul, of his Innocency of this malicious plotting and abetting of Overbury's Death, he applied himſelf to the Jury, and told them thus:

I will prove unto you by many infallible and unanſwerable Reaſons, that I could not be Aider and Complotter with Weſton in this Poiſoning.

Firſt, I made a free and voluntary diſcovery of it my ſelf, I was not compelled: will any Man imagine, that I would diſcover a thing, whereof I could not clear my ſelf? Nature is more kind than to be its own Accuſer.

Beſides, that my Clearneſs might more appear, and remain in the World without any Suſpicion, I proceeded and accuſed the Murderer Weſton; it had been a ſenſeleſs thing, and obſcure in me, if I had not thought my ſelf clear, to have accuſed him, who might have done as much for me.

Nay, Weſton himſelf proved me to be an honeſt Man before the Chancellor of the Exchequer; for he confeſſed to him, and others being preſent, that he thought that the Lieutenant knew not of the Poiſon, and in his Examination before the Lord Chief Juſtice, and Serjeant Crew, being asked the meaning of theſe words, Shall I give it him now? he anſwers, that he thought that thoſe which had ſet him on work, had acquainted the Lieutenant with their Plot.

Alſo I was ſo confident in my own Innocency, that I told my Lord Chief Juſtice, and my Lord Zouch the way to make Weſton confeſs, and to diſcover all, which was by fair and gentle intreaty of him, and ſo by this means they might ſearch the bottom of his Heart; in this the Lord Chief Juſtice witneſſed with him.

And after Sir Thomas Overbury was dead, Weſton and Mrs. Turner were ſent to know of me whether I had any inkling of the Death of Sir Thomas? What need they have made this Queſtion, if I had known any thing thereof?

Alſo that which I do know concerning the Poiſoning of Sir Thomas, was after his Death, by Relation of Weſton; and here I am indicted as Acceſſary before the Fact, when I knew nothing till after the Fact.

After that he had confirmed theſe Reaſons by ſundry Proofs and Witneſſes, he went further in his own Defence: If I be in the Plot, the Lord Treaſurer is, I have his Letter to ſhew in it; he called me to his Lodging, and ſaid the Plots you know them as well as I, the Plots were only to repair her Honour: my Wife hath the Letters from my Lord Treaſurer and Monſon, for theſe Plots I will run willingly to my Death, if Circumſtances be knit with any manner of Fact.

He proceeded further, and told the Lord Chief Juſtice, that he ſpake not this to juſtify himſelf, ſo that no blemiſh or ſtain might cleave unto him; for (ſaid he) this Viſitation is ſent me from God, and whether I live or die, it is the happieſt Affliction to my Soul, that I ever received: I have laid open my whole Heart for Blood-guiltineſs: I have not repented me other than of Errors of my Judgment, in not detecting what I ſuſpected, and yet I do ask God forgiveneſs daily for leſſer Sins; but of this I know no other, but the groſs Error of my Judgment, in not preventing it, when I ſaw ſuch Intendment and Imaginations againſt him.

Then he put to my Lord Chief Juſtice this Caſe, If one that knoweth not of any Plot to poiſon a Man, but only ſuſpecteth, is no Actor or Contriver himſelf, only imagineth ſuch a thing, Whether ſuch a one be acceſſary to the Murder; for the words of the Indictment are, Abetting and Comforting with Malice: Now if there be any Man that charges me expreſly, or in direct Terms, that I was an Abettor, or if the Court ſhall think in this Caſe which I have put that ſuch a concealing without Malice, is an Abetting, I refuſe not to die, I am Guilty: this was the Sum of his Speech.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice replied; That to his Knowledge, he ſpake no more concerning the Evidence than he could in Conſcience juſtify, which was only to expreſs the Evidence of things, and not wreſting any thing in prejudice of his Life.

But further he told him, That two Days before Sir Thomas Overbury died, you wiſhed his Man to bring his beſt Suit of Hangings to hang his Chamber, which you knew were your Fees.

And after he told him, that his Accuſation of the Lord Treaſurer was very malicious; for in the Examinations he had taken, and in all the exact Speech he could work for the finding out of the Truth, he ſaw not that honourable Gentleman any way touched.

In Concluſion he told him, It is not your deep Proteſtations, nor your appealing to God, that can ſway a Jury from their Evidence, which is not yet anſwered unto.

But to leave you without Excuſe, and to make the Matter as clear as may be, here is the Confeſſion of Franklin, (which he then drew out of his Boſom) ſaying, This poor Man, not knowing Sir Jervis ſhould come to his Tryal, this Morning he came unto me at Five of the Clock, and told me, That he was much troubled in his Conſcience, and could not reſt all that Night until he had made his Confeſſion; and it is ſuch a one (theſe were his Words) as the Eye of England never ſaw, nor the Ear of Chriſtendom never heard.

The Confeſſion of James Franklin, the 16th of November, 1615.

Mrs. Turner came to me from the Counteſs, and wiſhed me from her to get the ſtrongeſt Poiſon I could for Sir Thomas Overbury. Accordingly I bought ſeven, viz. Aquafortis, White Arſenick, Mercury, Powder of Diamonds, Lapis Coſtitus, great Spiders, and Cantharides: All theſe were given to Sir Thomas Overbury at ſeveral times. And further confeſſeth, That the Lieutenant knew of theſe Poiſons; for that appeared (ſaid he) by many Letters which he writ to the Counteſs of Eſſex, which I ſaw, and thereby knew that he knew of this Matter: One of theſe Letters I read for the Counteſs, becauſe ſhe could not read it her ſelf, in which the Lieutenant uſed this Speech;

Madam, The Scab is like the Fox, the more he is curſed, the better he fareth; and many other Speeches. Sir Thomas never eat White Salt, but there was White Arſenick put into it: Once he deſired Pig, and Mrs. Turner put into it Lapis Coſtitus.

The White Powder that was ſent to Sir Thomas in a Letter, he knew to be White Arſenick.

At another time he had two Partridges ſent him from the Court; and Water and Onions being the Sauce, Mrs. Turner put in Cantharides inſtead of Pepper; ſo that there was ſcarce any thing that he did eat, but there was ſome Poiſon mix'd. For theſe Poiſons the Counteſs ſent me Rewards: She ſent many times Gold by Mrs. Turner.

She afterwards wrote unto me to buy her more Poiſons. I went unto her, and told her I was weary of it; and I beſought her upon my Knees that ſhe would uſe me no more in thoſe Matters: But ſhe importuned me, bad me go, and enticed me with fair Speeches and Rewards; ſo ſhe overcame me, and did bewitch me.

The Cauſe of this Poiſoning, as the Counteſs told him, was, Becauſe Sir Thomas Overbury would pry ſo far into their Suit, as he would put them down. He did alſo ſay that the Toothleſs Maid, Truſty Margaret, was acquainted with the Poiſoning; ſo was Mrs. Turner's Man Stephen; ſo alſo Mrs. Horne, the Counteſs's own Hand.

He ſaith, On the Marriage-Day of the Counteſs with Somerſet ſhe ſent him 20 l. by Mrs. Turner; and he was to have been paid by the Counteſs 200 l. per Annum during his Life.

That he was urged and haunted two hundred ſeveral times, at leaſt, by the Counteſs to do it againſt his Conſcience. He ſaith, She was able to bewitch any Man; and then he wrought the Love between Rocheſter and her; and that he had twelve ſeveral Letters from her to proſecute it, and was to have 200 l. to continue their Loves until the Marriage; and that all Things were burnt ſince the firſt Diſcovery.

Thoſe were all the Materials in Franklin's Confeſſion. To this Sir Jervis Elvis knew not what to anſwer, or to make of his own Letters.

Then preſently the Jury departed from the Bar, and ſhortly after returned, and found him guilty; and the Lord Chief Juſtice gave Judgment, and he was executed on Tower-Hill.

The Tryal of Richard Weſton at Guild-Hall, the 19th of November, 1615, before the Lord Mayor, the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, and three other Juſtices of the King's-Bench, viz. Crook, Daudridge, and Haughton, and Serjeant Crew, and others of the Commiſſioners.

Sir Henry Montague, Recorder.

THE Court being ſet, the King's ſpecial Commiſſion being read, the Lord Chief Juſtice gave the Charge; the Effect whereof was,

Firſt, To expreſs the King's pious Inclination and Command unto juſt Proceedings againſt all ſuch as ſhould be any way proved to be guilty of the Murdering and Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, his Majeſty's Priſoner in the Tower.

Secondly, To aggravate the Manner and Quality of the Murdering, in ſhewing the Baſeneſs of Poiſoning above all other Kinds of Murder, declaring the Vengeance of God, and his Juſtneſs in puniſhing Offenders: He alledged 9 Gen. 6. Quicunque effuderit humanum ſanguinem, effundetur ſanguis illius; ad imaginem Dei quippe factus eſt homo. He alſo took the Example of Uriah by David; he therein obſerved how Adultery is moſt often the Begetter of that Sin.

Then he declared, That of all Felonies, Murder is the moſt horrible; of all Murders, Poiſoning the moſt deteſtable; and of all Poiſoning, the lingering Poiſoning.

He ſhewed how that by an Act of Parliament, 22 H. 8. cap. 9. it was made Treaſon, and that wilful Poiſoners ſhould be boiled to death; rehearſing the Example of one Richard Rouſe, that had poiſoned a Man and Woman, and was therefore ſcalded to death.

Then he laid open to the Jury the Baſeneſs and Cowardlineſs of Poiſoners, who attempt that ſecretly, againſt which there is no Means of Preſervation or Defence for a Man's Life; and how rare it was to hear of poiſoning in England, ſo deteſtable it was to our Nation: But that ſince the Devil had taught divers to be cunning in it, ſo that they can poiſon in what Diſtance of Space they pleaſe, by conſuming the Nativum Calidum or Humidum Radicale in one Month, two, or three, or more, as they liſt; which they four manner of Ways do execute, 1. Guſtu, 2. Hauſtu, 3. Odore, 4. Contactu.

He finiſhed his Charge with ſerious Exhortations to the Jury to do Juſtice in preſenting the Truth, notwithſtanding the Greatneſs of any that upon their Evidence ſhould appear to be guilty of the ſame Offence; comforting both Judge and Jury with the Scripture, Pſal. 5. ver. ultimo, For thou, Lord, wilt bleſs the Righteous; with Favour wilt thou compaſs them as with a Shield.

The Charge being ended, the Jury, conſiſting of fourteen Perſons, did for the Space of an Hour depart the Court into a private Room, where they received their Evidence from Mr. Fanſhaw, his Majeſty's Coroner, and his Highneſs's Council prepared and inſtructed for that purpoſe, with the Examinations and Confeſſions as well of the Priſoner himſelf, as of divers other Witneſſes, before that time taken by the Lord Chief Juſtice of England, and others the Lords of his Majeſty's Council.

In the mean time, Mr. William Goare, Sheriff of London, was commanded to fetch his Priſoner, remaining at his Houſe, to be ready in Court for his Arraignment.

So a certain Space after the Grand Jury returned to the Bar, and delivered in their Bill of Indictment, ſigned Billa Vera. Whereupon the Priſoner was ſet up to the Bar, and the Indictment read by Mr. Fanſhaw, which contained in effect as followeth.

The Indictment.

THAT Richard Weſton, being about the Age of ſixty Years, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but inſtigated and ſeduced by the Devil, deviſed and contrived not only to bring upon upon the Body of Sir Thomas Overbury Kt. great Sickneſs and Diſeaſes, but alſo to deprive him of his Life: And to bring the ſame to paſs, 9 Maii 1613, 11 Jacobi, &c. at the Tower of London, in the Pariſh of Alhallows Barkin, did obtain and get into his hands certain Poiſon of green and yellow Colour, called Roſalgar, (knowing the ſame to be deadly Poiſon) and the ſame did maliciouſly and felonioufly mingle and compound in a kind of Broth poured out into a certain Diſh; and the ſame Broth ſo infected and poiſoned, did give and deliver to the ſaid Thomas Overbury as wholeſome and good Broth, to the intent therewith to kill and poiſon the ſaid Sir Thomas, which Broth he took and did eat.

Alſo the ſaid Weſton upon the 1ſt of July, 11 Jacobi, as aforeſaid, did in like manner get another Poiſon or Poiſons compounded, called White Arſnick, and (knowing the ſame to be deadly Poiſon) did give unto the ſaid Sir Thomas Overbury, as good and wholeſome to eat, who took and did eat.

Alſo that Weſton, upon the ſaid 19th of July following, did get another Poiſon called Mercury Sublimate (knowing the ſame to be mortal Poiſon) and put and mingled the ſame in Tarts and Jellies, and gave the ſame unto Sir Thomas Overbury, as good and wholeſome to eat, which he in like manner took and did eat.

Alſo the ſaid Weſton, and another Man being an Apothecary, afterwards, upon the 14th of September, felonioufly did get a Poiſon, called Mercury Sublimate, (knowing the ſame to be deadly Poiſon) and put the ſame into a Clyſter mingled with the ſaid Poiſon; and the ſaid Clyſter the ſaid Apothecary, for the Reward of 20*l.* promiſed unto him, did put and miniſter (as good and wholeſome) into the Guts of the ſaid Sir Thomas, and that Weſton was preſent and aiding to the ſaid Apothecary in miniſtring and infuſing the ſaid Clyſter; and that immediately after, as well the taking of the ſaid poiſoned Meats, and miniſtring the ſaid Clyſter, the ſaid Sir Thomas did languiſh, and fell into Diſeaſes and Diſtempers; and from the aforeſaid Times of taking and eating the ſaid poiſoned Meats, and miniſtring the ſaid Clyſter, he died: and ſo the Jury gave their Verdict, That Weſton in this manner had killed, poiſoned, and murdered the ſaid Sir Thomas, againſt the King's Peace and Dignity.

Which Indictment being read, he was demanded if he were guilty of the Felony, Murdering, and Poiſoning, as aforeſaid, yea, or no. To which he anſwered, doubling his Speech, Lord, have Mercy upon me! Lord, have Mercy upon me! But being again demanded, he anſwered, Not guilty. And being then demanded how he would be tryed, he anſwered, He referred himſelf to God, and would be tryed by God; refuſing to put himſelf and his Cauſe upon the Jury or Country, according to the Law or Cuſtom.

Hereupon the Lord Chief Juſtice, and all other in their Order, ſpent the ſpace of an Hour in perſuading him to put himſelf upon the Tryal of the Law; declaring unto him the Danger and Miſchief he ran into by reſiſting his ordinary Courſe of Tryal, being the Means ordained by God for his Deliverance, if he were innocent; and how by this means he would make himſelf the Author of his own Death, even as if he ſhould with a Knife or Dagger kill or ſtab himſelf: exhorting him very earneſtly either with Repentance to confeſs his Fault, or elſe with Humility and Duty to ſubmit himſelf to his ordinary Tryal. Whereupon he ſtubbornly anſwered, Welcome, by the Grace of God; and he referred himſelf to God. And ſo when no Perſuaſions could prevail, the Lord Chief Juſtice plainly delivered his Opinion, That he was perſuaded that Weſton had been dealt withal by ſome Great-Ones, guilty of the ſame Fact, as acceſſary, to ſtand mute, whereby they might eſcape their Puniſhment; and therefore he commanded (for Satisfaction of the World) that the Queen's Attorney there preſent ſhould declare and ſet forth the whole Evidence, without any Fear or Partiality; and yet notwithſtanding, he once more uſed much Perſuaſion to the Priſoner to conſider what Deſtruction he brought upon himſelf by his Contempt; and declaring unto him how his Offence of Contempt was, in refuſing his Tryal, and how the Laws of the Land had provided a ſharper and more ſevere Puniſhment to ſuch Offenders than unto thoſe that were guilty of High Treaſon: and ſo he repeated the Form of Judgment given againſt ſuch, the Extremity and Rigour thereof was expreſſed in theſe Words, Onere, Frigore, & Fame. For the firſt, he was to receive his Puniſhment by the Law, to be extended, and then to have Weights laid upon him, no more than he was able to bear, which were by little and little to be increaſed.

For the ſecond, that he was to be expoſed in an open Place, near to Priſon, in the open Air, being naked.

And laſtly, That he was to be preſerved with the coarſeſt Bread that could be got, and Water out of the next Sink or Puddle to the Place of Execution, and that Day he had Water he ſhould have no Bread, and that Day he had Bread he ſhould have no Water; and in this Torment he was to linger as long as Nature could linger out, ſo that oftentimes they lived in that Extremity eight or nine Days: adding further, that as Life left him, ſo Judgment ſhould find him. And therefore he required, upon conſideration of theſe Reaſons, to adviſe himſelf to plead to the Country; who notwithſtanding abſolutely refuſed.

Hereupon the Lord Chief Juſtice willed Sir Lawrence Hyde, the Queen's Attorney, and there of Counſel for the King, to manifeſt unto the Audience the Guiltineſs of the ſaid Weſton by his own Confeſſion, ſigned with his own Hand; and if in the Declaration thereof they may meet with any great Perſons whatſoever, as certainly there were Great-Ones confederate in that Fact, he ſhould boldly and faithfully open whatſoever was neceſſary, and he could prove againſt them. Whereupon Mr. Attorney began his Accuſation:

Firſt, He charged the Counteſs of Somerſet and the Earl to be principal Movers unto this unhappy Concluſion, Mrs. Turner to be of the Confederacy, and the Pay-Miſtreſs of the Priſoners Rewards; in which I could not but obſerve the Attorney's Boldneſs in terming the Counteſs a dead and rotten Branch, which being lopt off, the Noble Tree, meaning that Noble Family, would proſper the better.

Secondly, He proceeded to the Cauſe, which he affirmed to be the Malice of the Counteſs: And the Ground of this Malice he alledged, and by many Inducements he evidently affirmed, That Sir Thomas Overbury had perſuaded him from that adulterate Marriage of the Counteſs of Somerſet, then Counteſs of Eſſex. And for this he alledged as followeth.

Sir Thomas Overbury having divers times diſſuaded the Earl, then Viſcount Rocheſter, from ſeeking by any means to procure Marriage with the Counteſs of Eſſex, to which he ſaw the Earl too too much inclined; and having very earneſt Conference with the Earl one Night in private in the Gallery at White-Hall concerning his Intendment, perceiving the Earl too much at that time to deſire that unlawful Communication, in the Ardency of his fervent Affection unto the Earl, and great Preſcience of the future Miſery it would inevitably bring unto him, (his well-beloved Lord and Friend) uſed Speeches to this Effect.

Well, my Lord, if you do marry that filthy baſe Woman, you will utterly ruin your Honour and your ſelfs; you ſhall never do it by my Advice or Conſent; and if you do, you had beſt look to ſtand faſt.

My Lord replied, betwitched with the Love of the ſaid Counteſs, moved with Sir Thomas Overbury for ſo ſlighting her, anſwered, My own Legs are ſtreight and ſtrong enough to bear me up; but, in Faith, I will be even with you for this: and ſo parted from him in a great Rage.

This Conference was over-heard by ſome in an adjoining Room, and their Depoſitions for the Truth thereof were read in Court.

Although this Conference moved the Earl to ſuch a ſudden Choler, yet it ſeemed Sir Thomas Overbury conceited it no otherwiſe than a ſudden extreme Diſtemperature or Paſſion, and not a final Concluſion of their Boſom-Friendſhip as before, in which the Earl ſeemed reciprocal; howſoever, in his Double-Dealing it ſeemed to be clearly otherwiſe.

For upon this the Earl moved the King to appoint Sir Thomas Overbury Embaſſador for Ruſſia. The King, willing to prefer Sir Thomas Overbury, as one whoſe Worth and Valour wat yet unknown to his Majeſty, accordingly adjoined him that Service; the which Sir Thomas was moſt willing to accept of, as a gracious Aſpect of the King towards him: which Willingneſs of his was proved by the Depoſition of two or three ſeveral Witneſſes read in Court, and by the Oath of Sir Dudly Diggs, who voluntarily, at the Arraignment in open Court, upon his Oath, witneſſed how Sir Thomas had imparted to him his Readineſs to be imployed on an Embaſſage.

The Earl as well abuſing the King's Favours in moving to ſhew Favour where he meant the Party ſhould take no Benefit, as bearing unhoneſt Friendſhip, in Conference with Sir Thomas concerning that Imployment, perſuaded him to refuſe to ſerve Embaſſador, where (quoth he) I ſhall not be able to perform ſuch Kindneſs to your advantage, as having you with me; and (quoth he) if you be blamed or committed for it, care not, I will quickly free you from all harm. Sir Thomas, thus betrayed by a Friend, refuſed to ſerve in that nature; where upon juſt Equity he was committed to the Tower.

Being thus committed, he was preſently committed cloſe Priſoner, and a Keeper he muſt have; and who muſt that be but this Weſton, who was commended by the Counteſs of Eſſex to Sir Thomas Monſon, to be by him recommended over unto the Lieutenant of the Tower, to be Keeper to Sir Thomas Overbury. Sir Thomas Monſon, according to the Counteſs's Requeſt, commended the ſaid Weſton to Sir Jervis Elvis; whereupon the ſaid Lieutenant entertained the ſaid Weſton, and appointed him to keep Sir Thomas Overbury. The ſaid Weſton, upon his own Confeſſion read in Court, ſigned with his Mark, had during the time that ſhe was Counteſs of Eſſex, been a Procurer and Pander to the ſaid Earl, then Viſcount Rocheſter, and the Counteſs of Eſſex, for the conveying and effecting of their adulterate Deſires, which they did divers times conſummate, meeting in Mrs. Turner's Houſe once between the Hours of Eleven and Twelve, and at Hammerſmith, and at divers times elſewhere, for that purpoſe; that now, by the Procurement of the Counteſs, (who hated Sir Thomas Overbury, for being a good Means to keep from contaminating themſelves with ſuch luſtful Imbracements, and from the purpoſed Marriage they mutually laboured to compaſs) her Pander was become his Keeper, a fit Agent for Luſt and Murder.

Weſton now being become Sir Thomas Overbury's Keeper, kept him ſo cloſe, that he ſcarce had the Comfort of the Day's Brightneſs, neither ſuffered he any one to viſit him, Father, Brother, his beſt Friends, his neareſt Kindred were Strangers to him from the beginning of his Impriſonment unto the end.

Mrs. Turner, upon the firſt day's keeping, promiſed to give him a contenting Reward, if he ſhould adminiſter ſuch things to Sir Thomas Overbury, as ſhould be ſent unto him, thinking him a fit Inſtrument to compaſs black Murder, that was ſo well acquainted with foul Luſt; and ſo indeed they found him, for he agreed and did promiſe to adminiſter whatſoever ſhe would ſend him. Mrs. Turner, upon this murderous Promiſe, the very ſame day that Weſton became Sir Thomas Overbury's Keeper, being the 6th day of May, 1613. ſent unto him the ſaid Weſton, certain yellow Poiſon, called Roſalgar, in a Vial.

Weſton having received that Poiſon, the aforeſaid 6th of May at Night, bringing Sir Thomas Overbury's Supper in one hand, and the Vial of Poiſon in the other, meets with the Lieutenant, and asks him in theſe terms, Sir, ſhall I give it him now? Upon this word Now, the Lord Chief Juſtice demurs, to aggravate the Maliciouſneſs; affirming that this Particle Now, ſhewed a Reſolution to poiſon him. What ſhall you give him? replies the Lieutenant. Weſton replies, As if you did not know, Sir. The Lieutenant blaming him, he carries the Poiſon into an inner Room, which Weſton, the 9th of May, did adminiſter to Sir Thomas Overbury in Broth. This was proved both by Weſton and the Lieutenant's Confeſſion.

Weſton having given this Poiſon, which wrought very vehemently with him by Vomits and extreme Purging, he preſently demands his Reward of Mrs. Turner, who replies, That the Man is not yet dead, perfect your Work, and you ſhall have your Hire. This was alſo confeſſed by Weſton under his Marks.

Sir Thomas Overbury, by his cloſe Impriſonment, growing ſick, and daily languiſhing, after three or four Weeks ſpace (conſidering he had not got his Freedom and Releaſe, having not Friends ſuffered to come unto him, but only ſuch as the Earl ſent to comfort him, of his own Followers) writ to the Earl to remember his Impriſonment; who received anſwer, The Time would not ſuffer, but ſo ſoon as poſſible might be, he would haſten his Delivery: ſo indeed it ſeems he intended to do, but not ſo as Sir Thomas Overbury conceived, whoſe true Affection would not admit his Judgment to debate the ſtrangeneſs of his Impriſonment, which he might well think the Earl might eaſily have relieved.

The 5th of June, Viſcount Rocheſter ſent a Letter to Sir Thomas Overbury; in the Letter he ſent him a white Powder, willing Sir Thomas to take it: It will (quoth he) make you more ſick, but fear not, I will make this a means for your Delivery, and for the recovery of your Health. Sir Thomas Overbury never dreaming of baſe Treachery, but conceiving it as a friendly Policy, received the ſaid Powder, which wrought wrought upon him more vehemently; whereupon his Sickneſs grew more vehement or violent, and his Languiſhment increaſed: which white Powder, upon Weſton's Confeſſion, was Poiſon.

Sir Thomas Overbury's Sickneſs increaſing, and with it his wondering that he could not in two Months ſpace be releaſed, after his Phyſick taking, he thus writes to the Earl, lamenting his own Eſtate; for his Faith being thus ſhaken with the Earl's Unkindneſs, gave way for his Judgment to ſcan thoſe Actions, rather like an underſtanding Man, than like a loving Friend, as appeareth by his Letter ſent to Viſcount Rocheſter, the effect whereof was thus, as it is averred by the Depoſitions of Sir Thomas Overbury's Servants, who ſaw the Letter.

Sir Thomas Overbury's Letter to the Viſcount Rocheſter.

S I R,

'I Wonder you have not yet found means to effect my Delivery, but I remember you ſaid, 'you would be even with me,' [not ſuſpecting, as it ſeemeth, any Poiſoning, but an unkind Forgetfulneſs of my Lord of Rocheſter] 'and ſo indeed 'you are; but aſſure your ſelf, my Lord, if you 'do not releaſe me, but ſuffer me thus to die, my 'Blood will be required at your hands.'

My Lord comforts him, and excuſes, that it cannot yet be compaſſed: Sir Thomas, after the Powder taken, languiſheth deadly, and to comfort him, ſome Followers of my Lord of Rocheſter's are ſent to him daily, in the name of my Lord, by the appointment and procurement too of the Lady of Eſſex (as Weſton confeſſed) to viſit and comfort him, and to intreat him if he deſired any Meat, that he ſhould ſpeak, and it might be better perhaps provided for him, than he ſhould have in the Tower; this was about three Months after his Impriſonment.

He (as Men ſick deſire luſcious Meats) deſired Tarts and Jellies, which were provided by Mrs. Turner, with the knowledge of the ſaid Counteſs, and ſent unto him, of which he did eat; the which Tarts were poiſoned with Mercury Sublimate, not being ſo well coloured as other Tarts are, and Weſton confeſſed that he was ſtraitly charged not to taſte thereof.

Sir Thomas thus continuing languiſhing with the extremity of Sickneſs, until the 6th of September, when the aforeſaid Mrs. Turner did procure an Apothecary's Boy for twenty Pounds to poiſon a Clyſter, which was by the Boy and Weſton afterwards adminiſtred as good Phyſick, upon the 7th day of October; after the Receipt of the Clyſter, he fell into a great extremity of Vomiting, and other Purging, which left him not, till it cauſed his Soul to leave his poiſoned Body: this Weſton confeſſed and ſigned.

Being thus dead, he was preſently and very unreverently buried in a Pit, digged in a very mean place; on his Body thus venomouſly infected, appeared divers Blains and Bliſters: whereupon they, to take away as well his good Name, as his Life, did ſlanderouſly report, that he died of the French Pox; but this Report was cleared in Court, by the Depoſitions of his Servants, and other Men of worth there read.

That before his Impriſonment, he had a clean and ſound Body, only he had an Iſſue in his Left Arm, purpoſely made for the benefit of his Nature, for the avoiding of Rheum and ill Humours, which, with continual ſitting at his Study, he had ſubjected himſelf unto.

He further obſerved the Confeſſion of the Lieutenant to be, that if any Priſoner died there, his Body was to be viewed, and Inquiſition to be taken by the Coroner.

But Sir Thomas Overbury's Friends and others, by no means might be ſuffered to ſee his Body; and although it was reported, that there was an Inquiſition taken, yet it could by no means be found.

After Mr. Attorney had ended his Speech, Mr. Warr alſo of Council for the King, declared to the Court what Familiarity he had with Sir Thomas, being both of the Temple together, much commending his ſingular, honeſt and virtuous Converſation; affirming, That he was addicted to no diſhoneſt Actions: and from this he proceeded to urge his ſaid Uſage in the Tower, where he might have no Company, but the Apothecary and the Walloon; and repeating the ſending of the Tarts and Jellies in my Lord of Somerſet's Name, he ended his Speech with this Saying, Pereat unus, ne pereant omnes; pereat peccans, ne pereat Reſpub. Then, by the Commandment of the Court, were read by Mr. Fenſhaw the Examinations of divers Witneſſes taken before my Lord Chief Juſtice and others, which in effect were as follows.

Laurence Davies, Servant to Sir Thomas Overbury, examined the 15*th of* October, before the Lord Chief Juſtice.

He ſaith, That he had ſerved Sir Thomas Overbury eight or nine Years; in all which time he was very healthful, and never kept his Bed for any Sickneſs, only he was ſometimes troubled with the Spleen, for eaſe whereof, he had by the Advice of his Phyſician an Iſſue made in his Left Arm; but before his Impriſonment, he had no Sores, Bliſters, or other Defects in all his Body.

Alſo he ſaith, Sir Thomas would have gone over upon the Embaſſage, but was diſſuaded by Somerſet, who promiſed to bear him out: he complained, he needed not to be Priſoner if Somerſet would; and that if he died, his Blood would be required at his hands.

That Somerſet was as good as his word, who told him at Newmarket, he would be even with Sir Thomas Overbury.

Henry Payton, another Servant of Sir Thomas Overbury's, examined the 15*th of* October, 1615.

He affirmeth, That Sir Thomas was of a very good Conſtitution of Body, that he uſed ſometimes to run, to play at Foils, and ſuch-like; that he was of a moderate Diet, never had any Sores, ſaving the ſaid Iſſue in his Arm.

That Sir Thomas wrote Letters to Somerſet, ſignifying, that he needed not to lie in Priſon if Somerſet would, and if he died, his Blood ſhould be required at his hands.

That Sir Thomas, at one of the Clock at Night, meeting Somerſet in the Gallery at Whitehall, had Speeches with him touching the Counteſs, whom he called baſe Woman, and told Somerſet, he would overthrow all the King's Favours and Honours; and upon Diſpleaſure between them at this Conference, Sir Thomas Overbury deſired Somerſet that he might have his Portion due, and he would ſhift for himſelf. Whereunto Somerſet anſwered, And my Legs are ſtraight enough to carry me; and ſo flung away in Anger. All which this Examinant heard, heard, being in a Chamber next to the Gallery.

Sir Dudley Diggs being preſent in Court, and ſworn, declared viva voce, that he was ſent by a Privy Counſellor (a great Man) to Sir Thomas Overbury to bring him to this great Man, which he did; and coming back together over the Water in a Boat, Sir Thomas was much diſcontented; the Reaſon whereof he ſaid was, That he was perſuaded by the great Man to withdraw himſelf from the Court for ſome Reaſons which he diſcloſed not; and Sir Dudley afterwards being ſent by the Lords, to know the Reſolution of Sir Thomas touching the Embaſſage, he found him to rely upon the Lord of Somerſet, ſaying, My precious Chief knows the King's Mind better than any, and I the Mind of my precious Chief.

Richard Weſton the Priſoner examined, the 6th of October, 1615. coram Coke & Crew.

He affirmeth, That before Sir Thomas Overbury was in the Tower, he, this Examinant, carried three Letters to Somerſet, from the Lady Eſſex, to Royſton, Newmarket, and Hampton-Court, and he delivered anſwer to Mrs. Turner; and that upon the Letter to Hampton-Court, he had anſwer only by word of Mouth, That his Lordſhip would come: and that coming back, he met with the Counteſs and Mrs. Turner half way, in the Coach, whom he told, that the Lord only anſwered ſo; whereupon the Counteſs ſtrook out of the way into a Farmer's Houſe hard by, whither, within a little ſpace Somerſet came, and that afterwards they met in the Night at Mrs. Turner's Houſe in Pater-noſter-row. And he confeſſeth, that of a Year before Sir Thomas's Impriſonment, no Man carried Letters between them but he.

Sir Thomas Monſon examined the 5th of October, coram Coke & Crew.

He ſaith, That he never knew Weſton until Sir Thomas Overbury was Priſoner in the Tower; and that he preferred him to the Lieutenant, to be Keeper of Sir Thomas Overbury, at the Requeſt of the Counteſs.

Anne Turner Widow, examined the 11th of October, 1615. coram Coke & Crew.

She ſaith, That Weſton was an antient Servant, and her Husband's Bailiff in the Country; ſhe denieth to have any thing to do in placing him in the Tower; but ſaith, that the Counteſs of Eſſex did effect it, and uſed the help of Sir Thomas Monſon therein.

Sir Jervis Elvis examined the 3d of October, 1615. coram Coke & Crew.

He ſaith, He had a Letter from Sir Thomas Monſon, requeſting him, that Weſton might be Keeper of Sir Thomas Overbury, and that he did perform it; and afterwards having conference with Sir Thomas Monſon, he told him, That his Keeper was not to ſuffer any Letters or Tokens, or any things to be delivered unto him.

Richard Weſton the Priſoner examined again.

He confeſſeth, He ſhewed him the Glaſs that was delivered him by his Son from the Counteſs to the Lieutenant, and told him, that it came from the Counteſs of Eſſex, and that he perſuaded him not to give it to Sir Thomas.

He ſaith, That he had divers Tarts from the Counteſs, to give to Sir Thomas, with Caveats that he himſelf ſhould not taſte of them; and confeſſeth, that he thought they were poiſoned.

He ſaith, Mrs. Turner appointed him to come to White-hall, and that ſhe dealt with him, to give Sir Thomas Overbury the Water, and told him, he ſhould not drink thereof; and was promiſed a great Reward, and he ſuſpected it was Poiſon. His Son afterwards delivered him the Glaſs, which he ſhewed to the Lieutenant, who rebuked him, and ſo he ſet the Glaſs in a Study near to Sir Thomas's Chamber, but gave it him not; although he told Mrs. Turner, the next day, he had given the Water, which made Sir Thomas to vomit often, and to be exceeding ſick.

He ſaith, Mr. James and Mrs. Rawlins Servants to the Counteſs, came often to know of the Examinant, how Sir Thomas Overbury did, and what he would eat; and they delivered him Jellies and Tarts, which he gave Sir Thomas, who did eat thereof.

He ſaith, He demanded of Mrs. Turner his Reward, who anſwered, He was to have no Reward until Sir Thomas was dead, and he was promiſed a Purſuivant's Place; but confeſſeth, that afterwards, at two ſeveral times, he received ſecretly after the Death of Sir Thomas, for a Reward of Mrs. Turner from the Counteſs, 180 l.

William Weſton, Son to the Priſoner, examined.

He confeſſeth, He received a Glaſs from the Counteſs (by her Servant) two Inches long, being wrapped in Paper, which he delivered to his Father in the Tower.

Then was read the Confeſſion of the Lieutenant to the King.

He ſaith, That Weſton met him, carrying Sir Thomas's Supper in the one Hand, and the Glaſs in the other, and demanded of the Lieutenant this, Sir, ſhall I give it him now? Whereat the Lieutenant ſtepped to him, and asked him, What? to which Weſton ſaid, Why Sir, know you not what is to be done? And ſo the Lieutenant having made him to confeſs the Matter, diſſuaded him, and he ſeemed to be reſolved not to do it: and afterwards this Weſton confeſſed, that an Apothecary had twenty Pounds for adminiſtring a Clyſter to Sir Thomas Overbury.

Weſton, the Priſoner, examined before the Lord Zouch and others;

Confeſſeth, That Sir Thomas had a Clyſter which gave him ſixty Stools and a Vomit; alſo being confronted, with the Writings of Sir Jervis Elvis, and charged therewith, he confeſſeth the ſame to be true.

Simon Marſon, Muſician, examined.

Saith, He ſerved Sir Thomas Monſon ſix Years, and is preferred by him to the King's Service, but waiteth ſometimes upon Sir Thomas Monſon; he ſaith, That he received divers Tarts and Jellies from the Counteſs of Eſſex, to be carried to the Lieutenant of the Tower for Sir Thomas Overbury.

Paul de la Bell, examined;

Saith, That on the 3d of July, he made Sir Thomas Overbury a Bath by Dr. Micham's Advice, to cool his Body, and that he ſaw his Body very exceeding fair and clear; and again, he ſaw his Body (being dead) full of Bliſters, and ſo conſumed away as he never ſaw the like Body.

George Rawlins, a Kinſman to Sir Thomas Overbury, examined;

Saith, That upon the Bruit of the Murder of Sir Thomas, he was taxed by ſome, why he made no Proſecution; he thereupon made a Petition, and delivered it to the King, that the Examination of the Cauſe might be referred to Law, and denieth that he was perſuaded by any to the contrary: he ſaith, that he coming often to the Tower to ſee Sir Thomas, could not be ſuffered to ſee him ſo much as out at the Windows; and Weſton told him, it was the Commandment of the Council, and of the Lieutenant.

The Lieutenant of the Tower examined, coram Coke & Crew.

He ſaith, That after the Death of Sir Thomas, Weſton came to him, and told him he was much neglected and ſlighted by the Counteſs, and could receive no Reward; but afterwards he confeſſed he had received 100 l. and ſhould receive more: and the Lieutenant alſo ſaith, that Sir Thomas Overbury was very angry with his Apothecary at certain Vomits which he had, and alſo at the Tarts and Jellies which he had, would be found within a day or two ſtanding, ill-coloured, and that no body did eat thereof but Sir Thomas; and Weſton confeſſed unto him, that the Apothecary had twenty Pounds for adminiſtring the Clyſter.

Theſe Examinations being read and applied to the purpoſe, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, he would diſcharge his Duty firſt to God, in giving all Glory, for the bringing to light of ſo horrible and wicked a Fact; and next to the King, his great Maſter, who as in caſe of the like nature, as in the caſe of Zanquer and Turner, ſo eſpecially in this, hath given ſtraight charge of juſt and due Examination to be had, without any manner of Partiality or Fear in the World; to the intent, that as well the Innocent might be freed, as the Nocent and Guilty ſeverally puniſhed.

And for this purpoſe, his Majeſty hath with his own Hand written two Sheets of Paper on both ſides, concerning Juſtice to be adminiſtred to all Parties which were to be examined; which Writing, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſhewed to the Lord Mayor, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners; and then he declared the King's Juſtice, who, albeit the many Favours and Honours which his Majeſty had beſtowed on the Lord Somerſet, and his nearneſs to his Perſon, by reaſon of his Office, yet he had committed him Priſoner to the Dean of Weſtminſter's Houſe, under the Cuſtody of Sir Oliver St. John, and alſo had committed his Lady. So having laſt of all (again) demanded of the Priſoner, If he would put himſelf to be try'd by the Country? which he refuſed;

The Court was adjourn'd until Monday following, at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

On Monday the 23d of November, 1615. to which day the Court was adjourned by the ſaid Commiſſioners, after Proclamation made, the Jury of Life and Death call'd, the Priſoner Weſton was ſet to the Bar, and Mr. Fanſhaw Clerk of the Crown declared unto him, that he had been formerly arraigned, and had pleaded Not Guilty; ſo he demanded of him, how he would be tried: whereupon the Priſoner anſwered, By God and his Country. And thereupon the Jury being ſworn, and the Indictment being read as before, Sir Laurence Hide the Queen's Attorney being of Council with the King, having briefly rehearſed the Effect of the Indictment, ſhewed how that he muſt neceſſarily mention others that were guilty of the ſame Fact, wherein if any other Man or Woman were touched, the Cauſe it was, and not he that touched them.

And therefore Weſton being but a Stranger to Sir Thomas Overbury, and one, who by himſelf could reap no benefit by his Death, it was againſt all reaſon that he would do it of himſelf, therefore (ſaid he) I muſt needs open the whole Plot; and having firſt declared the Worth and Honeſty of Sir Thomas Overbury, ſhewed his Familiarity with Rocheſter, and how often he willed him to forbear the Company of the Lady Eſſex, terming her a vile and baſe Woman, which ſtirred up the Anger and Malice of the Counteſs againſt him.

And that afterwards, the King intended, for the Honour of Preferment of Sir Thomas Overbury, to ſend him upon an Embaſſage; whereunto he was willing, but was dealt with and perſuaded by the Lord Rocheſter, to diſobey the King's Direction and Counſel, with Promiſes that he would bear him out; by which Contempt Sir Thomas was committed to the Tower the 22d of April, 1613. Sir William Wade being Lieutenant of the Tower: the 6th of May following, Sir William was removed, and Sir Jervis Elvis put in his place.

And the next day after, Weſton, by the procurement of the Counteſs, was preferred to the Service of the Lieutenant, and to be Keeper of Sir Thomas; which Weſton had been Servant to Mrs. Turner, and the only Agent in conveying Letters and Meſſages between Rocheſter and the Counteſs: and he, whoſe Office ſhould have been to ſave and keep, was now appointed to kill and murder him.

He ſhewed, how the very ſame day of his Entertainment at the Tower, he was ſent for to the Counteſs, who perſuaded him, that if he would give Sir Thomas a Water that ſhould be delivered him, he ſhould be well rewarded, and ſhe bid him not taſte of it himſelf.

And that the 9th of the ſame month of May, the ſaid Water was ſecretly ſent from the Counteſs to Weſton by his Son; and the ſame Night Weſton meeting with the Lieutenant, and having Sir Thomas's Supper in one Hand, and the ſaid Glaſs in the other, he demanded of the Lieutenant, Sir, ſhall I give it him now? Whereupon the Lieutenant took him aſide, and diſſuaded him ſo far forth that he confeſſed, he thanked God upon his Knees, that he had met with him.

But Mr. Attorney obſerved this notwithſtanding, that the Lieutenant did let him go away with the Poiſon; and albeit he now denieth he ever gave the Poiſon, yet ſaid he delivered it: he confeſſed to Mrs. Turner he had done it, ſaying, It made him very ſick, and to vomit often, demanding of her his Reward; to which he anſwered, He was not to have his Reward until Sir Thomas were dead.

Then

Then he ſhewed how the laſt of June following, a certain Powder was ſent in a Letter to Sir Thomas Overbury from Rocheſter, perſuading him not to fear, though it made him ſick, for that ſhould be his Reaſon to move the King for his Enlargement.

And that the 14th of September, Weſton and the Apothecary miniſtred the Clyſter to Sir Thomas, which gave him ſixty Stools and Vomits, and that he died the next day, remembring the ſtrangeneſs of the Botches and Bliſters on his Body, being dead: he ſhewed how Weſton came to Mrs. Turner for his Reward, which was deferred till his Death; and that he had received in ſecret from the Counteſs by Mrs. Turner at ſeveral times for his Reward 180 l. and that the Apothecary had for his Reward 20 l. All which Weſton had confeſſed to be true.

Then remembring how ignominiouſly they buried him, not ſuffering any to ſee him, for fear he ſhould be digged up again, and without any Coroner's Inqueſt that ſhould be found; and thus he ended his Speech.

And to all this opened and ſet forth by Mr. Attorney, Mr. Warr only added thus much, which he deſired the Jury to conſider, That Weſton was Servant to Mrs. Turner, when Sir Thomas was committed, and then he was entertained and made Keeper to Sir Thomas Overbury; and having diſpatched his Buſineſs (Sir Thomas being dead and poiſoned) he ſtay'd no longer at the Tower, but returns again to his Mrs. Turner.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice exhorted the Jury to take God before their Eyes, and with equal Ballance to weigh as well the Anſwer of the Priſoner, as the Proofs and Examinations againſt him, declaring unto them how quietly and freely he had examined him from time to time, without menacing or rough uſage, which the Priſoner confeſſed: and my Lord, for matter of Law, ſatisfied the Jury, That albeit the Poiſoning in the Indictment be ſaid to be with Roſalgar, White Arſenick, and Mercury Sublimate, yet the Jury were not to expect preciſe Proof in that Point, ſhewing how impoſſible it were to convict a Poiſoner, who uſeth not to take any Witneſſes to the compoſing of his ſibber Sauces: wherefore he declared the Law in the like Caſe; As if a Man be indicted for murdering a Man with a Dagger, and it fall out upon Evidence to have been done with a Sword or with a Rapier, or with neither, but with a Staff; in this Caſe the Inſtrument ſkilleth not, ſo that the Jury find the Murder. And ſo in this Priſoner's Caſe, if they would be ſatisfied of the Poiſoning, it ſkilleth not with what; therefore he requireth them to attend the Proof.

Then were read, firſt the Examinations of Laurence Davies, as at the firſt Arraignment; then of Henry Payton, both Servants to Sir Thomas Overbury; then of Weſton himſelf formerly read.

Then the Examination of Sir David Wood, taken the 21ſt of October, 1615. ſince the firſt Arraignment.

He ſaith, He had obtained the King's Conſent to a Suit, for which he was a Petitioner, and that he was croſſed by the Lord Rocheſter and Sir Thomas Overbury: that for certain Words he had received from Sir Thomas Overbury, he intended to baſtinado him; that his Suit would have been worth 2200 l. and that Rocheſter would not let it paſs, unleſs he might have 1200 l.

That the Lady Eſſex ſent for this Examinant upon the day that the King and Queen went to Rocheſter with the Lady Elizabeth, and told him, ſhe underſtood that he had received much Wrong from Sir Thomas Overbury, and that he was a Gentleman that could revenge himſelf; and that Sir Thomas had much wronged her: and Sir David anſwered, That Sir Thomas had refuſed him the Field; ſhe perſuaded him to kill him, and promiſed him 1000 l. for his Reward, and Protection from his Enemies: which he refuſed, ſaying, He would be loth to hazard going to Tyburn upon a Woman's Word; but ſhe ſtill perſuaded him he might eaſily do it, as he returned late home from Sir Charles Wilmot's in his Coach.

Then were read the Examinations of Sir Thomas Monſon and Mrs. Turner, as at the firſt Arraignment.

Next, the Examination of Weſton before the Lord Zouch, and Sir Ralph Winwood, Sir Thomas Parrey, and Sir Foulke Grevill, at the Dutchy-houſe, the 29th of September, 1615. where Weſton did confeſs, That he was preferred to the keeping of Sir Thomas Overbury, by Mrs. Turner, upon the means and requeſt of Sir Thomas Monſon, to the Lieutenant; and that ſhe told him, If he would give Sir Thomas Overbury a Water which the Counteſs would ſend him, he ſhould be well rewarded; and being confronted with a Relation in Writing, which Sir Jervis Elvis had made to the King, as touching Sir Thomas Overbury, he confeſſed the ſame to be all true.

The Examination of the Lieutenant, taken the 5th of October, 1615.

He ſaith, That having conferred with his Servants about the time of Weſton's coming to the Tower, he found it to be the very next day after himſelf was made Lieutenant, and had the Poſſeſſion of the Tower; and that he had Letters from Sir Thomas Monſon, that Weſton might be Keeper to Sir Thomas Overbury; which Letters he had loſt: Sir Thomas Monſon told him the chief Purpoſe of Weſton's keeping of Sir Thomas Overbury, was, to ſuffer no Letters or other Meſſengers to paſs to or from him, and to that purpoſe he adviſed the Lieutenant.

Weſton's Examination the 5th of October, 1615.

He confeſſeth, That the next day he was preferred to the Tower, he had the keeping of Sir Thomas Overbury, and ſoon after he received the Glaſs by his Son ſecretly from the Counteſs; and that the Lieutenant told him, all the Tarts came likewiſe from her: and he confeſſeth, the Counteſs willed him to give them to Sir Thomas, but not to taſte of them himſelf.

Weſton's Examination the 1ſt of October, 1615.

Confeſſeth, That Mrs, Turner appointed him to come to White-hall to the Counteſs, the next day that he was at the Tower, and that he went, and the Counteſs did requeſt him to give to Sir Thomas Overbury a Water, which ſhe would deliver him, but not to drink of it himſelf; ſhe promiſed to give him a good Reward, and he ſuſpected it was Poiſon: he received the Glaſs by his Son, and told the Lieutenant of it, who did rebuke him and he ſet the Glaſs into a little Study; he confeſſeth, he told Mrs. Turner he had given it him, and demanded his Reward; that Mr. James and Mr. Rawlins, my Lord

Lord of Somerſet's Men, came often to know of him what Tarts, Jellies, or Wine Sir Thomas would have, and that they brought divers times Tarts and Jellies, whereof he did eat.

He confeſſeth to have received of the Counteſs in Rewards, after Sir Thomas Overbury's Death, by Mrs. Turner ſecretly, in all 180 l.

The Confeſſion of the Lieutenant to his Majeſty.

After Weſton was placed in the Tower, he met with me with Sir Thomas's Supper, and the Glaſs, and asked me, Sir, ſhall I give it him now? Wherein I proteſt unto your Majeſty my Ignorance, as I would alſo be glad to proteſt the ſame to the World: ſo I privately conferred with Weſton, and by this means made him aſſured unto me, and knew all, but diſſuaded him; and Weſton has, ſince the Death of Sir Thomas Overbury, confeſſed to me, that the Clyſter was his Overthrow, and the Apothecary had 20 l. for adminiſtring it.

Your Majeſty's Servant,
Sir Jervis Elvis.

Here the Lord Chief Juſtice obſerved by this Queſtion of Weſton to the Lieutenant, Shall I give it him now? that it was preſently agreed and plotted before What ſhould be done, and that nothing more was doubted on but the time When it ſhould be done.

The Teſtimony of Lawrence Davies taken upon Oath before Coke and Crew.

He affirmeth, That Weſton delivered him a Letter from Sir Thomas Overbury to Rocheſter, the Effect whereof was, That he would do his Endeavour in being a means of Friendſhip between Rocheſter and ſome others; but as touching the Marriage with the Counteſs of Eſſex, he would never give his Conſent: and alſo bringing a Letter from Rocheſter to Sir Thomas Overbury, he delivered it to Weſton, and a Paper of white Powder fell out, which Rocheſter perſuaded Sir Thomas to eat, and not to fear, though it made him ſick, for that ſhould be a means for his Enlargement; ſo they put the Powder into the Letter again: he ſaith, that he ſaw ſome part of the Powder in Weſton's hands after the Death of Sir Thomas Overbury.

The Examination of Simon Weſton and Paul de la Bell, at the firſt Arraignment.

Giles Rawlins Eſq; the 15th of October, 1615. ſaith, That upon the Bruit of poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, being taxed of divers, for that he ſtirred not in the Matter, Sir Thomas being his Kinſman and Means of his Preferment; he did of himſelf prefer a Petition to the King, that the Cauſe might be referred to the Judges of the Law, for ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, rather than to the Lords of the Council, by them to be examined; of which he had a gracious Anſwer: and ſaith, that of fourteen days before the death of Sir Thomas Overbury, he could never be ſuffered to ſee him, either in his Chamber, or at the Window; which Weſton ſaid, was the Commandment of the Lords and the Lieutenant.

And here the Lord Chief Juſtice declared what a Scandal they put upon his Majeſty and the State, that a Gentleman and a Freeman, being only committed upon Contempt, ſhould be more ſtreightly and cloſely kept than a Traitor or Bond-Slave, ſo that neither his Father, Brother, nor Friend might poſſibly ſee him. And to that Point, Mr. Overbury, Father to Sir Thomas, ſwore, being preſent in Court; who ſaid, That his Son being Priſoner in the Tower, and himſelf not being ſuffered to have Acceſs unto him, found at laſt, that Rocheſter was the Man that withſtood it.

The Lieutenant examined the 5th of October;

Saith, That after the Death of Sir Thomas Overbury, Weſton told him, That he was neglected by the Counteſs, and demanded his Reward: Mrs. Turner told him, The Counteſs had not Money; but afterwards he confeſſed, he had received ſome, and ſhould have more; and that Mr. James told him, My Lord of Somerſet would reward him for the Pains he took with Sir Thomas Overbury. He ſaith, That the Tarts were ſent from the Counteſs to Sir Thomas, which looked ill-favouredly, and that the Jellies, with a little ſtanding, would be furred, and thinketh they were poiſoned: alſo Weſton told him, that the Apothecary had 20 l. for giving the Clyſter, and that he was poiſoned with that Clyſter.

Here was well obſerved by the Court, as by the Queen's Attorney, That Weſton was not ſingle in his Confeſſion, but whenſoever he had confeſſed any thing in any of his Examinations, it was likewiſe confirmed by the Examinations of others, as the Lieutenant, his Son, &c.

The Examination of William Goare one of the Sheriffs of London;

Saith, Weſton being in his Cuſtody, he often perſuaded him to put himſelf to be tried by his Country, telling him, he would firſt kill himſelf, and ask God Forgiveneſs afterwards: and Weſton anſwered, He hoped he would not make a Net to catch little Birds, and let the great ones go.

Then Mr. Warr craving leave of the Court to ſpeak, proteſted, in his Experience he never found a Buſineſs ſo proſecuted with degrees of Malice, which was the Ground of Sir Thomas Overbury's Overthrow; he urged the Evidence in the Examination of Sir David Wood, and ſhewed the Reaſons of the Malice againſt him to be, for that he was ſo great an Impediment to Affections; then he made the Dependency Mrs. Turner had to the Lady, and Weſton to Mrs. Turner, and how they all concluded to kill Sir Thomas Overbury, the like whereof he ſaid our Fathers never ſaw before us; and he lamented the Place from whence the Poiſon came, ſhould be from the Court, the Place (ſaid he) from whence all Men expect their Safeties and Protection.

Laſtly, He obſerved the Finger of God, even in this, that the Poiſon had been ſcarcely ſuſpected at all, or enquired after, had it not been for the extraordinary ſtrange Things appearing after his Death, which was the firſt only Cauſe of Suſpicion and Muttering.

The Evidence being given, Weſton was demanded what he could ſay for himſelf? Who, although he had before confeſſed all his Examinations to be true, yet he ſeemed to excuſe himſelf in a kind of Ignorance or Unawares: he ſaid, he received the ſaid Glaſs, and thought it was not good, but denied nied the giving of it to Sir Thomas. Being demanded, Why he had formerly accuſed one Franklin, for delivering him the ſaid Glaſs from the Counteſs? (from whom indeed it was ſent;) He confeſſed it was to ſave his Child: and finally could ſay nothing that had any colour of material or ſubſtantial Point to excuſe or argue Innocency in him. So the Court referred him to the Jury; who went together, and within a ſhort ſpace returned, being agreed upon their Verdict, and there at the Bar gave in, that Weſton was guilty of the felonious Murdering and Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury. And then the Clerk of the Crown demanded of Weſton, What he could ſay for himſelf, why Judgment ſhould not be pronounced againſt him according to Law? To which he anſwered, He referred himſelf to my Lord, and to the Country. And then the Lord Chief Juſtice, before he pronounced Sentence of Death, ſpake to this effect, That for the Duty of the Place, he muſt ſay ſomewhat; and that to two ſeveral Perſons:

Firſt, To the Auditory: And,
Secondly, To the Priſoner.

And that which he ſpake to the Auditory, he divided into four Parts:

1*ſt*, The Manifeſtation of the Glory of God, and Honour of the King.

2*dly*, The preventing of other damned Crimes of Poiſoning.

3*dly*, An Anſwer to certain Objections.

4*thly*, That there is no Practice of Conſpiracy in Proſecution of the Buſineſs.

For the 1*ſt*, He obſerved the Finger of God in the manifeſtation and bringing to light of this Matter, having ſlept two Years, being ſhadowed with Greatneſs, which cannot overcome the Cry of the People.

He obſerved alſo the Providence and Goodneſs of God, to put in the Hearts of himſelf and the reſt of the Judges, the day of his laſt Arraignment, when the Priſoner ſtood mute, not to give Judgment againſt him for that time, but defer it till now; and how in the mean time it pleaſed his Majeſty out of his gracious Care and Pity, to ſend to the Priſoner, firſt the Biſhop of London, next the Biſhop of Ely, to admoniſh and perſuade him for the ſaving of his Soul; who, after each of them had ſpent two hours with him, it pleaſed God (when they had left him) to move his Heart, ſo that now he did put himſelf to be tried by the Country; by which means (uſing Weſton's own Words) he ſaid, The great Flies ſhall not eſcape, but receive their Puniſhment. For concluſion of his firſt Point, he laſtly obſerved, Divinum quiddam in vulgi opinione, that notwithſtanding ſo many uncertain Rumours touching this Caſe, at laſt it proved to be true.

2*dly*, He declared, how for prevention of this damned Crime of Poiſoning, Juſtice was the golden Mean, and declared his Majeſty's Reſolution ſtreightly to execute Juſtice for that Treaſon; and he uſed this Saying, Nemo prudens, &c. and deſired God that this Precedent of Overbury might be an Example and Terror againſt this horrible Crime, and therefore it might be called, The great Oyer of Poiſoning.

3*dly*, He ſaid, That at the Arraignment were certain Criticks put, who had given out, the Priſoner ſhould deny his Examinations; and found ſo much fault, for that the Examinations were read, the Priſoner ſtanding mute. But for the firſt, how untrue it was, all the World ſaw the Priſoner here confeſſing them, all being read and ſhewed unto him; and for the ſecond, beſides that it was exceeding diſcreet and convenient the World ſhould receive ſome Satisfaction in a Cauſe of that nature, he cited and ſhewed, that by the Laws of the Land they ought and were bound to do, notwithſtanding the Greatneſs of any that might thereby be impeached; of whom he ſaid, although this was unicum crimen, yet it was not unicum crimen.

4*thly*, As touching the ſuppoſed Practice or Conſpiracy, he ſolemnly proteſted to God, he knew of none, nor of any Semblance for Colour thereof; and therefore he much inveighed againſt the Baſeneſs and Unworthineſs of ſuch as went about ſo untruly and wickedly to ſlander the Courſe of Juſtice. And ſo he came, laſt of all, to that which he had to ſpeak of Weſton the Priſoner.

Firſt, Touching the Wickedneſs of his Fact, he very ſeriouſly exhorted him to an unfeigned Confeſſion and Contrition for the ſame, declaring unto him, how that his Confeſſion would be a Satisfaction to God and the World, by his Faith and true Repentance he would lay hold upon the Merits of his Saviour.

He perſuaded him, that no vain Hope (which is a Witch) ſhould keep him back from giving Satisfaction to the World, by diſcovering the Guiltineſs of the Great-ones; aſſuring him, that after this Life, as Death left him, ſo Judgment ſhould find him.

And laſtly, taking occaſion there to remember this Poiſoning to have been a Popiſh Trick, which he inſtanced by examples of one Gurnandus de Birlanus, mentioned 22 Edw. I. Squier, that attempted to poiſon Queen Elizabeth's Saddle; Lopez, and Mrs. Turner: he then proceeded to give Judgment, which was,

That the Priſoner ſhould be carried from thence to the Place from whence he came, and from thence to Tyburn, and there to be hanged by the Neck till he was dead.

Judgment being given, the Lord Chief Juſtice commanded, that the Priſoner might have convenient Reſpite, and the Company of ſome godly learned Men to inſtruct him for his Soul's health.

The Tryal of Sir THOMAS MONSON, at Guild-Hall, the 4*th of* December, 1615.

WHEN he came to the Bar, he made a Motion to the Lord Chief Juſtice; That, whereas he had written unto his Lordſhip, to ask the Lord-Treaſurer two Queſtions, which my Lord would do; he deſired then an Anſwer, and that Sir Robert Cotton might be preſent.

The Queſtions read, he was indicted for conſpiring with Weſton to poiſon Sir Thomas Overbury; to which he pleaded, Not Guilty, and would be tried by God and his Country.

The Lord Chief Juſtice brake up the Proceedings, and made a Speech to this effect, viz.

He ſaw a great Aſſembly, and though it had been ſhewed them often, yet it could not be ſaid too often, that the City was much bound to God, and to his Deputy on Earth the King, his Maſter, for their great Deliverance, and exact Juſtice; for God was always juſt; and for the King, though they were never ſo high in Place, nor ſo dear to him, though his own Creatures, yet his Juſtice is dearer to him, for which we are upon our Knees to give him Thanks; as alſo for ſo mild a Proceeding in ſo great an Affair: for neither the great Man's Houſe in the Tower, nor his Lady's Houſe, nor this Priſoner's Houſe (to my knowledge) have been ſearched, neither hath this Priſoner been committed to the Sheriff, but to an Alderman, a Man who of all others might be moſt kind to him; for, as I take it, leſt I ſhould be miſtaken, Sir Francis Anderſon married Sir Stephen Somes's Daughter, and Sir Thomas Monſon married Sir Francis Anderſon's Siſter. I never knew the like Favour, nor do I like it ſo well, but do declare it as a gentle Proceeding from the King.

For other things, I dare not diſcover Secrets; but though there was no Houſe ſearched, yet ſuch Letters were produced, which make our Deliverance as great, as any that happened to the Children of Iſrael.

For Weſton and Mrs. Turner, they died penitently, as is worthy to be written in Letters of Gold; and for the Lieutenant, though with great Imprecations, and a high hand he denied, yet for the great Glory of the King's Juſtice, he died moſt penitently and reſolutely: this is ſpoken to the Praiſe of God, that hath crowned theſe juſt Proceedings, Juſtitia confirmata non eget Authoritate, though not having reaſon for it; wherein we may ſee the great Hand of God, for that Morning the Lieutenant was arraigned, he came to me as one afflicted in Conſcience, not knowing of his Arraignment, with evidence againſt him: which being delivered to the Jury, one of them heard him ſay, Then Lord have mercy on me; and for this preſent, Non eſt conſtantia longa de vita hominis; therefore he muſt be conveyed to the Tower as a ſafer Place, till further Order be taken. Then he addreſſed his Speech to Sir Thomas Monſon, ſaying, Whereas you name my Lord-Treaſurer, every Man's Fame is dear unto him, and he hath ever been honourable, you ſhall hear what he hath anſwered to my Letter.

'After my hearty Commendations, I have heard 'that Sir Thomas Monſon thinks I can clear him, 'but I know nothing of him to accuſe or excuſe 'him; but I hope he is not guilty of ſo foul a Crime.

You hear (quoth he) that he will neither accuſe you, nor excuſe you.

Monſon. I do not accuſe the Lord-Treaſurer, nor calumniate him, for I know he is very honourable, but I deſire to have Anſwer to my two Queſtions.

Ld Ch. Juſt. You ſhall hear more of that when the time ſerveth; do you as a Chriſtian, and as Joſhua bad Achan, My Son acknowledge thy Sin, and give Glory to God.

Monſon. If I be Guilty, I renounce the King's Mercy and God's; I am innocent.

Ld Ch. Juſt. There is more againſt you than you know of.

Monſon. If I be Guilty, it is of that I know not.

Ld Ch. Juſt. You are Popiſh, that Pulpit was the Pulpit where Garnet died, and the Lieutenant as firmly; I am not ſuperſtitious, but we will have another Pulpit.

Daudridge. It is an Atheiſt's word to renounce God's Mercy, you muſt think the Change of your Lodging means ſomewhat.

Hide. I have looked into this buſineſs, and I proteſt my Lord, he is as guilty as the guiltieſt.

Monſon. There was never Man more innocent than I; in this will I die an Innocent.

After this Speech, certain Yeomen of his Majeſty's Guard, attending for that purpoſe, conducted him to the Tower, where between the Yeomen and the Wards, there was ſome Contention about his Entertainment.

The Tryal of the Lady Frances Countess of Somerset, for the Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, the 24th of May, 14 Jac. I. 1616.

The Summons of the Peers to the Tryal.

AFTER our hearty Commendations to your Lordship: Whereas the King's Majesty has resolv'd, that the Earl of Somerset, and the Countess his Wife, lately indicted of Felony, for the Murder and Poisoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, then his Majesty's Prisoner in the Tower, shall now receive their lawful and publick Tryal, by their Peers, immediately after the end of this present Easter Term; at the Tryal of which noble Personages your Lordship's Presence, as being a Peer of the Realm, and one of approv'd Wisdom and Integrity, is requisite to pass upon them: These are to let your Lordship understand, that his Majesty's Pleasure is, and commandeth by these our Letters, that your Lordship make your repair to the City of London, by the eleventh Day of the Month of May following, being some few days before the intended Tryal; at which time your Lordship shall understand more of his Majesty's Pleasure. So not doubting of your Lordship's Care to observe his Majesty's Directions, we commit you to God.

The

The Form of their Sitting and their Ceremonies.

When my Lord Chancellor, who for this time was High-Steward of England, came into the Court, there came before him ſix Serjeants at Arms, with their Maces; Sir George Coppin with his Patent; Sir Richard Coningsby with his white Staff; Mr. Manwaring with the Great Seal; he himſelf, at the upper end of the Court, ſitting under a Cloth of Eſtate: on both Hands of him the Peers, under them the Judges; at the farther end the King's Counſel, below the Judges; on one ſide Finch, Keeper of the Records of Attainders, the Clerk of the Crown and his Deputy; in the midſt of the Court, the Serjeant-Crier ſtanding by him, Sir Richard Coningsby, Sir George Coppin, the Seal-bearer, &c. at my Lord Steward's Feet. The Priſoner at the Bar behind the King's Counſel, the Lieutenant of the Tower in a little ſpace adjoining to the Bar.

All being ſilent, Sir George Coppin riſes and delivers the Patent to the Lord High Steward, upon his Knee; he receives it and kiſſes it, then redelivers it to Mr. Fanſhaw, who takes it kneeling. Then the Serjeant-Crier makes a Proclamation in the Lord High Steward's Name, to keep ſilence; then Mr. Fanſhaw reads the Commiſſion, which bears date the 9th of May: then there is another O yes, to certify my Lord Steward, whether Weſton were convicted as Principal, for the Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury; then the Lord Chief Juſtice delivers a Schedule indorſed with a Certificate of four Judges of the King's-Bench, and others the Commiſſioners. This Fanſhaw, turning to my Lord Steward, reads. A third O yes, for certifying of other Indictments; my Lord Coke delivers another Schedule indors'd with the Certificate of my Lady Somerſet's Indictment; which Fanſhaw, as before, read. A fourth O yes, for Walter Lee, Serjeant at Arms, to return the Precept for the Peers of Frances Counteſs of Somerſet; which accordingly, after his three Reverences to the Lord High Steward, he delivered to Mr. Fanſhaw: he reads the Indorſement. A fifth O yes, to call the Lords ſummon'd by the Command of the Lord High Steward, to anſwer to their Names, which they accordingly did, beginning at the firſt, as every one was named putting off their Hats, and ſtanding up till the next was named. A ſixth O yes to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to return his Precept, and bring the Priſoner to the Bar; which he did, and gave his Precept to the Serjeant, who gave it to Mr. Fanſhaw, and he, as before, read the Indorſement. The Priſoner made three Reverences to his Grace and the Peers, in black Tammel, a Cypreſs Chaperon, a Cobweb Lawn Ruff and Cuffs.

L. H. S. My Lords, the Reaſon why you be call'd hither this day, is to ſit as Peers of Frances Counteſs of Somerſet.

Mr. Fanſhaw, Clerk of the Crown. Frances Counteſs of Somerſet, hold up thy Hand.

She does ſo, and held it up till Mr. Lieutenant told her ſhe might put it down; and then reads the Indictment, containing Weſton's Accounts, in the poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, and her abetting of him, the 8th of May 1613.

The Counteſs of Somerſet, all the while the Indictment was reading, ſtood, looking pale, trembled, and ſhed ſome few Tears; and at the firſt naming of Weſton in the Indictment, put her Fan before her Face, and there held it half cover'd till the Indictment was read.

Mr. Fanſhaw. Frances Counteſs of Somerſet, what ſayſt thou? Art thou guilty of this Felony and Murder, or not guilty?

The Lady Somerſet making an Obeiſance to the Lord High Steward, anſwer'd Guilty; with a low Voice, but wonderful fearful.

My Lady, upon her Arraignment, having pleaded Guilty, the Proceeding after was thus:

Mr. Attorney. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, I am glad to hear this Lady's ſo free Acknowledgment, for Confeſſion is noble. Thoſe that have been formerly indicted at their Arraignment, perſiſted in denial, as Weſton, Elvis, Franklin and Turner; but you ſee this Lady's Humility and Repentance by ſo pleading; and certainly ſhe cannot but be a Spectacle of much Commiſeration, if you either reſpect the Sex, a Woman, or her Parentage, honourable; but this day and to-morrow is to crown Juſtice: the Mercy-Seat is the inner part of the Temple, the Throne publick, and therefore I ſhould now only pray a Record of the Confeſſion and Judgment: but ſince the Peers are met, for Honour's ſake it is good to declare the King's Juſtice. This is the ſecond time ſince the King's coming, theſe thirteen years, that any Peers have been arraign'd, and both theſe times your Grace had the Place of High-Steward; the firſt were Grey and Cobham, and though they were convicted, yet Execution followed not. No noble Blood hath yet been ſpilt ſince his Majeſty's Reign. The firſt was Revenge of Treaſon amongſt Malecontents; and this of a particular Offence to a private Subject, againſt thoſe that have been ſo high in the King's Grace and Favour, and therefore deſerve to be written in a Sun-beam. But his being the beſt Maſter in the World, hinders him not from being the beſt King; for he can as well plain a Hill as raiſe a Valley: a good Leſſon to put to my Lords the Peers; he is Lieutenant to him that is no Reſpecter of Perſons. This that I ſhould now ſpeak of, may be reduc'd to that which was acted in the Vault, and ſince upon the Stage: The firſt I will not now enter into, becauſe I will neither grieve a Lady that is preſent, nor touch a Lord that is abſent; my Duty requires it not, and my Humanity forbids it. For that which hath been upon the Stage, which is the Theatre of God's Juſtice, you ſhall underſtand that which hath been worthily acted by the King, in this noble Work of Juſtice, and right well by his Miniſters. Overbury dy'd poiſoned the 15th of September 1613. in the Tower of London: He was no ſooner dead, but there was a certain Rumour and Muttering that was Vox Populi, that Overbury came ſtrangely to his Death: And in that time, on the contrary hand, there was another Rumour, but that was Vox Diaboli, that he died of a foul Diſeaſe, ſo foul a one as is not fit for me to name. But for two years after this, though Overbury's Blood cried for Revenge, Vox Dei was not heard. Gloria Dei celare, Regis perſcrutare rem: It is the Glory of God to conceal a thing, of a King to find it out; yet all the while God ſo dazled the Eyes of theſe two great Procurers, and their Inſtruments, that the firſt look'd not about them, the other fled not. About the beginning of the laſt Progreſs it firſt brake forth, and as all Murders are ſtrange in their Diſcovery, ſo this was miraculous, for it came out in a Compliment thus. My Lord of Shrewsbury, who is now with God, commended Sir Jervis

Elvis

Elvis to a Counſellor of Eſtate, and it was by him that Sir Jervis, in reſpect of the good Report he had heard made of his Honour and Worth, deſired to be made known unto him. That Counſellor anſwered, That he took it for a Favour from him; but withal added, there lies a kind of heavy Imputation on him, about Overbury's Death. I could wiſh he would clear himſelf, and give ſome Satisfaction in the point. This my Lord Shrewſbury related back, and preſently Elvis was ſtruck with it, and makes a kind of Diſcovery, that ſome Attempts were undertaken againſt Overbury, but took no effect, as check'd by him. Though the truth be, he lack'd rather Fortitude in the Repulſe, than Honeſty. This Counſellor weighing well this Narration from Elvis, acquainted the King with the Adventure; who commanded preſently that Elvis ſhould ſet down his Knowledge in Writing, which accordingly he did but ſtill reſerving himſelf within his own Compaſs, not to touch himſelf, ſtill endeavouring rather to diſcover others, than any elſe ſhould undertake that Office, and ſo accuſe him. The King ſtill endeavours to ſearch the Truth of this Buſineſs, gives direction for the Examination of the Truth of it, commits it to certain Counſellors; they pick ſomething out of Weſton, then the further Enquiry is deliver'd over to my Lord Coke, who in this Cauſe was very painful, took two or three hundred Examinations; but when he found it might touch upon greater Perſons, then he deſired ſome others might be join'd with him, which was accordingly granted; namely, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Steward, the Lord Zouch. But then there were no Practices left untry'd for the Suppreſſion of the Diſcovery; Weſton was ſollicited to ſtand mute, but at laſt this dumb Devil was caſt out. Then follows Elvis, Turner, Franklin, all of which were Actors in this Tragedy, without Malice, but no Authors. Now when this Lady comes to her part, ſhe meets Juſtice in the way, by Confeſſion, which is the Corner-ſtone either of Mercy or Judgment; yet it is ſaid, that Mercy and Truth be met together. Truth you have in her Confeſſion, and that may be a Degree to Mercy, which we muſt leave to him in whoſe power it reſides; in the mean time this Day muſt be reſerved for Judgment. Now to conclude, and give you an Account of the often Procraſtinations in this Buſineſs; the firſt was due to Humanity, her Child-birth; the ſecond was for Reaſon of State; and the laſt had a grave and weighty Cauſe. Thoſe Directions the King at the firſt gave written with his own Hand, for the Examination of this Buſineſs, I deſire may be read.

The King's Inſtructions read.

There be two Things in this Cauſe to be try'd, and the Verity can be but in one of them; Firſt, Whether my Lord of Somerſet and my Lady were the Procurers of Overbury's Death; or, That this Imputation hath been by ſome practiſed to caſt an Aſperſion upon them. I would firſt have you diligently enquire of the firſt; and if you find them clear, then I would have you as carefully look after the other, to the intent ſuch Practices may be diſcovered, and not ſuffer'd to paſs with Impunity.

Mr. Attorney. There be other Directions in theſe Inſtructions, by way of Interrogatories, that are not now neceſſary to be read.

L. H. S. Let the Lords the Peers view theſe Directions from the King.

Ld Coke. None of theſe Interrogatories which the King deſired there ſhould be Examinations upon, came away empty; and whatſoever Whiſperings there be abroad of the Death of Weſton, they all (ſome before the hour of their Death) confeſs'd the Fact, and died penitent; and if need ſhould require, I have brought their Confeſſor along, (namely, Dr. Whiting.)

L. H. S. My Lords, you ſee and have heard thoſe Directions under the King's Hand; give the Glory to God, and Honour to the King.

Mr. Attorney. May it pleaſe your Grace, &c. whereas Frances Counteſs of Somerſet hath been indicted as Acceſſary before the Fact, of the wilful Poiſoning and Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury; upon her Indictment, ſhe hath been arraign'd; upon her Arraignment, pleaded guilty: I deſire that her Confeſſion may be recorded, and Judgment againſt the Priſoner.

Fanſhaw. Frances Counteſs of Somerſet, hold up thine Hand: Whereas thou haſt been indicted, arraign'd, and pleaded guilty, as Acceſſary before the Fact, of the wilful Poiſoning and Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury; what canſt thou now ſay for thy ſelf, why Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounc'd againſt thee?

C. of Som. I can much aggravate, but nothing extenuate my Fault; I deſire Mercy, and that the Lords will interceed for me to the King. (This ſhe ſpake humbly, fearfully, and ſo low, the Lord Steward could not hear it, but Mr. Attorney related it.)

Mr. Attorney. The Lady is ſo touch'd with Remorſe and Senſe of her Fault, that Grief ſurprizes her from expreſſing of her ſelf; but that which ſhe hath confuſedly ſaid, is to this effect, That ſhe cannot excuſe herſelf, but deſires Mercy.

Sir Richard Conningsby ſitting before the Lord High Steward, riſes, and, upon his Knee, delivers him the White Staff.

L. H. S. Frances Counteſs of Somerſet, whereas thou haſt been indicted, arraigned, pleaded guilty, and that thou haſt nothing to ſay for thy ſelf, it is now my part to pronounce Judgment; only thus much before, Since my Lords have heard with what Humility and Grief you have confeſſed the Fact, I do not doubt they will ſignify ſo much to the King, and mediate for his Grace towards you: but in the mean time, according to the Law, the Sentence muſt be this, That thou ſhalt be carried from hence to the Tower of London, and from thence to the place of Execution, where you are to be hang'd by the Neck till you be dead; and Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

The Arraignment and Tryal of ROBERT CARR Earl of Somerſet, on Saturday May 25. 14 Jac. I. Anno Dom. 1616.

Serj. Cryer. O Yes, my Lord High-Steward of England purpoſes this day to proceed to the Tryal of Robert Earl of Somerſet. O yes, Whoſoever have any Indictments touching this Cauſe, publickly give them in.

My Lord Coke delivers in the Indictment of my Lord of Somerſet to Mr. Fanſhaw indors'd.

Serj. Cryer. O yes, Walter Lee, Serjeant at Arms, return the Precept for the Lords, which thou haſt warn'd to be here this day. O yes. [He calls every Lord by his Name, and they ſtand up as they be call'd.]

My Lord High Steward excuſes the Lords Mounteagle and Ruſſel of their Abſence, in reſpect of their Sickneſs.

Serj. Cryer. O yes, Lieutenant of the Tower, return thy Precept, and bring the Priſoner to the Bar. Which he did, and my Lord makes three Reverences to the Lord High Steward and the Lords.

Mr. Fanſhaw. Robert Earl of Somerſet, hold up thy Hand.

He holds it up ſo long until Mr. Lieutenant bad him hold it down. The Indictment is read, containing Weſton's Actions in the poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, and his abetting of him, the 8th of May 1613.

My Lord of Somerſet was apparelled in a plain black Sattin Suit, laid with two Sattin Laces in a Seam; a Gown of Unent Velvet lin'd with Unſhorn; all the Sleeves laid with Sattin Lace; a pair of Gloves with Sattin tops; his George about his Neck, his Hair curl'd, his Viſage pale, his Beard long, his Eyes ſunk in his head. Whilſt his Indictment was reading, he three or four times whiſper'd to the Lieutenant.

Mr. Fanſhaw. Robert Earl of Somerſet, What ſayſt thou, art thou Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

My Lord of Somerſet making an Obeiſance to the Lord High Steward, anſwered, Not Guilty.

Mr. Fanſhaw. How wilt thou be try'd?

Ld Som. By God and the Country; but preſently recalling himſelf, ſaid, By God and my Peers.

Serj. Cryer. O yes, all you that be to give in Evidence againſt Robert Earl of Somerſet, who ſtands now at the Bar upon his Deliverance, make your Appearance, and you ſhall be heard what you have to ſay againſt him.

My Lord of Somerſet, upon his Arraignment, having pleaded Not Guilty, the Proceeding after was thus.

L. H. S. Robert Earl of Somerſet, you have been arraign'd, and pleaded Not Guilty; now I muſt tell you, whatſoever you have to ſay in your own Defence, ſay it boldly, without Fear; and though it be not the ordinary Cuſtom, you ſhall have Pen and Ink to help your Memory: but remember that God is the God of Truth; a Fault defended is a double Crime; hide not the Verity, nor affirm an Untruth; for, to deny that which is true, increaſes the Offence; take heed leſt your Wilfulneſs cauſe the Gates of Mercy to be ſhut upon you. Now for you, my Lords the Peers, you are to give diligent Attention to that which ſhall be ſaid; and you muſt not reſt alone upon one piece of Evidence, but ground your Judgment upon the whole. This moreover I would have you remember, that though you be not ſworn as common Juries, upon a Book, yet that you are ty'd in as great a Bond, your own Honour and Fidelity, and Allegiance to the King: and thus I leave the whole Proceeding to your Cenſures. And for you that be of the King's Counſel, free your Diſcourſe from all Partiality, but let Truth prevail, and endeavour to make it appear.

Serj. Mountague. My Lord High Steward of England, and you my Lords, this cannot be but a heavy Spectacle unto you, to ſee that Man that not long ſince in great Place, with a white Staff, went before the King, ſhould now at this Bar hold up his Hand for Blood; but this is the Change of Fortune, nay, I might better ſay, the Hand of God, and Work of Juſtice, which is the King's Honour.

But now to the Fact; Robert Earl of Somerſet ſtands indicted as Acceſſary before the Fact, of the wilful Murder and Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, done by Weſton, but procur'd by him; this, my Lord, is your Charge. The Indictment hath been found by Men of good Quality, ſeventeen Knights and Eſquires of the beſt Rank and Reputation, ſome of whoſe Names I will be bold to read unto you; Sir Thomas Fowler, Sir William Slingsby, and fifteen more; theſe have return'd billa vera. Now an Indictment is but an Accuſation of Record in Form thus; Weſton, at four ſeveral times, gave Overbury four ſeveral Poiſons, the firſt, May the 9th, 1613. that was Roſalgar, carrying this Poiſon in one Hand, and his Broth in the other; the ſecond was June following, and that was Arſenick; the third was July the 10th following, and that was Mercury Sublimate in Tarts; the the fourth was September the 14th following, and that was Mercury Sublimate in a Clyſter, given by Weſton and an Apothecary yet unknown, and that kill'd him. Of theſe four ſeveral Poiſons miniſtred by Weſton, and procured by you, the 15th of September 1615. Overbury dy'd, and the Author is ever worſe than the Actor. The firſt Poiſon laid in the Indictment, that Weſton gave Sir Thomas Overbury, was the 9th of May; and therefore we ſay, That the Lord Somerſet, the 8th of May, hir'd, counſel'd and abetted Weſton to this Fact; and as this Day, my Lord, I do charge you for a King, ſo heretofore King David was charg'd in the like Caſe, for the Murder of Uriah; and though David was under his Pavilion, and Uriah in the Army, yet David was the Cauſe of his Murder: So though you were in

in the King's Chamber, and Overbury in the Tower, yet it was you that kill'd him. It was a ſtronger Hand than Weſton's that wrought this. The Proof, Mr. Attorney, will follow; and I will now conclude with two Deſires to the Peers; Firſt, That they will not expect viſible Proofs in the Work of Darkneſs: The Second is, That whereas in an Indictment there be many things laid only for Form, you are not to look that the Proof ſhould follow that, but only that which is ſubſtantial; and the Subſtance muſt be this, Whether my Lord of Somerſet procur'd or caus'd the Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, or no?

L. H. S. That indeed, my Lords, is that which you are to look after, Whether my Lord of Somerſet was the Cauſe of his Poiſoning, or not.

Ld Coke. This was very well mov'd by Mr. Recorder, and the Law is clear in this Point, that the Proof muſt follow the Subſtance, not the Form.

The Judges all riſing, affirm'd this to be true.

Sir Francis Bacon's Speech at the Arraignment of the Earl of Somerſet.

IT may pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and you my Lords the Peers, you have here before you Robert Earl of Somerſet to be tried for his Life, concerning the procuring and conſenting to the Poiſoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, then the King's Priſoner in the Tower of London, as an Acceſſary before the Fact.

I know your Honours cannot behold this noble Man, but you muſt remember the great Favours which the King hath conferred on him, and muſt be ſenſible, that he is yet a Member of your Body, and a Peer, as you are; ſo that you cannot cut him off from your Body, but with Grief: and therefore you will expect from us that give in the King's Evidence, ſound and ſufficient Matter of Proof to ſatisfy your Honours Conſciences.

As for the Manner of the Evidence, the King our Maſter (who amongſt other his Virtues, excelleth in that Virtue of the Imperial Throne, which is Juſtice) hath given us command, that we ſhould not expatiate nor make Invectives, but materially purſue the Evidence, as it conduceth to the Point in queſtion.

A Matter, that (though we are glad of ſo good a Warrant) yet we ſhould have done of our ſelves: For far be it from us by any ſtrains of Wit or Arts, to ſeek to play Prizes, or to blazon our Names in Blood, or to carry the day otherwiſe than upon ſure Grounds; we ſhall carry the Lanthorn of Juſtice (which is the Evidence) before your Eyes upright, and ſo be able to ſave it from being put out with any ground of Evaſion or vain Defence, not doubting at all, but that the Evidence it ſelf will carry that Force, as it ſhall need no Advantage or Aggravation.

Firſt, my Lords, The Courſe that I will hold in delivering of that which I ſhall ſay (for I love Order) is this:

1*ſt*, I will ſpeak ſomewhat of the Nature and Greatneſs of the Offence, which is now to be tried, not to weigh down my Lord with the Greatneſs of it, but rather contrariwiſe to ſhew, that a great Offence needs a good Proof. And that the King, how ſoever he might eſteem this Gentleman heretofore as the Signet upon his Finger (to uſe the Scripture Phraſe) yet in ſuch a caſe as this, he was to put it off.

2*dly*, I will uſe ſome few words touching the Nature of the Proofs, which in ſuch a caſe are competent.

3*dly*, I will ſtate the Proofs.

And, laſtly, I will produce the Proofs, either out of Examination and Matters of Writing, or Witneſſes viva voce.

For the Offence it ſelf, it is of Crimes, next unto High-Treaſon, the greateſt; it is the fouleſt of Felonies. It hath three Degrees; Firſt, It is Murder by Impoiſonment; Secondly, It is Murder committed upon the King's Priſoner in the Tower; Thirdly, I might ſay, That it is Murder under the colour of Friendſhip; but that is a Circumſtance moral, and therefore I leave that to the Evidence it ſelf.

For Murder, my Lords, the firſt Record of Juſtice which was in the World, was Judgment upon a Murderer, in the Perſon of Adam's Firſt-born Cain; and though it was not puniſhed by Death, but Baniſhment, and Marks of Ignominy, in reſpect of the Primogenitors, or the Population of the World; yet there was a ſevere Charge given, that it ſhould not go unpuniſhed.

So it appeareth likewiſe in Scripture, that the Murder of Abner by Joab, though it were by David reſpited in reſpect of great Services paſt, or reaſon of State, yet it was not forgotten. But of this I will ſay no more, becauſe I will not diſcourſe; it was ever admitted and ranked in God's own Tables, that Murder is, of Offences between Man and Man, next unto High-Treaſon, and Diſobedience to Authority, which ſometimes have been referred to the firſt Table becauſe of the Lieutenancy of God in Princes, the greateſt.

For Impoiſonment, I am ſorry it ſhould be heard of in our Kingdom; it is not noſtri generis, nec ſanguinis peccatum; it is an Italian Comfit for the Court of Rome, where that Perſon that intoxicateth the Kings of the Earth, is many times really intoxicated and poiſoned himſelf. But it hath three Circumſtances, which make it grievous, beyond other matters.

The firſt is, That it takes a Man away in full Peace, in God's and the King's Peace, that thinks no harm, but is comforting of Nature with Refection and Food; ſo that, as the Scripture ſaith, his Table is made a Snare.

The ſecond is, That it is eaſily committed, and eaſily concealed; and on the other ſide, hardly prevented, and hardly diſcovered: For Murder by Violence, Princes have Guards, and private Men have Houſes, Attendants and Arms; neither can ſuch Murder be committed, but cum ſonitu, with ſome overt and apparent Acts, that may diſcover and trace the Offenders; but for Poiſon, the Cup it ſelf of Princes will ſcarce ſerve in regard of many Poiſons that neither diſcolour nor diſtaſte; it comes upon a Man when he is careleſs, and without ſuſpicion, and every day a Man is within the Gates of Death.

And the laſt is, Becauſe it concerneth not only the Deſtruction of the maliced Man, but of every Man, Quis modo tutus erit? For many times the Poiſon is prepared for one, and is taken by another, ſo that Men die other Men's Deaths, Concidit infelix alieno vulnere; and it is as the Pſalmiſt calleth it, Sagitta nocte volans, the Arrow that flieth by Night, that hath no Aim nor Certainty. And therefore if any Man ſhall ſay to himſelf, Here is great talk of Impoiſonment, but I am ſure I am ſafe, for I have no Enemies, neither have I any thing thing another Man ſhould long for: Why, that is all one, he may ſit next him at the Table, that is meant to be impoiſoned, and pledge him of his Cup: As we may ſee in the Example of 21 Henry VIII. That where the Purpoſe was to poiſon one Man, there was Poiſon put into Barm or Yeaſt, and with that Barm, Pottage or Grewel was made, whereby ſixteen of the Biſhop of Rocheſter's Servants were poiſoned; nay, it went into the Alms-Basket likewiſe, and the Poor at the Gate were poiſoned. And therefore with great Judgment did the Statute made that Year, touching this Accident, make Impoiſonment High-Treaſon, becauſe it tends to the diſſolving of Human Society; for whatſoever Offence doth ſo, is in the nature thereof High-Treaſon.

Now for the third Degree of this particular Offence, which is, that it is committed upon the King's Priſoner, who was out of his own Defence, and merely in the King's Protection, and for whom the King and the State were a kind of Reſpondent: it is a thing that aggravates the Fault much, for certainly (my Lord of Somerſet) let me tell you this, that Sir Thomas Overbury is the firſt Man that was murdered in the Tower of London, ſave the Murder of the two young Princes, by the appointment of Richard the Third.

Thus much of the Offence; now to the Proofs.

For the matter of Proofs, you may conſider that Impoiſonment, of all Offences, is moſt ſecret, even ſo ſecret, that if in all caſes of Impoiſonment, you ſhould require Teſtimony, you ſhould as good proclaim Impunity.

Who could have impeached Livia by Teſtimony, for the poiſoning of her Figs upon the Tree, which her Husband was wont to gather with his own Hands? Who could have impeached Paraſetis, for the poiſoning of the one ſide of the Knife ſhe carried with her, and keeping the other ſide clean, ſo that her ſelf did eat of the ſame piece of Meat that they did whom ſhe did impoiſon?

Theſe Caſes are infinite, and need not to be ſpoken of the Secrecy of Impoiſonment; but wiſe Men muſt take upon them, in theſe ſecret Caſes, Solomon's Spirit, that when there could be no Witneſſes, collected the Act by the Affection: but yet we are not at our Cauſe, for that which your Lordſhips are to try, is not the Act of Impoiſonment, for that is done to your hands; all the World, by Law, is concluded to ſay, that Overbury was poiſoned by Weſton: but the Queſtion before you is, of the Procurement only, and, as the Law termeth it, as acceſſary before the Fact; which abetting is no more, but to do or uſe any Act or Means which may aid or conduce to the Impoiſonment.

So that it is not the buying, nor the making of the Poiſon, nor the preparing, nor confecting, nor commixing of it, nor the giving or ſending, or laying of the Poiſon, that are the only Acts that do amount unto the Abetment: but if there be any other Act or Means done, or uſed, to give Opportunity of Impoiſonment, or to facilitate the Execution of it, or to ſtop or divert any Impediments that might hinder it, and that it be with an intention to accompliſh and atchieve the Impoiſonment; all theſe are Abetments and Acceſſaries before the Fact. As for Example, If there be a Conſpiracy to murder a Man, as he journieth on the way, by Invitation, or by colour of ſome Buſineſs; and another taketh upon him to diſſuade ſome Friend of his Company, that he is not ſtrong enough to make his Defence; and another hath a part to hold him in talk till the firſt Blow be given: all theſe, my Lords, without ſcruple, are Acceſſaries to the Murder, although none of them give the Blow, nor aſſiſt to give the Blow.

My Lords, He is not the Hunter alone, that lets ſlip the Dog upon the Deer, but he that lodgeth him and hunts him out, or ſets a Train or Trap for him, that he cannot eſcape, or the like. But this, my Lords, little needeth in this Caſe, for ſuch a Chain of Acts of Impoiſonments as this, I think, was never heard nor ſeen. And thus much of the Nature of the Proofs.

To deſcend to the Proofs themſelves, I ſhall keep this Courſe:

Firſt, I will make a Narration of the Fact it ſelf.

Secondly, I will break and diſtribute the Proofs, as they concern the Priſoner. And,

Thirdly, According to the Diſtribution, I will produce them, and read them, to uſe them. So that there is nothing that I ſhall ſay, but your Lordſhips ſhall have three Thoughts or Cogitations to anſwer it.

1*ſt*, When I open it, you may take your aim.

2*dly*, When I diſtribute it, you may prepare your Anſwers without Confuſion. And,

3*dly*, When I produce the Witneſſes, or the Examinations themſelves, you may again ruminate, and re-adviſe to make your Defence.

And this I do, becauſe your Memory and Underſtanding may not be oppreſſed or overloaden with length of Evidence, or with confuſion of Order; nay more, when your Lordſhips ſhall make your Anſwer in your time, I will put you in mind, where cauſe ſhall be, of your Omiſſion.

Firſt therefore, Sir Thomas Overbury, for a time, was known to have great Intereſt and ſtrait Friendſhip with my Lord of Somerſet, both in his meaner Fortunes, and after; inſomuch that he was a kind of Oracle of Direction unto him, and if you will believe his own Vaunt (being indeed of an inſolent and Thraſonical Diſpoſition) he took upon him that the Fortunes, Reputation and Underſtanding of this Gentleman (who is well known to have an able Teacher) proceeded from his Company and Counſel: and this Friendſhip reſted not only in Converſation and Buſineſs at Court, but likewiſe in Communication of Secrets of State; for my Lord of Somerſet exerciſing at that time by his Majeſty's ſpecial Favour and Truſt, the Office of Secretary, did not forbear to acquaint Overbury with the King's Packets and Diſpatches from all parts of Spain, France, and the Low-Countries: and this then not by Glimpſes, or now and then rounding in the Ear for a Favour, but in a ſettled manner; Packets were ſent, ſometimes opened by my Lord, ſometimes unbroken unto Overbury, who peruſed them, copied them, regiſtred them, made Table-talk of them, as they thought good. So I will undertake the time was, when Overbury knew more of the Secrets of State, than the Council-Table did; nay, they were grown to ſuch Inwardneſs, as they made a Play of all the World beſides themſelves, ſo as they had Cyphers and Jurgons for the King and Queen, and Great Men of the Realm; things ſeldom uſed, but either by Princes to their Confederates, or, at the leaſt, by ſuch as practiſe and work againſt, or, at the leaſt, upon Princes.

But underſtand me, my Lord, I ſhall not charge you with Diſloyalty at this day; and I lay this for a Foundation, That there was great Communication of Secrets between you and Sir Thomas Overbury, and that it had relation to Matters of State, and the great Cauſes of this Kingdom.

But, my Lords, as it is a Principle in Nature, that the beſt Things are, in their Corruption, the worſt, and the ſweeteſt Wine maketh the ſoureſt Vinegar; ſo it fell out with them, that this Exceſs, as I may ſay, of Friendſhip, ended in mortal Hatred on my Lord of Somerſet's part.

I have heard my Lord Steward ſay ſometimes in the Chancery, that Froſt and Fraud end foul; and I may add a third, and that is, the Friendſhip of ill Men, which is truly ſaid to be Conſpiracy, and not Friendſhip. For it fell out ſome twelve months or more before Overbury's Impriſonment in the Tower, that the Earl of Somerſet fell into an unlawful Love towards that unfortunate Lady, the Counteſs of Eſſex, and to proceed to a Marriage with her: this Marriage and Purpoſe did Overbury mainly impugne, under pretence to do the true part of a Friend, for that he accounted her an unworthy Woman. But the truth was, Overbury, who (to ſpeak plainly) had little that was ſolid for Religion, or Moral Virtue, but was wholly poſſeſs'd with Ambition and Vain-glory, was loth to have any Partners in the favour of my Lord of Somerſet; and eſpecially not any of the Houſe of the Howards, againſt whom he had always profeſſed Hatred and Oppoſition.

And, my Lords, that this is no ſiniſter Conſtruction, will appear to you, when you ſhall hear that Overbury made his Brags, That he had won him the Love of the Lady, by his Letters and Induſtry; ſo far was he from Caſes of Conſcience in this Point.

And certainly, my Lords, howſoever the tragical Miſery of this poor Gentleman, Overbury, might ſomewhat obliterate his Faults, yet, becauſe we are not upon point of Civility, but to diſcover the face of Truth, before the face of Juſtice, for that it is material to the true Underſtanding of the ſtate of this Cauſe, Overbury was naught and corrupt; the Ballads muſt be mended for that point.

But to proceed; When Overbury ſaw that he was like to be Poſſeſſor of my Lord's Grace, which he had poſſeſſed ſo long, and by whoſe Greatneſs he had promiſed himſelf to do Wonders, and being a Man of an unbounded and impudent Spirit, he began not only to diſſuade, but to deter him from the Love of that Lady; and finding him fixed, thought to find a ſtrong Remedy; and ſuppoſing that he had my Lord's Head under his Girdle, in reſpect of Communication of Secrets of State, as he calls them himſelf Secrets of Nature; and therefore dealt violently with him, to make him deſiſt, with Menaces of Diſcovery, and the like: Hereupon grew two ſtreams of Hatred upon Overbury, the one from the Lady, in reſpect that he croſſed her Love, and abuſed her Name (which are Furies in Women;) the other of a more deep nature from my Lord of Somerſet himſelf, who was afraid of Overbury's Nature, and if he did break from him and fly out, he would wind into him, and trouble his whole Fortunes. I might add a third ſtream of the Earl of Northampton's Ambition, who deſires to be firſt in favour with my Lord of Somerſet, and knowing Overbury's Malice to himſelf, and to his Houſe, thought that Man muſt be removed and cut off, ſo as certainly it was reſolved and decreed, that Overbury muſt die.

That was too weak, and they were ſo far from giving way to it, as they croſſed it; there reſted but two ways of Quarrel, Aſſault and Poiſon. For that of Aſſault, after ſome Propoſition and Attempt, they paſſed from it, as a thing too open, and ſubject to more variety of Shame; that of Poiſon likewiſe was an hazardous thing, and ſubject to many Preventions and Caution, eſpecially to ſuch a working and jealous Brain as Overbury had, except he was firſt faſt in their hands: therefore the way was firſt to get him into a Trap, and lay him up, and then they could not miſs the Mark. And therefore in execution of this Plot, it was concluded, that he ſhould be deſigned to ſome honourable Employment in Foreign Parts, and ſhould underhand, by my Lord of Somerſet, be encouraged to refuſe it; and ſo, upon contempt, he ſhould be laid Priſoner in the Tower, and then they thought he ſhould be cloſe enough, and Death ſhould be his Bail: yet were they not at their end, for they conſider'd, that if there were not a fit Lieutenant of the Tower for their purpoſe, and likewiſe a fit Underkeeper of Overbury; Firſt, They ſhould meet with many Impediments in the giving and exhibiting of the Poiſon; Secondly, They ſhould be expoſed to Note and Obſervation, that might diſcover them; and, Thirdly, Overbury, in the mean time, might write clamorous and furious Letters to his Friends, and ſo all might be diſappointed. And therefore, the next Link of the Chain was to diſplace the then Lieutenant Wade, and to place Elvis, a principal Abetter in the Impoiſonment; to diſplace Cary that was Under-keeper in Wade's Time, and to place Weſton, that was the Actor in the Impoiſonment: And this was done in ſuch a while, that it may appear to be done as it were in a Breath.

Then, when they had this poor Gentleman in the Tower, cloſe Priſoner, where he could not eſcape, nor ſtir; where he could not feed, but by their Hands; where he could not ſpeak or write, but through their Trunks; then was the Time to act the laſt day of his Tragedy.

Then muſt Franklin, the Purveyor of the Poiſons, procure five, ſix, ſeven ſeveral Poiſons, to be ſure to hit his Complexion: Then muſt Mrs. Turner, the Lay-miſtreſs of the Poiſons, adviſe what works at preſent, and what at diſtance: Then muſt Weſton be the Tormenter, and chaſe him with Poiſon after Poiſon, Poiſon in Salt-meats, Poiſon in Sweet-meats, Poiſon in Medicines and Vomits, until at laſt his Body was almoſt come by uſe of Poiſons to the ſtate of Mithridates's Body, by the uſe of Treacle and Preſervatives, that the Force of the Poiſons was blunted upon him; Weſton confeſſing, when he was chid for not diſpatching him, that he had given him enough to poiſon twenty Men.

And, laſtly, Becauſe all this asked Time, Courſes were taken by Somerſet, both to divert all the true Means of Overbury's Delivery, and to entertain him with continual Letters, partly with Hopes and Proteſtations for his Delivery, and partly with other Fables and Negotiations, ſomewhat like ſome kind of Perſons which keep in a Tale of Fortune-telling, when they have a Felonious Intent to pick their Pockets and Purſes. And this is the true Narration of this Act, which I have ſummarily recited.

Now, for the Diſtribution of the Proofs, there are four Heads to prove you Guilty, whereof two are precedent to the Impoiſonment, the third is preſent, and the fourth is following or ſubſequent; for it is in Proofs, as it is in Lights, there is a direct Light, and there is a Reflexion of Light, and a double Light.

The

The firſt Head or Proof is, That there was a Root of Bitterneſs, a mortal Malice or Hatred mixed with a deep and bottomleſs Miſchief, that you had to Sir Thomas Overbury.

The ſecond is, That you were the principal Actor, and had your hand in all thoſe Acts, which did conduce to the Impoiſonment, and gave opportunity to effect it, without which the Impoiſonment could never have been, and which could ſeem to tend to no other end, but to the Impoiſonment.

The third is, That your hand was in the very Impoiſonment it ſelf, that you did direct Poiſon, and that you did deliver Poiſon, and that you did continually hearken to the Succeſs of the Impoiſonment, and that you ſpurred it on, and called for diſpatch, when you thought it lingered.

And laſtly, That you did all things after the Impoiſonment, which may detect a guilty Conſcience, for the ſmothering of it, and the avoiding of Puniſhment for it; which can be but of three kinds.

That you ſuppreſſed, as much as in you was, Teſtimony; that you did deface, deſtroy, clip and miſdate all Writings that might give light to the Impoiſonment; and you did fly to the Altar of Guiltineſs, which is a Pardon of Murder, and a Pardon for your ſelf, and not for your ſelf.

In this, my Lords, I convert my Speech unto you, becauſe I would have you alter the Points of your Charge, and ſo make your Defence the better. And two of theſe Heads I have taken to my ſelf, and left the other to the King's two Serjeants.

For the firſt main Part, which is the moral Malice coupled with Fear, that was in you to Sir Thomas Overbury, although you did palliate it with a great deal of Hypocriſy and Diſſimulation, even to the very End: I will prove it, my Lord Steward, the root of his Hate, was that which coſt many a Man's Life, that is, fear of diſcovering Secrets; I ſay, of Secrets of a dangerous and high nature: wherein the Courſe that I will hold, ſhall be this.

I will ſhew that a Breach and Malice was betwixt my Lord and Overbury, and that it burſt forth into violent Threats and Menaces, on both ſides.

Secondly, That theſe Secrets were not of a light, but of an high nature; I will give you the Elevation of the Pole, they were ſuch, as my Lord of Somerſet had made a Vow, that Overbury ſhould neither live in Court, nor Country; that he had likewiſe opened himſelf ſo far, that either he or himſelf muſt die for it: and of Overbury's part, he had threatned my Lord, that whether he did live or die, my Lord's Shame ſhould never die, but that he would leave him the moſt odious Man in the World. And further, that my Lord was like enough to repent where Overbury wrote, which was in the Tower of London; he was a Prophet in that: ſo there is the higheſt of the Secret.

Thirdly, I will ſhew you that all the King's buſineſs was, by my Lord, put into Overbury's hands, ſo as there is work enough for Secrets whatſoever; they write them, and like Princes they had Confederates, their Cyphers and their Jurgons.

And, Laſtly, I will ſhew you that it was but a Toy, to ſay the Malice was only in reſpect he ſpake diſhonourably of the Lady, or for doubt of breaking the Marriage, for that Overbury was Coadjutor to that Love, and the Lord of Somerſet was as deep in ſpeaking ill of the Lady as Overbury: and again, it was too late for that Matter, for the Bargain of the Match was then made and paſt; and if it had been no more than to remove Overbury for diſturbing the Match, it had been an eaſy matter to have landed over Overbury, for which they had a fair way, but that would not ſerve.

And, Laſtly, Periculum periculo vincitur: to go ſo far as an Impoiſonment, muſt have a deeper Malice than Flaſhes, for the Cauſe muſt have a Proportion in the Effect.

For the next general Head or Proof, which conſiſts in the Acts preparatory, or middle Acts, they are in eight ſeveral Points of the Compaſs, as I may term them.

1ſt, There were divers Devices and Prejects to ſet Overbury's Head on work, to diſpatch him, and overthrow him, plotted between the Counteſs of Eſſex, and the Earl of Somerſet, and the Earl of Northampton, before they fell upon the Impoiſonment; for always before Men fix upon a courſe of Miſchief, there will be ſome Reflection: but die he muſt one way or other.

2dly, That my Lord of Somerſet was principal Practiſer, I muſt ſpeak it, in a moſt perfidious manner; to ſet a Trap and Train for Overbury, to get him into the Tower, without which they durſt not attempt the Impoiſonment.

3dly, That the placing of the Lieutenant Elvis, one of the Impoiſoners, was done by my Lord of Somerſet.

4thly, That the placing of Weſton the Underkeeper, who was the principal Impoiſoner, and diſplacing of Cary, and the doing all this within the ſpace of fifteen days after Overbury's Commitment, was by the means and countenance of my Lord of Somerſet: and theſe were the active Inſtruments of the Impoiſonment, and this was a Buſineſs the Lady's power could not reach unto.

5thly, That becauſe there muſt be a Cauſe of this Tragedy to be acted, and chiefly becauſe they would not have the Poiſons work upon the ſudden, and for that the ſtrength of Overbury's Nature, on the very cuſtom of receiving the Poiſons into his Body, did overcome the Poiſons that they wrought not ſo faſt; therefore Overbury muſt be held in the Tower, as well as he was laid in: and as my Lord of Somerſet got him into the Trap, ſo he keeps him in, and amuſeth him with continual hope of Liberty, but diverted all the true and effectual means of his Liberty, and makes light of his Sickneſs and Extremities.

6thly, That not only the Plot of getting Overbury into the Tower, and the Devices to hold and keep him there, but the ſtrange Manner of the cloſe keeping of him, being in but for a Contempt, was by the Device and Means of my Lord of Somerſet, who denied his Father to ſee him, denied his Servants that offered to be ſhut up cloſe Priſoners with him; and in effect handled it ſo, that he made him cloſe Priſoner to all his Friends, and expoſed to all his Enemies.

7thly, That all the Advertiſement the Lady received from time to time, from the Lieutenant or Weſton touching Overbury's ſtate of Body and Health, were ever ſent nigh to the Court, though it were in progreſs, and that from my Lady; ſuch a thirſt and liſtening he had to hear that he was diſpatched.

Laſtly, That there was a continual Negotiation to ſet Overbury's Head on work, that he ſhould make ſome offer to clear the Honour of the Lady, and that he ſhould be a good Inſtrument towardsher and her Friends; all which was but Entertainment: For your Lordſhips ſhall ſee divers of my Lord of Northampton's Letters, (whoſe Hand was deep in this Buſineſs) written I muſt ſay in dark Words and Clauſes, that there was one thing pretended, and another thing intended; that there was a real Charge, and ſomewhat not real; a main Drift and Diſſimulation. Nay further, there be ſome Paſſages which the Peers, in their Wiſdoms, will diſcern to point directly at the Impoiſonment.

And now for producing of my Proofs, I will uſe this Courſe: Thoſe Examinations that have been taken upon Oath, ſhall be here read; and the Witneſſes alſo I have caus'd to be here, that they may be ſworn, and to juſtify or deny what they hear read, and to diminiſh or add to their Examinations; and beſides, that my Lord of Somerſet, and you my Lords the Peers, may ask them what further Queſtions you pleaſe.

H. Payton, Servant of Sir Thomas Overbury, now of his Father, examined before the Lord Chief Juſtice.

He ſaw a Letter of his Maſter's, whoſe Hand he knew, to my Lord of Somerſet, wherein were theſe Words, If I die, my Blood lie upon you. And in that or another Letter there was this Clauſe, My Lord, you are now as good as your Word, you have kept your Vow to me. Moreover, that in the Privy-Gallery at White-Hall, my Lord of Somerſet coming late to his Chamber, met there Sir Thomas Overbury; How now, ſays my Lord, are you up yet? Nay, anſwers Sir Thomas Overbury, what do you here at this time of Night? Will you never leave the Company of that baſe Woman? And ſeeing you do ſo neglect my Advice, I deſire that to-morrow Morning we may part; and that you will let me have that Portion you know is due to me; and then I will leave you free to your ſelf, to ſtand on your own Legs. My Lord of Somerſet anſwer'd, His Legs were ſtrong enough to bear himſelf; and ſo departed in great diſpleaſure. And to his certain knowledge, they were never perfectly reconcil'd again. And being ask'd how he heard this Diſcourſe, he ſaid, It was in the Dead of the Night, and he, being in a Room within the Gallery, heard all that paſs'd.

H. Payton. I acknowledge every Part of this Examination to be true: And more, That my Maſter being in the Tower, he ſent a Letter by Weſton to me, to carry to my Lord; and withal, to deliver my Lord this Meſſage, That that Powder he had ſent him had made him very ſick, and given him in one Night ſixty Stools, beſides Vomits. This Letter I carried to the Court, and deliver'd to Mr. Paulins to carry in to my Lord, who was then in his Chamber. My Lord preſently came out; asked me how my Maſter did. I told him very ſick; and withal, this Meſſage how the Phyſick had wrought with him. My Lord ſmiled, and cry'd Piſh; and ſo turn'd him away.

L. Davis, ſometime Servant of Sir Thomas Overbury, now of Sir Humphrey May, his Examination before the Lord Coke.

Saith, That he hath heard his Maſter ſay, That he would have gone Embaſſador, but that my Lord of Rocheſter diſſuaded him. He hath ſeen ſome Letters of Sir Thomas Overbury's, wherein he writ that the Lord of Rocheſter was even with him: But he thinks he (i. e. the Lord Rocheſter) never ſaw thoſe Paſſages.

Lord of Som. I pray you, my Lords, note he ſays, I never ſaw thoſe Paſſages.

Mr. Attorney. It is true: For thoſe Letters were loſt; but after found by him, who knew them to be his Maſter Sir Thomas Overbury's Hand.

Sir Thomas Overbury's Firſt Letter to my Lord Somerſet.

'IS this the Fruit of my Care and Love to you? Be theſe the Fruits of common Secrets, common Dangers? As a Man you cannot ſuffer me to lie in this Miſery; yet your Behaviour betrays you. All I intreat of you is, that you will free me from this Place, and that we may part Friends. Drive me not to Extremities, leſt I ſhould ſay ſomething that you and I both repent. And I pray God that you may not repent the Omiſſion of this my Counſel in this Place, whence I now write this Letter.

L. Wentworth. How did you know theſe Letters were ſent from him to my Lord of Somerſet?

L. Coke. They were found in a Cabinet, among ſome other Things, left in Truſt by my Lord of Somerſet with Sir Robert Cotton: And thus they were diſcover'd; Sir Robert Cotton, fearing Searches, delivers them to a Friend of his in Holborn, one Mrs. Farneforth; ſhe, to the intent they might be ſafely kept, ſent them to a Merchant's Houſe in Cheapſide, where, ſome nine Months before, ſhe had lodged, and deſir'd that they might ſafely be kept for her, pretending they were ſome Writings that concern'd her Jointure. On St. Thomas's Day ſhe her ſelf comes to have them again, ſaying, She muſt carry them to her Counſel to peruſe: He ſaid, If you will ſuffer me to open it before you, and that there be nothing elſe, you ſhall have them. But ſhe by no means would conſent to the breaking of it open. Then he anſwer'd, It is a troubleſome Time; I will go to my Lord Chief Juſtice, and if he find no other Writings than ſuch as concern you, you ſhall have them again. So coming to my Chamber, and not finding me within, (for I was gone to St. Paul's to the Sermon) he went to my Lord Zouch, one of the appointed Commiſſioners for this Cauſe; who himſelf alone would not break it up, but came to St. Paul's to me; where in a By-room we broke it up, and in it found theſe Letters, and divers from my Lord of Northampton, beſides many other Papers.

L. Zouch. I affirm this Relation of my Lord Coke's to be true.

Sir Thomas Overbury's Second Letter to my Lord Somerſet.

'THIS comes under Seal; and therefore ſhall be bold. You told my Brother Lidcote, That unreverend Style might make you neglect me. With what Face could you do this, who know you owe me for all the Fortune, Wit, and Underſtanding that you have? [Here were inſerted ſome borrowed Names.]

Mr. Attorney. Under theſe falſe Names they meant Great Perſons; Julius the King, Dominick my Lord of Northampton, Unclius my Lord of Canterbury.

The reſt of the Letter.

'And yet pretend the Reaſon why you ſeek not my Liberty, to be my unreverend Style; whilſt, in the mean time, you ſacrifice me to your Woman, ſtill holding Friendſhip with thoſe that

'that brought me hither. You bad my Brother 'Lidcote keep my Deſire of Liberty ſecret: Yet 'this ſhall not ſerve your turn; for you and I, 'e'er it be long, will come to a publick Trial of 'another nature. I upon the Rack, and you at 'your Eaſe; and yet I muſt ſay nothing! when 'I heard (notwithſtanding my Miſery) how you 'went to your Woman, curled your Hair, prefer-'red Gibbe into the Bed-chamber, and in the mean 'time ſend me nineteen Projects, how I ſhould 'caſt about for my Liberty; and give me a long 'Account of the Pains you have taken, and then 'go out of Town. I wonder to ſee how you 'ſhould neglect him, to whom ſuch Secrets of all 'kinds have paſs'd; and ſuffer my Mother and 'Siſters to lie here in Town, expecting my Li-'berty; my Brother Lidcote to be in a manner 'quite overthrown, in reſpect of my Impriſon-'ment; and yet you ſtand ſtupid: Nor have 'neither Servant nor Friend ſuffer'd to come to 'me. Well, all this Vacation I have written the 'Story betwixt you and me: How I have loſt my 'Friends for your ſake; what hazard I have run; 'what Secrets have paſs'd betwixt us; how af-'ter you had won that Woman by my Letters, 'that then you conceal'd all your After-proceed-'ings from me; and how upon this there came 'many Breaches betwixt us; of the Vow you 'made to be even with me, and ſending for me 'twice that Day that I was caught in the Trap, 'perſuading me that it was a Plot of mine 'Enemies, to ſend me beyond Sea; and urging 'me not to accept it, aſſuring me to free me from 'any long Trouble. On Tueſday I made an end 'of this, and on Friday ſent it to a Friend of mine 'under eight Seals; and if you perſiſt ſtill to uſe me 'thus, aſſure your ſelf it ſhall be publiſh'd. Whe-'ther I live or die, your Shame ſhall never die, 'but ever remain to the World, to make you the 'moſt odious Man living.

H. Payton and L. Davies. We both, upon our Oaths, know this to be Sir Thomas Overbury's Hand.

Simcock's Examination before my Lord Coke, writ with his own Hand.

He ſays, That Weſton many times, when Sir Thomas Overbury was in the Tower, told him, That my Lord of Somerſet charg'd him to look to Overbury well; for if ever he came out, one of us two muſt die.

L. Som. I would fain know whether Weſton were examin'd, or no.

L. Wentworth. How long is it ſince this familiar Acquaintance betwixt Simcocks and Weſton?

Simcocks. He and I were of antient and familiar Acquaintance long ſince.

Mr. Attorney. Weſton had continual Acceſs to my Lord, had Rewards from him: My Lord charg'd him to look to Overbury well. It could not be his Marriage that made him ſo much fear; but what the Secrets were that caus'd it, it is not the Work of this Day. Now to ſhew that the greateſt Matters of State were communicated to him, read Davis.

L. Davis examined. There was a Packet of Letters, and ſeal'd, which, as he takes, came from Sir John Digby, directed to the King; and his Maſter Sir Thomas Overbury open'd it, took brief Notes for my Lord of Somerſet, and ſealing it again, ſent both the Notes and Packets to him. Another of this he ſaw his Maſter had at New-Market from Sir Thomas Edmundes to the King, out of which, after he had taken Extracts, he ſeal'd it up again, and ſent both back by this Examinant to my Lord Somerſet.

Mr. Attorney. I will not now, my Lords, endeavour to preſs the Greatneſs of this Offence: But I urge it thus, That you may ſee there were no mean Secrets betwixt my Lord and Sir Thomas Overbury, that might rather cauſe him to fear him, than the Hindrance of his Marriage: If that had been it alone, his going beyond Sea would have ſerv'd the Turn.

L. of Som. exam. Says, That amongſt many other Characters for Names, that paſs'd between Sir Thomas Overbury and him, Simoniſt was for Sir Henry Nevil, Wolfy for the now Lord Treaſurer, Ductius for my Lord of Canterbury.

Mr. Attorney. In good Faith, theſe two made Plays of all the World beſides themſelves; but tho it were a Play then, it hath prov'd tragical ſince.

A Letter of my Lord of Northampton to my Lord of Somerſet.

'NOW all is concluded about the Form of 'the Nonaltity, I doubt not but God will 'bleſs the next Bargain. I hope hereafter to find 'better Pen and Ink in this Lady's Chamber. Be 'ſtill happy. Underneath ſubſcrib'd H. Northamp-'ton, and I am Witneſs to this Bargain,

Fra. Howard.

This Letter was ſhew'd my Lord of Somerſet, and he confeſs'd the Hand.

Mr. Attorney. For the ſecond Branch that I mean to follow; and that is, That you us'd the Means to expoſe him to the Tower, and there to keep him cloſe Priſoner. It is a Chain of eight Links, and ſhall be ſhew'd you upon eight Points of the Compaſs. But before we come to theſe, it is to be conſider'd, that as no Conſultation is ripe in an Hour, ſo no more was theirs; for they purpos'd at firſt to have taken away his Life by Aſſault. And Franklyn tells you the Cauſe of this Malice.

Franklyn examin'd before my Lord Coke, but not upon Oath.

He ſaith, That my Lady Somerſet ſaid the Cauſe of this Hatred of Sir Thomas Overbury was, that he would pry ſo far into my Lord of Somerſet, that he would put him down.

Sir D. Woodes examined before Lord Coke.

He ſaith, My Lady Somerſet knowing there was ſome Diſcontent betwixt Overbury and him, in reſpect of a Suit that he croſſed him in, told him, That if he would kill Sir Thomas Overbury he ſhould have 1000 l. and beſides, ſhe would make his greateſt Enemy to become his greateſt Friend: And he knew no Enemy he had in Court but my Lord of Rocheſter. He anſwer'd, That if my Lord of Rocheſter would give him his Hand, or but paſs his Word, if he did it, that he ſhould eſcape, and have his Pardon, he would do it. Upon this ſhe paus'd, and deſir'd ſome time to give her Anſwer; and when he came again to her, ſhe told him that could not be: but promis'd all Favour poſſible unto him, and warranted him to go on upon her Life.

L. of

L. of Som. exam. Saith, It was once reſolv'd ſome body in Court ſhould fall out with Overbury, and offer him ſome Affront; but that was not follow'd.

Mr. Attorney. Note, my Lords, he does not ſay it was diſlik'd. And now to the Puddle of Blood: The firſt Link of which is, That the Means to entrap Overbury for the Tower, was by the Means of my Lord of Somerſet.

Sir Dudley Digs ſworn.

Sir Thomas Overbury once told me, That he went to undertake the Employment offer'd him to go beyond Sea; but afterwards he ſent me word by Sir Robert Manſel, that he had chang'd his Mind. And Sir Robert Manſel told me farther, That he ſaw a Letter from the Lord of Somerſet to Overbury, that diſſuaded him from that Courſe. Seeing Mr. Attorney hath call'd me ſo far out of the Country for this ſmall Teſtimony, I wiſh Sir Robert Manſel were here to juſtify it.

My Lord of Somerſet's Declaration in Writing to the King.

Being told by my Lord Chief-Juſtice that I was indicted, and was ſhortly to expect my Arraignment, I did not then believe him; for I did not look for that Way. Your Majeſty hath three Kingdoms, wherein to exerciſe the Prerogative of your Power, and but few that taſte of the firſt of your Favours; in which number I did think my ſelf, if not the firſt, yet inferior to very few. And having committed no Offence againſt your Perſon, nor the State, I hope your Majeſty will not for this bring me to a publick Tryal, which for my Reputation's cauſe, I humbly deſire to avoid. Grace truly given may be a Benefit; for it is not enough to give Life, and not to ſave Reputation. But if I muſt come to my Tryal, knowing the Preſumptions may be ſtrong againſt me, in reſpect I conſented to, and endeavour'd the Impriſonment of Sir Thomas Overbury, (though I deſign'd it for his Reformation, not his Ruin) I therefore deſire your Majeſty's Mercy, and that you will be pleas'd to give me leave to diſpoſe of my Lands and Goods to my Wife and Child, and graciouſly to pardon her, having confeſs'd the Fact. For my ſelf, being uncertain how I ſhall be judg'd upon Preſumptions, I humbly deſire that in the mean time you will be pleas'd to give my Lord Hays and Sir Robert Carr leave to come to me.

Mr. Attorney. The ſecond Link is, How that Elvis came to be Lieutenant of the Tower by your means: And yet that muſt have a Colour; my Lord of Shrewsbury and Lord Chamberlain muſt prefer him to you as their Friend, though it was reſolved before he ſhould have the Place.

Sir Jervis Elvis examined, but not on Oath. He ſaith, Sir Thomas Monſon told him that Wade was to be remov'd; and that if he ſucceeded Sir William Wade, he muſt bleed, that is, give 2000 l. And ten Days after Wade was removed he came into the Place, and paid 1400 l. of the Money at his Uncle Alderman Elvis's Houſe to Doctor Campian.

Mr. Attorney. You may ſee they had Cyphers for Money, He muſt bleed; a ſtrange Preſage! And as it is impoſſible to ſerve God and Mammon, ſo in that kind it is hard to ſerve a King.

Sir Thomas Monſon examined, but not on Oath: Saith, My Lord of Northampton, upon the diſplacing of Wade, mov'd the King for Sir Jervis Elvis; and that he directed Sir Jervis Elvis to go to the Lords of Shrewsbury and Pembroke, to move my Lord of Somerſet to ſpeak for him to the King.

Sir Jervis Elvis's Examinat. When it was reſolv'd Wade ſhould be removed, and he to ſucceed him, then he was advis'd to deſire my Lord of Somerſet to move for him; which he did accordingly: But took that only to be but for a Colour, becauſe it was reſolv'd before.

Mr. Attorney. Now the third Link concerns the placing of Weſton for his Keeper.

Sir Thomas Monſon exam. Saith, He recommended Weſton to the Service of Sir Jervis Elvis, and to keep Sir Thomas Overbury, upon the Counteſs of Somerſet's Entreaty: And farther ſaith, That my Lord of Northampton was acquainted with the placing of him.

R. Weſton exam. My Lord and Lady Somerſet gave good Words of him to the Lieutenant.

L. of Som. exam. He denies the Knowledge of Weſton, either before his coming into the Tower, or ſince.

Simcocks exam. Weſton, during the time Sir Thomas Overbury was in his keeping, came often to my Lord, had much Money of him, and wonder'd Sir Thomas Overbury had ſo good Opinion of my Lord; and thought he had not ſo much Wit as the World eſteem'd, for there was no Man hinder'd his Liberty but he: And whenever he came to my Lord, he might uſe ſuch Means as Rawlins his Man muſt not know.

[In this interim a Scaffold broke, and there was a great Noiſe and Confuſion; but after Silence was proclaim'd, all huſh'd and quiet.]

Mr. Attorney. All the Confeſſions of Weſton were taken before Conviction: And theſe two laſt Witneſſes are merely to his denying the Knowledge of Weſton. Now for the fourth Link, which is the placing and diſplacing Officers.

Sir Jervis Elvis exam. Saith, That Overbury was committed April the 30th, and May the 6th himſelf came to be Lieutenant of the Tower; and that Weſton was preferr'd to be Sir Thomas Overbury's Keeper May the 7th; and that all this time he ſerv'd he never had Wages from him.

Mr. Attorney. Now the fifth Link or Point of the Compaſs I promis'd to ſhew you, was, That this muſt not be done ſuddenly, but by degrees; and ſo he muſt be poiſoned leiſurely, to avoid Suſpicion. And in the mean ſpace you entertain'd his Father and Mother with frivolous Hopes; and yet indeed hinder'd and made oppoſition (but underhand) to all the Means that were us'd for his Delivery.

Mr. Overbury the Father ſworn. After my Son was committed, I heard that he was very ſick; I went to the Court, and delivered a Petition to the King: The Effect whereof was, That in reſpect of my Son's Sickneſs ſome Phyſicians might have Acceſs unto him. The King anſwer'd, That his own Phyſician ſhould go to him: And then inſtantly ſent him word by Sir William Button that his Phyſician ſhould preſently go. Upon this I only addreſſed my ſelf to my Lord of Somerſet, and none elſe; who ſaid my Son ſhould be preſently delivered, but diſſuaded me from preferring any more Petitions to the King: Which notwithſtanding, I (ſeeing his Freedom ſtill delay'd) did deliver a Petition to the King to that purpoſe; who ſaid I ſhould have a preſent Anſwer. And my Lord of Somerſet told me, he ſhould be ſuddenly reliev'd; but but with this, That neither I nor my Wife muſt preſs to ſee him, becauſe that might protract his Delivery; nor deliver any more Petitions to the King, becauſe that might ſtir his Enemies up againſt him. And then he wrote a Letter to my Wife, to diſſuade her from any longer Stay in London.

My Lord of Somerſet*'s Letter to Mrs.* Overbury.

'MRS. Overbury, Your Stay here in Town can 'nothing avail your Son's Delivery; there- 'fore I would adviſe you to retire into the Coun- 'try, and doubt not before your coming home 'you ſhall hear he is a Freeman.

Mr. Overbury. Then after my Son's Death, he writ another Letter to me.

My Lord of Somerſet*'s Letter to Mr.* Overbury.

'SIR, Your Son's Love to me got him the Ma- 'lice of many, and they caſt thoſe Knots on 'his Fortune that have coſt him his Life; ſo, in a 'kind, there is none guilty of his Death but I: 'And you can have no more cauſe to commiſe- 'rate the Death of a Son, than I of a Friend. 'But though he be dead, you ſhall find me as 'ready as ever I was to do all the Courteſies 'that poſſibly I can to you and your Wife, or your 'Children. In the mean time I deſire Pardon 'from you and your Wife for your loſt Son, tho 'I eſteem my Loſs the greater. And for his Bro- 'ther that is in France, I deſire his Return, that 'he may ſucceed his Brother in my Love.

Mr. Attorney. By this you ſee my Lord's Diſſimulation. And I think he was a piece of a Lawyer, by his inſinuating with his next Kindred, for fear of Appeals. Now to come to the ſixth Link, which ſhews how light my Lord of Somerſet made both of Sir Thomas Overbury's Fortunes and Sickneſs, read Simcocks.

Simcoks exam. Saith, That Weſton told him he wonder'd Sir Thomas Overbury ſhould have ſo great Confidence in my Lord of Somerſet, and think that he lov'd him ſo well; for he knew that he could not abide him, and thought of nothing leſs than his Liberty.

Sir John Lidcote ſworn. Saith, He deſir'd my Lord of Somerſet that either he or Sir Robert Killigrew might have leave to ſee Sir Thomas Overbury in his Sickneſs; which my Lord obtain'd from the King: And ſo they had a Warrant from my Lord of Northampton, and ſome other Counſellors, to ſee him; and found him very ſick in his Bed, his Hand dry, his Speech hollow. And at this time he deſired me to write his Will: I propos'd to come to him again the next Day. Now being ready to depart, the Lieutenant going out before, Overbury ask'd me ſoftly this Queſtion, Whether Somerſet juggled with him, or not? But I then told him, as I believed, that I thought not. But the Lieutenant looking back, and perceiving that ſome Whiſpering had paſs'd, ſwore that I had done more than I could juſtify. But afterwards, coming to preſs my Lord of Somerſet about Sir Thomas Overbury, I peceived he dealt not plainly with him. And once ſpeaking with my Lord about him, he gave a counterfeit Sigh, (as this Deponent conceiv'd it) for at that inſtant he ſmil'd in my Face.

Mr. Attorney. The ſeventh Link is to ſhew you the Manner of his Keeping; which was cloſe Priſoner in the Tower, his Offence being only a Contempt: And who was the Author of this, read Sir Thomas Monſon.

Sir Thomas Monſon examined, but not upon Oath, ſaith, My Lord of Northampton and my Lord of Somerſet gave Directions to the Lieutenant of the Tower to keep him cloſe Priſoner.

L. Davis exam. Saith, That he was a Suitor to my Lord of Somerſet, that he might wait upon his Maſter Sir Thomas Overbury in the Tower, though he were ſhut up with him. But my Lord anſwered, He ſhortly purpos'd to procure his total Liberty, and this might hinder it.

Mr. Attorney. Now the eighth and laſt Link is, In the interim that Overbury in the Tower was ply'd with Poiſons, my Lord thirſted after the News, to know what became of him, and continual Poſts went between him and my Lady; and all this while bore him in hand with other Pretences.

Franklyn (but not upon Oath) ſaith, That being with my Lady Eſſex, ſhe told him that ſhe had that Day received a Letter from my Lord of Rocheſter, wherein he writ, That if Weſton did not preſently diſpatch, Sir Thomas Overbury would be out.

Sir Jervis Elvis exam. Saith, He received divers Letters from my Lady Eſſex, wherein ſhe deſir'd to know how Overbury did, that ſhe might certify to the Court.

Lord of Som. exam. Saith, That there paſs'd many Letters betwixt my Lady and him, but not concerning Overbury. But then deſir'd that this Point might be alter'd; for it might be that ſome Letters concerning Overbury might have then paſt betwixt them.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord knew not whether any of theſe Letters were extant, and therefore deſir'd that this might be alter'd.

Loubell, an Apothecary, a Frenchman, ſaith, That coming to my Lord of Somerſet, he ask'd him of Overbury, and how he did? And he ſaid ill. Another time alſo he ſent for him to enquire about Overbury; and then he anſwer'd him, That he was ill, but hop'd he might recover. What, ſays my Lord, do you think he would recover if he were at liberty? And he anſwer'd, Yes. Again, my Lord ſent for him a third time; and carrying him into the Gallery at Whitehall, ask'd him how Overbury did. He anſwer'd, He was very ſick: And farther added, He found him ill before the 25th of June, that he came to him.

L. of Som. exam. Denies that ever he ſaw Loubell but once at Tibbald's.

Mr. Attorney. Here again you ſee my Lord falſify'd: But it ſeems imagining or not knowing that Loubell could ſay more againſt him than he hath done, he denied the Knowledge of him, as he did of Weſton.

L. Coke. It was doubted Loubell might be a Delinquent; and therefore I durſt not examine him upon Oath, no more than I did Franklyn. But when in their Teſtimony they accuſe themſelves, it is as ſtrong as if upon Oath.

Mr. Attorney. Now in reſpect Overbury had a working Brain, my Lord of Northampton muſt in ſhew negotiate about his Delivery, and the Terms of his coming out, whilſt they intended his poiſoning: That was real, and the other but in pretence.

My Lord of Northampton's Firſt Letter to my Lord of Somerſet.

'IN this Buſineſs concerning Overbury there muſt 'be a main Drift, and a real Charge: You may 'imagine the Meaning.'

My Lord of Northampton's Second Letter to my Lord of Somerſet.

'I Yeſterday ſpent two Hours in prompting the 'Lieutenant, with as great Caution as I could, 'and find him to be very perfect in his Part. And 'I long exceedingly to hear his Report of this 'Adventure.'

My Lord of Northampton's Third Letter to my Lord of Somerſet.

'YOU need not uſe many Inſtruments, ſo 'long as I am in Town, with the Lieu-'tenant.'

My Lord of Northampton's Fourth Letter to my Lord of Somerſet.

'I Cannot deliver with what Caution and Diſ-'cretion the Lieutenant hath undertaken Over-'bury. But for his Concluſion, I do and ever will 'love him the better; which was this, That ei-'ther Overbury ſhall recover, and do good Offices 'betwixt my Lord of Suffolk and you; which if he 'do not, you ſhall have reaſon to count him a 'Knave: or elſe, that he ſhall not recover at 'all, which he thinks the moſt ſure and happy 'Change of all; for he finds ſometimes from Over-'bury many Flaſhes of a ſtrong Affection againſt 'ſome Enemies of his.'

L. of Som. I acknowledge theſe Letters to be my Lord of Northampton's; and all thoſe that I ſent to him were deliver'd me after his Death by Sir Robert Cotton; all which, the Evening before my Commitment to the Dean of Weſtminſter's, I burnt.

Mr. Attorney. Theſe Letters of Northampton, were found in the Box Sir Robert Cotton gave Mrs. Farnforth. And here my Part ends: And that that reſts behind I leave to the two Serjeants.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord, you have heard what hath been urg'd againſt you, and may imagine that there reſts much behind: And therefore you had beſt confeſs the Truth; otherwiſe you will but more and more wind in your ſelf.

L. of Som. My Lord, I came with a Reſolution to defend my ſelf.

After this my Lord High-Steward and the reſt of the Lords retir'd themſelves.

Serj. Mountague. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High-Steward of England, it falls to my part to diſcover thoſe Secrets that were concurrent and preſent with the Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury. And there be three Things that make evidently that my Lord of Somerſet was the principal Procurer: 1. A Powder that was ſent Sir Thomas from your own hand, which was Poiſon, and taken by him. 2. Poiſon in Tarts, which you occaſioned to be ſent. 3. That you thirſted after the Succeſs, and wonder'd that he was no ſooner diſpatch'd. How the firſt general Light of this Poiſoning came out, Mr. Attorney yeſterday excellently obſerv'd that it was by a Compliment; ſo now I ſhall ſhew how out of the Compunction of an Offender's Heart theſe came to be diſcover'd: Franklyn confeſſes the Poiſons he bought for this purpoſe, and the tryal that he made of them before they were ſent. And, 1. For the Powder, it was ſent in a Letter written with my Lord's own Hand to Overbury: And you writ that it would make him a little ſick, (which it did in a high degree;) and that upon this you would take occaſion to ſpeak for him to the King. And this Letter, with the Powder, you ſent to him by Davis; and the Powder was Poiſon. 2. For the poiſoned Tarts: At firſt you ſent them good, to diſguiſe the bad; but after came the poiſoned Tarts which you ſent him. And to make this appear that they came from you, continual Poſts ran between you and my Lady; and ſhe writes to the Lieutenant, 'I was bid to tell you, That in the 'Tarts and Jellies there are Letters; but in the 'Wine none: And of that you may take your 'ſelf, and give your Wife and Children; but of 'the other not. Give him theſe Tarts and Jelly 'this Night, and all ſhall be well." And it appears that the Letters did ſignify Poiſon. 3. The third Charge that I lay upon you, is, That you writ to my Lady that you wonder'd theſe things were not diſpatch'd. She preſently ſent for Franklyn, and ſhew'd him your Letters; which he read, and remembers the Words. She then alſo ſent for Weſton to diſpatch him quickly; who anſwer'd, That he had already given him as much as would poiſon twenty Men. And in all theſe Things, my Lord, I ſhall prove you as guilty as any whoſoever hath been formerly arraign'd: And Weſton, upon his Arraignment, affirm'd all theſe things to be true. Now to the Proof: He ſends a Petition to the Lord Coke, to deſire to ſpeak with him, the very Night before Elvis's Arraignment, he knowing nothing of it; and ſays, That his Conſcience troubles him ſo, that he cannot ſleep, and therefore deſires to reveal ſomething to him; and that until he had done it, he could never be at quiet.

Franklyn's Exam. Mrs. Turner deſir'd him to buy ſome of the ſtrongeſt Poiſons he could get; which he did, and brought them to Mrs. Turner and my Lady; and at that time they both ſwore him to Secrecy. And afterwards he perceiv'd that theſe Poiſons were ſent to the Tower; and amongſt the reſt a kind of white Powder called Arſenick, which ſhe told him was ſent Overbury in a Letter; and after ſhew'd him, and told him of many more Poiſons that were ſent, and to be ſent by Weſton to Overbury. And thoſe Poiſons which my Lady ſhewed him, were wrapp'd in a Paper, written with a Roman Hand. And they try'd ſome of the Poiſons upon a Cat, or a Dog, which was wonderfully tormented, and died.

Weſton's Exam. My Lady told him that he ſhould be well rewarded; but before ſhe could procure that, the Fact muſt be done: And that he had already given him as many Poiſons as would poiſon twelve Men.

Ld of Som. exam. Saith, That he caus'd a Vomit to be ſent him at his own requeſt, which was a white Powder; and it was the ſame that he had had before of Sir Robert Killegrew, and ſent by Rawlins; and it may be that this ſecond ſent by Davis was in a Letter.

L. Davis exam. Saith, That three Weeks after Sir Jervis Elvis came to be Lieutenant of the Tower, my Lord ſent, in a Letter by him, a white Powder to Sir Thomas Overbury; and that it would make him a little ſick, ſo he might have the better Opportunity to ſpeak for him to the King; and he he ſaw this Letter. Next Day Weſton told him how ſick Overbury had been, and ſhew'd him what loathſome Stuff he had vomited, which he would have had to have carried to the Lord Somerſet; but Weſton would not let him, ſaying, It was an unfit Sight to ſhew him.

H. Payton exam. Saith, That this Powder gave Sir Thomas fifty or ſixty Stools and Vomits for four or five days.

Serj. Mount. Four ſeveral Juries have found that this Powder was Poiſon, and of this Poiſon Sir Thomas Overbury died; now for the Proof of the poiſon'd Tarts.

La. of Som. exam. She ſaith, She knoweth of no Tarts were ſent Sir Thomas Overbury, but either from her ſelf or my Lord.

Sir Jervis Elvis exam. Saith, By Letters my Lady meant Poiſon, but the word was then us'd to clear his Eyes.

The Lady Somerſet's Letter to Sir Jervis Elvis.

'I Was bid to bid you ſay, that theſe Tarts came 'not from me; and again, I was bid to tell 'you, that you muſt take heed of the Tarts, be-'cauſe there be Letters in them, and therefore 'neither give your Wife nor Children of them, 'but of the Wine you may, for there are no Letters 'in it; Sir Thomas Monſon will come from the Court 'this day, and then we ſhall have other News.

La. of Som. exam. Saith, That by Letters ſhe meant Poiſon.

Serj. Mount. Now for my Lord's haſte to ſpur this on, (and here I end) read Franklin's Examination.

Franklyn exam. Saith, In a Letter, which my Lady told him was ſent her from my Lord, there were theſe Words, That he wondred things were not yet diſpatch'd, and that he thinks was meant about Overbury, by reaſon of her then Speeches to him, and preſent ſending for Weſton.

Serj. Crew. My Part is now to diſcover thoſe Acts that ſucceeded the Fact, and then my Lord begins to ſow Fig-leaves; 1. Practices to ſuppreſs all Teſtimonies. 2. To ſurprize all Letters. 3. To get a Pardon, and deſires a Pattern of the moſt large Pardon. Now for your Practice to ſuppreſs the Teſtimony of Franklyn; you come from Court and tell my Lady, that Weſton was apprehended; then Mrs. Turner ſends to Franklin to come to my Lady at one a Clock at Night. Then my Lady tells him, that Weſton hath confeſs'd all, and that we ſhall all be hang'd; and at that time did again give him another Oath for Secrecy. And, during this Dialogue, ſhe went into an inner Room, to ſpeak with one, (whom he took to be my Lord of Somerſet;) when ſhe came out, then ſhe inſtructs Franklyn what to ſay, if he were examin'd, but by no means to confeſs the Knowledge of her, or of Mrs. Turner: That the Lords will promiſe him, upon his Confeſſion, hope of a Pardon, but that by no means he ſhould believe their fair Words; for if he did, then they ſhould all be hang'd. Now for the Courſe you took in ſuppreſſing of Letters, Lawrence Davis, after his Maſter's Death, made ſuit to ſerve my Lord, then his Suit was rejected; but laſt Summer, fearing this might break out, ſends Rawlins to him, profers him all Courteſy, and deſires that he would ſend to him all thoſe Letters, and Copies of Letters, which had paſt between Sir Thomas Overbury and him. Davis did ſo; and upon this my Lord gave him 30*l.* After Weſton and Mrs. Turner were committed, there was a Trunk, wherein were many Letters: This Trunk ſtood at the Houſe of Weſton's Son's Maſter. For this Trunk, my Lord (after he was commanded to forbear the Court) makes a Warrant to the Conſtable to break it open, and to ſend unto him thoſe Bundles of Writings that were in it; pretending they were certain Bonds and Writings belonging to Miſtreſs Hide, a Siſter of Mrs. Turner's. According to this Direction, thoſe Letters that were in the Trunk were brought unto him. Now for thoſe Letters that paſs'd betwixt my Lord of Northampton and you; thirty of thoſe you had ſent him were deliver'd you after his Death by Sir Robert Cotton; and all theſe the Night before your Commitment to the Dean of Weſtminſter you burnt. For thoſe Letters of Overbury's that you had, Sir Robert Cotton advis'd you not to burn, but keep them: And all of them being without Dates, Cotton told you there might be ſuch Dates given them as would be much to your advantage: So you gave him Order for that purpoſe, to give Dates to thoſe Letters. According to your Directions he did ſo; but not till after Weſton's Arraignment: And then underſtanding at what Time the Poiſons in the Indictment were ſaid to be deliver'd, he dated ſome of them with a Purpoſe to croſs the Indictment; and ſome of the Letters he razes, ſome paſtes, ſome pares, as they were advantageous or diſadvantageous to him; and all this to obſcure the Fact. My next Aggravation is, That my Lord went about to get a Pardon; and that Precedents ſhould be ſought of the largeſt that ever were granted; and they were brought him. Why ſhould he ſeek this, but to be freed from this Murder? And in the Precedent of Henry the VIII's Pardon to Cardinal Wolſey, after many Offences were forgiven, both in the Beginning and Ending, then in the Midſt come in all Treaſons and Murders. Laſtly, Now I urge the Declaration you ſent to the King; wherein you ſeem'd to doubt your ſelf, becauſe that you endeavour'd and conſented to the Puniſhment of Sir Thomas Overbury; and in reſpect you had formerly been ſo much in the King's Favour, thought you might expect Mercy; and ſeeing you had never done any Offence againſt the King, nor the State, hoped that you ſhould never be call'd in queſtion for this: But if you ſhould, then you implor'd Grace for your Wife; but you never ſought a Pardon for her, as you did for your ſelf. And then, laſtly, you deſire to have leave to diſpoſe of your Lands to your Wife and Child. Now for the Proofs of all this that I have ſaid, firſt read Franklyn, for the Suppreſſion of his Teſtimony.

Franklyn's Exam. When my Lord of Somerſet came to Town, after Weſton's Apprehenſion, he (Franklyn) was ſent for to the Cock-Pit; and there my Lady ſwore him again to Secrecy, told him Weſton was taken, and that it was likely he ſhould be ſo ſhortly, and that they ſhould all be hang'd. Then retiring into an Inner-room, to ſpeak with one, (whom he verily believes to be my Lord of Somerſet) ſhe came again, and told him, That the Lords, if they examin'd him, would put him in hope of a Pardon upon Confeſſion: But, ſaid ſhe, believe them not; for when they have got out of you what they would, we ſhall all be hang'd. Nay, ſaith Mrs. Turner, Madam, I will be hang'd for you both.

Mary Erwin's Examination, (not upon Oath) Mrs. Turner's Maid.

Mrs. Turner ſent her for Franklyn, to bring him to the Cock-Pit, at Ten a-Clock at Night; and is ſure that Night my Lord of Somerſet came from Court, and was at the Cock-Pit when ſhe came.

Lady Som. exam. She confeſſeth all that Franklyn ſaid concerning her Diſcourſe with him; and that my Lord was with her that Night in the Cock-Pit.

Mr. Serj. Crew. Next follows the Proof for ſurprizing Letters.

L. Davis exam. Saith, That in Summer laſt my Lord ſent Rawlins to him, to deſire that if he had any Letters, either from my Lord to Sir Thomas, or from him to my Lord, that he would ſend them by him; which he did: And for this my Lord did afterwards ſend him by Rawlins 30 l.

George Errat the Conſtable's Examination.

Saith, That Poulter, a Meſſenger, brought him a Warrant from my Lord of Somerſet, to break open and ſearch a Houſe for certain Writings, which were pretended to be one Mrs. Hide's, a Siſter of Mrs. Turner's; and that he ſhew'd him a part of the Warrant only, but not all; ſo that for that cauſe he would not execute it. Whereupon, Poulter got Smiths himſelf to break open the Houſe and Doors, and found in the Cellar a Box and Bag of Writings, where he ſaw the Name of Mrs. Turner; and thoſe were carried to my Lord.

L. of Som. For theſe Letters, Sir Robert Cotton deliver'd them me back after my Lord of Northampton's Death; and concerning the Dates, you need not trouble yourſelf, for it now grows late, and I ſhall have very little time to anſwer for my ſelf. I confeſs Sir Robert Cotton deliver'd me back thoſe Letters I had ſent my Lord of Northampton, and that I burnt them; and that ſome Parts were cut off as impertinent.

Sir R. Cotton exam. Saith, My Lord deliver'd into his hands many of Sir Thomas Overbury's Letters; and that he cut and dated them by my Lord's Direction; and that he put in Dates the next Day to ſome of the Letters, after Weſton's Arraignment.

Mr. Serj. Crew. I deſire my Lord will be pleas'd to look upon this Book of Overbury's Letters. And now for the Copy of the largeſt Pardon;

Sir Robert Cotton ſaith, That at my Lord of Somerſet's Intreaty, a little before Michaelmas laſt, he got him a Draught of the largeſt Pardon, and the Precedent was of one that King Henry the Eighth granted to Cardinal Wolſey: and if he deſired ſuch a one, I told him the beſt way was to follow Precedents.

The Pardon was read; wherein, amongſt other Offences, before and after, of ſmall account, Treaſon and Murder be foiſted in.

Mr. Serj. Crew. And this was it that made Weſton fear that the Net was for the little Fiſhes, and that the great ones could break through.

Alderman Bowles exam. Saith, That after he had perſuaded Weſton from ſtanding mute, he told him, That he fear'd the Net was laid for the little Fiſhes, and that the great ones would break through.

Mr. Serj. Crew. The laſt thing I urge, is my Lord's Declaration to the King, which I deſire ſhould be read.

The ſame that were noted before, after he underſtood by my Lord Coke that he was to be arraign'd, &c.

Mr. Attorney. You ſee, my Lords, in this Declaration of my Lord of Somerſet there is a Brink of Confeſſion; I would to God it had a Bottom. He urges that in reſpect he hath formerly been ſo great in the King's Favour, and had never committed any Treaſon, neither againſt his Perſon nor State, that he ſhould never have been call'd to an Account for this Fault, though he had been guilty: That Grace timely given is a Benefit; and that it is not only enough to give Life, but to ſave Reputation. But if he muſt be urg'd, then he deſires his Wife might be pardon'd, having confeſs'd the Fact: And that if he muſt be put upon the Hazard of a Tryal, the King will before give him leave to diſpoſe of his Lands and Goods to the Uſe of his Wife and Child; and that in the mean time he will give my Lord Hay and Sir Robert Carr leave to come to him.

Mr. Serj. Crew. This Declaration is an implicative Confeſſion.

Mr. Attorney. I think there is none here but wonders, ſeeing that all Poiſons be Works of Darkneſs, how this ſhould ſo clearly appear: But it ſeems, his Greatneſs in Fortune caus'd this Groſſneſs in offending.

L. High-Steward. My Lord of Somerſet hath behav'd himſelf modeſtly in the Hearing: And only this, (before you ſpeak for your ſelf) by way of Advice, I will ſay unto you, in giving you two Examples: Your Wife, that yeſterday confeſs'd the Fact; and there is great hope of the King's Mercy, if you now mar not that which ſhe made. On the contrary, Byron, who when the King of France us'd all the means he poſſibly could, to bring him to the Acknowledgement of his Offence, which if he had done, there was no queſtion to be made of the King's Grace. And I think there never was, nor is, a more gracious and merciful King than our Maſter. But Byron ſtill perſiſting in the Denial of his Fact, you know his End.

L. of Som. I am confident in mine own Cauſe, and am come hither to defend it. And in reſpect the King's Counſel have been ſo long in ſpeaking againſt me, that neither my Memory nor Notes will give me leave to anſwer every Particular in order, I will begin with ſome of the laſt Things that they ſeem'd moſt to urge againſt me, and ſo anſwer the reſt that I think do any thing at all touch me. For the Powder that was ſent Overbury to make him ſick, that ſo I might have the better occaſion to ſpeak for him to the King for that purpoſe, he himſelf deſir'd it, and upon his Letter I ſent it. And though it be true that I conſented to his Impriſonment, to the end he ſhould make no Impediment in my Marriage; yet I had a care of his Lodgings, that they ſhould be where he might have the beſt Air, and Windows both to the Water and within the Tower, ſo that he might have liberty to ſpeak with whom he would. So you ſee it was againſt my Intention to have him cloſe Priſoner.

Whereas the Breach of Friendſhip betwixt Overbury and me is us'd for an Aggravation againſt me; it is no great Wonder for Friends ſometimes to fall out, and leaſt of all with him; for I think he had never a Friend in his Life that he would not ſometime fall out with, and give Offence unto: And this they term'd Inſolence in him; but I give it a better Name.

For

For the great Truſt and Communication of Secrets between Overbury and me, and for the Extracts that he took out of Ambaſſadors Letters, I confeſs this; I knew his Ability, and what I did was by the King's Commiſſion. For other Secrets, there were never any betwixt us.

And for his faſhion of braving both in Words and Writing, there was none that knew it better, nor fear'd it leſs than my ſelf. At that time he was in diſgrace with the Queen, and for that cauſe was enforc'd for a time to abſent himſelf from Court, and this was for ſome particular Miſcarriage of his towards her Majeſty; and though I labour'd his Reconcilement and Return, yet he with main violent Terms laid the cauſe of his Diſgrace upon me. And another time my Lord of Salisbury ſent for him, and told him, That if he would depend upon his Favour, he would preſently help him with a Suit that ſhould benefit him 2000 l. which preſently Overbury, coming to me, told me of: To which I anſwer'd, He did not need to rely upon any body but me; and that, if he would, he might command my Purſe, and preſently have more than that; and ſo he had. And yet afterwards, upon ſome cauſleſs Diſcontent, in a great Paſſion he ſaid, That his Love to me had put him out of my Lord of Salisbury's Favour, and made him loſe 2000 l. Whereas it was urg'd that I caus'd him to refuſe the Imployment that was impos'd upon him; it is not ſo; for I was very willing he ſhould have undertaken it, but he not. My Lord of Canterbury mov'd him to it, but not without my Privity; for I ſhould have been glad to have remov'd him, both in reſpect of my Marriage and his Inſolence. But Overbury came to me, and ſaid, I will tell Sir Dudley Diggs I will undertake this Embaſſage, that he may ſo return Anſwer to my Lord of Canterbury; but then you muſt write to me not to do ſo, and ſo take it upon you. Whereas it is pretended that I ſhould cauſe poiſon'd Tarts to be ſent him to the Tower; my Wife in her Confeſſion ſaith, That there were none ſent but either by me or her; and ſome were wholeſome, and ſome not: Then it muſt needs follow, that the good ones were thoſe which I ſent, and the bad hers.

L. Liſle. If you had ſent him good Tarts, you ſhould have ſeen them convey'd by a truſty Meſſenger.

L. Compton. My Lady, in her Letter to the Lieutenant, writes, I was bid to bid you do this. Who ſhould bid her?

Mr. Serj. Mountague. The continual Letters between my Lord and her argues that.

L. of Som. If Franklyn knew me ſo well, and that I was privy to the Plot, why ſhould then my Wife and I (as he pretends) when he was there, ſpeak ſo cloſely, and always out of his Hearing and Sight? But for Overbury, my furtheſt Intent in his Impriſonment was, that he ſhould be no Impediment to my Marriage; and this I communicated to my Lord of Northampton and Elvis.

Serj. Mountague. You could not couple your ſelf worſe than with them two.

L. of Som. Whereas Simcocks ſays, from the Relation of Weſton, That he ſo often came to me; I proteſt I never ſaw him till after Overbury's Death, and then Rawlins brought him to me.

Serj. Crew. Sir Jervis Elvis in his Examination ſaith, That Weſton many times told him, that my Lord of Somerſet many times ſent for him: And for this purpoſe you ſhall have Weſton's Examination.

Weſton's Examin. Saith, That my Lord of Somerſet many times ſent him Directions, before Overbury's going to the Tower, to appoint Meetings betwixt him and my Lady.

L. of Som. This may hold, and yet that I never ſpake to him: So for thoſe Meſſages he ſpoke of, he might receive Directions from me by a third Perſon. And for that which Payton alledges about the Powder which I ſent, and made Sir Thomas Overbury ſo ſick; that Powder I ſent was one of them which I receiv'd from Sir Robert Killegrew.

Serj. Crew. But this, my Lord, was none of the Powders you receiv'd from Sir Robert Killegrew, for you had three from him: The firſt was loſt; the ſecond you ſent him by Rawlins; and the third your ſelf took at Buly: Now a fourth, which was ſent by Davis, was that that made him ſo ſick, and gave him ſo many Stools; and that was Poiſon, and ſent three Weeks after that that Rawlins carried.

Sir Robert Killegrew ſaith, That my Lord deſir'd him to give him Powders, which he himſelf ſometimes us'd to take for a Vomit; but he thought it had been only for himſelf, not that he had had a Purpoſe to ſend it to Sir Thomas Overbury; and that my Lord never had of this Powder of him but thrice.

Mr. Rawlins exam. Saith, That the firſt Vomit Sir Robert Killegrew gave my Lord, was laid upon a Teſter of a Bed, and loſt; and that then upon that he got another, which my Lord ſent to Sir Thomas Overbury by him; and afterwards a third, which my Lord took at Buly: But he never heard that Sir Thomas Overbury deſir'd my Lord to ſend him any.

Franklyn exam. Saith, That he provided a white Powder, which was Poiſon, for my Lady called it Arſenick; which, as my Lady did afterwards tell him, was ſent to Sir Thomas Overbury in a Letter.

L. of Som. I do not think you can take Franklyn for a good Witneſs. Now for the Antedates which are us'd as a Circumſtance againſt me; Sir Robert Cotton mov'd me to it, ſaying, That the Dates might prove uſeful to me at this time. Whereas my Lord of Northampton writes in one of his Letters, That he had promoted the Lieutenant; I conceive his Meaning to be, That he ſhould endeavour to make Overbury to be a good Inſtrument betwixt my Lord of Suffolk and me; and to that end, thoſe whom he thought to be his principal Enemies ſhould be the only Cauſers of his Freedom. And what I underſtand by Elvis's Concluſion, which my Lord of Northampton relates in the end of one of his Letters to me, That Death is the beſt Way; I wiſh that my Anſwers to thoſe Letters were now to be ſeen: and if I had ever thought that thoſe Letters of my Lord of Northampton's would be dangerous to me, it is likely I would never have kept them. For the Warrant I made, my Wife deſir'd me to do it for Mrs. Turner's ſake: Packer formed it; and told me, I might do it as a Counſellor alone, without other Hands; for I would have had at that time my Lord Knowles to have joined with me, but that he was at Council. And when this Warrant was ſent, I was not commanded from Court, as is pretended.

L. High-Steward. All the Council together could not juſtify the making of ſuch a Warrant.

L. of Som. For my endeavouring to get a Pardon; having had many things of Truſt under the King, and the Cuſtody of both the Seals, without particular Warrant, I deſir'd by this means to be exonerated. And for all general Words, the Lawyers put them in without my Privity. And for the Precedent of the largeſt Pardon, which I had from Sir Robert Cotton, it was upon this Occaſion: Sir Robert Cotton ſaid, In reſpect you have receiv'd ſome Diſgrace in the Opinion of the World, in having paſt that Pardon which the laſt Summer you deſir'd, eſpecially ſeeing there be many Precedents of larger; I would have you now get one after the largeſt Precedent, that ſo by that Addition you might recover your Honour. And upon this I bad him ſearch for the largeſt.

Serj. Mount. Sir Robert Cotton ſays otherwiſe.

Sir R. Cotton exam. Saith, My Lord deſir'd to ſeek Precedents of the largeſt Pardons.

L. of Som. For the Declaration which I lately ſent to the King, and particularly the Word [Mercy], which is now ſo much urg'd againſt me, it was the Lieutenant's; for I would have us'd another, but he ſaid it could be nothing prejudicial unto me: But when I writ it, I did not think thus to be ſifted in this Declaration; for I in that, in all Humility, did ſo far endeavour to humble and yield my ſelf, that the King might the better expreſs his Grace. And for the Words, [That I did conſent to and endeavour the Impriſonment of Sir Thomas Overbury]; it is true, for the Reaſon there alledg'd.

Mr. Attorney. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord here hath had a moſt gracious Hearing, and hath behav'd himſelf modeſtly and wittily.

L. High-Steward. If you have any more to ſay, my Lord, you ſhall be heard at length; we will not ſtraiten you in Time.

L. of Som. For Loubell, I never ſaw him but twice: He affirms the contrary, I deny it; and there is none elſe that proves it but himſelf. For Sir Robert Cotton, I could wiſh that he were here to clear many things that now be obſcure.

Mr. Attorney. If he were here, he could not be ſworn, for Reaſon of State, being held for a Delinquent.

L. of Som. For Sir David Wood, there was a Suit wherein he might have benefited himſelf 1200 l. which I was willing to further him in, conditionally, that Overbury ſhould have been a Sharer: But for the not effecting of it, it ſeems, he took ſome diſlike of Sir Thomas Overbury. The Money that is ſaid Sir Jervis Elvis gave for his Place, I had no part of it. Whereas the ſhifting of Offices is urg'd againſt me, to make the more eaſy Way for Elvis's Entrance; it is well known, the reaſon of Wade's diſplacing was in reſpect of his Careleſneſs, in ſuffering the Lady Arabella to have a Key, by which ſhe might have convey'd her ſelf out of Priſon. More I cannot call to mind; but deſire Favour.

Mr. Attorney. It hath, my Lord, formerly at Arraignments been a Cuſtom, after the King's Counſel and the Priſoner's Defence hath been heard, briefly to ſum up what hath been ſaid: But in this we have been ſo formal in the Diſtribution, that I do not think it neceſſary: And therefore now there is no more to be done, but that the Peers will be pleas'd to confer, and the Priſoner to withdraw till the Cenſures be paſt.

L. of Som. My Lords, before you go together, I beſeech you give me leave to recommend my ſelf and Cauſe unto you: As the King hath raiſed me to your Degree, ſo he hath now diſpos'd me to your Cenſures. This may be any of your own Caſes, and therefore I aſſure my ſelf you will not take Circumſtances for Evidence; for if you ſhould, the Condition of a Man's Life were nothing. In the mean time, you may ſee the Excellence of the King's Juſtice; which makes no Diſtinction, putting me into your hands for a juſt and equal Cenſure. For my part, I proteſt before God I was neither guilty of, nor privy to, any Wrong that Overbury ſuffer'd in this kind. A Man ſenſible of his own Preſervation, had need to expreſs himſelf.

So he being withdrawn from the Bar, my Lord High-Steward briefly reported to the Lords the Proofs againſt my Lord of Somerſet. Then the Lords by themſelves (and my Lord Steward for his Eaſe, but returning before the reſt) ſtaid ſome time together; in which Interim they ſent for the two Chief Juſtices. Being return'd, the Serjeant-Cryer Mr. Fanſhaw, called every Lord by his Name, Robert Lord Dormer, and ſo to the reſt, before my Lord High-Steward ſpake.

L. High-Steward. Robert Lord Dormer, How ſay you? Whether is Robert Earl of Somerſet guilty of the Felony, as Acceſſary before the Fact, of the wilful Poiſoning and Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, whereof he hath been indicted and arraigned, or not guilty? And ſo particularly to every Lord, one by one.

L. Dormer. Guilty, my Lord: Standing up, and bare-headed; then ſitting again. My Lord Norris, when it came to him, ſaid, Guilty of Murder: But being told by my Lord High-Steward that he muſt ſay either Guilty, or Not guilty, to the Indictment, he ſaid, Guilty. Then Mr. Lieutenant brought the Priſoner again to the Bar: But he had before taken off his George himſelf.

Mr. Attorney. My Lord High-Steward, Robert Earl of Somerſet hath been indicted and arraigned, and put himſelf upon his Peers, who all, without the Difference of one Voice, have found him guilty; I pray Judgment.

Mr. Fanſhaw. Robert Earl of Somerſet, hold up thy Hand. Whereas thou haſt been indicted, arraign'd, and pleaded Not guilty, as Acceſſary before the Fact, to the wilful Poiſoning and Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, and haſt put thy ſelf upon thy Peers, who have found thee guilty; What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf, why Sentence of Death ſhould not be pronounc'd againſt thee?

L. of Som. The Sentence that is paſt upon me muſt be juſt: I only deſire a Death according to my Degree. For that Simcocks ſaid ——

L. High-Steward. My Lord, you are not now to ſpeak any more in your Defence; but why Judgment of Death ſhould not be pronounced.

L. of Som. Then I have no more to ſay; but humbly beſeech you my Lord High-Steward, and the reſt of the Lords, to be Interceſſors to the King for his Mercy towards me, if it be neceſſary.

My Lord High-Steward, taking the White-Staff from Sir Richard Coningsby, pronounc'd Sentence.

L. High-Steward. Robert Earl of Somerſet, Whereas thou haſt been indicted, arraign'd, and found guilty, as Acceſſary before the Fact, of the wilful Poiſoning and Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury; you are therefore to be carried from hence to the Tower, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hang'd till you be dead: And Lord have Mercy upon you.

L. of Som. My Lords the Peers, I beſeech you, as you have been the Judges of this Day, ſo you will be my Interceſſors.

Then my Lord Steward broke his Staff, the Court diſſolv'd, and the Priſoner was carried away.

It may please your excellent Majesty.

THIS Bill containeth your Majesty's gracious Pardon unto the Lady Frances late Countess of Somerset, for being Accessary before the Fact, of the Death and Imprisonment of Sir Thomas Overbury.

It hath inserted, as Motives to your Majesty's Mercy, four respects; that is to say: The respect of her Father, Friends and Family.

Her Voluntary Confession, both when she was Prisoner, and at the Bar.

The Promise made publickly by the Lord High Steward, and her Peers, to intercede for your Majesty's Mercy.

And that the Crime was not of a Principal, but of an Accessary, before the Fact, by the Instigation of base Persons.

The like Pardon formerly passed your Majesty's Signature, and is now amended by your Majesty's special Direction from your Royal Mouth, in two Points: The one is, That Imprisonment in the Tower, or other Confining at your Majesty's Pleasure, is not pardoned. The other, That the solemn lemn Promise made at her Arraignment by the Lord Steward and the Peers to intercede to your Majesty for your Mercy, is inserted.

Francis Bacon.

The aforesaid Bill translated into English.

James Rex,

THE King to whom, &c. Greeting. Whereas the Fountains, as well of Mercy as Justice, are wont and ought to flow from the King's Throne; of which the former of Justice in the memorable Case of the Death and Murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, in a constant and right Course, hath flowed and is derived from us and our Royal Court, for the full Satisfaction of our Self and Subjects. And whereas divers and manifold Causes of our Clemency occur, which may move our Regal Mercy towards Frances Carre, late Countess of Somerset; chiefly, that Murder, with so many and such Examples of Justice, before this time expiated; especially two, whereof the first respecteth her Father, and Friends, and Family, and noble Progeny; the other hath respect to herself, because she freely and willingly confessed her Offence, submitting and prostrating her self at the Altar of our Mercy, not only during the time of her Imprisonment, but also publickly, and in her Tryal. And forasmuch as Thomas Lord Ellesmere, our Chancellor of England, and being our High Steward of England in that behalf, and all her Peers, by whose Judgment she was convict, at the humble Petition of the said Frances publickly made, solemnly bound themselves by their Promise, to intercede for our Royal Mercy towards her: And first weighing with ourselves the nature of her Offence, upon which she was indicted, arraigned, convicted and condemned, viz. that the Process and Judgment were not as of a Principal, but as of an Accessary before the Fact, and that she seemed to have begun by the Procurement and wicked Instigation of certain base Persons: Know ye, that we, moved with Pity, of our special Grace, and of our certain Knowledge, and our mere Motion, have pardoned, remitted and remised, and by these Presents for us, our Heirs and Successors, do pardon, remise, and release to the aforesaid Frances Carre, late Countess of Somerset, or by whatsoever other Name, or Sirname, or addition of Name, or of her Sirname of Dignity, Place, or Places, the same Frances may be known, esteemed, called, or named, or lately was known, esteem'd, call'd or nam'd, the Slaughter, Killing, Poisoning, Bewitching, Death, Felony and felonious Murdering of the aforesaid Sir Thomas Overbury; or by whatsoever other Name, Sirname, or addition of Name or Sirname, of Place or Places, the said Sir Thomas Overbury may be known, esteemed, called or named, or lately was known, esteem'd, call'd or nam'd, by the said Frances, by her self alone, or with any other Person, or any other Persons whatsoever, howsoever, in what manner soever, whensoever, or wheresoever done, committed, or perpetrated; and all, and all manner of Conspiracies, Felonies, Abetments, Procurements, Incitations, Partnerships, Maintainances, Helps, Hirings, Commands, Counsels, Crimes, Transgressions, Wrongs, Offences and Faults whatsoever, the aforesaid Death, Slaughter, Killing, Poisoning, Bewitching, Felony and felonious Murdering of the aforesaid Sir Thomas Overbury, in any wise touching or concerning. And the Accessary of them, as before the Fact, as after the Fact, and Flight and Flights made thereupon, altho the said Frances of the said Premisses, or any of the Premisses stand, or not stand indicted, impeached, appellat. vocat. rectat. waviat. convicted, condemned, attainted, or adjudged by the Judgment of her Peers, before the aforesaid High Steward of England, or otherwise howsoever, or thence in time to come shall appear to be indicted, impeached, appellar. rectari, vocari, waviari, convicted, condemned, attainted or adjudged. And all and singular Indictments, Judgments, Condemnations, Executions, Pains of Death, Pains of Corporal Punishments, and all other Pains and Penalties whatsoever of, for, or concerning the Death, Slaughter, Killing, Poisoning, Bewitching, Felonies, and felonious Murdering of the aforesaid Sir Thomas Overbury, in, upon, or against the same Frances, had, made, returned, or adjudged; or hereafter to be had, made, returned, or adjudged, or which we against the same Frances may have in time to come (Imprisonment at our Royal Pleasure, or Restraint, confining to a certain Place only excepted.) Moreover, we do pardon, and by these Presents for us, our Heirs and Successors, remit and remise to the aforesaid Frances, all and every Outlawries which against the same Frances, by reason or occasion of the Premises, or any of them, have been proclaimed, or hereafter shall be proclaimed; and all, and all manner of Suits, Complaints, Impeachments, and Demands whatsoever, which we against the same Frances, for the Premises, or any of the Premises, have had, have or in time to come shall have; and the Suit of our Peace which appertained to us against the same Frances, or may appertain by reason of the Premises, or any of them. And by these Presents, We do give and grant our firm Peace to the same Frances, willing that the same Frances, by the Justices, Sheriffs, Escheators, Bailiffs, or any other our Ministers, by the Occasions aforesaid, or any of them, be not molested, troubled, or in any manner vexed; so as nevertheless she stand right in our Court: if any towards her should speak concerning the Premises, or any of the Premises, although the said Frances do not find good and sufficient Security, according to the Form of a certain Act of Parliament, of the Sovereign Lord Edward the Third, late King of England, our Progenitor, held at Westminster, in the tenth Year of his Reign, for her good Behaviour from henceforth towards us, our Heirs and Successors, and all our People. And further, for us, our Heirs and Successors, of our more ample special Grace, and out of our certain Knowledge, and our mere Motion, we will and grant by these Presents, That these our Letters-Patents of Pardon, and all and singular the Things contained in the same, shall stand, and be good, firm, valid, sufficient and effectual in the Law, and from henceforth shall by no means become void. And that in time to come, the said Frances, by any means, shall not be indicted, arrested, accused, vexed or troubled of, for, or concerning the Death, Murder, Slaughter, Poisoning, Bewitching, Felony, or felonious Killing of the aforesaid Sir Thomas Overbury, howsoever, or by whatsoever Means the said Sir Thomas Overbury came to his End: The Statute of the Sovereign Lord Richard the Second, late King of England, in the thirteenth Year of his Reign, or any other

 Statute,

Statute, Act, Ordinance, Proviſion, or Reſtriction to the contrary thereof notwithſtanding. In Teſtimony whereof, &c. Witneſs, &c.

'WHereas his Majeſty is graciouſly pleaſed 'to enlarge and ſet at liberty the Earl of 'Somerſet and his Lady, now Priſoners in the 'Tower of London; and that nevertheleſs it is 'thought fit that both the ſaid Earl and his Lady 'be confined to ſome convenient Place: It is there-'fore, according to his Majeſty's gracious Pleaſure 'and Command, ordered, That the Earl of So-'merſet and his Lady do repair either to Grays or 'Cowſham, the Lord Wallingford's Houſes, in the 'County of Oxon, and remain confined to one or 'either of the ſaid Houſes, and within three Miles 'Compaſs of either of the ſame, until farther Or-'der be given by his Majeſty.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty: The Humble Petition of Robert Earl of Somerſet.

SHEWETH,

THAT in the Year 1616, after your Petitioner's Troubles were over, the King (your Majeſty's Father) was pleaſed by the Earl of Suffolk, the Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Worceſter, Lord Privy-Seal, and the Duke of Richmond, Lord Steward, to make known to your Petitioner his favourable Intentions towards him, as well touching his Pardon and Inlargement, and the Payment of his Debts, as for his Eſtate, of which they ſhewed him that his Majeſty did mean to take ſome part to the Crown; but would make up to your Petitioner in other Lands to as much in Value: and in particular, that with a Mannor which he had in Northamptonſhire, of a Thouſand Pounds per Annum, there was Four thouſand Pound of the King's Lands to be given him, which ſhould be improvable, and be eſteemed at Six thouſand Pounds per Annum. But your Petitioner, in that he had never taken any Lands of Gift from the King, as for ſome other Reaſons, did delay to take hold of that Offer, deſiring that he might be allowed to keep that Eſtate which he had formerly got, without Prejudice to his Majeſty or any Perſon. In which Hope he reſted, until he found that ſome Pieces of it had been diſpoſed of. Whereupon, being urged by his Wife's Friends, he was content, in the behalf of her and his Daughter, to give way that they ſhould ſue to his Majeſty for the Performance of that which had been proffer'd to your Petitioner; but in that he would not appear therein himſelf, (doubting leſt that might be underſtood to imply an Aſſent on his part to that which had been done with his Eſtate) it was given otherwiſe than as it was at firſt intended. Notwithſtanding whereof, and that your Petitioner continued in the ſame mind, without craving any Reparation therein for the ſpace of eight or nine Years after, yet he found cauſe at laſt to ſue both for his Freedom and Pardon, and for that Part of his Eſtate which reſted in the Crown; which Pardon he had not above four Months before God took the King. And his Majeſty being moved a little before concerning your Petitioner's Eſtate, (he being then at New-Market) profeſſed that he would give Order therein at his coming to White-hall; which it pleaſed God to prevent.

Since that time he hath ſued to your Majeſty by the Duke of Buckingham, the Earl of Portland, and afterwards by my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of Cottington, and others. At the Marriage of his Daughter with the now Earl of Bedford, he was by the Dutcheſs of Buckingham and the Earl of Pembroke deſired, for Reaſons they then gave him, not to preſs your Majeſty therein at that time; being aſſured by them, that whatſoever he had to demand juſtly of your Majeſty, or ſhould make appear to have been meant of him by your Father, you would do him right in it. Whereupon he went on, and engaged himſelf to the late Earl of Bedford, and for his Uſe, in which he ſtands yet bound, to his exceeding great Prejudice: All which notwithſtanding, and that he afterwards did petition your Majeſty for a Reference in this ſame Cauſe, yet he could not then neither obtain any.

Your Petitioner humbly prayeth, That your Majeſty will be pleaſed to take into your Conſideration this Suit of his, of a nature far differing from all others that are made to you; that which he craves being only the performance of what your Father intended for him, in lieu of ſo much as he had taken of his, and the ſame no otherwiſe in your Majeſty to give him, than as he hath forborn to take hold of it; and for which your Majeſty may conceive there hath been a Cauſe, and that not a common one, which had made him ſo long diſpute with himſelf the Receipt of ſo great a Benefit, and wherein his whole Fortune conſiſted, and all that he had been getting for many Years. However, he being the firſt that hath left in the Crown that which he might have had from it, may well hope that his Confidence will not be imputed to him for a Crime, or that your Majeſty (if he had thereby given you any Advantage) would think fit to make uſe of it, againſt one whom you may have cauſe to find, when it comes to be enquired into, that he hath been more than any truſted by the Crown, and hath more Proofs to ſhew than any other, that he hath deſerved well of the King your Father, of your Majeſty, and of all theſe your Three Kingdoms.

His laſt and humble Suit to your Majeſty is, That in reſpect of the many Croſſes he hath met with in this preſent Cauſe, and that time hath taken away thoſe great Men before mentioned, as alſo the Earl of Carliſle and others, that were imployed by the King to your Petitioner, or preſent when he received his Meſſage from the Lords, there remaining only now ſome noble Perſons of a greater Number in this Kingdom, that can teſtify ſo much as will give Credit to that which is delivered here; That your Majeſty will therefore pleaſe to be informed by them what your Petitioner hath further to ſay herein for himſelf, and what they themſelves can report touching the Intentions of the King, your Majeſty's Father, towards him in this Particular which is now ſought of you: That after the many Loſſes he hath ſuſtained by his want of Acceſs to your Majeſty, and the Aſſiſtance of thoſe about you, ſuch Courſe may be taken now at length by your Majeſty for the repairing him again, either out of that Eſtate which was his own, or otherwiſe, as may accord with the Purpoſe of the King your Father, with your Majeſty's Juſtice, and is due to the Demand of your Petitioner.

And he ſhall pray for your Majeſty's

Long and Happy Reign.

After

After my Lord of Somerſet had been proceeded with, as is ſhewed in his Petition, the Earl of Carliſle was ſent to him by the King, who told him, as from his Majeſty, That he was ſorry for what had paſt; but he could not hinder the Courſe of Juſtice to go on, had it concerned his own Son: And that to repair him again, he would do what he might by Law, or otherwiſe. In a few Days after the Lord Treaſurer and the other Lords came to him, and ſpake to the ſame effect. And, as it is in the Petition, a while after, when ſome Pieces of his Eſtate were paſſed away under the Seals, my Lord William Howard, my Lady Bambury, and ſome of his own Friends, came and ſhewed him what was done, willing him that he would take care, if not of himſelf, yet of his Wife and Child, and of his Children he might have. Whereupon, he gave way to his Wife to write to my Lord of Carliſle, to move the King about that Eſtate which had been tender'd them before in his Majeſty's Name. Which Letter being ſhewed to the King, his Majeſty gave order to the Lord Treaſurer that the ſame ſhould be done accordingly. But this falling out to be not long before the King's going into Scotland, it was expreſly delay'd till then; at which time the Lord Treaſurer ſent to him, and lets him know, That he now had order to make ready two Warrants, one of Lands, and another of Fee-farm Rents; and if he would not uſe Means, and that by his own Suit, to have the King put in mind of his firſt Directions, it was like he ſhould have the worſt of them returned to him. But the other apprehending what was meant thereby, would not be induced to make any ſuch Suit, for the Reaſon he gives in the Petition. Wherefore, the King being on his way as far as Huntington, the Warrant with the Fee-farms was ſealed with the Want of One thouſand Pounds a Year, beſides of the Sum formerly offered to him; which altogether took off of the Value of the whole about the one half. This made ſome of his Court-friends then in Scotland with the King to acquaint his Friends here with thoſe Paſſages; whereupon his Siſters and divers of our greateſt Lords went to the King, to whom and to that which was deſired of his Majeſty, he made anſwer.

But after the King's Return into England, he continued as before, without moving either for his Eſtate, or any thing elſe, until the King fell dangerouſly ſick at Royſton. Then he haſten'd to paſs through thoſe Fee-farm Rents, taking them for a Maintenance in the preſent, or in part of that which was meant for him, attending a fitter time when to move for the reſt; ſince there was nothing could ſet him right, or repair him in all, but a Reverſal of the Judgment; which he ſought no otherwiſe than as the Means whereby he might in his own Perſon be enabled to hold an Eſtate, or ſue for one: For it ſeems he had ſome Hold, which he would not quit, of a Hope of having that which had been his own formerly. But the Times going on to the worſe for him, he found cauſe ſeven or eight Years after to ſeek both for his Liberty and Pardon; which Pardon he had got but four Months before the King died. Immediately after he had his Pardon, he moved for that which reſted of his Eſtate; which Sir Henry Gibb acquainted the King withal. But the King (without looking upon the Paper in which the Particulars were to be ſhewed him) told Sir Henry, That what Somerſet had to demand of him in that matter, he ſhould have it, if he had ſo much Land in England. This was at New-Market, a little before the King ſickened at Theobalds.

So afterwards, when his Majeſty came to the Crown, he did by my Lord of Buckingham, and the other Lords he names in the Petition, continue this Suit of his without Intermiſſion: But he could obtain no Anſwer nor Reference, until about the time that his Daughter was to be married. Then by the Dutcheſs of Buckingham's means, the Queen got the King to promiſe; and this my Lord Cottington told him of alſo: but it came no further. Only this he benefited thereby, That adviſing with my Lord Cottington upon the time of the Reference, for that he had the Teſtimony of a Nobleman to produce on his part, who was then troubled with the Gout, and a hundred Miles off in the Country, my Lord Cottington bid him get it in Writing, and it would be as well. And this Lord's Teſtimony, who died ſoon after, we have in a Letter to my Lord Cottington yet ſealed; but becauſe the Reference went not on, was never delivered to him. So as here we have this Letter, which makes good that part of the Petition which mentions the Particulars of the King's Gift for the Eſtate, and our Report for that which paſſed here in Scotland, ſhews the Continuance of the King in the ſame Mind and Diſpoſition; and Sir Henry Gibb is now preſent in this Kingdom, who will teſtify ſo much as hath been delivered here in his Name.

The Tryal of Mervin Lord Audley, (Earl of Caſtlehaven*) for a Rape and Sodomy, on the 25th of* April, 1631. in the Sixth Year of King Charles the Firſt.

THERE were three Indictments found at Salisbury in Wiltſhire againſt the Earl, the Wedneſday preceding Eaſter, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Hyde, the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon, and Baron Denham, Juſtices of Aſſize for that Circuit, and ſpecial Commiſſioners in that matter. One Indictment was for a Rape upon his own Wife; for holding her by Force, while one of his Minions forcibly, againſt her Will, had carnal Knowledge of her: So that he was indicted as Præſens, Auxilians, and Confortans; and therefore a Principal. The other two Indictments were for Buggery with a Man.

The Judges, on Friday Morning before the Tryal, being ſent for, all but Denham being met at Serjeants-Inn in Fleet-ſtreet, theſe Queſtions were propropoſed to them by Sir Robert Heath, the King's Attorney-General; a Memorial of which a learned Judge, Sir James Whitlock, one of the eight hereafter mentioned, ſet down in Writing, to the effect following.

1. Whether a Peer of the Realm might have his Tryal by Peers, and plead he will be try'd by God and the Country?

Anſw. He might not: For his Tryal by Peers was no Privilege, but the Law declared by Magna Charta; which if he would not plead to by a Tryal of his Peers, it was ſtanding mute.

2. Whether a Peer might challenge his Peers, as in the caſe of common Jurats?

Anſw. Anſwer he might not; (which I think is ſo, ſaid that Judge) becauſe they were not upon their Oath, but upon their Honour; and a Challenge was try'd whether he ſtood indifferent, as unſworn.

3. Whether a Peer might not have Counſel any more than a Commoner?

Anſw. If Matter of Law appear'd, he might; not for Matter of Fact.

Certain Examinations having been taken by the Lords without an Oath,

It was reſolv'd, Thoſe could not be uſed until they were repeated upon Oath, unleſs of the Party to be try'd; which might be read without an Oath.

4. Whether the Wife in this Caſe might be a Witneſs againſt her Husband for the Rape?

Anſw. She might: For ſhe was the Party wronged; otherwiſe ſhe might be abuſed. In like manner a Villain (Vaſſal) might be a Witneſs againſt his Lord in ſuch Caſes.

5. Whether the Witneſſes might be produced viva voce, if the Lord Steward required it, or the Priſoner?

Anſw. If he ſtood mute in the Caſe of Rape or Buggery, he might have his Clergy in either. "How this can be a direct Anſwer to the Queſ-"tion, I confeſs I cannot readily apprehend."

6. Then if he might not be put to a Tryal on the other Indictment, might not he be for a later Buggery, and be deny'd the Clergy?

Anſw. On that he might by 18 Eliz. 1.

7. Whether, in caſe one ſtood mute, Evidence might be open'd by the Court's Command concerning the Fact, though the Delinquent was to be preſs'd to death for his Contempt?

Anſw. That was a Matter which lay in the Diſcretion of the Court.

8. Whether in Caſes wherein Clergy was allowable, the Party might pray it before he anſwered, and deny to anſwer otherwiſe?

Anſw. This was a Confeſſion.

9. Whether in a Rape there muſt be Penetration?

The Anſwer was in the Affirmative.

10. The Priſoner having petition'd to be bail'd, whether it might not be granted?

Anſw. The King, as King, was to adviſe about it: The Judges acquainted the Lord Keeper he could not in Juſtice require it; yet he might be bail'd ex gratia, which was not fit in that odious Caſe.

At a ſecond Meeting of the Judges in Serjeants-Inn, there were other Things conſidered of concerning this Matter.

They made a Difference between Buggery and a Rape, in point of having the Clergy if he ſtood mute: For it was argued he might have his Clergy if he ſtood mute in a Rape, but not in Buggery; becauſe by the Statute 25 Hen. 8. Buggery was made Felony, which by the Common Law was not. And in the very Creation of the Offence, Clergy was taken away; whereas Clergy lay for a Rape until it was (ſhould be) taken away by Statute.

It was concluded the Lords might eat and drink before they were agreed; but that they could not ſeparate nor adjourn till they gave their Verdict: That this appeared out of the Lord Dacres of Greyſtock's Caſe, who was try'd for Treaſon, and acquitted by his Peers in 26 Hen. 8.

It was agreed by the Juſtices in that Caſe of the Lord Dacres, That Verdict could not be given by a leſſer Number of Lords than Twelve; and that if twelve were for the King, and thirteen for the Priſoner, the Priſoner ſhould be acquitted: That in an Appeal, if the Defendant ſhould be mute, he ſhould be hang'd; and it was an Attainder, it being not within the Statute of Weſtminſter, cap. 12. De Paine fort & Duer. No more was Treaſon. Vid. Stamf.

It was alſo agreed, That a Lord of Parliament was within the Statute of Weſtminſter 1. in caſe of Felony, and ſhould be preſs'd to Death.

Farther, That if the Lord Audley ſhould have his Clergy upon his being mute, yet he might be try'd upon the other Indictments of Rape and Buggery, and ſhould not have his Clergy, by the Statute of 18 Eliz. becauſe the admitting him to his Clergy would be a Superſedeas to all Indictments of Offences within Clergy, not of thoſe without, by that Statute: For by the Common Law, he that was admitted to his Clergy was diſcharged from anſwering any other Offence; for by Indictment of that Law he was taken out of the power of the Secular Judge, and put into the hands of the Ordinary, whoſe Priſoner he was all his Life after.

It was reſolv'd, from the Lord Dacres's Caſe, That the Lord Steward, after Verdict given, might take time to adviſe upon it, for any Point of Law; that his Office continued to him till his Judgment and Reſoſolution; and it was but a Commiſſion pro hac vice notwithſtanding.

The Arraignment.

The Lord Coventry, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, was appointed Lord High-Steward for that Day; who, having Orders for the ſaid Tryal from his Majeſty, gave Directions for the ſame.

The Lords the Peers took their Places about Eight of the Clock in the Morning, and were ſeated on Benches on each ſide of a large Table, cover'd with Green Cloth; and below them were the Judges placed, and the King's learned Counſel, and the Officers of the Court. And having diſpos'd of themſelves in their ſeveral Places, the Lord Steward about Nine of the Clock enter'd the Hall uncover'd, with ſeven Maces carried before him by ſeven Serjeants at Arms, and was attended upon by Sir John Burroughs, Garter Principal King of Arms, and Mr. James Maxwel, Uſher of the Black Rod.

After the Lord Steward had ſaluted all the Lords the Peers, (who ſaluted him again) he preſently aſcended the State; and being ſeated in the Chair, he was preſented with his Majeſty's Commiſſion by one of the Maſters of the Chancery, which bore Date the 13th of April, 1631.

After he had received the ſaid Commiſſion, he commanded an O Yes to be made, by one of the Serjeants at Arms, for a general Silence; and then deliver'd the ſaid Commiſſion to Sir Thomas Fanſhaw, Clerk of the Crown, to be openly read. Which being done, Mr. Maxwell kneel'd down, and preſented his Lordſhip with a White-Staff Verge of State, which he gave to one of the Serjeants at Arms, who held the ſame up by the Cloth of State on the Right-hand thereof. And after the Commiſſion was read, and the Staff received as aforeſaid, his Grace commanded a ſolemn O Yes to be made; and then gave leave to all the Lords the Peers, and the Judges, and to all Privy-Counſellors there preſent, to be cover'd; and Command was given, that none under that Degree ſhould keep on their Hats upon pain of Impriſonment. And then the Peers were ſeverally called by their Names, and each of them anſwer'd particularly, viz.

1. Lord Weſton, Lord High-Treaſurer of England;
2. Earl of Mancheſter, Lord Privy-Seal;
3. Earl of Arundel and Surrey, Earl-Marſhal;
4. Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, Lord Chamberlain;
5. Earl of Kent;

The Judges preſent.

Sir Nicholas Hyde, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench;
Sir Thomas Richardſon, Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas;
Sir Humphrey Davenport, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer;
Baron Denham;
Judge Jones;
Judge Hutton;
Judge Whitlocke;
Judge Croke.

The King's Counſel.

Sir Robert Heath, Attorney-General;
Sir Richard Shelton, Sollicitor-General;
Sir John Finch, Queen's Attorney-General;
Sir Thomas Crew, King's Serjeant at Law.

Officers of the Court.

Sir Thomas Fanſhaw, Clerk of the Crown;
Mr. John Keeling, his Deputy or Aſſiſtant.

This done, the Lord Steward, after a ſolemn Precognizance, commanded the Indictments to be certified and brought in; and then, by a Serjeant at Arms, the Lieutenant of the Tower was called to bring forth the Priſoner, (who until that time was kept in a little Room by the Common-Pleas) and the Lieutenant brought him to the Bar, with divers of the Guard attending on him, where he had a Place in manner of a Pew, lin'd with Green, in which he ſtood; and the Lieutenant had another of the ſame Form for him to reſt in, adjoining to it. And when he had done his Obeyſance to the Lord High-Steward and the Peers, (who all reſaluted him again) the Lord High-Steward ſpake to him in the manner following:

The Lord High Steward's Speech.

My Lord Audley,

THE King hath underſtood, both by Report and the Verdict of divers Gentlemen of Quality in your own Country, that you ſtand impeach'd of ſundry Crimes of a moſt high and heinous nature; and to try whether they be true or not, and that Juſtice may be done accordingly, his Majeſty brings you this day to your Tryal, doing herein like the mighty King of Kings, in the 18th of Geneſis, ver. 20, 21. who went down to ſee whether their Sins were ſo grievous as the Cry of them: Becauſe the Cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and their Sins be grievous, I will go down (ſaith the Lord) and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the Cry of it. And Kings on Earth can have no better Pattern to follow than the King of Heaven; and therefore our Sovereign Lord the King, God's Vicegerent here on Earth, hath commanded that you ſhall be here tried this day, and to that end, hath caus'd theſe Peers to be aſſembled: and the Deſire of his Majeſty is, that your Tryal ſhall be as equal as Equity and Juſtice it ſelf; and therefore theſe noble Men your Peers (whoſe Hearts are as full of Integrity, Juſtice, and Truth, as their Veins full of noble Blood) are this Day to try you. Wherefore, if you be innocent, ſpeak boldly and confidently, and fear not to juſtify your ſelf, and be aſſur'd, that thoſe that accuſe you (if you be free yourſelf) ſhall not eſcape free. But if you be guilty of thoſe Crimes, I adviſe you to give Honour to God and the King, and confeſs your Fault; for it is not vain Confidence, nor Subtilty, nor ſtanding out in Denial, that can hide the Truth; and all Shifts and Subtilties againſt it are but Conſilia adverſus Dominum: Therefore, if Truth touch you at the Heart, and your Conſcience, which is a thouſand Witneſſes, and God's Grace, which is greater than both, ſtand not out againſt it. And if you do, God will put it into the Hearts of theſe noble Perſons to find it out, and to do that which is juſt.

The Lord Audley's Anſwer.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I HAVE been cloſe Priſoner theſe ſix Months, without Friends, without Counſel or Advice: I am ignorant of the Advantages and Diſadvantages of the Law, and am but weak of Speech at the beſt, and therefore I deſire to have the liberty of having Counſel to ſpeak for me.

The

The Lord High Steward's Reply.

FOR your ſo long Impriſonment, it hath been to you a ſpecial Favour; for you have had time enough to bethink your ſelf, and more than ever any Man had that hath been committed for ſuch an Offence, and more Favour than ever any had that came to this Bar; and you ſhall demand nothing, which the Law can allow, but you ſhall have it. But for your Demand, I muſt move it to the Lords the Judges, and they ſhall ſatisfy you in it, or any other thing you deſire.

Then his Grace deſir'd to be reſolv'd of the Judges, Whether this Demand of my Lord Audley, to have Counſel to plead for him, might be granted or not?

The Judges anſwered, That, in Criminal Caſes, Counſel is not to be admitted for Matter of Fact; but for Matter of Law they may.

Then the Lord Steward proceeded to the Charge, commanded the three Indictments to be read by Sir Tho. Fanſhaw, Clerk of the Crown; two for Sodomy with Lawrence Fitz-Patrick, his Footman; the third for a Rape committed on his own Wife, the Counteſs of Caſtlehaven.

Then being ask'd, Whether he was Guilty of them, or Not Guilty? He anſwer'd, Not Guilty.

Then he was ask'd, How he would be try'd?

The Earl ſaid, By God and my Peers.

Whereupon the Peers put off their Hats; and thereupon the Iſſue was join'd.

The Lord High Steward's Speech to the Lords.

My Lords,

THE Priſoner ſtands indicted for a Rape, by one Indictment, and of Sodomy by two; and he hath pleaded, Not Guilty to them all: It is my Duty to charge you with the Tryal of it, and you are to judge of it.

The Offences wherewith he ſtands charged, are to be proved by Evidence; and the Crimes that come this Day before us, may in ſome breed Deteſtation, and the Perſon of his Lordſhip in others may breed Compaſſion: I deſire your Lordſhips to ſet theſe two aſide, and let your Reaſon ſway your Judgment, and let that rule your Affections, and your Hearts your Heads; for neither of theſe ought to be put into the Ballance, for a Grain on either ſide may ſway the Scale. You are to give attentive Hearing, and then to weigh equally, that the Scale may lean the right way. The Judges will aſſiſt you in the points of Law, which, if you doubt of, you are to expound it to me, and I to them. And this you are to do without Corporal Oath; for the Law conceiveth you of ſuch Integrity, that you will do that for Juſtice, which others do upon their Oaths; and therefore admit of no Challenge: and God direct you to do as you ought.

Then Sir Tho. Crew gave the firſt Charge; and after him Mr. Attorney ſaid as followeth.

My Lord Steward,

MAY it pleaſe your Grace, there are three Indictments againſt Mervin Lord Audley; the firſt for a Rape, the other two for Sodomy.

The Perſon is honourable; the Crimes of which he is indicted diſhonourable; which if it fall out to be true (which is to be left to Tryal) I dare be bold to ſay, never Poet invented, nor Hiſtorian writ of any Deed ſo foul. And although Suetonius hath curiouſly ſet out the Vices of ſome of the Emperors who had abſolute Power, which might make them fearleſs of all manner of Puniſhment, and beſides were Heathens, and knew not God; yet none of theſe came near this Lord's Crimes. The one is a Crime, that I may ſpeak it to the Honour of our Nation, is of ſuch Variety, that we ſeldom or never knew of the like; but they are all of ſuch a peſtilential Nature, that, if they be not puniſh'd, they will draw from Heaven a heavy Judgment upon this Kingdom.

Whereupon (Mr. Attorney digreſſing from the Matter) the Lord Audley would have interrupted him, and requir'd to hold him to the Points in the Indictments. But the Lord High Steward deſir'd his Lordſhip to be patient, and aſſur'd him he ſhould be heard in fit time at full. Whereupon Mr. Attorney proceeded again in his Charge as followeth:

May it pleaſe your Grace,

I can ſpeak it with Joy and Comfort, That during all my Time of Service, both in his Majeſty's Father's Time, and ſince he came to the Crown, I had never the like Occaſion to ſpeak in this place againſt a Peer of the Realm before now; and God knows I do it now with Sorrow, and I hope I ſhall never have the like Occaſion to do ſo much again. But his Majeſty, who is the Pattern of Virtue, not only as King, but in his Perſon alſo; in whom it is hard to judge whether he moſt excels in Juſtice or Mercy, (but I rather think in Mercy) would have my Lord Audley the Priſoner at the Bar, heard with as much Favour as ſuch a Crime can admit: and when he firſt heard of it, he gave ſtrict Command, that the Truth ſhould be ſearch'd out, that his Throne and People might be clear'd from ſo heavy and heinous Sins; and thereupon he was indicted in his own Country, according to the Law, and by Gentlemen of Worth and Quality. The Bill was found; and now he is perſonally brought to this Bar to be tried by theſe his honourable Peers, ſuch, of whoſe Wiſdom and Sincerity there can be no queſtion, but that he ſhall have juſt and honourable Tryal. And firſt, I ſhall begin with the Indictment of Rape. Bracton tells us of King Athelſtane's Law before the Conqueſt: If the Party were of no chaſte Life, but a Whore, yet there may be a Raviſhment; but it is a good Plea to ſay ſhe was his Concubine.

In an Indictment of Rape, there is no Time of Proſecution neceſſary; for nullum Tempus occurrit Regi: But in Caſe of an Appeal of Rape, if the Woman did not proſecute in convenient Time, it will bar her.

If a Man take away a Maid by Force, and raviſh her, and afterwards ſhe give her Conſent and marry him, yet it is a Rape.

For the Crimen Sodomiticum, our Law had no knowledge of it till the 15th of Hen. VIII. by which Statute it was made Felony; and in this there is no more queſtion, but only, whether it be Crimen Sodomiticum ſine Penetratione; and the Law of 15 Eliz. ſets it down in general Words: and where the Law doth not diſtinguiſh, neither muſt we. And I know you will be cautious how you will give the leaſt Mitigation to ſo abominable a Sin, which brought ſuch Plagues after it, as we may ſee in Gen. 17. Levit. 18. Judg. 19. Rom. 1. But (my Lord) it ſeem'd to me ſtrange at the firſt, how a Nobleman of his Quality ſhould fall to ſuch abominable Sins; but when I found he had given himſelf over to Luſt, and that Nemo repente fit peſſimus, and if once Men habit themſelves in ill, it is no marvel if they fall into any Sins; and that he was conſtant to no Religion, but in the Morning he would be a Papiſt and go to Maſs, and in the Afternoon a Proteſtant and go to a Sermon. When I had conſider'd theſe Things, I eaſily conceiv'd, and ſhall be bold to give your Grace a Reaſon why he became ſo ill. He believ'd not God; he had not the Fear of God before his Eyes; he left God, and God left him to his own Wickedneſs: and what may not a Man run into? What Sin ſo foul, what Thing ſo odious, which he dares not adventure? But I find in him Things beyond all Imagination; for I find his ill Imagination and Intentions bent to have his Wife naught with the wickedeſt Man that ever I heard of before: for who would not have his Wife virtuous and good, how bad ſoever himſelf be? And I find him Bawd to his own Wife. If ſhe loved him, ſhe muſt love Skipwith, (whom he honour'd above all) and not any honeſt Love, but in a diſhoneſt Love; and he gives his Reaſon by Scripture, She was now made ſubject to him; and therefore if ſhe did ill at his Command, it was not her Fault but his, and he would anſwer it. His irregular Bounty toward Skipwith was alſo remarkable. He lets this Skipwith (whom he calls his Favourite) ſpend of his Purſe 500 l. per Annum; and if his Wife or Daughter would have any thing, tho never ſo neceſſary, they muſt lie with Skipwith, and have it from him, and not otherwiſe; alſo telling Skipwith and his Daughter-in-Law, he had rather have a Child by him than any other. But for theſe things, I had rather they ſhould come forth of the Witneſſes Mouths than from me: and thereupon deſir'd that the Proofs might be read.

The Depoſition of Walter Bigg.

Walter Bigg depos'd, That Amptil was a Page to Sir H. Smith, and had no more Means when he came to my Lord Audley, but the Mare he rode on. He entertain'd him as his Page eight Years, and afterwards let him keep Horſes in my Lord's Grounds, by which I think he enrich'd himſelf 2000 l. but he never ſat at Table with my Lord till he had marry'd his Daughter, and then gave him to the Value of 7000 l.

That Skipwith was ſent from Ireland to be my Lady's Page; and that his Father and Mother were very poor Folks there. He ſpent of my Lord's Purſe, per Annum, 500 l. and he gave him at one time 1000 l. and hath made divers Deeds of Land unto him.

My Lord was at firſt a Proteſtant; but after, by buying of Founthill, he turn'd his Religion.

That Henry Skipwith had no Means when he came to him, and that he had given him 1000 l. and that Skipwith lay with him when he was ſtraiten'd in Rooms; and that he gave a Farm of 100 l. per Annum to Amptil that married his Daughter, and at other times to the value of 7000 l. and that there was one Blandina in his Houſe fourteen Days, and beſtowed an ill Diſeaſe there, and therefore he ſent her away.

The Lord Audley's Examination, taken before the Lord-Keeper, Lord-Treaſurer, Lord-Marſhal, and others: which being ſhew'd to him, ſubſcrib'd with his own Hand, he would not acknowledge, but excus'd it, ſaying, his Eyes were bad; but being perfectly read, he acknowledg'd it.

My Lord-Steward's Advice to my Lord Audley.

My Lord,

I would adviſe you not to deny the Things which are clearly prov'd; for then the Lords will give leſs Credit to the reſt you ſay.

The Counteſs of Caſtlehaven's Examination.

That ſhortly after the Earl marry'd her, viz. the firſt or ſecond Night, Amptil came to the Bed's-ſide, whilſt ſhe and her Husband were in Bed, and the Lord Audley ſpake laſciviouſly to her, and told her, That now her Body was his; and that if ſhe lov'd him ſhe muſt love Amptil; and that if ſhe lay with any other Man with his Conſent, it was not her Fault, but his; and that if it was his Will to have it ſo, ſhe muſt obey, and do it.

That he attempted to draw her to lie with his Servant Skipwith; and that Skipwith made him believe he did it, but did it not.

That he would make Skipwith come naked into his Chamber, and delighted in calling up his Servants to ſhew their Privities, and would make her look on, and commended thoſe that had the largeſt.

That one Night, being a-bed with her at Founthill, he call'd for his Man Brodway, and commanded him to lie at his Bed's Feet; and about Midnight (ſhe being aſleep) call'd him to light a Pipe of Tobacco. Brodway roſe in his Shirt, and my Lord pull'd him into Bed to him and her, and made him lie next to her; and Brodway lay with her, and knew her carnally, whilſt ſhe made Reſiſtance, and the Lord held both her Hands, and one of her Legs the while: and that as ſoon as ſhe was free, ſhe would have kill'd herſelf with a Knife, but that Brodway forcibly took that Knife from her; and before that Act of Brodway, ſhe had never done it.

That he delighted to ſee the Act done; and made Skipwith to come into Bed with them, and lie with her whilſt he might ſee it; and ſhe cry'd out to have ſav'd herſelf.

Then Lawrence Fitz-Patrick was produc'd; but before his Examination was read, the Earl deſir'd that neither he, nor any other, might be allow'd Witneſſes againſt him, until he had taken the Oath of Allegiance. This was refer'd to the Lords the Judges.

The Judges reſolve againſt him, that they might be Witneſſes, unleſs they were convicted Recuſants.

The Examination of Fitz-Patrick was then read, the Truth of which he then again confirm'd upon Oath.

That the Earl had committed Sodomy twice upon his Perſon: that Henry Skipwith was the ſpecial Favourite of my Lord Audley, and that he uſually lay with him; and that Skipwith ſaid, that the Lord Audley made him lie with his own Lady; and that he ſaw Skipwith in his ſight do it, my Lord being preſent: and that he lay with Blandina in in his ſight, and four more of the Servants, and afterwards the Earl himſelf lay with her in their ſights.

Then Skipwith was produc'd and ſworn, and his Examination read, which he again confirm'd upon Oath, and depoſeth, viz.

That the Earl often ſollicited him to lie with the young Lady, and perſuaded her to love him; and to draw her thereunto, he urg'd that his Son lov'd her not; and that in the end he uſually lay with the young Lady, and that there was Love between them both before and after; and that my Lord ſaid, he would rather have a Boy of his begetting than any other; and that ſhe was but twelve Years of Age when he firſt lay with her, and that he could not enter her Body without Art; and that the Lord Audley fetch'd Oil to open her Body, but ſhe cry'd out, and he could not enter; and then the Earl appointed Oil the ſecond time; and then Skipwith enter'd her Body, and he knew her carnally; and that my Lord made him lie with his own Lady, but he knew her not, but told his Lord he did.

That he ſpent 500 l. per Annum of the Lord's Purſe, and, for the moſt part, he lay with the ſaid Earl.

That the Earl gave him his Houſe at Salisbury, and a Mannor of 600 l. per Annum.

That Blandina lay in the Earl's Houſe half a year, and was a common Whore.

Fitz-Patrick's ſecond Examination.

That the Lord Audley made him lie with him at Founthill, and at Salisbury, and once in the Bed, and emitted between his Thighs, but did not penetrate his Body; and that he heard he did ſo with others.

That Skipwith lay with the young Lady often, and ordinarily; and that the Earl knew it, and encourag'd him in it, and wiſh'd to have a Boy by him and the young Lady.

That Blandina liv'd half a year in my Lord's Houſe, and was a common Whore.

Edmund Scott's Examination.

He depoſeth, That Skipwith frequently knew the young Lady, and that the Earl knew it, and encourag'd him therein.

Fry's Examination.

That Henry Skipwith and the young Lady lay often together, and the Earl in Company; and that then the Earl proteſted, that he would fain have a Boy of his begetting.

Then was read the young Lady Audley's Examination.

That ſhe was marry'd to her Husband by a Romiſh Prieſt in the Morning, and at Night by a Prebend at Kilkenny; that ſhe was firſt tempted to lie with Skipwith by the Earl's Allurements; and that ſhe had no Means but what ſhe had from Skipwith; but ſhe would not lie with Pawlet; he ſollicited her alſo to lie with one Green.

That the Earl himſelf ſaw her and Skipwith lie together divers times; and nine Servants of the Houſe had alſo ſeen it.

When the Earl ſollicited her firſt, he ſaid, that upon his Knowledge, her Husband lov'd her not; and threatned, that he would turn her out of Doors, if ſhe did not lie with Skipwith; and that if ſhe did not, he would tell her Husband ſhe did.

That ſhe being very young, he us'd Oil to enter her Body firſt: and afterwards he uſually lay with her, and it was with the Earl's Privity and Conſent.

Brodway's Examination, who confeſſeth,

That he lay at the Earl's Bed's Feet, and one Night the Earl call'd to him for Tobacco; and as he brought it in his Shirt, he caught hold of him, and bid him come to Bed, which he refus'd; but to ſatisfy my Lord, at laſt he conſented, and came into the Bed on my Lord's Side: then my Lord turn'd him upon his Wife, and bid him lie with her, which he did; and the Earl held one of her Legs and both her Hands, and at the laſt (notwithſtanding her Reſiſtance) lay with her.

That the Earl us'd his Body as the Body of a Woman, but never pierc'd it, only emitted between his Thighs.

He hath ſeen Skipwith lie with the young Lady in Bed together; and when he had got upon her, the Earl ſtood by and encouraged him to get her with Child: and that he hath made him the ſaid Brodway kiſs his own Lady, and often ſollicited him to lie with her, telling him, that he himſelf ſhould not live long, and that it might be his Making; and that he hath ſaid the like to Skipwith.

The Counteſs's ſecond Examination.

That one Night the Earl lying in Bed with her at Founthill, he call'd for his Man Brodway, and commanded him to lie at his Bed's Feet, and about Midnight (ſhe being aſleep) call'd to him to light him a Pipe of Tobacco. Brodway roſe in his Shirt, and the Earl pull'd him into Bed to him and her, and made him lie next to her; and Brodway lay with her, and knew her carnally, whilſt ſhe made Reſiſtance, and the Earl held both her Hands and one of her Legs the whilſt: whereupon, as ſoon as ſhe was free, ſhe would have kill'd herſelf with a Knife, but that Brodway forcibly took the Knife from her and broke it; and before that Act of Brodway, ſhe had never done it.

That the Lord delighted to ſee the Act done, and made him come into Bed to them, and lie with her whilſt he might ſee it, and ſhe cry'd out to have ſav'd herſelf.

The Earl's ſecond Examination.

The Earl deſir'd to be pardon'd of thoſe Things whereof he muſt accuſe himſelf, and ſaid, That Condemnation ſhould not come out of his own Mouth.

Theſe Teſtimonies being read, Mr. Attorney preſs'd things very earneſtly, and in excellent Method againſt the Earl, and ſaid,

My Lords,

'YOU have ſeen the Clearneſs of the Proofs, and I know your Wiſdoms to be ſuch (as you well know) in ſo dark a Buſineſs clearer Proofs cannot poſſibly be had; for let a Man be never ſo wicked, or never ſo impudent, he will not call Witneſſes to ſee his Wickedneſs, yet you ſee here this Point fully prov'd.

Then

Then he ſhew'd how both the Laws of God and Man were againſt Sodomy, and cited Levit. 18. towards the end, That by theſe Abominations the Land is defil'd; and therefore the Lord doth viſit this Land for the Iniquity thereof. And then concludes, that God may remove and take away from us his Plagues, let this wicked Man (ſaith he) be taken away from amongſt us.

Then the Earl (after the Lord Steward had told him he ſhould be heard in his own Defence, with as much Patience as was admitted in his Charge) enter'd into his own Defence. But the Lord Steward advis'd him to ſpeak pertinently; whereupon he alledg'd, that he was a weak Man, and of ill Memory, and therefore deſir'd that he might not be interrupted.

I. Then he began his Defence with Exceptions againſt his Wife, urging, that ſhe was naught and diſhoneſt with Brodway, by her own Confeſſion.

Whereupon my Lord Steward anſwer'd, That this made againſt his Lordſhip; therefore he ought not to alledge for his Defence that Fact, as an Imputation to his Wife, which he forc'd her unto by Compulſion and Violence.

II. Then he objected againſt the Incompetency of the Witneſſes, as the one his Wife, the other his Servants; and they drawn to this by his Son's Practice, who ſought his Life: and deſir'd to know, if there were not a Statute againſt the Incompetency of Witneſſes?

The Judges reſolv'd him, that there was none touching Witneſſes; but in Caſes of High Treaſon, there was a Statute concerning Accuſers.

III. Then he deſir'd to be reſolv'd, whether, becauſe Brodway doth not depoſe any Penetration, but only that he emitted upon her Belly while the Earl held her, that ſhould be judg'd Felony as for a Rape?

The Judges reſolv'd it to be a Rape, and ſo conſequently to be Felony.

IV. Then he deſir'd to be reſolv'd, whether his Wife is to be allow'd a competent Witneſs againſt him, or not?

The Judges reſolve, That in Civil Caſes the Wife may not; but in a Criminal Cauſe of this nature, where the Wife is the Party griev'd, and on whom the Crime is committed, ſhe is to be admitted a Witneſs againſt her Husband.

Then the Lord High Steward deſir'd the Lords the Judges to reſolve the Queſtions which Mr. Attorney in his Charge ſubmitted and referred to their Judgments.

1. Whether it were to be accounted Buggery within the Statute, without Penetration?

The Judges reſolve, that it was; and that the Uſe of the Body, ſo far as to emit thereupon, makes it ſo.

2. Whether, it being prov'd that the Party raviſh'd were of evil Fame, and of an unchaſte Life, it will amount to a Rape?

The Judges reſolve it to be a Rape, tho committed on the Body of a common Strumpet; for it is the inforcing againſt the Will which makes the Rape; and a common Whore may be raviſh'd againſt her Will, and it is Felony to do it.

3. Whether it is adjudg'd a Rape, when the Woman complaineth not preſently? And, whether there be a Neceſſity of Accuſation within a convenient time, as within 24 Hours?

The Judges reſolve, That inaſmuch as ſhe was forc'd againſt her Will, and then ſhew'd her Diſlike, ſhe was not limited to any Time for her Complaint; and that in an Indictment, there is no Limitation of Time, but in an Appeal there is.

4. Whether Men of no Worth ſhall be allow'd ſufficient Proofs againſt a Baron, or not?

The Judges reſolve, that any Man is a ſufficient Witneſs in caſe of Felony.

Then the Lord Steward ſpake, and ſaid; My Lord, you have been graciouſly dealt with in this Proceeding, for it is not an uſual thing in ſo capital and heinous Cauſes as this, to bring the Party and Witneſſes Face to Face before Tryal: but (my Lord) you have long before this time heard their Examinations, and queſtion'd and oppos'd them Face to Face; and are thereby the bettter enabled to make your Defence; and his Majeſty is ſtill graciouſly pleas'd to continue his Goodneſs towards you, and hath commanded that you ſhould be heard at full: If therefore you have any thing elſe to ſay for your ſelf, ſpeak it.

Whereupon the Earl anſwered, (having firſt made a ſolemn Proteſtation of his Innocency, but nevertheleſs implor'd the Mercy of God and the King) That he had nothing more to ſay, but left himſelf to God and his Peers, and preſented to their Conſideration Three Woes:

1. Woe to that Man, whoſe Wife ſhould be a Witneſs againſt him!
2. Woe to that Man, whoſe Son ſhould perſecute him, and conſpire his Death!
3. Woe to that Man, whoſe Servants ſhould be allow'd Witneſſes to take away his Life!

And he willed the Lords to take this into their Conſideration; for it might be ſome of their Caſes, or the Caſe of any Gentleman of Worth, that keeps a Footman, or other, whoſe Wife is weary of her Husband, or his Son arriv'd to full Age, that would draw his Servants to conſpire his Father's Death.

He ſaid further, his Wife had been naught in his Abſence, and had had a Child, which he conceal'd to ſave her Honour.

That his Son was now become 21 Years old, and he himſelf old and decay'd; and the one would have his Lands, and the other a young Husband; and therefore, by the Teſtimony of them, and their Servants added to their own, they had plotted and conſpired his Deſtruction and Death.

And then (being thereunto required by the Lord Steward) he withdrew himſelf from the Bar.

Then the Lord Steward (after ſolemn Proclamation of Silence) addreſſed himſelf to the Lords, and ſaid; My Lords the Peers, your Lordſhips have heard the Proofs, the Priſoner's Defence, all his Doubts and Queſtions reſolv'd by the Lords the Judges; and therefore your Lordſhips (if you pleaſe) may withdraw your ſelves, if you are ſatisfied; becauſe the Priſoner is not to be called to the Bar again, until your Lordſhips are agreed upon the Verdict.

Then

Then the Peers withdrew themſelves; and after two Hours Debate, and ſeveral Advices and Conferences with the Lord Chief Juſtice, whom they ſent for, and conſulted with four ſeveral times; having in that time alſo ſent the Earl of Warwick, and Viſcount of Dorcheſter, together with the Lord Chief Juſtice, to conſult with the Lord Steward, at the laſt they return'd to their Places: and then the Lord Steward ask'd them one by one, beginning at the loweſt, and ſo aſcending;

1. Whether the ſaid Earl of Caſtlehaven was Guilty of the Rape whereof he ſtood indicted, or not? And they all gave him Guilty.

2. Whether the ſaid Earl of Caſtlehaven was Guilty of the Sodomy with which he was charged, or not? And fifteen of the Lords condemned him, and the other eleven freed him.

When the Verdict was thus given, the Lieutenant of the Tower was again commanded to bring the Priſoner to the Bar, to hear his Sentence; and after he was brought in, the Lord Steward ſaid unto him:

Foraſmuch as thou Mervin Lord Audley, Earl of Caſtlehaven, haſt been indicted for divers Felonies, by three ſeveral Indictments; one for a Rape, the other two for Sodomy; and haſt pleaded Not Guilty to them all, and for thy Tryal thou haſt put thy ſelf upon God and thy Peers; which Tryal thou haſt had, and they found thee guilty of them all: What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, why the Sentence of Death ſhould not be pronounced againſt thee?

Whereupon he anſwered, He could ſay no more, but referred himſelf to God and the King's Mercy.

Then the Lord Steward ſaid, My Heart grieveth for that which my Tongue muſt utter; but Juſtice is the way to cut off Wickedneſs, and therefore hear thy Sencence.

Thou muſt go from hence to the Priſon from whence thou cameſt, and from thence to the place of Execution, there to be hang'd by the Neck till thou be dead, and the Lord have Mercy on thy Soul.

The Lord Steward's Exhortation.

Oh think upon your Offences! which are ſo heinous and ſo horrible, that a Chriſtian Man ought ſcarce to name them, and ſuch as the deprav'd Nature of Man (which of itſelf carries a Man to all Sin) abhorreth! And you have not only offended againſt Nature, but the Rage of a Man's Jealouſy! And altho you die not for that, that you have abuſed your own Daughter! And having both Honour and Fortune to leave behind you, you would have had the impious and ſpurious Offſpring of a Harlot to inherit! Both theſe are horrid Crimes. But my Lord, it grieves me to ſee you ſtand out againſt the Truth ſo apparent; and therefore I will conclude with this Admonition, That God might have taken you away when you were blinded in your Sins, and therefore hope he hath reſerved you as a Subject of his Mercy: and as he ſends you to ſee this Day of Shame, that you may return unto him, ſo thereby in a manner he lovingly draws you to him: therefore ſpend the remainder of your Time in Tears and Repentance; and this Day's Work, I hope, will be a Correction from many Crimes and Corruptions.

Whereupon, at laſt, the Earl deſcended to a low Petition to the Lords, and very humbly beſought them to intercede with his Majeſty, that he might not ſuddenly cut him off, but give him Time of Repentance. And then he deſired their Lordſhips Pardons, in that he had been ſo great a Stain to Honour and Nobility.

Then a Proclamation being made by a Serjeant, declaring, That the Lord High Steward's Pleaſure was, that all ſuch as had attended this Day's Service might depart; the Lieutenant of the Tower carried the Earl away, and ſo the Court broke up.

The Tryal, Conviction and Condemnation, of L. Fitz-Patrick and T. Brodway, two Servants of the before-mention'd Earl of Caſtlehaven.

ON Monday the 27th of June, 1631, the Marſhal of the King's-Bench brought Fitz-Patrick and Brodway to the Bar, where was a Jury of ſufficient and able Wiltſhire Men, impannel'd to go upon and try them.

The Counteſs of Caſtlehaven herſelf was in Court, to give Evidence againſt Brodway; and ſhe came in upon the Inſtant, when the Lord Chief Juſtice demanded of her, Whether the Evidence ſhe had formerly given at her Lord's Arraignment was true, and the full Matter of Charge ſhe had then to deliver againſt the Priſoner?

Whereunto ſhe anſwered, It was.

My Lord ſaid; Madam, you have ſworn that Brodway, Priſoner at the Bar, hath lain with you by Force, which may be, and yet no Act committed: Did he enter your Body?

She ſaid, That in her former Oath taken, when ſhe teſtified he lay with her by Force, her Meaning was, that he had known her carnally, and that he did enter her Body.

Then was ſhe wiſhed to look on the Priſoner; unto which Motion and Commandment ſhe made a ſhort Reply, That altho ſhe could not look on him, but with a kind of Indignation, and with Shame, in regard of that which had been offered unto her, and ſhe ſuffered by him, yet ſhe had ſo much Charity in her, and ſuch Reſpect to God and his Truth, that ſhe had delivered nothing for Malice; and therefore hoped that her Oath and Evidence thereupon ſhould be credited: and ſo deſired to be believed and diſmiſs'd. Which being granted, ſhe departed with as much Privacy as might be into her Coach.

Fitz-

Fitz-Patrick being asked concerning his Guiltineſs or Innocency, demanded, who were his Accuſers? The Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, You have accuſed your ſelf ſufficiently. Fitz-Patrick replied, That he thought neither the Laws of the Kingdom required, nor was he bound to be the Deſtruction of himſelf; what Evidence he had formerly given, was for the King againſt the Earl, and no further.

The Lord Chief Juſtice reply'd, it was true, the Law did not oblige any Man to be his own Accuſer; yet where his Teſtimony ſerv'd to take away any one's Life, and made himſelf guilty of the ſame Crime, therein it ſhould ſerve to cut him off alſo.

Then the Jury demanded of the Court Satisfaction concerning the Words of the Statute, which run, To charge him alone to be, and accounted a Felon in Law, that committed a Buggery with Man or Beaſt. (For which Fact the late Earl was only guilty, and had ſuffered.)

The Lord Chief Juſtice reply'd, That foraſmuch as every Acceſſary to a Felon is a Felon in Law; ſo he being a voluntary Proſtitute, when he was not only of Underſtanding and Years to know the Heinouſneſs of the Sin, but alſo of Strength to have withſtood his Lord, he therefore was ſo far forth guilty.

Whereupon the Jury found the Bill, and the Sentence of Death was paſs'd on them both; and they were deliver'd and committed to the Sheriff of Middleſex, who, after he had ſuffer'd them to have ſome Repaſt at Mr. Hill's in the Palace-Yard, and Conference with their Friends, carried them to Newgate, where they behav'd themſelves civilly and religiouſly.

As ſoon as they were found Guilty, the Judges of the Court wrote this Letter to the Lord Keeper to prepare him for the King.

Right Honourable,

'MAY it pleaſe your Lordſhip to be inform'd, That this day Giles Brodway and Laurence Fitz-Patrick were tried before us in the King's-Bench, for the ſeveral Offences of Rape and Buggery, of which they were indicted, and they have received Judgment of Death: but we forbear awarding Execution, upon a Meſſage ſent from your Lordſhip by Sir Thomas Fanſhaw, of his Majeſty's Pleaſure for the Stay of Execution, until further Direction from his Majeſty: but conceiving there is great Cauſe to put the Malefactors to Execution, we thought it our Duty to acquaint your Lordſhip with the Paſſages of the Tryal, that his Majeſty by your Lordſhip's means being made acquainted therewith, may ſignify his further Pleaſure.

'Brodway, who was arraigned for the Rape, very impudently denied his own Confeſſion, taken before the Lords the Peers in the Tryal of my Lord Audley: He pretended he was amazed and knew not what he ſubſcribed, and profeſſed himſelf guiltleſs, with great Execrations. He would not be ſatisfied, unleſs the Lady was produced Face to Face, which ſhe was; who by her Oath, viva voce, ſatisfied the Auditors, both concerning the Truth of the Fact and his own Impudence.

'Fitz-Patrick, who was arraigned for the Buggery, confeſſed his Examination to be true; but like one very ignorant, or rather ſenſeleſs, would have them true againſt the Lord Audley, and not againſt himſelf, which was impoſſible: He pretended he was promiſed Security from Danger, if he would teſtify againſt the Lord Audley; and ſo ſought to raiſe a Suſpicion, as if he had been wrought upon, to be a Witneſs to bring the Lord Audley to his End. They were both found guilty, to the full Satisfaction of all that were preſent; and we for our parts thought it to ſtand with the Honour of common Juſtice, that ſeeing their Teſtimony had been taken to bring a Peer of the Realm to his Death, for an Offence as much theirs as his, that they ſhould as well ſuffer for it, as he did, leſt any Jealouſy ſhould ariſe about the Truth of the Fact, and the Juſtneſs of the Proceedings. But upon receipt of your Lordſhip's Meſſage, we have ſtop'd the Execution till his Majeſty's further Pleaſure be known; to which we ſhall humbly ſubmit our ſelves, and reſt

At your Lordſhip's Command,

N. Hide, W. Jones,
J. Whitlock, G. Croke.

The King by this means being truly informed how things ſtood, ſignified his Pleaſure, that they ſhould be executed, but to have a Week's time for Repentance.

The Tryal of WILLIAM PRYNN Esq; in the Star-Chamber, in Hilary-Term, 9 Car. I. 1633. for Writing and Publiſhing a Book entitled, Hiſtriomaſtix, or a Scourge for Stage-Players, &c. Together with the Tryals of MICHAEL SPARKES for Printing, and of WILLIAM BUCKNER for Licenſing the ſaid Book.

THE 7th of February Mr. William Prynn, Utter Barriſter of Lincolns-Inn, was brought to the Star-Chamber; together with Michael Sparkes, William Buckner, and four other Defendants, upon Mr. Attorney Noy's Information; which being opened by Mr. Hudſon of Grays-Inn, did ſet forth, That about 8 Car. Reg. Mr. Prynn compiled and put in Print a Libellous Volume, entitled by the Name of Hiſtriomaſtix, againſt Plays, Maſques, Dancings, &c. And altho he knew well, that his Majeſty's Royal Queen, Lords of the Council, &c. were in their publick Feſtivals, and other times, preſent Spectators of ſome Maſques and Dances, and many Recreations that were tolerable, and in themſelves ſinleſs, and ſo publiſhed to be, by a Book printed in the Time of his Majeſty's Royal Father; yet Mr. Prynn, in his Book, hath railed, not only againſt Stage-Plays, Comedies, Dancings, and all other Exerciſes of the People, and againſt all ſuch as behold them, but further and particular againſt Hunting, Publick Feſtivals, Chriſtmas-keeping, Bonfires, and Maypoles; nay, againſt the dreſſing up of a Houſe with Green-Ivy. And to manifeſt his evil and miſchievous Deſign in publiſhing of this Libel, he hath therein written divers Incitements, to ſtir up the People to Diſcontent, as if there were juſt Cauſe to lay violent Hands on their Prince; and hath expreſſed in many Speeches againſt his Majeſty, and his Houſhold, infamous Terms unfit for ſo ſacred a Perſon. He hath caſt an Aſperſion upon her Majeſty the Queen, and railing and uncharitable Cenſures againſt all Chriſtian People. He hath commended all thoſe that are factious Perſons, that have vented any thing in any Book againſt the State, as the factious Book of Dr. Leighton, Jo. Mariana a Jeſuit, to draw the People from his Majeſty's Government, which is of a moſt dangerous Conſequence to the Realm and State. His Book is of above 1000 Pages: and he dealt with one Michael Sparkes for the Publiſhing, Licenſing, and Printing thereof, who is a Perſon that is a common Publiſher of unlawful and unlicenſed Books; and dealt alſo with Mr. Buckner, another Defendant, for the allowing of it for the Preſs; and with the other four Defendants to print part of it, and publiſh the ſame: and by this means this Volume was allowed and publiſhed, to the great Scandal of the whole Realm. And to have this puniſhed according to the Demerit of the Cauſe, is the end of Mr. Attorney's Information.

Mr. Atkins of Lincolns-Inn (afterwards a Judge in the Court of Common-Pleas) opened Mr. Prynn's Anſwer, and pleaded; That he the ſaid Mr. Prynn taking into his ſerious Conſideration the frequent Reſort of ſundry ſorts of People to common Stage-Plays about the City of London; and having read divers Councils, Laws and Statutes of this and other Realms, againſt the frequenting of common Stage-Plays, and the Judgment and Opinion of ſeveral Divines, and other antient Authors, and divers Engliſh Writers allowed by Publick Authority, and his own Judgment running with thoſe; not intending to reflect, or to have relation to the King, Queen, State, or Government, or your Lordſhips, did about ſeven Years ago, compile this Book entitled Hiſtriomaſtix; which is no more but a Collection of divers Arguments and Authorities againſt common Stage-Plays. That about four Years ſince, he did commit the ſame to Michael Sparkes, one of the Defendants, to be commended to ſuch Perſons as then had Authority to licenſe Books for the Preſs. Sparkes did carry it to Mr. King, belonging to the late Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and before he had perus'd this Book, Mr. Buckner had Authority to allow of the Books to the Preſs: Sparkes brought this Book to Mr. Buckner, who kept it by him three Months, in which time he did fully peruſe it. In the interim, he gave part of the Book to Sparkes to print, and kept the reſt till he had perus'd it, and ſaid, that he ſhould have that alſo to the Preſs. In October following, he carried this Copy with the Licence, and cauſed them to be enter'd into Stationers-Hall, and did compound with thoſe that had Authority for the printing of this Book. It was printed publickly, and not ſecretly; and becauſe there were ſome of the Copies cloſe written, he cauſed thoſe to be brought again to peruſe, to the intent that he might not be deceived in them; and as he ſaw cauſe, corrected them accordingly. That in Eaſter-Term was Twelve-month, the Epiſtle, and the whole firſt part of the Book was printed; and he had time to examine it between Eaſter-Term and Trinity, and then he did make ſuch Alterations as he ſaw cauſe, viz. in Page 711, &c. And afterwards the Second Part, and two Sheets of the Index of the Book was likewiſe printed, and theſe were likewiſe brought to Mr. Buckner; ſo that the whole Book, with the Index, was bound up about Chriſtmas following, which was Chriſtmas was a Twelve-month. Mr. Buckner ſent for Mr. Prynn, and the Stationer was desirous that the Book might be published, and that he might send some Volumes to him: but Mr. Buckner said, he could wish the word (Pity) in such a Page might be left out; and I wish with Mr. Buckner, that Pity may be added to every Page of the Book. So when Mr. Prynn saw all this from him, that had Licence to allow printed Books, he conceived it a sufficient Warrant for his Proceedings. And for that which is alledged in the Information of Mr. Prynn's commending Dr. Leighton, for which the Doctor receiv'd a Censure in this Court, in the Quotation whereof, viz. his Book, and of others, he adhereth to their Meaning so far as and wherein they are agreeable to the Law: and this Book was printed long before Dr. Leighton was question'd in this Court. And as for encouraging of others to be factious or seditious, he saith upon his Oath, That he was so far from Disloyalty, Schism, or Sedition, or Neglect of the King, State, or Government, that he hath with much Joy, Cheerfulness, and Thankfulness to God, ever acknowledged his, and the rest of the King's Subjects Happiness, by the Peace we have under his Majesty's happy Government; and this Answer and Intention is sincere, tho other Construction be made thereupon. He saith, he hath taken his Oath of Supremacy and Allegiance in the University and Inns of Court, where he hath taken his Degrees. That it never came into his Thoughts to approve of Schism or Sedition: and if any thing in his Book, contrary to his Meaning, hath a Mis-construction towards his Majesty's Government, State, or your Lordships, he doth prostitute himself at his Majesty's Royal Feet, and crave Pardon and Grace. And he doth appeal to your Lordships Interpretations of those Parts of his Book; and doth withal desire your Lordships Favour, and to take it into your Consideration, that he hath been a year Prisoner in the Tower: and this is the substance of his Answer.

Mr. Jenkins of Grays-Inn opened the Answer for four of the Defendants. First, for the poor Widow he saith, For any manner of Combination, or Knowledge of this Book, or of the Contents of it, &c. she knoweth nothing. For the rest, they all say, They being illiterate, were not able to judge whether it were fit to pass the Press, or not; that the Book was licensed to be printed, allowed after it was printed, and before it was published, and it was entred in the Stationers-Hall, and the Warden there allowed and subscribed it to be a Book passable. The Book hath been three Years in the Press. All this time was spent before it was printed: there were Searches made during this time, and they came unto the Press. They saw the Book there in a publick way, and not in Corners, or privately printed, as is alledged in the Information; and it was printed and published, and some of the Books sold by Sparkes: and Sparkes saith, the printing of this Book cost him almost 300 l. and saith upon his Oath, he sold not many Books.

And for the Charge upon him, of being a common Printer of unlawful Books, he saith, He hath prospered in his Calling; and some other Stationers having an eye upon him for his Thrift, have envied him in publishing of Books: and leaveth it to my Lords the Bishops, to know what Success he hath had in the High-Commission.

Mr. Lightfoot of Grays-Inn opened Mr. Buckner's Answer. He saith, That he was Chaplain to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, and doth approve of the Church without any scruple, and of all the Ceremonies of England. Church-Musick he doth allow of; bowing at the Name of Jesus: Plays, Musick and Dancing, he doth esteem them just and lawful. And for those Censures against Ecclesiastical Persons in this Book, he doth, and ever did abhor and detest them. He confesseth he licensed part of the Book, but never gave order to disperse the Book; but when he heard it was published, he did endeavour to suppress it: and to the rest of the Information pleadeth Not Guilty.

Then Mr. Noy, Attorney-General, spake as followeth: This Volume of Mr. Prynn's is written by himself, without the help of any Man. There are Passages in it that reflect upon the King, State and Government, &c. other things reflect upon the Church and Clergy; but for that there is no Charge in the Information, which I did conceive fitter to be left out, and withal I received a Command for the same: therefore finding the Church so deeply wounded by Mr. Prynn, I do leave her to avenge herself of him, and to inflict such Punishment on him as he deserves. I shall be an humble Suitor to the Court, that they would be pleased to commend the Prosecution of those things that concern the Church to the High-Commission. There are divers Particulars wherewith he is not charged within the Information by way of Crime, and so it is not proper now to bring him into question for them. As for mentioning of Ceremonies, &c. of Dedicating Paul's to Diana; of the Discipline of the Church; the Complaint of new-erected Altars: I wonder what Altars he means, I hope the Church will examine in due time; as also who he means by his modern Innovators in the Church, and by Cringing and Ducking to Altars, a fit Term to bestow upon the Church; he learned it of the Canters, being used among them. The Musick in the Church, the charitable Term he giveth it is, not to be a Noise of Men, but rather a Bleating of Brute Beasts; Choristers bellow the Tenor, as it were Oxen; bark a Counter-point, as a Kennel of Dogs; roar out a Treble, like a sort of Bulls; grunt out a Bass, as it were a number of Hogs: His Complaint for suppressing Repetitions by way of Conventicles; also his general Censure of all the Bishops, and of all the Clergy; they scorn to feed the Poor; the Silk and Sattin Divines; very charitable Terms upon them of the Church! Christmas, as it is kept, is a Devil's Christmas; nay, he doth bestow a great number of Pages to make Men affect the name of Puritan, as though Christ were a Puritan, and so he saith in his Index. Then concerning the Images in the Church, he speaketh against them, and putteth that now in Print, which was contained in an Answer in this Court. Also for the Sabbath-day, whether to begin on Saturday Night, and end on Sunday at Six of the Clock. These are things proper to the Examination of the Church; and whatsoever becometh of the rest of the Cause in this Court, yet I commend these things to the Consideration of the Church. I wonder what the Man means to bring these things under the Title of Stage-Players; Pluralities under the Title of Stage-Players. He had an End in it, he had an End in it.

Now concerning the Book itself: This Book, said Mr. Noy, it is the Witness, it doth testify what was his Intention, and by the Book he is to be judged.

If

If it had been found in the Street, and of Mr. Prynn's compiling, and brought to this Court, and Conſideration taken of it, the Court would proceed without a Party againſt Mr. Prynn. And here Mr. Attorney recited a Precedent of one that wrote a Book, and it was brought to the Council. It was demanded, who was the Accuſer? Anſwer was made, The Book was the Accuſer. Shall the Heretick go unpuniſhed? This Book it is Mr. Prynn's doing, he doth put his Name to it, he ſwears that he did write it all.

Then for the Time of compiling it; ſeven or eight Years ago it was compiled, and is grown ſeven times bigger than at the firſt. Mr. Prynn, about eight Years ſince, ſhewed it to Dr. Goade, who told him ſo good Cauſes of Diſlike, that might make any reaſonable Man give it over. About ſeven Years ago he came to Dr. Harris, to deſire his Opinion of the Book; and he told him, it was unfit and unworthy to come to the Preſs. In the Parliament-time, before the Year 1630. he gave ſome part of it to be printed; but it came not to Mr. Buckner till long after. Sparkes ſaid, he would print any thing in Parliament-time.

Now we are to conſider two Things, from the firſt compiling and printing of this Book, to the laſt: Firſt, how it grew in Volume; for after it was delivered to the Preſs, it hath grown up with divers things, which then were impoſſible to be known at that time, when it was delivered to the Preſs; which appeareth by this. In 1628 was the Parliament, and in 1631 St. George began to look abroad into the World. This Man beſtows eight whole Pages upon St. George, for being ſo bold to look out. He ſaith, That St. George the Arian was a Cappadocian, tho born in Cilicia, a Part or Province of Cappadocia, &c. and that St. George's Advocate was an Engliſhman, born in Glouceſter; and that St. Baſil the Great was Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, the native Country of St. George the Arian. Certainly he could not tell that St. George would then remove himſelf abroad, or in the County of Glouceſter, &c. at that time: but this Man did go on according to the Occaſion in 1628. A Woman, in 1628, acted a part of a Stage-Play, at Blackfryers; he ſpends many Pages about this.

We all know what Time the Dearth was, three Years ago; he taketh occaſion not to paſs it over. He maketh a long Diſcourſe of Plays, Maſques, &c. in the late penurious Times, how they were as expenceful as the Wars were. This is to ſhew how by pieces it did grow bigger from time to time.

All Stage-Players he terms them Rogues: in this he doth falſify the very Act of Parliament, for unleſs they go abroad, they are not Rogues. The ſame Term he giveth unto Scholars acting. Mr. Prynn had a Purpoſe, not only in this to fall upon Stage-Plays, but upon the Body of the Commonwealth, and to infuſe it into Mens Minds, that we are now running into Paganiſm and Gentiliſm. He falleth upon thoſe things that have not relation to Stage-Plays, Muſick, Muſick in the Church, Dancing, New-years Gifts, whether Witchery, or not. Witchery, Church-Ceremonies, &c. indiſtinctly he falleth upon them; then upon Altars, Images, Hair of Men and Women, Biſhops and Bonfires. Cards and Tables do offend him, and Perukes do fall within the compaſs of his Theme. St. George never offended him; but all this is to the end to bring a Belief among the People, that we are returning back again to Paganiſm. His End is therefore to perſuade Men to go and ſerve God in another Country, as many are gone already, and ſet up new Laws and Fancies among themſelves. Conſider what may come of it.

It may be fit enough and lawful to write againſt Plays, by Men that have a Miſſion; and they muſt do their Errand in mannerly Terms, and in the ſame Terms as other Men expect to bear with them.

Mr. Prynn had no Miſſion to meddle with theſe things, to ſee whether Men ſhould not return to Gentiliſm; the Terms which he uſeth are ſuch as he finds among the Oyſter-Women at Billingſgate, or at the common Conduit. He hath raked up all the vile Terms that could be found.

Now to prove that this is Mr. Prynn's Book, read Mr. Prynn's Examination, Inter. 5*th*: (which being read, was to this effect,) That Mr. Prynn, without the help of any other, did write, pen and compile the whole Book, called Hiſtrio-maſtix, and the Epiſtle before the Book, and the Index and Table following.

Now for the publiſhing of this Book, it doth appear by the Depoſition of Dr. Goade, that about eight Years ſince, Mr. Prynn did bring a Book to him in Writing, of about a Quire of Paper, concerning Stage-Plays, to have the ſame licenſed, but he held it unfit to be allowed; and doth well remember, that as to his Argument of the Unlawfulneſs for a Man to put on Woman's Apparel, he put Mr. Prynn this Queſtion; Suppoſe, Mr. Prynn, your ſelf, as a Chriſtian, were perſecuted by Pagans, think you not, if you did diſguiſe your ſelf in your Maid's Apparel, you did well? Who anſwered, That he thought himſelf rather bound to yield to death than to do ſo.

Dr. Harris alſo depoſed, That about ſeven Years ago, Mr. Prynn came to him to licenſe a Treatiſe concerning Stage-Plays, but he would not allow of the ſame. So this Man did deliver this Book when it was young and tender, and would have had it then printed; but it is ſince grown ſeven times bigger, and ſeven times worſe.

Noy. We ſhall now prove when it went to the Preſs. Read Auſtin the Stationer to Interrogatory the 28th, which being read, was to this effect; That the ſaid Book called Hiſtrio-maſtix, was given to this Deponent, in or about the laſt Parliament, at which time ſeven Sheets thereof were printed, at this Deponent's Houſe; which this Deponent ſo printed, at the requeſt of Mr. Prynn and Mr. Sparkes, upon Mr. Prynn's Information, that it was licenſed, and that he would bring the hand of the Licenſer unto it: But this Deponent did refuſe to print any more of the ſame.

Read Joſeph H. to prove, that Sparkes would ſet upon it unlicenſed in Parliament-time, to Inter. 26. who ſaith, That the Defendant Sparkes did, in the time of the laſt Parliament, print, or cauſe to be printed, divers Books without Licence; whereof ſome were Mr. Prynn's, ſome were Mr. Burton's Works: and this Deponent hath heard Sparkes ſay, he durſt print any thing in Parliament-time.

Another part of the Charge was managed by Mr. Maſon of Lincolns-Inn, reckoning up the number of Epithets wherewith Mr. Prynn had aſperſed all ſorts of People; and he ſaid, that it was a Libel, not only againſt the State, but againſt every particular Perſon; and proved the Charge by divers Paſſages contained in the Book, Fol. 201, &c.

Afterward Mr. Noy proceeded in the farther making good of his Charge againſt Mr. Prynn.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

As he hath fallen foul upon all Things, all Perſons, all Sexes; upon the Magiſtrates, upon the Houſhold of the King; ſo he hath not ſpared the King himſelf. I am ſorry I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak any thing of it; but there is a great deal too much in his Book. My Lords, After he hath made all theſe Complaints as intolerable, he falleth upon all indiſtinctly, and never taketh upon him to diſcern, to make a Diſtinction, that there may be a Toleration, but falleth foul upon every thing, that we are falling into Paganiſm; Men and Women are naught: he ſpareth not the King himſelf, but takes upon him to teach a Remedy; the Remedy is worſe than the Diſeaſe. What hateful Compariſons he bringeth with other Princes? as Nero: and ſpeaketh of the conſuming of the Treaſure of the Realm with Maſques, and of the late penurious Times; a baſe Word! a Declaration of Infamy upon Princes, with ſuch-like Concluſions as theſe are. When all this is done, he teacheth the Remedy not by way of Precept, but by way of Example; invites Men to read John Mariana, and two grave Authors more, he ſaith Men not cenſured. I am very ſorry I am to ſpeak any thing wherein the King ſhould be named, but he would not forbear it when the Pen was in his Hand; ſome of the Words are ſo naſty that I will not ſpeak them.

After Mr. Attorney-General had ſpoken, he called for theſe Paſſages, amongſt others, in Hiſtrio-maſtix, to be read, viz.

To his Much-honoured Friends, the Right Worſhipful Maſters of the Bench of the Honourable Flouriſhing Law-Society of Lincolns-Inn.

'HAVING, upon my firſt arrival here in London, heard and ſeen in four ſeveral Plays (to which the preſſing Importunity of ſome ill Acquaintance drew me, while I was yet a Novice) ſuch Wickedneſs, ſuch Lewdneſs as then made my penitent Heart to loath, my Conſcience to abhor all Stage-Players ever ſince; and having then likewiſe obſerved ſome woful Experiments of the lewd, miſchievous Fruits of Plays, of Play-houſes, in ſome young Gentlemen of my Acquaintance; who tho civil and chaſte at firſt, became ſo vicious, prodigal, incontinent, debauched (yea ſo far paſt all hopes of Amendment) in half a year's ſpace or leſs, by their reſort to Plays, where Whores and lewd Companions had inveagled them; that after many Eſſays of their much deſired Reformation, two of them were caſt off and utterly diſinherited by their loving Parents; whom I heard oft complaining, even with Tears, that Plays and Play-houſes had undone their Children, to their no ſmall Vexation, (a good Caveat for all young Students to keep themſelves from Play-houſes, by theſe two Youngſters Harms) Hereupon I reſolved, out of a deſire of the publick Good, to oppugn theſe common Vice-fomenting Evils: for which purpoſe about ſeven years ſince, recollecting thoſe Play-condemning Paſſages, which I had met with in the Fathers and other Authors, I digeſted them into one entire written Diſcourſe; which having ſince that time enlarged beyond its intended Bulk, becauſe I ſaw the number of Players, Play-Books, Play-Haunters, and Play-houſes ſtill increaſing; there being above Forty thouſand Play-Books printed within theſe two years (as Stationers inform me) they being now more vendible than the choiceſt Sermons; two old Play-houſes being alſo lately re-edified, enlarged, and one new Theatre erected: the multitude of our London Play-Haunters being ſo augmented now, that all the antient Devils Chappels (for ſo the Fathers ſtile all Play-houſes) being five in number, are not ſufficient to contain their Troops; whence we ſee a ſixth now added to them: whereas even in vicious Nero's Reign, there were but three ſtanding Theatres in Pagan Rome, tho far more ſpacious than our Chriſtian London, and thoſe three too many. Hereupon I firſt commended it, being thus augmented, to the Licenſer, and from him unto the Preſs, where it hath lingred longer than I did expect; which being now at laſt brought forth into the World, in ſuch a Play-adoring Age, that is like to bid defiance to it; I here bequeath it to your worthy Patronage, to whom it was firſt devoted, not caring how it fares abroad, ſo it may do good and pleaſe at home.

In the next place Mr. Attorney Noy cauſed to be read out of the Book of Hiſtrio-maſtix, ſuch Paſſages, as were ſcandalous to the King and Government, as Fol. 312, &c.

Mr. Atkins, in defence of Mr. Prynn, ſaid, That the Eloquence of thoſe Gentlemen who argued againſt Mr. Prynn, made an Expoſition which was no part of his Intention, in which point he would endeavour to clear him; and the way was by letting their Lordſhips know, that many Paſſages in that Book are only relatively ſpoken, and not poſitive, and moſt of them are but the Affirmations of other Authors of ſeveral Kinds and Profeſſions: as where it is ſaid, that ſuch incarnate Devils as frequent Plays, &c. he ſpeaketh by the way of common frequenting of Plays, leſt they prove incarnate Devils; and ſo of Ladies that caſt off their Nature and Modeſty, that is relatively ſpoken by frequenting Plays, laſcivious Dancing, &c. and when he ſpeaketh of thoſe in a continual Propoſition, his Argument is thus;

'That which doth ordinarily (if not always) defile the Eyes, the Ears, and Souls both of the Actors and Spectators, by ingendring, by exciting meretricious, luſtful, lewd, adulterous Deſires and Affections in their Hearts, or by inſtigating, by preparing, by inducting them to actual Uncleanneſs, muſt needs be abominable and unlawful unto Chriſtians; but theſe Stage-Plays, &c. therefore they muſt needs be abominable.' And there is none but Whores, Panders, or foul incarnate Devils, who dare controul that minor Truth.

My Lords, He doth not condemn New-years-Gifts, but acknowledges them to be as Tokens and Teſtimonies of Favour and Reſpect from Superiors to their Inferiors; and for Dancing (under favour) he doth not condemn it at all; he hath commended the ſame as ſingle, and dancing the Meaſures. And for dancing in great Men and Princes, he doth proteſt it was far from his thought to compare theſe Times to Nero's, under ſo pious and religious a Prince as we have, and by whom we receive ſo much Happineſs. That had been ſo impious and unworthy, that he could by no means make any Apology; but as well his Perſon as his Pen ſhould have been deteſtable, if he had made any ſuch Compariſon.

no

And where he doth ſpeak, that Dancing and Maſquing have been near as expenceful as the Wars, in that he means in Henry the VIIIth's Time, and not in theſe Days; as I take it, he ſpeaks there of a Hiſtory, that doth expreſs the great Charge in that time.

I ſhall deſire, as I did begin in the opening of his Anſwer, that he may lay faſt hold upon the Rock of the King's Favour and Mercy, and Compaſſion of this Court; and what his Intentions are, they are beſt known to his own Heart, his Expreſſions known to your Lordſhips. I cannot condemn his Heart, I will not excuſe his Pen.

This, if your Lordſhips will give me leave, I ſhall ſay; I have long known him in a Society of Inns of Court, where he has lived; and for his ordinary Diſcourſes (except the matters in this Book) they have not been factious or ſeditious. But now he is before your Lordſhips, truly for my part, I compare him to the Condition of an Aſtronomer, that fixed his Eyes ſo much upon the Stars, that he did not look to his Feet, and ſo fell into a Ditch: for his Eyes were ſo fixed upon this Subject, upon the common Reſort to Stage-Plays, and the great Abuſe that comes by them, that he forgot to look down to his Hand that guided his Pen, which now bringeth him under your Lordſhips Cenſure.

That I may not offend the Patience of this Court, (the Court is full, and the Expectation is great) I will conclude with all Humility, and wiſh and crave, that he who is the ſupreme Judge, may be with your Lordſhips in this Matter, and may be over all your good Thoughts, Judgments and Sentences this Day, in this Cauſe of this poor Gentleman. And this is all I humbly offer in Defence.

The next Day of Hearing, Mr. Holbourn, of Counſel with Mr. Prynn, ſpake thus:

My Lords,

I am aſſigned Counſellor with Mr. Prynn. The Information is for publiſhing in Print a Libel or Volume of Libels againſt King, Queen, State, &c. My Lords, for Mr. Prynn, he doth humbly caſt himſelf at your Lordſhips Feet. For the Book, I muſt ſay, he doth humbly ſubmit himſelf to your Lordſhips; yet, my Lords, his Heart will not give him leave to ſay, that he is guilty of thoſe groſs Offences, that are laid to his Charge. He confeſſeth himſelf to be juſtly brought before your Lordſhips for his ill Expreſſions, which may prove an occaſion of Scandal by Miſconſtruction, and ſo ſome dangerous Principle may be infuſed into the Subjects: And he beggeth your Lordſhips to conſider of them, according to the Intentions of his Heart, which were fair and honeſt, tho harſh in Expreſſion, that he may receive a favourable Conſtruction, for that he citeth his Authors, and their Words, and not his own. And for that he meddleth with matters not proper to Stage-Plays, as in mentioning the Sabbath, his Meaning was, Stage-Plays upon the Sabbath-day: his mentioning Habits and Recreations, was in relation to Men putting on Womens Habits, and unlawful Recreation at Plays, and ſo he conceives them not altogether impertinent.

For the Manner of his Writing, he is heartily ſorry, that his Stile is ſo bitter, and his Imputations ſo unlimited and general; yet in this he was led thereunto by Authors in the like caſe, which he offers for his Excuſe: he hopes his Paſſion againſt theſe Abuſes by Plays may a little plead his Excuſe.

Now for the Manner and Matter alledged againſt him out of his own Book, in that he hopes your Lordſhips Favour: He ſaith, that thoſe that are Judges of the Book for Licenſing, they are guilty of the Matter, and he hopeth that this Book doth differ from all the Books brought into this Court; for here are none brought but ſuch as are unlicenſed, and this is licenſed: and he ſubmitteth thus to that Point.

My Lords, as to the general End and Intention of his Book, he ſweareth, that the general Reſort unto Plays was the firſt occaſion, and his End was for the Reformation of the Abuſe of it, and no otherwiſe; and then, my Lords, he hopeth he ſhall not incur your Lordſhips ſevere Cenſure. He did not ſend the Book beyond the Seas to be printed, but printed it here, and it was three years in the Preſs, and licenſed and publiſhed.

And, my Lords, the Declaration to the Information of this Court, ſpeaketh ſomething to his Intentions, viz. to whom he dedicated this Book, and he diſperſed it himſelf to Men of known Integrity; and certainly if his Heart had been guilty of thoſe foul Crimes, he would not have preſented one of theſe Books to Mr. Attorney Noy himſelf. He did not abſent himſelf as one guilty of ſuch Offences would have done; he was ſo far from having Diſloyalty, that he doth commend the King and State, and that could not be with an intention againſt King and State. And all the Charges that lie upon him for his foul Intentions, are but Inferences upon his Book, and Conſequences, and ſuch of them only that be ſtrained, and not of neceſſity.

The next thing charged upon him is Perjury, for that he ſaid, he ſhewed no part of this Book to any before it was ſhewn to Sparkes; yet it was proved by Dr. Harris and Dr. Goade, that they ſaw it many years ago. As to this he ſaith, they ſpeak only of his Book concerning Plays, containing a Quire of Paper; and that it is true, he did ſhew them ſuch a Book: but that Book was not this Book, tho they be of one Subject and Matter, yet they differ much in Form and Frame.

Then Mr. Hern ſpake on his behalf as follows:

My Lords,

We that are aſſign'd Counſel for Mr. Prynn, do come with great Diſadvantage, both in Number and Judgments, conſidering the great Ability of the King's Counſel, who have ſpoken againſt us. If the Conſtruction they have made be theirs, then clearly we are (as they would have us) to fall deep by your Lordſhips Sentence.

The Weight of this Cauſe, and the Aggravations upon it by the King's Counſel, made me the laſt day (without deſire of my Client) to crave farther Time, for we durſt not then give any Anſwer. All that I can now ſay, is, That your Lordſhips would look upon the Intentions of his Heart, in that he hath explained himſelf as fair as any Man can do by his Oath: How is it poſſible to make other Proof of the clear Intentions of his Heart, than by his Oath? His Oath is admitted as Proof againſt him, in the Acknowledgment of his Book; and ſhall it not be admitted to him, to clear the Integrity of his Heart? We beſeech your Lordſhips to look upon him, as not writing theſe things out of Perverſeneſs of Spirit, but out of the abundance of his Heart tranſported with Zeal againſt the growing Evils, which have befallen many of this Nation, and ſome of his own Acquaintance, by their frequenting of Stage-Plays. We that know him muſt ſay, as far as our Knowledge will give us leave, that in all Paſſages that have fallen from him, to us he hath expreſſed himſelf full of Devotion and Duty to his Majeſty and the Queen; and ſhall humbly take leave to offer ſome Paſſages out of his Book, which do bear evidence, that he doth ſpeak well of both their Majeſties, and of the State; and that by Inferences and Diſtinctions there made: and what is it but Inferences made out of other Paſſages of his Book, which doth reflect upon him? Which Paſſages were opened by the Counſel, but not read.

Three Star-Chamber Days having been ſpent in the hearing of this Cauſe, the Lords ſat the fourth day to proceed to Sentence, which held till four of the Clock in the Afternoon; and they paſſed ſuch Sentence on Mr. Prynn, as is expreſſed in the enſuing Speeches, which in effect comprehend all that was ſaid by others.

The firſt was of Francis Lord Cottington, Chancellor of the Exchequer, whoſe turn was to begin firſt to ſpeak, as being in the loweſt degree of Quality by his Place; and commonly he that beginneth, as he openeth the matter at large, ſo he inclineth thereby many Lords to forbear making of Speeches, and only to declare themſelves to concur in Sentence with him that began firſt, or with ſome other Lord that ſpake before, as their Judgments lead them.

My Lords (ſaid my Lord Cottington) His Majeſty's Attorney-General hath brought Mr. Prynn before your Lordſhips, with other Defendants, Thomas Buckner, Michael Sparkes, &c. It is for publiſhing a Libellous Book, or Volume of Libels, to the Scandal of his Majeſty and the State. To my underſtanding it may be more properly ſaid, the great and high Malice of Mr. Prynn publiſhed and declared in that Libellous Book; a Malice expreſſed in a manner againſt all Mankind, and the beſt ſort of Mankind, againſt King, Prince, Peers, Prelates, Magiſtrates and Governors, and truly in a manner againſt all things. But that which hath been more remarkable, is, his Spleen againſt the Church and Government of it; therefore for that I will not ſentence him, (becauſe Mr. Attorney doth forbear to proſecute againſt him, for that which belongeth to the Church) yet it is an argument of his great and high Malice: and when I conſider of that, which hath been ſo often repeated, that he writ this Book alone, ſurely he was aſſiſted immediately by the Devil himſelf, or rather he hath aſſiſted the Devil. He hath written a Book againſt the due Reverence and Honour, which all Chriſtians owe to our Saviour Jeſus, this doth convince my Judgment againſt him; but the Book (as Mr. Attorney ſaith) declares the Man, it is the Witneſs: And if your Lordſhips obſerve the Particulars and Stile of it, you will ſay it is a ſtrange thing; the very Stile doth declare the Intent of the Man, and that is (as Mr. Attorney ſaid) to work a Diſcontent and Diſlike in the King's People againſt the Church and Government, and Diſobedience to our gracious Sovereign the King. If Mr. Prynn ſhould be demanded what he would have, he liketh nothing, no State or Sex; Muſick, Dancing, &c. unlawful even in Kings; no kind of Recreation, no kind of Entertainment, no, not ſo much as Hawking, all are damned. The very truth, Mr. Prynn would have a new Government, he would have a new Church, he would have new Laws, new Entertainment, Gods knows what he would have; a new King he would have, and have all the People of his mind, to be diſcontented with their King and Government.

Mr. Prynn confeſſeth he did write the Book, and it's true he did endeavour the printing of it, and the publiſhing of it, this is proved very well; yea, but Mr. Prynn had no other Intention but a Tenderneſs of Conſcience, he meant no hurt to the King or State, (as his Counſel ſaid:) but Mr. Attorney anſwered them, that he is not the Declarer of his Intentions, he muſt be judged by the Book, by his Words, more certainly by the effect; for all good Men do receive Scandal by this Book, and all of Mr. Prynn's humour were glad of this Book. When I conſider what kind of Libel it is, it is not like other Libels: other Libels have been by Perſons diſcontented, ſome poor Rogues, ſcattered up and down; but here's a Libel in Folio, and in Print, and juſtifieth itſelf by Authors with an high hand, That is there, and that is there. And (my Lords) when I conſider thoſe high Paſſages in his Book, I proteſt unto you, they are things to be abhorred; they are not ſpoken relatively (as his Counſel would have it) but poſitively, That our Engliſh Ladies, ſhorn and frizled Madams, have loſt their Modeſty; that the Devil is only honoured in Dancing; that Plays are the chief Delight of the Devil; that they that frequent Plays are damned, and ſo are all that do not concur with him in his Opinion, Whores, Panders, foul incarnate Devils, Judas's to their Lord and Maſter, &c. Princes dancing in their own Perſons, his Cenſure of them is infamous, &c. But the fouleſt of all is, That this was the cauſe of untimely Ends in Princes.

My Lords, Shall not all that hear theſe things think, that it is the Mercy of the King that Mr. Prynn is not deſtroyed? Have we not ſeen Men lately condemned to be hang'd and quarter'd for far leſs Matters? One Pinchman, I was my ſelf employed with others in the examining of him; he confeſſed, that the Writing for which he was queſtioned, was a Sermon, that he did intend to preach: the Words were againſt the Perſon of the King, yet he never preached it; yet becauſe he had written it with an intention to preach it, he was brought upon this Point and condemned to die. But this Book is in Print; it is againſt all Magiſtrates, and particularly againſt the King our Sovereign, and his bleſſed Conſort. And yet, my Lords, it pleaſeth his Majeſty to let Mr. Prynn have his Tryal here. I will not trouble your Lordſhips with any more parts of the Book: Mr. Attorney noted unto your Lordſhips, that you ſhould ſee how neceſſary it was, that Mr. Prynn ſhould be clean cut off, as one that hath a long time endeavoured to move the People to Diſobedience againſt the King, &c. So I ſay with Mr. Attorney, it is high time that Mr. Prynn may be cut off, ſo far as may go with the Cenſure of this Court. My Lords, Mr. Prynn is better dealt withal, than he would have Princes dealt with; he hath had very fair Tryals.

For his Defence, I took notice of it likewiſe: I do remember that all thoſe Gentlemen, that were employed and aſſigned as Counſel for his Defence, every one of them began to crave Mercy of the Court; yet they came with a Defence and Juſtification, ſo far as their Cauſe would bear.

Mr.

Mr. Holbourn ſaid, That for Players they were Rogues by the Statute: yet Mr. Attorney ſaid, They are not Rogues by the Statute, unleſs they wander, &c. My Lords, he ſaid, his Intention was againſt publick and common Plays, yet ſeek all his Book thorow, and you ſhall find it is againſt Plays in Princes Palaces. His Intention now muſt be underſtood by his Book, and by his Words; and that which he doth apply of any Author, is his own. And I think his Defence did aggravate his Offence. As to his Defence againſt the Ladies, he ſaith, he ſpeaketh it relatively and not poſitively, yet he ſaith, Our Engliſh Ladies are ſo and ſo whoriſh, &c. And for that part of his Book, wherein he condemns Murder, Mr. Prynn will have Murder unlawful; but Execution of Princes is not Murder, and therefore that is a lawful Act. Mr. Attorney ſaid well, the End of this Man and John * Mariana, &c. they are all one, they all cry Malice againſt Princes.

* A Jeſuit.

I ſhall humbly crave Pardon, and diſcharge my Conſcience, and ſhall let your Lordſhips ſee, how I underſtand the Senſe, and that ſo I am to judge, and I conceive it to be as your Lordſhips ſee, that the Malice in this Book is againſt King and State: and, my Lords, with this I ſentence Mr. Prynn.

I do in the firſt place begin Cenſure with his Book; I condemn it to be burnt, in the moſt publick manner that can be. The manner in other Countries is, (where ſuch Books are) to be burnt by the Hangman, tho not uſed in England, (yet I wiſh it may, in reſpect of the Strangeneſs and Heinouſneſs of the Matter contained in it) to have a ſtrange manner of burning; therefore I ſhall deſire it may be ſo burnt by the Hand of the Hangman.

If it may agree with the Court, I do adjudge Mr. Prynn to be put from the Bar, and to be for ever uncapable of his Profeſſion. I do adjudge him, my Lords, That the Society of Lincolns-Inn do put him out of the Society; and becauſe he had his Offspring from Oxford (now, with a low Voice, ſaid the Biſhop of Canterbury, I am ſorry that ever Oxford bred ſuch an evil Member) there to be degraded. And I do condemn Mr. Prynn to ſtand in the Pillory in two Places, in Weſtminſter and Cheapſide; and that he ſhall loſe both his Ears, one in each Place, and with a Paper on his Head, declaring how foul an Offence it is, viz. That it is for an infamous Libel againſt both their Majeſties, State, and Government. And laſtly, (nay not laſtly) I do condemn him in 5000 l. Fine to the King. And laſtly, perpetual Impriſonment.

There are other Defendants, Thomas Buckner, whom I conceive to be the Chaplain charg'd with the Licenſing of the Book. I obſerve, that Mr. Attorney hath little or nothing proſecuted againſt him. It is ſaid, he did combine with the Writer and Stationer for this infamous Libel. It doth appear that he did licenſe it, or at leaſt 64 Pages thereof; I think it be alſo true, that Mr. Buckner did ſee the Book after it was printed. It is ſaid, for his Excuſe, That Mr. Buckner was cozen'd and ſurpriz'd by Mr. Prynn and Sparkes, but it's plain he licenſed it, or at leaſt 64 Pages: therefore I ſhall judge according to the Proof, as it is the uſual Cuſtom of this Court. I muſt judge Mr. Buckner to be worthy of a very ſharp Sentence, for certainly there is a very great Inconvenience fallen upon the State, for want of due Examination: To what purpoſe is there an Examination of Books, if there ſhall be a connivance and winking at the Party that doth it? I ſhall think Mr. Buckner not only worthy of a ſevere Reprehenſion, but I ſhall cenſure him firſt to have Impriſonment according to the courſe of the Court, and 50 l. Fine to the King.

Now, my Lords, the next is Michael Sparkes, and he is the third, and he is the Printer of the Book, and Binder, and Publiſher thereof. In his Defence he hath ſhewed your Lordſhips a piece of the Book licenſed by Mr. Buckner, and ſaith, it was all licenſed, but that he proves not; but that it was entred in the Stationers-Hall, that he proves. But I do find, that he perſuaded Men to buy this Book after it was prohibited; and before it was prohibited he perſuaded Men to buy it, ſaying, It was an excellent Book, and it would be called in, and then ſell well. I do fine Sparkes 500 l. to the King, and to ſtand in the Pillory, without touching of his Ears, with a Paper on his Head to declare his Offence, and it is moſt neceſſary in theſe Times; and for the Pillory to be in Paul's Churchyard. (It is a conſecrated Place, ſaith the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.) I cry your Grace's Mercy (ſaid my Lord Cottington) then let it be in Cheapſide. For the other three, I find that Mr. Attorney doth not proſecute them, therefore, my Lords, I do not cenſure them.

The next in courſe that ſpoke after the Lord Cottington, was the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon.

My Lords,

Since I have had the Honour to attend this Court, writing and printing of Books have been exceedingly found fault withal, and have received a ſharp Cenſure, and it doth grow every day worſe and worſe; every Man taketh upon him to underſtand what he conceiveth, and thinks he is no body except he be in Print. We are troubled here with a Book, a Monſter, (Monſtrum Horrendum, Informe, Ingens!) It hath been a Queſtion who is the Author of this Book: Surely I am ſatisfied in my Conſcience he is the Author of it; but truly, give me leave, I do not think Mr. Prynn is the only Actor in this Book, but that there were many Heads and Hands therein beſides himſelf. I would to God in Heaven, the Devil, and all elſe that had their Heads and Hands therein beſides Mr. Prynn, were, &c. for I think they are all Ill-willers to the State, and deſerve ſevere Puniſhment as well as Mr. Prynn doth. This Book is the Subject of this Day's Work, and it is annexed, by Mr. Attorney, to the very Information it ſelf.

For the Book, I do hold it a moſt ſcandalous infamous Libel to the King's Majeſty, a moſt pious and religious King; to the Queen's Majeſty, a moſt excellent and gracious Queen; ſuch a one as this Kingdom never enjoy'd the like, and I think the Earth never had a better. It is ſcandalous to all the honourable Lords, and the Kingdom itſelf, and to all ſorts of People. I ſay, Eye never ſaw, nor Ear ever heard of ſuch a ſcandalous and ſeditious thing as this miſ-ſhapen Monſter is. How ſcandalous a thing it is, hath appeared already to your Lordſhips, by the King and Queen's Counſel againſt Mr. Prynn; I will not for my part repeat.

Yet give me leave to read a word or two, where he cometh to tell your Lordſhips of the Reaſons why he writ this Book: Becauſe he ſaw the Number of the Plays, Play-Books, Play-Haunters, and Play-houſes ſo exceedingly increaſed, there being above forty thouſand Play-Books, being now more vendible than the choiceſt Sermons. What ſaith he in the Epiſtle Dedicatory, ſpeaking of Play-Books?

Books? They are ſo big a Price, and are printed in far better Paper, than moſt Octavo and Quarto Bibles, which hardly find ſo good vent as they; and then come in ſuch abundance, as they exceed all number, and 'tis a year's time to peruſe them over, they are ſo multiplied: and then he putteth in the Margin, Ben Johnſon, &c. printed in better Paper than moſt Bibles. Now if this be not a Tax upon the Kingdom, to print theſe Books in better Paper than the Bible it ſelf, for my part I leave it to your Lordſhips. This Monſter, this huge miſ-ſhapen Monſter, I ſay it is nothing but Lyes, and Venom againſt all ſorts of People. It is a ſtrange thing what this Man taketh upon him: He is not like thoſe Powder-Traitors, they would have blown up all at once; this throweth all down at once to Hell together, and delivereth them over to Satan. I beſeech your Lordſhips to give me leave; Stage-Plays, &c. (ſaith he) none are gainers and honoured by them, but the Devil and Hell; and when they have taken their wills in Luſt here, their Souls go to eternal Torment hereafter. And this muſt be the end of this Monſter's horrible Sentence. He ſaith, So many as are in Play-houſes, are ſo many unclean Spirits; and that Play-Haunters are little better than incarnate Devils. He doth not only condemn all Play-Writers, but all Protectors of them, and all beholding of them; and dancing at Plays, and ſinging at Plays, they are all damned, and that no leſs than to Hell. I beſeech your Lordſhips to give me leave but in a word to read unto you what he writes of Dancing, &c. It is the Devil's Profeſſion, and he that entreth into a Dance, entreth into a deviliſh Profeſſion; and ſo many Paces in a Dance, ſo many Paces to Hell: This is that which he conceiveth of Dancing. The Woman that ſingeth in the Dance, is the Prioreſs of the Devil, and thoſe that anſwer are Clerks, and the Beholders are the Pariſhioners, and the Muſick are Bells, and the Fidlers are the Minſtrels of the Devil. I ſaid it was a ſeditious Libel; this point of Sedition is the only thing that troubles me, and it is that which I ſhall offer to your Lordſhips: For I do know it, the good Opinion, Heart, Will and Affections of the King's People and Subjects are the King's greateſt Treaſure. Now if this be ſo, then for any Man cunningly to undermine theſe things, to take away the Hearts of the Subjects from the King, and to bring the King into an ill Opinion among his People, this is a moſt damned Offence; and if I were in my proper place, and Mr. Prynn brought before me, I ſhould go another way to work. I proteſt unto your Lordſhips, it maketh my Heart to ſwell, and my Blood in my Veins to boil (ſo cold as I am) to ſee this or any thing attempted, which may endanger my gracious Sovereign; it is to me the greateſt Comfort in this World to behold his Proſperity.

Much hath been ſpoken concerning theſe things, and ſomething by my Lord Cottington before me; but good my Lords, give me leave to remember you one or two Paſſages, not yet ſpoken of. He writeth thus; That Nero's acting and frequenting Plays, was the chiefeſt Cauſe that ſtirred up others to conſpire his Death. Would any Man think, that his acting and frequenting of Plays was the chiefeſt Occaſion?

He writeth in another place worſe than this. Fol. 465. Tribellius Pollio relates, That Martian, Heraclius, and Claudius, three worthy Romans, conſpired together to murder Gallienus the Emperor, (a Man much beſotted, and taken up with Plays, to which he likewiſe drew the Magiſtrates and People by his lewd Examples) as Flavius and others conſpired Nero's Murder for the ſelf-ſame Cauſe, &c. Now, my Lords, that they ſhould be called three worthy Perſons that do conſpire an Emperor's Death, (tho a wicked Emperor) it is no Chriſtian Expreſſion.

If Subjects have an ill Prince, marry what is the Remedy? They muſt pray to God to forgive him, and not ſay they are worthy Subjects that do kill him: If they were worthy Acts, Mr. Prynn, I can tell what you are, (Mr. Prynn ſtanding during the Cenſure behind the Lord Chief Juſtice Richardſon, and Archbiſhop Neal.) No Man will conſpire to murder a King that can be a worthy Actor; for the very Thought of it is High-Treaſon. He ſpeaketh of theſe three, that they were three worthy Romans that did conſpire to murder Nero. This is moſt horrible, and here can be no manner of Expoſition, but in the worſt Senſe; for his Excuſe, he hath made none at all, only it was not his Intention.

Good Mr. Prynn, you are a Lawyer. Intention! I know where the Word ſtandeth equal, as that you may take the Intention this way, or that way, with the Right-hand or Left-hand, there in that Caſe you may ſpeak the Intention; but where the Words are plain and poſitive, as in your Books, here is no help of Intention in the World: your Words are plain and clear, therefore you can never make any Defence at all out of that. Not to hold your Lordſhips any longer, my Lords, it is a moſt wicked, infamous, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Libel. Mr. Prynn, I muſt now come to my Sentence, tho I am very ſorry, for I have known you long, yet now I muſt utterly forſake you; for I find that you have forſaken God, and his Religion, and your Allegiance, Obedience, and Honour, which you owe to both their excellent Majeſties, the Rule of Charity to all noble Ladies, and Perſons in the Kingdom, and forſaken all Goodneſs: Therefore, Mr. Prynn, I ſhall proceed to my Cenſure, wherein I agree with my Lord Cottington, as he began very well: Firſt, for the burning of the Book in as diſgraceful a manner as may be, whether in Cheapſide or Paul's Church-yard; for tho Paul's Church-yard be a conſecrated place, yet Heretical Books have been burnt in that place. And becauſe Mr. Prynn is of Lincolns-Inn, and that his Profeſſion may not ſuſtain Diſgrace by his Puniſhment, I do think it fit, with my Lord Cottington, that he be put from the Bar, and degraded in the Uuiverſity; and I leave to my Lords, the Lord Biſhops, to ſee that done: and for the Pillory, I hold it juſt and equal, tho there were no Statute for it. In the caſe of a high Crime it may be done by the diſcretion of the Court, ſo I do agree to that too. I fine him 5000 l. and I know he is as well able to pay 5000 l. as one half of 1000 l. and perpetual Impriſonment I do think fit for him, and to be reſtrained from writing, neither to have Pen, Ink, nor Paper; yet let him have ſome pretty Prayer-Book, to pray to God to forgive him his Sins; but to write, in good faith I would never have him: For, Mr. Prynn, I do judge you by your Book to be an inſolent Spirit, and one that did think by this Book to have got the name of a Reformer, to ſet up the Puritan or Separatiſt Faction. I would not have Mr. Prynn go without a Recognition of his Offence to the King and Queen's Majeſty. I agree to the Sentence on Buckner and Sparkes.

Secretary Cook. By this vaſt Book of Mr. Prynn's, it appeareth he hath read more than he hath ſtudied, and ſtudied more than he conſidered; whereas,

as, if he had read but one Sentence of Solomon, it had ſaved him from the Danger he is now like to fall into. The Preacher ſaith, Be not over-juſt, nor make thy ſelf over-wiſe, for why wilt thou deſtroy thy ſelf? My Lords, it is a Sentence requireth much Study and Conſideration. It is moſt certain, that Righteouſneſs and Wiſdom are ſuch Virtues, as they help forward Juſtice; but when Wiſdom is mixed with a Man's own Humours, as for the moſt part it is with Fleſh and Blood, there is danger of ſtraining it too far, and that will tend to the Deſtruction of him and others. Examples are too pregnant of this, and he may take it from a good Author, even from Chriſt himſelf. When his Apoſtles, out of Zeal to their Maſter, would have called for fire from Heaven againſt the Samaritans that refus'd to entertain him, the Anſwer was, You know not of what Spirit you are. I would Mr. Prynn would have conſidered this.

There is a good Spirit that is meek, tempered with Modeſty and Humility, with Mildneſs and with Equity; and ſuch a Spirit is always tender, not to deſtroy, root up, overthrow, but to bind, repair and preſerve. But there is another fiery Spirit, which is always caſting of Fire, nothing but Damnation and Deſtruction; certainly ſuch a Spirit ever tends to his own Confuſion. And if this be well obſerved, every Man ſhall find it true, that ſuch a Spirit ever cometh before Deſtruction. I wiſh Mr. Prynn were not an ill Example of this. Certainly, my Lords, Vice and Corruption ought not only to be reprehended, but to be puniſhed ſeverely, and that ſharply too where it is; but Mr. Prynn ſhould have conſidered, every Man is not a fit Reprehender. He had no Invitation, nor Office, nor Intereſt to employ a Talent which doth not belong unto him. If Magiſtrates and Princes ſhould inveigh againſt all things, and tolerate nothing, we muſt live no longer among Men; and certainly, if we will be thought to live with them that are wholly virtuous, we muſt go out of the World; we have a good Author for this. But, my Lords, a Toleration muſt be uſed, and that Mr. Prynn would have found, if he had conſider'd his own Body: Shall a Man upon every light Diſtemper and Diſorder in his Body take Phyſick? Or ſhall ill Humours be purged till he purge all out? Certainly he will purge Spirit, Life and all away with it. And as it is in the Natural Body, ſo it is in the Politick, there muſt be a Toleration and Connivance; it cannot be govern'd without it, and we have a Warrant for it. Did not Chriſt himſelf forbid the cutting out of the Tares, leſt they ſhould pluck Corn, and deſtroy that too? I think if Mr. Prynn ſhould have been asked the Queſtion that Naaman did to the Prophet, he would not at all have bid go away in Peace, he would have threatned Hell and Deſtruction. There is a Chriſtian Wiſdom, and there muſt be a Toleration in all States. And certainly the Faults that have been tolerated in all times were greater than modeſt Plays, or modeſt Dancing. It is not my Intention, neither do I think it is the Intention of any of your Lordſhips, to apologize for Stage-Plays, much leſs for the Abuſe of them: I wiſh, and ſo I think doth every good Man, that the Abuſe of them were reſtrained; but, my Lords, not by Railing, Curſing, Damning, Inveighing, &c. not only againſt the Faults and Players themſelves, but againſt all Spectators, and thoſe that come to them, and that of all degrees, and with ſuch Bitterneſs and Acrimony, that in all the Authors alledged, which are infinite, there is not to be found an Example. My Lords, I am very ſorry he hath ſo carried himſelf, that a Man may juſtly fear he is the Timon that hath a Quarrel againſt Mankind. But I love not too much to aggravate Offences, which of themſelves are heavy enough.

He calleth his Book Hiſtriomaſtix; but therein he ſheweth himſelf like unto Ajax Anthropomaſtix, as the Grecians called him, the Scourge of all Mankind, that is, the Whipper and the Whip. I cannot but concur with the Cenſure already begun by my Lord Cottington, given againſt Mr. Prynn, Buckner and Sparkes.

Afterwards the Earl of Dorſet ſpake to this effect:

Such Swarms of Murmurers as this day diſcloſe themſelves, are they not fearful Symptoms of this ſick and diſeaſed Time? Ought we not rather with more Juſtice and Fear apprehend thoſe heavy Judgments which this minor Prophet, Prophet Prynn, hath denounced againſt this Land, for tolerating indifferent things, to fall upon us for ſuffering them, like thoſe Mutineers againſt Moſes and Aaron, as not fit to breathe? My Lords, It is high time to make a Luſtration to purge the Air. And when will Juſtice ever bring a more fit Oblation than this Achan? Adam, in the beginning, put Names on Creatures correſpondent to their Natures: The Title he hath given this Book is Hiſtriomaſtix, or rather, as Mr. Secretary Cook obſerved, Anthropomaſtix; but that comes not home, it deſerves a far higher Title: Damnation, in plain Engliſh, of Prince, Prelacy, Peers and People. Never did Pope in Cathedra, aſſiſted with the Spirit of Infallibility, more poſitively and more peremptorily condemn Hereticks and Hereſy, than this doth Mankind. Leſt any partial Auditor may think me tranſported with Paſſion, to judge of the baſe Liveries he beſtoweth upon Court and Courtiers, I ſhall do that which a Judge ought to do, viz. aſſiſt the Priſoner at the Bar. Give me leave to remember what Mr. Attorney let fall the other day. I will take hold of it for the Gentleman's Advantage, That this Gentleman had no Miſſion; if he had had a Miſſion, it would have qualified the Offence. Our Bleſſed Saviour, whom he converſed in this World, choſe Apoſtles, whom he ſent after into the World; Ite, prædicate, &c. to ſhew the way of Salvation to Mankind. Faith, Hope, and Charity, were the Steps of this Jacob's Ladder to aſcend Heaven by. The Devil, who hates every Man upon Earth, play'd the Divine, cited Books, wrought Miracles; and he will have his Diſciples too, as he had his Confeſſors and Martyrs. My Lords, This Contempt, Diſloyalty, and Deſpair, are the Ropes which this Emiſſary lets down to his great Maſter's Kingdom for a general Service. My Lords, As the Tenour of their Commiſſion was different, ſo are the Ways: Theſe holy Men advanced their Cauſe in former times by Meekneſs, Humility, Patience to bear with the Weakneſs and Infirmities of their Brethren; they taught Obedience to Magiſtracy, even for Conſcience-ſake; they divided not their Eſtates into Factions; they detracted from none, they ſought the Salvation of Mens Souls, and guided their Bodies and Affections anſwerably; they gave to Cæſar the things that were Cæſar's; if Princes were bad, they prayed for them, if good, they praiſed God for them; however, they bore with them: This was the Doctrine of the Primitive Church, and this they did. I appeal to my Lords that have read this Book, if Mr. Prynn has not with breach of Faith, diſcharged his great Maſter's End. My Lords, When God had made all his Works, he looked upon them and ſaw that they were good. This Gentleman, the Devil having put Spectacles on his Noſe, ſays, that all is bad: No Recreation, Vocation, no Condition good; neither Sex, Magiſtrate, Ordinance, Cuſtom, Divine and Human, things animate, inanimate, all, my Lords, wrapt up in Maſſa Damnata, all in the Ditch of Deſtruction. Here, my Lords, we may obſerve the great Prudence of this Prince of Darkneſs, a Soul ſo fraught of Malice, ſo void of Humanity, that it gorgeth out all the Filth, Impiety and Iniquity that the Diſcontent of this Age doth contract againſt the Church and State. But it may be ſome Follower of his will ſay, It was the Pride and Wickedneſs of the Times that prompted him to this Work, and ſet his Zeal, through Tenderneſs of Conſcience, to write this Book. My Lords, you may know an unclean Bird by his Feathers; let him be unplum'd, unmask'd, pull off the deceitful Vizard, and ſee how he appeareth: this brittle-Conſcience Brother, that perhaps ſtarts at the ſight of the Corner-Cap, ſweats at the Surplice, ſwoons at the Sign of the Croſs, and will rather die than put on Woman's Apparel to ſave his Life; yet he is ſo zealous for the advancement of his Babel, that he invents Legions, coins new Statutes, corrupts, miſapplies Texts with falſe Interpretations, diſhonours all Men, defames all Women, equivocates, lies; and yet this Man is a holy Man, a Pillar of the Church. Do you, Mr. Prynn, find fault with the Court and Courtiers Habits, Silk and Sattin Divines? I may ſay of you, you are all Purple within, all Pride, Malice, and all Diſloyalty; you are like a Tumbler, which is commonly ſquint-ey'd, you look one way, and run another way: tho you ſeemed by the Title of your Book to ſcourge Stage-Plays, yet it was to make People believe, that there was an Apoſtacy in the Magiſtrates. But, my Lords, admit all this to be venial and pardonable, this Pigmy groweth a Giant, and invades the Gods themſelves; where we enjoy this Felicity under a gracious Prince with ſo much Advantage, as to have the Light of the Goſpel, whilſt others are kept in Darkneſs, the Happineſs of the Recreations to the Health of the Body, the bleſſed Government we now have: When did ever Church ſo flouriſh, and State better proſper? And ſince the Plagues happen'd, none have been ſent among us ſuch as this Caterpillar is: What Vein hath opened his Anger? Or who hath let out his Fury? When did ever Man ſee ſuch a Quietus eſt as in theſe Days? Yet in this Golden Age is there not a Shimei amongſt us, that curſeth the Anointed of the Lord? ſo puffed with Pride, nor can the Beams of the Sun thaw his frozen Heart, and this Man appeareth yet. And now, my Lords, pardon me, as he hath wounded his Majeſty in his Head, Power and Government, and her Majeſty, his Majeſty's dear Conſort, our Royal Queen, and my gracious Miſtreſs; I can ſpare him no longer, I am at his Heart. Oh quantum! &c. If any caſt infamous Aſperſions and Cenſures on our Queen and her Innocency, Silence would prove Impiety rather than Ingratitude in me, that do daily contemplate her Virtues; I will praiſe her for that which is her own, ſhe drinks at the Spring-Head, whilſt others take up at the Stream. I ſhall not alter the great Truth that hath been ſaid, with a Heart as full of Devotion, as a Tongue of Eloquence, the other day, as it came to his part, (meaning Sir John Finch.) My Lords, Her own Example to all Virtues, the Candor of her Life, is a more powerful Motive than all Precepts, than the ſevereſt Laws: no hand of Fortune nor of Power can hurt her; her Heart is full of Honour, her Soul of Chaſtity; Majeſty, Mildneſs and Meekneſs are ſo married together, and ſo impaled in her, that where the one begetteth Admiration, the other Love; her Soul of that excellent Temper, ſo harmoniouſly compoſed, her Zeal in the ways of God unparallel'd; her Affections to her Lord ſo great, if ſhe offend him, it is no Sunſet in her Anger; in all her Actions and Affections ſo elective and judicious, and a Woman ſo conſtant for the Redemption of all her Sex from all Imputation, which Men (I know not how juſtly) ſometimes lay on them; a Princeſs, for the Sweetneſs of her Diſpoſition, and for Compaſſion, always relieving ſome oppreſſed Soul, or rewarding ſome deſerving Subject: were all ſuch Saints as ſhe, I think the Roman Church were not to be condemned: on my Conſcience ſhe troubleth the Ghoſtly Father with nothing, but that ſhe hath nothing to trouble him withal. And ſo when I have ſaid all in her Praiſe, I can never ſay enough of her Excellency; in the relation whereof an Orator cannot flatter, nor Poet lye: yet is there not Doeg among us, notwithſtanding all the Tergiverſations his Counſel hath uſed at the Bar? I can better prove, that he meant the King and Queen by that infamous Nero, &c. than he proves Players go to Hell: but, Mr. Prynn, your Iniquity is full, it runs over, and Judgment is come; it is not Mr. Attorney that calls for Judgment againſt you, but it is all Mankind, they are the Parties grieved, and they call for Judgment.

(1.) Mr. Prynn, I do declare you to be a Schiſm-Maker in the Church, a Sedition-Sower in the Common-wealth, a Wolf in Sheeps-Clothing; in a word, omnium malorum nequiſſimus. I ſhall fine him Ten Thouſand Pounds, which is more than he is worth, yet leſs than he deſerveth; I will not ſet him at liberty no more than a plagued Man or a mad Dog, who tho he cannot bite, he will foam; he is ſo far from being a ſociable Soul, that he is not a rational Soul; he is fit to live in Dens with ſuch Beaſts of Prey, as Wolves and Tygers, like himſelf: Therefore I do condemn him to perpetual Impriſonment, as thoſe Monſters that are no longer fit to live among Men, nor to ſee Light. Now for Corporal Puniſhment, my Lords, whether I ſhould burn him in the Forehead, or ſlit him in the Noſe; for I find that it is confeſſed of all, that Doctor Leighton's Offence was leſs than Mr. Prynn's, then why ſhould Mr. Prynn have a leſs Puniſhment? He that was guilty of Murder was marked in a place where he might be ſeen, as Cain was. I ſhould be loth he ſhould eſcape with his Ears, for he may get a Perriwig, which he now ſo much inveighs againſt, and ſo hide them, or force his Conſcience to make uſe of his unlovely Love-Locks on both ſides: Therefore I would have him branded in the Forehead, ſlit in the Noſe, and his Ears cropt too. My Lords, I now come to this Ordure, I can give no better term to it, to burn it, as it is common in other Countries, or otherwiſe we ſhall bury Mr. Prynn, and ſuffer his Ghoſt to walk: I ſhall therefore concur to the burning of the Book; but let there be a Proclamation made, That whoſoever ſhall keep any of the Books in his hands, and not bring them to ſome publick publick Magiſtrate to be burnt in the fire, let them fall under the Sentence of this Court: for if they fell into wiſe Mens hands, or good Mens hands, there were no fear; but if among the common ſort, and into weak Mens hands, then Tenderneſs of Conſcience will work ſomething. Let this Sentence be recorded, and let it be ſent to the Library of Sion, (meaning a College in London) whither a Woman, by her Will, will allow Mr. Prynn's Works to be ſent.

For Mr. Buckner, I believe that he had no Intention at all this Work ſhould come abroad; he is ſaid to be a conformable Man to the Church of England: I ſhall hardly cenſure him, he deſerveth Admonition.

For Sparkes, I concur in all things: The Feodary had his Office taken away from him by this Court; I ſee therefore no reaſon but that he may be barred from printing and ſelling of Books, and kept wholly to binding of Books.

The Tryal of John Lord Balmerino, for a Libel, on the Third Day of December, 1634. 10 Car. I.

And firſt the Tenour of his Majeſty's Letter, directed to his Majeſty's Advocate.

To our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellor, Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall Knight and Baronet, our Advocate for our Kingdom of Scotland.

CHARLES Rex.

TRuſty and Well-beloved Counſellor, we greet you well. After due Conſideration having reſolved to cauſe the Lord Balmerino be put to the Tryal of ane Aſſyſe, (i. e. Jury;) and to this purpoſe it being neceſſary that you inform yourſelf of ſuch Particulars, as concern your Charge in the legal Proſecution of that buſineſs; it is our Pleaſure, that with all convenient diligence you inſiſt therein, by preparing of ane Indictment fit for that purpoſe, and that you carefully go on in every other thing touching the Proſecution thereof, as you will anſwer to us upon your Truſt: And that by the Advice of the Chief Juſtice you prefix a Day for the ſame, for which theſe Preſents ſhall be your Warrant. Given at our Mannor of Hampton-Court, the 14th of October 1634.

Follows the Act of Seſſion, nominating the ſaids Aſſeſſors, at Edinburgh the ſecond Day of December, the Year of God 1634. the which Day the Lords of Council and Seſſion nominate, appoint, and elect Sir Robert Spotſwood of Dunnypace Knight, Preſident of the College of Juſtice; Sir John Hay of Barro Knight, Clerk of our Sovereign Lord's Regiſter Council and Rolls; and Sir James Learmonth of Balcomy Knight Baronet, Senator of the ſaid College of Juſtice; to be Aſſeſſors to William Earl of Errol, Great Conſtable of Scotland, and having Commiſſion from his Majeſty to be Juſtice-General in the criminal Purſuit intentit and depending before the ſaid Juſtice againſt John Lord of Balmerino.

Extractum de Libro Actorum per me Magiſtrum Alexandrum Hay, Scribam Conſilii ac Deputatum honorabilis Domini Joannis Hay de Barro Militis, Clerici Regiſtri ac Conſilii S. D. N. Regis, ſub meis Signo & Subſcriptione manualibus, ſic ſubſcribitur A. Hay.

Follows the Tenour of the Dittay:

CHARLES by the Grace of God King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith; to our Lovit (i. e. Beloved) James Currie, Ormond Purſevant, Meſſenger, our Sheriff in that part conjunctly and ſeverally, ſpecially conſti-

tate, Greeting. Forſuameikle as it is complain'd and humbly meant to us by our Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellor Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall Knight Baronet, our Advocate for our Intereſt upon John Lord of Balmerino, That where albeit by the Common Law, as alſo by the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and ſpecially by that Act and Statute of Parliament made by our umqhile (i.e. late) deareſt Father King James VI. of happy and bleſſed Memory, Par. 10. chap. 10. it is ſtatute and ordained, That all our Subjects continue themſelves in Quietneſs and dutiful Obedience to Us and our Royal Authority, and that none of them preſume or take upon hand publickly to diſclaim, or privately to ſpeak or write any purpoſe of Reproach or Slander of our Perſon, Eſtate, or Government; or to deprave our Laws and Acts of Parliament, or miſconſtruct our Proceedings, whereby any Miſliking may be moved betwixt us and our Nobility and loving Subjects in time coming, under the pain of Death; certifying them that does in the contrair, they ſhall be repute as ſeditious and wicked Inſtruments, Enemies to us and the Commonweal of this our Realm: And the ſaid Pain of Death ſhall be execute upon them with all rigour, in example of others. Likeas by the 205th Act of the 14th Parliament of our ſaid umqhile deareſt Father, in the Month of June 1594. the former Act of Parliament, with divers others, againſt Leaſing-makers and Authors of Slanders and Calumnies, is ratified and approven, and ordained to be publiſhed of new again, and to be put to execution in all time coming; with this addition, That whoſoever hears the ſaid leaſing Calumnies, or ſcandalous Speeches, or Writs to be made, and apprehends not the Authors thereof, if it be in his power, or reveals not the ſame to Us, or to any of our Privy-Council, or to our Sheriff, Steward, or Baillie of our Sheriffdom, Stewartry, or Bailliary, Stewarts in Regality or Royalty, or to the Provoſt, or ane of the Ballies within our Burrows, by whom the ſamen may come to our knowledge, or to the knowledge of our Privy-Council; whereby the ſaids Leaſing-makers and Authors of ſcandalous Speeches, may be called, tryed, and puniſhed, according to the ſaids Acts: the Hearer and not Revealer, and not Apprehender, (if it lie in his power) and Concealer and not Revealer of the ſaids Leaſing-makers, and Authors of the ſaids ſcandalous Speeches and Writs, ſhall incur the like Pain and Puniſhment as the principal Offender, as in our ſaids Acts of Parliament at length is conteined. Notwithſtanding qhereof, it having come lately to our knowledge, in the Month of March laſt by-paſt, that there was a moſt ſcandalous, reproachful, odious and ſeditious Libel, found in the hands of one Mr. John Dunmure, Notary in Dundee, and divulged and diſperſed in the hands of ſeveral of our Subjects: whilk ſcandalous, odious, infamous, and ſeditious Libel, did not only ſeditiouſly, reproachfully, and outrageouſly tax our Sacred Perſon in our Behaviour at Parliament; but alſo contains many Points and Purpoſes of falſe Calumnies, publick Scandals and Reproaches againſt Us, our Eſtate and Government, depraving our Laws and Acts of Parliament, and miſconſtruing our juſt and glorious Proceedings in our firſt Parliament, holden by us in Perſon in the Month of June of before, as doth manifeſtly appear in the hail Tenour of the ſaids infamous Libel; and particularly in the particular Paſſages hereof after following: Inſuafar as albeit by the Law of God and Laws of all Nations, the Perſon of the ſupreme and ſovereign Prince is and ought to be ſacred and inviolable, and he onght to be reverenced, honoured, and feared, as God's Lieutenant on Earth; and that all Subjects are bound and tyed in Conſcience to content themſelves in humble Submiſſion to obey and reverence the Perſon, Laws, and Authority of their ſupreme Sovereign: yet the ſaid unhappy and infamous Libel, in the firſt entry thereof, begins with an outrageous upbraiding and taxing of our ſovereign Lord's Majeſty of a point of Injuſtice or Indiſcretion in our Behaviour at Parliament, for putting of Notes (as the ſaids infamous Libel alledges) upon the Names of a number of our Subjects, who did vote contrair to the Acts of our Church-Government, paſt in Parliament. Whilk is ane fearful thing in ane Subject to pry into the Geſture of his Sovereign in his ſupreme Court: And upon a Geſture, without Speech, to infer a ground of Exprobration and Reproach to the ſovereign Prince. Next, the ſaid infamous Libel reproaches Us for refuſing to receive from ſome of our Subjects their Reaſons for diſ-aſſenting from the ſaid Acts, before their publick Hearing in Parliament: whilk is a Point no ways compatible with the humble Obedience of a good, quiet, and peaceable Subject; but carries with it the Signal and Token of Diſcontentment, and rubs upon our Sacred Perſon and Proceedings matter of Reproach and Scandal, tending, if it were poſſible, to diminiſh the glorious Opinion and Eſtimation of our Royal Perſon, Equity, and Juſtice, in the Hearts of our Subjects. Thirdly, the malicious Heart of the Penner, not content with the firſt Aſperſion laid upon us for putting Notes upon theſe who diſaſſented, does ingeminat the ſamen in ane moſt bitter Invective and viperous Style, in affirming that ſuch a thing was never of before cenſured by a Prince of ſo much Juſtice as our Sacred Majeſty: whilk in effect is to reproach us of manifeſt Injuſtice, for doing of that, the like whereof was never done by a juſt Prince. And the Libeller, not content with theſe Reproaches, moſt villanouſly and deſpitefully belcht and vomited furth againſt our Sacred Perſon, proceeds to a moſt fearful and dangerous undermining of our Honour, Credit, and greateſt Happineſs, in affirming that there is now a general Fear of ſome Innovation intended in Eſſential Points of Religion: albeit (bleſſed be God) it be certainly known to all our good Subjects, that We are, and in all our Actings have ſhowen Ourſelves to be a moſt devote and religious Prince, hating and abhorring in Heart and Affection all Papiſtical Superſtition and Idolatry. And the Libeller (out of a deviliſh Humour) not content to reſtrain his Pen within the Limits of this our Kingdom of Scotland, as if it were too little for the compaſs of his curious and furious Brain, he enters to pry into our Eſtate of England, and aſſures that there is Reports of allowance of reprinting of Books of Popery and Arminianiſm in England, and of the reſtraint of Anſwers made to them: and then returning to Scotland, moſt falſly affirms, that Arminianiſm is preached there without Cenſure. After that, he goes to the Eſtates of the Parliament, and affirms moſt falſly and calumniouſly, that divers Papiſts were admitted to Parliament, and upon the Articles, who by the Law of the Realm can be no Member of any Judicatory. Albeit it be conſtant and nottour, that none of theſe who were admitted to Parliament and upon the Articles, was profeſſed Papiſts, as will appear by the Roll

Roll of the Names of theſe who were upon the Articles. And farder, the unhappy Penner of that curſed Libel proceeding to ane higher point of taxing and miſconſtructing of our Proceedings, he affirms that the Grievances allowed to be proponed in Convention in Anno 1625, were altogether ſlighted in this our firſt Parliament: which is a manifeſt Lye and Untruth, there being nothing concerning the Publick moved at Parliament, which was not either determined by our Eſtates, or remitted to our Council. And thereafter it is as falſly affirm'd, that the Meetings of the Gentry, which were appointed for repreſenting the Grievances of the Country in the Matter of Coin and Increaſe of Theft, were interrupted in our Name: which is a manifeſt Lye and Calumny. Likeas thereafter it is moſt ſcandalouſly and ſeditiouſly affirmed, that we denied Liberty to our Nobility to meet and conveen with the Lords of the Articles, againſt the Conſtitution of a Free Parliament under ſuch a juſt and lawful Prince: albeit it be nottourly known, that our Nobility did enjoy all the Privileges of a free Eſtate, which pertained to them and their Predeceſſors. And ſicklike thereafter it is affirm'd ignorantly, fooliſhly, and falſly, That againſt the Cuſtom of this our Kingdom, the Biſhops did chuſe the Articles of the Nobility; albeit before the Parliament in Anno 1609, the Nobility did ever chuſe the Articles themſelves: which is notoriouſly falſe, and contrair to the fundamental Laws and Practices of all preceding Parliaments, whereby it is conſtitute, that ever the Clergy did chuſe the Articles of the Nobility. And thereafter he affirms, That the Biſhops did chuſe ſuch of the Nobility on the Articles, as either were Popiſhly affected, or had ſmall Knowledge of the Eſtate and Laws of this our Country: which is an impudent malicious Calumny and Falſhood; theſe who were choſen on the Articles (as will appear by their Names) being of the moſt antient of the Nobility, and moſt expert in the Laws and Cuſtoms of this our Kingdom. Thereafter the curſed and unhappy Libeller returns to his nipping and checking Style; and moſt preſumptuouſly challenges our Sacred Self upon our Speeches in Parliament, and upon our Proclamations made upon our Revocation; which was intended for Augmentation of our Patrimony, and for disburdening of our Subjects of Taxation; and that yet nevertheleſs huge and great Taxations were impoſed, againſt the Counſel given by our umqhile deareſt Father of bleſſed Memory in his Baſilicon Doron, and againſt the Practice of our deareſt Predeceſſor King James I. who remitted to his Subjects a great part of the Taxation granted for his Ranſom: which is a peart and miſchievous Exprobration to our Sacred Perſon, who out of the Love and tender Affection which We bear to this our antient native Kingdom and Country, vouchſafed that Grace and Favour to viſit it in our Royal Perſon, without ſparing of Coſt and Charges for our Journey, and other Neceſſaries belonging to our Coronation; which is well known far to exceed the Taxations voluntarily offered to Us by our Eſtates, in teſtimony of their humble and thankful Gratitude for ſo great a Bleſſing as the perſonal Preſence of us their Sacred Lord and Sovereign, within this our native Soil and antient Kingdom. And as we did never enjoin nor urge any Taxation, ſo the ſame being voluntarily and humbly offer'd to us by our loving and faithful Subjects, as the Mite of their humble Affection, far within and beneath the Reſpect of ſo glorious a Benefit, yet we were pleas'd out of our Love to accept it graciouſly. And yet this ſo gracious Acceptance cannot paſs the Pen of this unhappy Libeller, but muſt be caſten up, (i. e. reflected upon) with a falſe and deſpiteful Exprobration, as done againſt Promiſe, Proclamation, and the Practice of K. James I. which is falſly and villainouſly affirm'd. And when the infamous Libeller has ſpent his unhappy Breath and Pen in reviling and maledicting the glorious Name of us, his gracious Sovereign, in our Perſon and Proceedings, he thereafter challenges us for applying our former Taxations to a wrong uſe, in beſtowing the ſamen upon Parties and Perſons, whoſe Waiſtrie (i. e. Extravagance) and Wants, our Subjects are not oblig'd to ſupply. And with this beſides, by the way, he upbraids our Servants and Counſellors for Malverſation, in the guiding and imploying thereof: And is ſo peart and impudent in his deviliſh Stile, that he ſpares not the Name of our ever-glorious deareſt Father King James of Bleſſed Memory; but moſt falſly caſts up (i. e. mentions) a Promiſe alledg'd to be made by his Majeſty or his Commiſſioner, in the Parliament holden in Anno 1621. for diſcontinuing of the extraordinary Taxation in all time to come. And then in the end, as a venomous Waſp, he cloſes with an impudent Reproach towards us, in that which is moſt commendable in a Sovereign Prince, by taxing us in our Beneficence and Liberality to the Lords of our Seſſion, in providing honourable Maintenance to them, and in beſtowing Penſions upon our Officers; and leaves nothing within this our Kingdom, which is not drawn in within the Scourge of his deviliſh and malicious Pen and Tongue: So that it is to be wonder'd and admir'd, that any Perſon, living under ſuch a gracious, pious, and juſt a Prince, could degenerate into ſo monſtrous a Contempt of our Government, as to dare and preſume upon to think, let be (i. e. much leſs) to ſpeak and write ſuch deviliſh, reproachful, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Thoughts, which infeſts the very Air, and can have no other end but the breeding in the Hearts of our good and loving Subjects, a fearful Jealouſy and Diſlike, and in the end Contempt of our juſt Government. And albeit all our good Subjects be bound in Conſcience, as alſo by the Laws of this our Kingdom, to cruſh this Cockatrice in the Egg, and to abhor it as a peſtilentious Clout; yet the ſaid deviliſh Libel was found in the hands of the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure, Notary in Dundee, and was divulg'd and diſpers'd amongſt our Subjects about the forſaid Month of March laſt paſt: which coming to our Notice and Knowledge, we then gave power for examining of the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure how the ſame came to his hands; who deponed, That he had the ſamen from the ſaid John Lord of Balmerino. Which John Lord Balmerino being alſo examin'd, he granted the ſamen to be of Verity, and therewith affirm'd, that he had the ſaid Libel from one Mr. William Haig, whom he thought alſo to be the Penner and Author thereof. Of the which ſcandalous Libel, the ſaid John Lord Balmerino himſelf was, and is, Author, Deviſer, Conſulter, Adviſer, Airt and Part (i. e. Contriver and Partner) in the penning, writing, and drawing up thereof; at the leaſt is guilty of the hearing thereof, and of the concealing and not revealing of the ſaid Mr. William Haig, whom he affirms to have been Author of the ſame, and alſo is moſt guilty of the not apprehending of the ſaid Mr. William Haig, it being in the ſaid John Lord Balmerino his power to have taken and apprehended the ſaid

Mr. William; and, laſtly, is guilty and culpable of the divulging and diſperſing of the ſaid ſcandalous and ſeditious Libel amongſt our Subjects, in ſo far as the ſaid John Lord Balmerino knew of the penning of the ſaid ſcandalous Libel by the ſaid Mr. William Haig, and advis'd and gave his Opinion anent (i. e. about) the making of the ſamen; and in token thereof, interlin'd a part of the ſaid infamous Libel in divers Parts thereof with his own hand, which is yet extant to be ſeen by ocular Inſpection; and which interlining the ſaid John Lord Balmerino has confeſs'd to be his own Handwriting. Likeas immediately after the forming of the ſaid moſt infamous Libel, the ſaid John Lord Balmerino receiv'd the ſame from the ſaid Mr. William Haig, and deliver'd it to the Earl of Rothes, of purpoſe to have the ſamen preſented to us, and caus'd Mr. Robert Dalgliſh his Servant copy the ſaid infamous Libel; which Copy he deliver'd to the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure, in whoſe hands the ſamen was found, by occaſion whereof the ſaid infamous Libel was divulg'd and diſpers'd amongſt our Subjects, and openly read and expos'd to their view; to the Prejudice and Derogation of our ſacred and glorious Name, by the infamous, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Paſſages and Articles contain'd therein. Likeas the ſaid Lord of Balmerino kept and detain'd the ſaid infamous Libel in his hands continually, from the time of the cloſing of the Parliament about the end of June, 1633. until the 9th of June 1634. laſt paſt, at which time he was challeng'd for the ſame, and did exhibit the ſaid infamous Libel, in preſence of the Lords appointed by us for his Examination. Likeas the ſaid John Lord Balmerino having conferred with the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure, after his firſt Examination, which was in March 1634. and avowing that which he had done concerning the delivering of the ſaid infamous Libel to the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure, and diſperſing thereof, deſir'd the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure to go and tell the Earl of Traquair, one of the Examinators, that better Men then the ſaid John Lord Balmerino himſelf would ſet their Faces to (i. e. juſtify) the ſaid Libel, at the leaſt knew of the ſamen. And albeit the ſaid John Lord Balmerino be a Nobleman of good Learning and Underſtanding, and ſo preſum'd to have the knowledge of the Laws and Acts of Parliament of this our Kingdom, was bound in all Duty, after receiving of the ſaid infamous Libel from the ſaid Mr. William Haig, and reading thereof (which in the hail Strain and Tenour of the ſamen was of the nature of a ſcandalous and ſeditious Libel, prohibited by our Acts of Parliament) as he would have eſchewed the Danger of our Laws and Puniſhment therein contained, as Author thereof, to have revealed the ſame to us, or to ſome of our Privy Council: And alſo to have apprehended the ſaid Mr. William Haig, whom he affirms himſelf to have been the Author and Penner thereof; yet the ſaid Lord Balmerino did no ways apprehend the ſaid Mr. William Haig, nor yet reveal the ſaid ſcandalous Libel, it being in his power to have apprehended the ſaid Mr. William Haig, who was but a ſingle Perſon, and the ſaid Lord Balmerino being a Nobleman of Power and Credit: But the ſaid Lord, notwithſtanding thereof, did ſtill haunt and converſe with the ſaid Mr. William Haig, and did keep, detain, and retain the ſaid infamous Libel in his hands. Likeas the ſaid Lord Balmerino, after he was cited to compear before the Lords appointed for his Examination, which was upon the 7th of June laſt; he compearing before the ſaids Lords Examinators upon the ſaid 7th of June, being Saturday, he craved earneſtly of the ſaid Lords to have his Examination anent (i. e. about) his Knowledge of the Authors of the ſaid infamous Libel, to be continu'd (i. e. delay'd) till Monday next thereafter, which was the 9th of June; which being granted to him by the ſaids Lords, and he thereupon being demitted from them upon the ſaid 7th of June, being Saturday about twelve a Clock, he immediately thereafter met with the ſaid Mr. William Haig, and ſhew'd to him the Warrant of his Citation. At which time the ſaid Lord of Balmerino having the ſaid Mr. William Haig in his own Houſe, and ſo in his power, did not apprehend him, whom he knew and affirmed to be the Author of the ſaid ſcandalous Libel; but by his ſhewing to him of his ſaid Warrant of Citation, which bore the ſaid Lord Balmerino to have been conveened before the ſaids Lords Examinators, to make anſwer anent the ſaid ſeditious Libel, found in the hands of the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure, he thereby gave occaſion to the ſaid Mr. William Haig to eſcape out of the Country, and become fugitive. Likeas the ſaid Mr. William Haig, immediately after the ſight of the ſaid Warrant ſhewn to him upon the ſaid 7th of June, being Saturday, eſcaped and fled out of the Country, and became fugitive, and remains out of the Country continually ſince ſyne, (i. e. ſince that time.) Likeas the ſaid John Lord Balmerino being incarcerat (i. e. impriſon'd) within the Caſtle of Edinburgh, after his firſt and ſecond Examination, as Author, Airt, Part, or Acceſſory of the ſaid infamous Libel, received ſeveral Letters from the ſaid Mr. William Haig furth (i. e. out) of the Low Countries, and other Places to which he eſcaped; which Letters the ſaid John Lord Balmerino kept by him, without acquainting the ſaids Lords Examinators, until the time he was challeng'd. In the which Letters, and in other Letters ſent by the ſaid Mr. William, and intercepted by the Lords, it is affirmed and avowed by the ſaid Mr. William, that he had the Approbation and Allowance of the ſaid John Lord Balmerino to the making and penning thereof. By the which particular Deeds, Circumſtances, and other vehement Preſumptions particularly above expreſſed, it is clearly evinced, that the ſaid John Lord Balmerino was Author, Deviſer, Outſetter (i. e. Publiſher) Adviſer, Airt and Part of the penning and forming of the ſaid infamous Libel, at the leaſt Concealer and not Revealer thereof; and is alſo culpable of the not apprehending of the ſaid Mr. William Haig, whom he affirm'd to be the Author of the ſaid infamous Libel: As alſo of the diſperſing and divulging of the ſaid infamous Libel, in manner particularly above-declared; incurring thereby the Pain and Puniſhment of Death, ſpecified and contained in our ſaids Acts of Parliament, which ought and ſhould be inflicted upon him with all Rigour, in example to others to attempt the like. Our Will is herefore, and we charge you ſtraitly and command, that incontinent thir (theſe) our Letters ſeen, ye paſs, and in our Name and Authority, lawfully ſummon, warn, and charge the ſaid John Lord Balmerino preſently in Ward, within the Caſtle of Edinburgh, to compear before our Juſtice and his Deputs within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, the 3d Day of December next to come, in the hour of Cauſe (i. e. when the Court is met) and there to underly our Laws for the Crimes above-written: To the effect that upon his Tryal and Conviction, as culpable thereof, Juſtice may be miniſtred upon him conform to the Laws of the Realm; and that ye ſummon an Aſſize (Jury) not exceeding the number of 45 Perſons, whoſe Names ye ſhall receive in a Roll ſubſcribed by our Advocate, ilk (each) Perſon under the pain of 200 Marks, according to Juſtice. Given under our Signet at Edinburgh the 11th Day of November, and of our Reign the tenth Year, 1634. Ex deliberatione Dominorum Conſilii, ſic ſubſcribitur John Bannatine.

Follows the Execution of the ſaid Summons.

UPON the 14th Day of November 1634. I James Currie, Ormond Purſevant, and one of the Sheriffs in that Part within conſtitute, paſt at Command of thir (theſe) our Sovereign Lord's Letters within written, and by virtue thereof charged the within written John Lord Balmerino perſonally apprehended in the Caſtle of Edinburgh, and delivered to him a juſt and authentick Copy of theſe his Majeſty's ſaids Letters, to compear before his Majeſty's Juſtice and his Deputs in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh the 3d Day of December next to come, in the Hour of Cauſe, and there to underly his Majeſty's Laws for the Crimes within written; to the effect, that upon his Tryal and Conviction as culpable thereof, Juſtice may be adminiſtred upon him, conform to the Laws of this Realm: And this I did after the form and tenor of our Sovereign Lord's Letters in all points, before theſe Witneſſes, Mr. Archibald Geddes, Conſtable of the ſaid Caſtle of Edinburgh, and John Malcome, Herald. And for the further Verification of this my Execution ſubſcribed with my Hand, my Stamp is affixed. Sic ſub. Ja. Currie, Ormond Purſevant.

Thereafter my Lord Advocat produced with the Summons above-written, the Copy of the infamous Libel which was found in the hands of Mr. John Dunmure, Notary in Dundee; bearing in the end thereof, that the ſaid Mr. John being examined thereupon, he, by his Depoſition, has granted it to be the ſamen Libel which was in his hands: of the which Copy, the Tenour follows.

To the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, the humble Supplication of a great number of the Nobility and others Commiſſioners in the late Parliament;

Humbly Sheweth,

THAT the Notes which your Majeſty put upon the Names of a number of your Supplicants in voting about theſe Acts, which did imply a ſecret Power to innovat the Order and Government long continued in the Reformed Church of Scotland; and your Majeſty's refuſing to receive from ſome of your Supplicants their Reaſons for diſſenting from the ſaids Acts before your Majeſty, and in your Hearing in Parliament, do breed a Fear of our becoming obnoxious unto your Majeſty's Diſlike, if your Highneſs ſhould ſtill remain unacquainted with the Reaſons of our Opinions delivered concerning the ſaid Acts: Seeing your Supplicants are confident, that your Majeſty vouchſafing to take notice of the ſaids Reaſons, would be pleaſed to acknowledge that no want of Affection to your Majeſty's Service, but a careful Endeavour to conſerve unto your Majeſty the hearty Affections of a great many of your good Subjects that are tender in theſe Points of Novation, covertly thruſt upon this Church, did induce our Wiſhes and Voices to appear in oppoſition to the ſaid Acts; and that a predominant Deſire in us to have all your Royal Deſigns here to proſper without Interruption, did abſolutely command us to forbear any Reaſons that could have been propounded againſt many of the Concluſions in the late Parliament.

We do therefore humbly beſeech your Majeſty graciouſly to ponder the Conſiderations afterwritten, ſo ſhall we be encouraged (as in Duty bound) to continue our humble Prayers for your Majeſty's long and happy Reign.

Firſt, we humbly beſeech your Majeſty to conſider, That tho theſe Acts, as they are conceived, and may concern your Majeſty's Prerogatives, and the Liberties of the Church, had never been moved or concluded (as they are) your Majeſty would have ſuffered no Prejudice in your Benefit, Honour, nor Power: That your Supplicants are much more free from all Suſpicion of private Ends in diſ-aſſenting, than the Contrivers of the ſaids Acts, in offering them to the hazard of Contradiction, or ſolliciting an Aſſent thereto: That in deliberation about matters of Importance, either in Councils or Parliaments, Opinions do often differ; and they that have been of contrary mind to a Reſolution carry'd by the Plurality of Votes, have never hitherto been cenſured by a Prince of ſo much Juſtice and Goodneſs as your Majeſty.

We do alſo moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to believe, that all your Supplicants do, in moſt ſubmiſſive manner, acknowledge your Royal Prerogative in as ample manner as is contained in the Article 1606. made thereanent (thereabout;) and withal to conſider, that the long Experience and incomparable Knowledge your Royal Father had, in matters of Government, as well in Church as in Common-wealth, is the very Cauſe expreſſed in the Act 1609, for giving Power to his Majeſty to preſcribe Apparel to Kirk-men, with their own Conſent. And ſince in all the time of his Life and Government, for the ſpace of ſixteen Years thereafter, he did forbear to make any Change upon their former Habits; we are bold to preſume, that in his great Wiſdom he thought fit, that the Apparel uſed in time of Divine Service, ever ſince the Reformation of Religion till his Death, and to this day, ſhould be continued, as decent in the Church, and moſt agreeable to the Minds of his good Subjects in this Nation. We do alſo beſeech your Majeſty to conſider, That under the Act entitled, A Ratification of the Liberty of the Church, the Acts ratifying the Aſſembly of Perth in Parliament 1621, were declared to be comprehended: That moſt part of us being then in Parliament, did oppoſe the ſame; that Experience hath ſhewed how much theſe Articles of Perth have troubled the Peace of this Church, and occaſioned innumerable Evils and Diſtractions in it: That there is now a general Fear of ſome Novations intended in eſſential Points of Religion; and that this Apprehenſion is much increaſed by the Reports of Allowance given in England for printing Books of Popery and Arminianiſm, and the Reſtraint of Anſwers made to them; and by preaching Arminianiſm in this Country, without Cenſure; by the Admiſſion made of divers Papiſts to the Parliament and upon the Articles, who by the Laws of this Realm can be no Members of any Judicatory in it; that the Minds of moſt of your good People being in this Perplexity, your Supplicants have great reaſon to ſuſpect a Snare in the ſubtile ſubtile Junction of the Act 1609, concerning Apparel, with that of 1606, anent your Royal Prerogative; which by a ſophiſtical Artifice ſhould oblige us either to vote undutifully in the ſacred Point of Prerogative, or unconſcionably in Church-Novations, [* A.] which bleſſed King James would never have confounded, as appeared evidently in the Parliament 1617, honoured with his gracious Preſence; where his Majeſty, by the Biſhops Inſtigation, tryed, urged, and paſt in Articles a Ratification of his Royal Prerogative enacted in the Parliament 1606, with addition of an Article authorizing all things that thereafter ſhould be determined in Eccleſiaſtick Affairs by his Sacred Majeſty, with the Conſent of a competent number of the Clergy, to have the Strength and Power of Law. When this Act came to be heard in open Parliament, his Majeſty gave order to read only the Rubrick of the Act; which being done, he was then pleaſed in his fatherly Compaſſion over the tender Affections of his loyal Subjects (well known to his Majeſty, as fluctuating betwixt Love and Fear) publickly from his own mouth to declare his princely Love and Pleaſure, for Reaſons known to himſelf, to have that Act ſuppreſs'd, tho paſt in the Articles: Becauſe his Royal Prerogative being of itſelf inviolable, was already eſtabliſhed ſufficiently; and in the depth of his Wiſdom he would abſolutely prefer the Peace of the Church to the Appetite of Church-men. And ſince we are fully perſuaded of your Majeſty's unfeigned Affection to the true Religion, and ſo do preſume that none of theſe things lawfully rejected at the Reformation [* P—— ——C] thereof in this Kingdom, ſhould be introduced again without Conſent of our Clergy lawfully aſſembled; and fearing that a forcible and colourable intruding thereof, would diminiſh in the Hearts of many of your loyal Subjects that Affection which is founded on their Opinion of your Majeſty's Goodneſs and Wiſdom:

 The Pannel's Interlinings you will find in the other Copy hereof.*

 Interlined [B. of Religion C.] in the other Copy by the Pannel.*

We do therefore diſ-aſſent from the foreſaids Acts, as importing a Servitude upon this Church unpractiſed before, and giving ground for Introduction of other new indefinite Devices.

We do further offer unto your Majeſty's Conſideration, that albeit our juſt and heavy Grievances allow'd of in the late Convention of Eſtates 1625, & 1630, to have been repreſented to your Majeſty, in hopes of Refreſhment to the Country's Sufferings, have been altogether ſlighted in this your firſt Parliament; albeit your Majeſty denying your Nobility their Freedom by Authority to meet with the Lords of the Articles, may ſeem againſt the Conſtitution of a free Parliament (under ſuch a juſt and lawful Prince, and contrair to the Cuſtom of your Anceſtors) which before the Parliament held in Anno 1609, did always elect and chuſe the Lords of the Articles from among them of their own Rank and Quality; there having been no Parliamentary Biſhops from the Reformation of Religion till then, nor were they ſuch as now do cull and ſingle out ſuch Noblemen either Popiſhly affected in Religion, or of little Experience in our Laws, as having had their Breeding abroad, and ſo none of the ableſt to be upon our Articles, but fitteſt only for the Clergy's myſtical Ends. Whereas the former Practice was ſuch, as ſeemeth moſt agreeable to Reaſon, and what every Eſtate ſhould do, that ſo they may communicate their Minds with the reſt of their Body; ſince none but Men very preſumptuous of their own Knowledge, or ſenſleſs in themſelves, will adventure to truſt their firſt Conceptions in Matters of ſo great Importance as are the Concluſions of Parliament. Albeit the humble Supplications of the Miniſtry to your Majeſty and Eſtates of Parliament, deliver'd to the Clerk Regiſter, (and that your Majeſty was in all due Humility petition'd by the Miniſters of this Kingdom, both Conformiſts and Nonconformiſts, to give them a Hearing) have been ſuppreſs'd: albeit the Meeting of the Gentry, and happily of the Burrows too, in a joint Purpoſe to have repreſented to your Majeſty our unſpeakable Sufferings by the Abuſes of the Coin (the Maſtery of the Mint being a thing merely Regal) and Increaſe of Theft and Oppreſſion of divers Parties, and other things worthy your Majeſty's Conſideration, were in your Majeſty's Name interrupted: and finally, albeit your Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed by your former and later Speeches in the Parliament-Houſe to declare (anſwerable to your ſeveral Proclamations, bearing that the Courſe taken by your Revocation for ſettling the Patrimony of your Imperial Crown, was, that ye ſhould not be burdenſome to your People) that your Majeſty had no purpoſe at this time to lay any Burden upon this Nation, according to the wiſe Counſel of King James in his Baſilicon Doron, treating of the right Uſe of Subſidies: albeit that the preſent Condition of your Subjects is worſe, and the Patrimony of the Crown greater, than when King James I. remitted to his People a great part of his Taxations, granted even for that good King's Ranſom; yet have we all as one Man conſented to all your Majeſty's Demands, and more, even to have Taxations multiply'd, without repreſenting how the former have been, or theſe may fall to be, beſtowed upon divers Parties, whoſe Waſtes and Wants your good Subjects are not obliged to ſupply; without objecting that ſome of them have been granted extraordinarily for Supplies of the Palatinate, which being now by the Mercy of God in a better Condition, they might have pleaded in reaſon to be thenceforth diſcontinued; without foretelling that ſome of the Subſidies are like to be means of more Proceſſes (or Suits) betwixt your Majeſty's Subjects and the Treaſurer, than matter of Profit to your Treaſury; without putting your Majeſty in remembrance of the Impertinencies you have ſuffered by Mens Ambition after the publick Places of Judicatories, which none have heretofore refuſed by reaſon of the ſmall Fees due to them; without contradicting the Exceptions of your Officers Penſions, or alledging their Fees to be as ſufficient for maintaining the Dignity of their Places now, as they were before your Majeſty's Father ſucceeded to the Crown of England. And all this have we done implicitly, only to teſtify our ingenuous Affection to your Majeſty, and our obſequious Reſolutions to give you full Content in every thing that makes not a Breach in our Religion and Laws, or occaſioneth not Offence to the weaker ſort in the way of God's Worſhip here eſtabliſhed; and albeit we were not acquainted with any of theſe Statutes before the publick voting of 'em in Parliament. Therefore we are confident that your Majeſty finding ſuch a Harmony in our Affections to your Service in preſerving our Religion and Liberties, will be unwilling, upon any Suggeſtion of ſuch as are (or hope to be) Sharers of our voluntary Contributions, tions, to introduce upon the Doctrine or Diſcipline of this your Mother-Church, any thing not compatible with your Majeſty's Honour, your good Peoples Conſciences, or that hath been rejected by Acts and publick Practice of this Reformed Church.

Follows the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure's Depoſition, written upon the end of the ſaid Copy.

Apud Edinburgh xiv Martii 1634. conveened St. Andrews, Traquair, Biſhops of Edinburgh, Roſs, Clerk of Regiſter.

I Mr. John Dunmure, Notary in Dundee, being examined in preſence of the Lords of his Majeſty's Secret Council above-written, depone and confeſs, That this Supplication within written, is all written with my own Hand, and is that which I delivered to Mr. Peter Hay of Naughtoune about Lambas laſt. And farder I depone and confeſs, That this is the juſt and true Copy of the Paper delivered to me by John Lord Balmerino, ſhortly after the end of the late Parliament, within Edinburgh; and that then my Lord of Balmerino (I being with him) ſaid to me, Becauſe ye have given me many Papers, I will let you ſee this, and have your Judgment of it; but let it be tibi ſoli, as ye reſpect my Credit. And that I keeped it four or five days, and copied it, and then delivered the ſame back again. I further depone, That the Paper contained the Supplication within written, in the ſame Words and Senſe: and it is not by my Lord Balmerino's Hand, but by ſome other Hand.

Sic ſubſcribitur, Joan. Dunmure.

Written on the back of the ſaid Copy, For the Kirk and Country in the Parliament, 1633.

My Lord Balmerino produces two Warrands of the Lords of Seſſion, by their Lordſhips Deliverance of the ſeveral Dates under-written, ordaining the Procurators therein contained, to compear and defend my Lord in the criminal Proceſs above; and the ſaids Lords by their Deliverance, of the Date the 19th of November 1634. The Lords having conſidered the Deſire of the Supplication, &c. and appointed the Perſons therein condeſcended on by my Lord to be his Advocats for his Defence, viz. Sir Lewis Stewart, Mr. Thomas Nicolſon, Walter Hay, and Mr. John Nisbet. And by the Deliverance on the end of another Supplication given in by my Lord to the ſaid Lords, craving (upon ſome of the former Advocats refuſal) more Advocats, they by their Deliverance thereon, of the Date the 25th of November 1634, appoint and ordain Mr. Roger Mowat, Mr. Alexander Pearſon, and Mr. Robert Macgill, Advocats; and ordains, &c. Upon the production and reading of the which Warrands, the ſaid Lord Balmerino took Inſtruments.

Thereafter it was objected by my Lord's Advocats, that my Lord Regiſter could not ſit as ane Aſſeſſor to my Lord Juſtice-General in this Proceſs, becauſe not only my Lord Regiſter has been one of the Judges of the particular Committee appointed for Tryal and Examination of the Pannel, before whom he has oftentimes compeared and been examined; but alſo my Lord Regiſter has given partial Counſel, and has been upon the Counſel of the adviſing and libelling of the Dittay now produced and read, and has aſſiſted in the ſame at ſeveral occaſions: and ſo by giving Information and Advice in that kind, has behaved himſelf as Party in effect, and therefore cannot be Judge nor Aſſeſſor to the Juſtice-General. And after Anſwers and Replies, the Lords by their Interloquitor repelled the firſt part of the Alleadgance, bearing that my Lord Regiſter cannot be Aſſeſſor, becauſe he was a Member upon the Committee: And as to the ſecond Member thereof, declares that they will have my Lord Regiſter to make his Judicial Declaration, and that judicially thereupon, in preſence of the Pannel, before any Anſwer be given thereto; which accordingly my Lord Regiſter does.

The Pannel, in reſpect of my Lord Regiſter's Declaration Judicial, is content that my Lord Regiſter remain Aſſeſſor to the Juſtice-General: whereupon my Lord Advocat asked Inſtruments.

Thereafter the Pannel produced a Supplication to the Lords of Privy Council, with Deliverance thereon, craving the Depoſitions made by the Earl of Rothes, Mr. John Dunmure, and Mr. Robert Dalgliſh, from the Clerk, to be ſeen by his Procurators; and their Lordſhips, by their Deliverance thereon, dated at Edinburgh, 28 November 1634, the Lords remit to the Juſtice the anſwering of the Deſire of this Supplication. Sic ſubſcribitur, St. Andrews.

Accordingly my Lord Advocate, at the Juſtice Ordinance, (i. e. by order of Court) gave up to Mr. Roger Mowat, one of the Pannel's Procurators, two Depoſitions of Mr. John Dunmure, one of Mr. Robert Dalgliſh, one of the Earl of Rothes, one of Mr. Peter Hay; together with four miſſive Letters, ſent by Mr. William Haig to the Pannel, to be reproduced Friday next, at which time they were accordingly reproduced.

Thereafter upon the ſaid Decemb. 5. the Dittay and infamous Libel was read, as ſpecified in the Dittay.

It is firſt alledged by Mr. Robert Macgill, as the Pannel's Procurator, under Proteſtation for himſelf and the reſt of his Brethren, with an Apology that he nor they allows not the leaſt ſort of inordinate Speech againſt his Majeſty, but only to free the Innocent, as they who are commanded by the Lords of Seſſion, and take Inſtruments upon the firſt Article of the Acts imprinted in our Sovereign's firſt Parliament, anent the ſurveying of the Laws; does alledge the Dittay cannot be inferred againſt the Pannel, upon the firſt Act ſpecially and at length ſet down (therein:) becauſe it has not been the Mind of the Legiſlator there to inflict the Pain of Death upon ſuch Reproaches as are contained in the Dittay, and alledged to be contained in the Supplication or Petition ſtyled by the Dittay Calumnious. For the main cauſe of making that 20th Act, Parl. 10. holden in December 1585. (our dread Sovereign, and his Honour, being ever propoſed) was not only to ratify the Grace given and extended to theſe Noblemen, who a little before came in at Stirling, as may be ſeen by the particular Acts of Parliament unprinted anent the reſtoring of thoſe Noblemen, with their Followers; but much more to ſtrengthen the Nobility (as reaſon was, and the time required) againſt Captain James Stewart, who then had fled, and was the cauſe of their former Baniſhment; and feared by them, that he might wrong them again, if he had regained his Majeſty's Ear, becauſe that they came in in ſuch a manner. And to ſtrengthen alſo the Nobility againſt any other, who ſhould take in hand the like, as to come in betwixt the Tree and the Rind; I mean, betwixt his moſt Sacred Majeſty and his Favour & ſuos Comites, for his Nobles are ſo called, and has their Names as they who ſhould be ever accompanying his moſt Sacred Perſon. For the Deeds done contra aliquem & Comitatu vindicantur ut Crimen Læſæ Majeſtatis, Leg. quiſquis, Cod. ad Legem Juliam Majeſtatis, by the time.

The Strain of the Act carries alſo this, to wit, Reproaches of his Majeſty's Eſtate or Government, or depraving his Laws and Acts of Parliament, or miſconſtruing his Proceedings: but anſwering to the Queſtion, In quem finem ſhould theſe Reproaches have been written, whereby any Miſliking may be moved betwixt his Majeſty and his Nobility and loving Subjects? Where the word his Nobility is very emphatick, and the two laſt words expounds the ſamen, being exegetick of the former by a gracious Praiſe, teſtifying by the word loving the forgetting of the former Slip, which had been more by miſreport than in verity. Compare alſo this Act with that which was made during the ſaid Captain James his Grandeur, a little more than a Year preceding, Parl. 8. cap. 134. Jac. 6. in the which, as it were conſulto Conſilio, the Noblemen are omitted ibi; to the Reproach of his Majeſty's Council and Proceedings, to their great Prejudice who were then put away by his [i. e. Captain James's] Counſel, and holden away by his Detractions, until they peartly enough (yet encouraged by their own Innocency) came in at Stirling: and incontinent did procure that tenth Parliament to be holden, in which was made the ſaid tenth Act, no more Days intervening betwixt their Return and its Sitting but the Days of Citation. And is yet more clear by the words, Deprave his Laws and Acts of Parliament: meaning Act 25. Jac. 2. Parl. 6. againſt the Apprehenders of his Majeſty's Perſon, as the Act bears; the literal Senſe whereof might infer a Dittay againſt the Committers, if it were not to deprave the Laws, if the Mind of the Legiſlator were not look'd unto. So that this tenth Act cannot well be underſtood as convenient to infer the Dittay, eſpecially ſeeing he was not the Author or Penner of that alledged infamous Libel; but Mr. William Haig, who has clearly taken it upon him by his own Letter, as was conſtant (i. e. evident) to the Lords of the Committee, and is acknowledged in the Dittay by theſe words, At the leaſt guilty of the Hearing: wherein the Pannel's part was not much worſe than others who heard it, and yet not revealed the ſame. As alſo although that Remonſtrance by way of Supplication now alledged to be ſcandalous, but then to be preferred to his Sacred Majeſty, and was offered to be given; ergo the Dittay cannot be inferred in this Act.

* In ſome Editions 'tis 205.

And as to the ſecond Act libelled expreſly, Jac. 6. Parl. 14. cap. * 209. containing divers Acts anent Leaſing-makers; we repeat the forſaid Proteſtation, and ſay, If all ſorts of inordinat Speeches (whilk let it be ſpoken with all Humility and dutiful Reverence, as not allowing any, but to ſhew the Pannel's Innocency) againſt his Majeſty our dread Sovereign and his Government, even thoſe which by Interpretation or Miſconſtruction may be inferred upon a Man's Speech, by (i. e. contrary to) his Mind; and not only the Author of the ſame, but alſo the Hearers, not Revealers, and not Apprehenders, are underſtood to be puniſhed with Death in our Law, in the Addition of that Act, and ſo are all to be comprehended therein: then we ſhould make our Law to commit an Abſurdity, which no municipal Law ought to do; but rather an Interpretation ſhould be taken out of the Common Law and Reaſon. Gailus ad Longum, lib. 2. Obſervatione trigeſima tertia, quo modo Statutorum Interpretatio facienda ſit. The Abſurdity is, that there ſhould be Equality of Pains, and ſo Equality of Crimes, committed in Speeches (in moſt ſubmiſſive manner be it ſaid) againſt his moſt Sacred Majeſty, not only by the Authors, but alſo by the Concealers and not Apprehenders, whatever the ſcandalous Speech be. But he that hears and not reveals a higher Speech, ſhall be puniſhed as he who hears Treaſon. The Connection is cleared by this, Quod Delictum majus a parvo dignoſcitur ex Pœna qualificata. Tractatu incerti Authoris de Læſæ Majeſtatis Crimine, quæſt. 11. num. 5. Et paſſim in Jure ut comprobat Baldus in Capitulo primo, prima Nota ad Titulum 38. lib. 2. Feudorum de Vaſſallo qui contra Conſtitutionem Lotharii. And the Opinion of the Civilians is exploded long ſince, ut ſontica dignum horribili flagello. For there are ſundry ſorts of inordinat Speeches and Contumelies againſt the Prince and the Eſtate; as theſe that are ſpoken againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Blood outrageouſly, or in a Conſpiracy againſt the Country, underſtood in ſome manner by Clarus, paragrapho Læſæ Majeſtatis, num. 1. in fine. And here it is only that the Lawyers find the Hearers and not Revealers, and not Apprehenders, to be puniſhed by Death: Clarus, paragrapho ultimo, quæſt. 87. num. 2. Punctus in fine. And yet he requires ut adſit Tractatus. Such were the Speeches uttered betwixt Catiline and his Complices; Et non nuda Verba ab Authoris Animo detorta. In which caſe it is well ſaid, Quod Crimen Majeſtatis a Judicibus non in occaſionem ob principalis Majeſtatis Venerationem habendum ſit, Leg. 7. §. 2. F. ad Legem Juliam Majeſtatis. The ſecond ſort are where directis verbis Animo injuriandi viciis improperat, to a Prince for lack of Virtue. Where the Lawyers remit the Author, Lege unica Cod. ſi quis Imperatori maledixerit; (it not being yet condeſcended fully amongſt them, what is meaned by the word Remittendum.) But anent the Hearers, not Revealers, and not Apprehenders, not a mum. but on the contrary, quod nulla Pœna teneantur: As in omni delicto niſi Caſibus dictis, Clarus ſays, num. 3. Verſiculo quod tamen, dicta quæſtione 87. Far leſs can the Hearers, not Revealers, and not Apprehenders of the Authors of the third ſort of Speeches be concluded under Death with the firſt; and that third ſort (in all Humility I ſay) where Vice and Lack of Virtue is not improperat directis verbis, (tantum abeſt ut ſit animus injuriandi.) But as a Flower or flouriſhing Weed may afford both Honey and Venom, ſo Speeches written to ane good End, by ane miſconſtructing Illation may be interpret in ane evil Senſe; as the Informer of the Dittay makes the alledged Supplication to be a contumelious and infamous Libel: which cannot be done (in all Humility and Submiſſion I ſay it) to infer the Dittay againſt this Pannel, upon the ſaid Addition in the Act 205, as Hearer, not Revealer, not Apprehender, without a manifeſt Abſurdity againſt the Law and Reaſon, as ſaid is. For even in Speech, quamvis dixit Dominum ſuum eſſe Dominum Hominum & Beſtiarum, quod non debet Author puniri; concluded remiſſive. Cæſar Orcellus in advocatione ad deciſionem Mathei de afflictis 265. num. 68, 69. & idem advocatione in deciſionem 307. num. 15. Quod verba ſunt civiliter capienda & ad bonum moderanda; itidem in dicto Tractatu incerti Authoris dicitur diſtinguendum inter verba narrativa & ſimpliciter enunciata quaſi prætereundo, ac alia verba diſpoſitiva ſeu poſitiones affirmatas, ut ex illis non liceat Argumentum ſumere, ex his vero liceat. Quæſt. 6. num. 13. ibi nunc videndum. But of the Particulars, and even of this General, more falls to be ſaid hereafter.

Only againſt Delators of Speeches, called Frumentarii & Otacuſtai, let it be remembred to the Juſtice, that ſome good Emperors (quos infinitis illuſtriſſimus & ſacratiſſimus Imperator noſter præcurrit paraſangis) uſed theſe Folks to know what the People thought of them, and how to amend any Slips, if any were. Capitolinus in Antonino Philoſopho ſays, Erat famæ ſuæ curioſiſſimus, requirens ut verum quiſque de ſe diceret, emendans quæ bene reprehenſa viderentur, & paſſus ſe impune cavillando perſtringi, dicitur civiliter ſe egiſſe. Xiphilin reports the ſame of Titus; Imo Tiberius deprecatus eſt apud Senatum nimis precipites verborum pœnas. Yea, to this tendit King James V. of worthy Memory, his diſguiſing himſelf for ſuch another Inquiry; as alſo Goran, one of our dread Sovereign's moſt worthy Progenitors, is commended for the ſame by Hector Boyes. In reſpect qhereof, the Dittay is not relevantly inferred upon the two Acts of Parliament libelled.

It is farder alledged by Mr. Roger Mowat for the Pannel, That the ſaids two Acts of Parliament mentioned in the Dittay, and qhereupon the ſamen is founded, can be no ground in Law for this criminal Purſuit; in reſpect the ſaids two Acts, and many others of that kind, but ſpecially the laſt of the ſaids two Acts, and the Additions ſubjoined thereto, have never been in Obſervance, Cuſtom, or Practice heretofore, againſt any alledged Contraveeners thereof: and therefore cannot now receive a beginning againſt this Pannel, being a Nobleman, known by the hail Courſe of his bygone Life to have been ane ſtrict obſequious Keeper and Obſerver of his Sacred Majeſty and his moſt noble Progenitors their Acts and Statutes; in ſuch ſort, that it can never be verified that ever the Pannel has been ſo much as once denounced Rebel, and put to his Majeſty's Horn, (Outlawry) for any Action or Cauſe, Civil or Criminal, whatſomever; and ſo is not preſumed to have contraveened any of the ſaid two Acts, albeit the ſame had been in cuſtom and practice, as they have not. And that the ſaid two Acts, ſpecially the ſaid Addition of the laſt Act, are fallen in deſuetude, and never heretofore practiſed, is clear and evident, becauſe the contrary cannot be ſhowen: And it has been received as a moſt laudable and warrantable Cuſtom amongſt wiſe and judicious Politiques, that Laws in deſuetude and out of cuſtom are not to be introduced at an inſtant, without ſome new Intimation thereof, when neceſſity is found for re-eſtabliſhing of the ſaid Laws; but ſpecially ſuch Laws and Acts, as carry with them the Pain of Death, Forfaulture, or ſuch-like: Likeas ſome ſtrict Acts of Parliament of this kind, containing the like or more grievous Pains, being ratified by ſubſequent and poſterior Acts, the ſaid poſterior Acts have ordained Intimation to be made to the Leidges of the ſaid former Acts, Pains, and Severity thereof, before the ſaid Pains ſhould be inflicted upon the Contraveener. And it is clear, that not only the ſaid two Acts mentioned in the Dittay are not of cuſtom, and have not been practiſed, but many more, containing ſome leſs and ſome greater Pains, in the moſt part of all preceding Parliaments: For which I will only adduce ſome few, to verify and inſtance this part of my Alleadgance, (Allegation.) And firſt I alledge the 105th Act of the 7th Parliament of King James V. of worthy Memory, intituled, Pains of them committing Fraud in Alienations; which bears, about the end of the ſaid Act, That the Perſon Seller or Giver ſhall be declared infamous, and ſhall be puniſhed in his Perſon and Goods at the King's Will. And it cannot be denyed, but that this Act hath been many times contraveened, by many of good ſort, in points of double Alienations, and yet was never heretofore practiſed againſt the ſaids Contraveeners.

There is another Act of Queen Mary's, of happy Memory, Par. 5. cap. 16. made againſt them that ſwears abominable Oaths; whilk Act is ratified by King James VI. of ever-bleſſed Memory, Par. 7. cap. 103. both the ſaid Acts bearing in expreſs words, That for the fourth Fault, Prelats, Earls, or Lords contravening, ſhall be baniſhed or put in Ward Year and Day, at the Will of the Prince. Theſe Acts have been contravened, yet no Purſuit for the ſaids Pains has followed thereupon.

The 2d Act of the 16th Parliament of moſt bleſſed King James, bears, That the ſlaying of Salmond, Smolts, Kipper or Black-Fiſh, ſhall be a Crime of Theft in time coming, and to be puniſhed as Theft in every Quality. Which Act, if it ſhall receive force, and be put in practice upon a landed Man, (as queſtionleſs it may) it ſhall import him, or any landed Man Contraveener thereof, no leſs than Tinſel (Loſs) and Forfaultry of Life and Goods; becauſe by the 50th Act of the ſaid 11th Parliament, landed Men convict of Theft or Receipt thereof, commits Treaſon: ergo landed Men, Slayers of Salmond, Smolts, &c. in forbidden time, commits Theft, and conſequently Treaſon; which (as the Act bears) is declared to be Tinſel and Forfaulture of Life, Lands, and Goods.

Theſe and many other of this kind, every where to be found amongſt the ſaid Acts, does evince, that with reaſon the ſaid Acts libelled in the Dittay, and others of that kind, which never have been practiſed of before, cannot be received againſt the Leidges (Subjects) without a preceding Intimation; whereby good and loyal Subjects may be in mala fide, in caſe they be found after the ſaid Intimation to have contraveened. And ſo the ſaid two Acts, ſpecially the ſaid Addition mention'd in the laſt Act, cannot be found nor ſuſtained as warrantable Grounds in Law againſt this Pannel; being a Nobleman, not only known to be ane Obſerver and not Braker of his Sacred Majeſty his noble Progenitors their Laws, Acts, and Statutes, to draw upon him for alledged hearing, concealing, and not revealing and not apprehending of the Authors of the alledged infamous Supplication, the Pains contained in the ſaid Acts and in the ſaid Dittay, which is the Tinſel and Loſs of his Life.

It is alledged farther by Mr. Alexander Pearſon for the Pannel, in fortification of the Exception propounded, Quod Leges pes deſſuetudinem tacito conſenſu cenſentur abrogatæ, expreſſa Lege 32. §. 1. F. de. Ita ut ſecundum ipſas non firmatas judicare non liceat, firmantur autem Leges cum moribus utentium approbantur, Canone in iſtis tertio diſtinctione 4ta. Et ſi hoc obtinet in Civilibus, quanto magis in Criminalibus, ubi tanto cautius agendum eſt, quanto magis periculum vertitur. Unde illud Papæ qui decrevit ut generaliter Clerici in Quinquageſim. a carnibus & deliciis jejunent, quia moribus utentium approbatum non eſt, aliter agentes tranſgreſſionis reos, non arguit Canone ſupra citato.

citato. And therefore the Acts of Parliament whereupon the Propositions of the Dittay are founded, none of them, at the least the last thereof, never having been in observance at no time since the making thereof, now by the space of forty Years, even since the last Act; the Acts foresaid, specially the last, cannot sustain the Dittay, nor inferr the Pains therein mentioned.

It's answered by my Lord Advocat, That all the Alledgances ought to be repelled, in respect of the Acts of Parliament, whereupon the Dittay is founded; and that there runs no Prescription against Laws, and specially against Laws prohibitive of Crimes, which are also prohibit and punished by the Common Law; of the nature whereof are these two Acts whereupon the Dittay is founded. And the Alledgance, Quod Leges tacito consensu abrogantur, is only per contrariam Consuetudinem idq; in contradicto Judicio, which is that which the Law calls tacito Consensu; and all the Arguments adduced in the contrary, are ab Incommodo quod non solvit. And the Indulgence of the Prince in the overseeing the Punishment of Crimes in bygone time, cannot be adduced to warrant a Crime when it is pursued; and specially when the Crime is of the nature of Rebellion against the Prince, in his Person, Estate, and Government. And albeit this be a clear and sound Answer, and that no more is necessar; yet it is constant and nottourly known, that these Laws has been put in Execution this 34 Years bygone; as namely, against Francis Tennant, in the Year of God 1600. and against Mr. Thomas Rosse in Anno 1618. and lately against Mr. George Nicol his infamous Libel.

It is duplyed (said again) for the Pannel by Mr. Alexander Pearson, That where it is alledged by my Lord Advocat, that Desuetude cannot be obtruded against Acts of Parliament, which has Warrant from the Common Law; it is answered, that the Acts anent Crimes by Desuetude rather loses their Vigour than Acts of Civil Business, because in Acts Criminal there is greater Hazard, as Loss of Mens Honour and Life. As to any Precedent in Civil Law giving Warrant to the Addition of the last Act of Parliament, it cannot be alledged, Quia non est Lex statuens pœnam mortis, contra Hearers, Concealers, and not Revealers, which is the Addition of the Act. And where it is alledged by my Lord Advocat, that Desuetude of Laws is only per contrariam Consuetudinem in Judicio contradicto. It is answered, That Desuetude of Laws is clearly expounded otherwise by the Citations above-rehearsed: so that Leges quæ nunquam in usum forensium productæ sunt & quæ moribus utentium approbantur, are become in Desuetude, licet non sit Consuetudo in foro contradicto in contrarium.

It is further duplyed by Mr. Robert Macgill: Not to dive any further into the Acts of Parliament, but respecting the Distinction already said, I alledge, that the Addition of the Act 205, cannot be thought to be in viridi observantia in this our Case; because if so ought to be, it should much more have been practised against the Havers, Hearers, Readers and Seers of any using Mr. George Buchanan's Books: But this hath never been used yet, Act 134, Parliament 8th, albeit there has been many. But so it is, that this has not been used in its own Case; ergo it ought not to be begun to be put in use against this Pannel, who let be his other Virtues, has been ever a Patron of dutiful Obedience to his and our most gracious and sacred Sovereign. The Connection is clear, because that Book, as sundry reports it who has read it out of the Country, ipsum reginminis Cardinem nititur convellere, & impingit in Regiam Prerogativam. Further, if all sort of Speeches (let me say it in all due Reverence) against his Majesty and Government, come under the Acts ratified here, with the Addition against Havers, Hearers, Revealers, and not Apprehenders, and were in viridi observantia, who should not be brought before this Judicatory, and under the compass of the said Act? for as we live all in one Family, every Man in his own, and talk thereof, so live we also in a Common-wealth, whereof to talk sometimes bitterly (which is not to be allowed) tho foolish: And so the most part thinks that they have their own Interest, and will force as it were the Wiser, nill they will they, to hear them. And anent that which my Lord Advocat says, quod non valeat Argumentum ab incommodo, it ought to be repelled in respect of the Place alledged out of Gailus, Libro secundo, Observatione 33. where he concludes, that the Argument is good against the Municipal Law to make it to be ruled according to the Civil Law, and to common Reason. And further, that our own Municipal Laws ought to receive Limitation according to Reason, I repeat the foresaid 25 Act Jac. 2. Item by the said Act 134 Par. 8. Jac. 6. it is made capital to meddle in his Highness's Affairs and Estate, either present, bygone, or to come; saying further, That none of his Subjects of whatsoever Function, Degree, or Quality, presume in time coming to meddle as said is, without any Exception: then shall a Nobleman, who is born as it were by our Laws to meddle in such Affairs as concern the Common-wealth and Country, not have so much Liberty as to petition his Majesty most humbly in Matters of Government, for the Weal of all, as may seem to him, while his Reasonings be discussed, no not in Parliament; yea, even extra Parliamentum his sacred Majesty was petitioned after his Majesty's Revocation, howsoever it was conceived, and in whatsoever Terms: So that Punishment of Speeches anent Government, and the Laws must receive their right Sense. Wherefore till they be surveyed (which has been most royally begun long since by his most sacred Majesty, and now enacted in his first Parliament) the Rigour of the said Addition ought not to be practised upon this Pannel; Pars enim precipua Legis est Voluntas, & verborum dicitur Prerogativa, Lege non dubium. Codice de Legibus. And Menochius passim de arbitrariis Judiciis, gives exception from municipal Laws, according to Equity and Reason.

It is farther duplyed by Mr. Roger Mowat, to that part of my Lord Advocat's Answer anent the Instances and Practices alledged for proving of the Custom and Consuetude of the said two Acts of Parliament, to wit, Francis Tennant, Mr. Thomas Ross, and Mr. George Nicols; That the said Practices or Instances cannot be respected, because they are not produced: and if they were produced (as they are not) it should be clearly shown, that they met not in (did not suit) this Case, either because they are not founded upon the said Acts of Parliament, and specially upon the said Addition contained in the said last Act, or else because the Crimes are not alike: for the first Crime of Tennant's was ane Cokiland (Libel) bearing and proproporting expreſs poſitive Scandals and Reproaches, whereof he was condemned to have been the Actor and Author. And ſo whether he was purſued and convict upon the Acts or upon the Common Law, his Dittay was moſt relevant. As for Mr. Thomas Roſs, his Crime was alſo a moſt abominable Speech written by himſelf againſt the hail Nation directis verbis, qhereof he confeſſed himſelf (being upon Pannel) to be the Penner, Former, Deviſer, and Divulger; and Copies of his moſt infamous Libel affixed upon publick places with his own hand: and ſo cannot be obtruded as a Practick or Precedent in this Caſe. As for Mr. George Nicol his Crime, it needs not to be anſwered, becauſe he was not pannelled nor convict; and ſo his Proceſs intented againſt him cannot be adduced as ane Practick to rule the like Caſes thereafter: and the Pain inflicted upon him was by Warrand of Council, and ſo none of the ſaids Practicks can be reſpected. In reſpect qhereof, the Argument founded upon the Deſuetude of the ſaid two Acts, and the Danger that may follow hereafter upon other Acts of that kind, &c. which have not heretofore been practiſed, ſtands relevant. And it's craved, that the Dangers which may enſue to good Subjects upon the Practice of the Acts before alledged, may be adverted unto, and the dangerous Sequels prevented.

Secundo, It is alledged for the Pannel by Mr. Alexander Pearſon, under Proteſtation forſaid, That the Writing whereupon the Subſumption of the Dittay is foundit, is not an infamous Libel quoad accuſatum, neither in the Pannel's part in the Particulars libelled againſt him ſeditious and calumnious; neither can he be preſumed to have had any ſuch Intention. Firſt, not ane infamous Libel quoad accuſatum, but an humble Supplication of ſome Lords and Commiſſioners of the late Parliament, offered to his Majeſty himſelf; whereunto the Supplicants were induced in love and tendering of his Majeſty's Honour, and in fear of their Offence to his Majeſty by their voting anent ſome Acts of the late Parliament. For removing whereof, and for ſatisfaction to his Majeſty, they did humbly beſeech his Majeſty to be graciouſly pleaſed to ponder their Reaſons for diſ-aſſenting from the ſaids Acts; and to conſider the Supplicants hearty Obſequiouſneſs to his Majeſty in other matters of the ſaid Parliament, wherein they did forbear to repreſent any thing to the contrary thereof, for teſtification of their ingenuous Affection to his Majeſty. This Doing of the Supplicants is no Crime, ſed de natura boni; and far from any culpable Commiſſion, in meddling with things not belonging to them. And it is hard, that any Supplicants deprecating humbly his Majeſty's Offence, ſhould by ſo doing incur his Majeſty's Offence, and the Crime of Capital Puniſhment: ſpecially the Supplicants having no private Reſpects, but for the Publick, wherein they had Intereſt and ſpecial Charge; and for Conſervation of themſelves in his Majeſty's good Favour, the Loſs whereof, or the Fear of Loſs, ſhould be moſt grievous to any loyal Subjects; Cujus Reipublicæ tantus ubique favor ut proclamant Leges quod Reipublicæ venerandæ cauſa ſecundum bonos mores ſit, etiamſi ad Contumeliam alicujus privati pertinet, quia tamen non ex mente Magiſtratus facit ut injuriam faciat, ſed ad vindictam Majeſtatis Publicæ reſpiciat, actione injuriarum non tenetur. Leg. 13. F. de Injuriis & famoſis Libellis.

Eſt ergo quoad accuſatum Libellus ſupplex, & ſi Libellus ſupplex poſtulat Juri contraria, hujuſmodi poſtulata ab omnibus Judicibus refutari præcipiunt Leges, & Supplicantem iterum ſuper eadem cauſa non audiendum. Leg. 3, 5, & 7. Codice de precibus Imperatori offerendis. Sed non ideo ſupplicans reus eſt ſcœleris, quia Libellus continet refutanda; nec Libellus ſupplex ideo famoſus, cum hæc fuit ἑτερόγενεα.

Non Libellus famoſus quoad accuſatum quia non ad infamiam, ſed favoris conciliationem, ut ſupra: Item non clanculum & ſecreto, ſed profeſſo & reapſe domino Regi oblatus. Atque ideo nullo modo quoad accuſatum detractatorius aut calumnioſus, cum detractio ſit ſeminatio mali occulte, & calumnia ſit adverſus abſentem; neutrum autem committitur cum is cujus intereſt proponat querelam coram eo cujus partes ſunt de ea cognoſcere; de eo cujus intereſt Reipublicæ ejuſque ſalutis cauſa duntaxat.

Non Libellus famoſus quoad accuſatum, quia non conſtat directis aſſertionibus in quibus venit verum aut falſum, quod omnino requirit Libellus famoſus. Leg. unica, Codice de famoſis Libellis. Sed poſtulatis in quibus conſiderandum venit bonum, juſtum, & qui verum & falſum non agnoſcunt cum non fuit enunciatio.

Farder, the Pannel cannot be preſumed to have had any other Intention than the Strain and Tenour of it, as a Supplication does imply, and which is moſt beſeeming thereto; to wit, to the Voice of ane humble Supplicant. Ea ſententia accipienda eſt ſemper, quæ rei gerendæ aptior eſt, & in ambiguis orationibus maxime ſententia ſpectanda eſt ejus, qui eas protulit. De Regulis Juris. And it is always diſagreeing to a humble Supplicant to tax or calumniat, and therefore it cannot be ſo expounded, but ſhould be interpreted the beſt way the words may admit: Quia de Jure in dubiis & obſcuris, quod minimum & benignius eſt ſequimur. Leg. 9. F. ibidem.

Item, The Writing aforeſaid, as in form of Supplication, was uſed alſo as a Supplication, and ſo delivered by the Pannel to the Earl of Rothes, to be preſented to his Majeſty, as affirmed by the Dittay itſelf, and indeed offered to his Majeſty: which, howſoever his Majeſty did not accept of then, and take the ſamen to his Conſideration; yet the Supplicants did think that the very Preſentation thereof did ſeem to aſſure the Nature of the Writing to be a Supplication: and ſcarcely even could the wiſeſt conceive ſo of the Pannel's having the Writing, as it is now interpret, againſt his Majeſty; but think that his Majeſty had paſt all Offence thereof, as the Law ſpeaks of Action of Injury, whereof the preſent Accuſation is a kind. Leg. 2. §. 1. F. de Injuria, Verba Legis injuriarum, actio ex bono & æquo eſt & diſſimulatione abolitur, ſi quis enim injuriam dereliquerit, hoc eſt ſtatim paſſus ad animum ſuum non revocaverit, poſtea ex pœnitentia remiſſam injuriam non potuit recolere. By the which it appears, that the Pannel had no ſuch Mind or Intention, as the Dittay would rub (fix) upon him in all the Progreſs of the Matter libelled againſt him. And I ſuppoſe that none will think, that by the Preſentation of the Supplication at the firſt to his Majeſty by the Supplicants, that they then by ſo doing were culpable of a Capital Crime, if the ſame had been immediately thereafter deſtroyed, and never more ſeen nor heard. And if they then were not culpable, ſhall any ſupervenient Act make them culpable, or more culpable? minime nunquam enim creſcit ex poſt facto prateriti delicti eſtimatio. Leg. 130. §. 1. de Regulis Jur. Multo minus ex poſt facto oritur novum delictum, quod ab initio non fuit quoad accuſatum, aut ubi offenſa ſi qua fuit diſſimulatione abolita ſit.

It is eiked (added) by Mr. Robert Macgill, If it had been leiſome (lawful) to this Pannel, as a born Counſellor, in that great Council and Parliament, and other Noblemen, to propound to his moſt Sacred Majeſty the things contained in that Supplication alledged to be ſcandalous; which are not Affirmations, but as it may ſeem, Grievances, Remonſtrances, and Expedients: then it was alſo leiſome to the Pannel, and others, to repreſent even out of Parliament to his moſt Sacred Majeſty, our dread Sovereign, what they could have propounded then, but did abſtain (therefrom) for the Reverence they carried to his Majeſty; ſpecially when they did it in moſt ſubmiſſive manner, as the hail Strain thereof bears, and out of a moſt loyal Affection. Et prius eſt verum, ergo & poſterius. The Verity of the Minor is plainly embraced by Bodin, qui eſt acerrimus Regiæ Majeſtatis propugnator, Cap. 1. Lib. 3. ubi de Senatu & quod Senatori de Republica loquendum ſit, præſertim de omnibus fere capitibus in Supplicatione hac contentis. As to the Connection, it depends firſt on the Duty of a good Counſellor here, to whom as God has given to be endowed with Reaſon, ſo our moſt Sacred Sovereign and his Progenitors have given to be a wiſe Man and Counſellor even from his Birth. That he may learn to exerciſe his Reaſon from his Birth, for the benefit of the Commonweal; which is the firſt Place of Honour, as Cicero ſays, and is that which we call Nobility; ſhall he not have as it were a Magazine of Reaſons, as may ſeem to him good, and even communicate them with others, for trying of the ſame? eſpecially at this time of ſurveying of the Laws, that according to the Time, and other Circumſtances, he may furniſh to his Majeſty his beſt Counſel in every thing that he thinks may concern the Weal of the Country wherein he lives, as by Duty even from his Birth he is bound: like to the Labourer, to whom in a rainy Day, quæ mox Cælo properanda ſereno maturare datur.

and

Next, It depends upon the good Mind to the Commonweal, qhereof his moſt Sacred Majeſty is the Head; ut non teneatur injuriarum qui quicquam Reipub. cauſa faciat. Neither is that thought to be an Injury, Lege Injuriarum 13. §. 1. Lege quod Reip. F. de Injuriis juncti Leg. neminem 9 Cod. ex quibus cauſis irrogetur infamia, & Lege ex varia quarta de Delatoribus, Lib. 2. Cod.

Thirdly, It does depend upon the Conception of the Words, which is by way of moſt humble Supplication. Et verba propter adjunctum mutant naturam ſuam, Carvetta ad deciſiones: afflicti neque tam refert qualia ſunt quæ intra noſmet compoſuimus quam quomodo efferantur. Ac Quintilianus, Lib. 2. Et ut in aliis rebus ita in ſermone, forma dat eſſentiam ſermoni; for even good Words may be uſed in an evil ſenſe, ut, Heus bone vir! But this is worthy of all Praiſe: Et ſi non dederis Cæſar, permitte rogari, offendunt nunquam thura preceſque Deum. Kings are Gods on Earth; and albeit by Bodin extrema Provocatio be counted inter Jura Majeſtatis, that from a King himſelf there is no Appellation, (Appeal;) yet he commends the ſort of Appellation a Philippo ad Philippum, and alledges it to be the Opinion of Baldus, ad Legem primam & ultimam Cod. de Relationibus, & Leg. 1. §. 1. F. de Appellationibus, viz. to his Majeſty.

For ſeeing the alledged ſcandalous Petition was offer'd to his moſt Sacred Majeſty to be read, but not received nor read, nor after due Conſideration condemned by his Majeſty; it was not thought ſo dangerous (let me ſpeak it with Reverence) as to come under the compaſs of the Acts of Parliament, and ſo as it ought not to have been divulged: I mean, in that quiet manner, as it might not be imparted to Mr. John Dunmure, ſub Sigillo Taciturnitatis, and not to have been copied. And farder, the Pannel ought to be excuſed and aſſoilzed (abſolved) from the Dittay, ſi delictum dici debeat, quod cum loquimur in delictis in quibus dolus eſt de ſubſtantia delicti, tum credulitas & ſive juſta ſive injuſta ſit cauſa, excuſet, nam videtur ceſſare animus delinquendi. Clarus §. final. Quæſt. 60. num. 22. Et in delictis voluntas non finis attenditur. Gailus Lib. 2. Obſer. 99. num. 6. At hic nullus exitus niſi bonus, idem Obſervatione undecima, Quod in delictis principium non finis attenditur, num. 18. *Ubi de homicidio perpetratur & conſilium convitia tenditur. Lege ſi non, quinta Cod. de injuriis, & cauſatur hæc actio ex affectu inferentis. Pharma. The 6th of December 1634.

It is alledged by Mr. John Nisbet for the Pannel, That the Dittay is no ways relevant, becauſe nothing is libelled to infer a ſeditious and ſiniſtrous Intention of the Pannel, in contriving, concealing, or imparting of the Piece challeng'd; neither is it libelled, that the Pannel knowing the alledged Libel to be ſeditious and infamous, concealed or divulged the ſame: but to the contrair, it is libelled, That the Pannel, immediately after the receipt thereof, delivered it to my Lord Rothes to be preſented to his Majeſty, which clears the Candor of his Intention, and the Opinion he had of the Nature of the Piece, and of the uſe he thought might be made of it to propitiat his Majeſty, and not to traduce his ſacred Perſon or Government to his Subjects. And therefore, albeit he had concealed it, and divulged it, he cannot be obnoxious in the Pains of the Acts of Parliament, which are only againſt ſeditious Contrivers of ſlanderous Writings, and malicious Concealers of Writings, notwithſtanding to their knowledge ſeditious, expreſly compiled by Incentives and Firebrands of Sedition, and expoſed to the view of the Subjects for that effect. For the Words of the Acts of Parliament (To the Reproach of his Majeſty's Perſon, Eſtate and Government, ſteering up Sedition, tending to ſteer up the Hearts of the Subjects to Hatred) implieth Intention. And the Civil and Canon-Law requireth dolum generale in omni actione injuriarum tanquam ſubſtantiale requiſitum. Gailus Lib. 2. Obſervatione 99. And expreſly both in the compiling and divulging of ſeditious and infamous Libels, Leg. Sic injuria confunditur & reciprocatur cum animo injuriante. Omnes Doctores, Menochius concil. 197. Lib. 12. per totum. The Caſe debated by the Doctor is coincident with the preſent, but not ſo pregnant in favour. Arguebatur Senator ſcripſiſſe injurioſe de principe in hunc ſenſum, quod cum Senatorum Numerus utili ſanctione coarctatus fuiſſet, poſtea eſſet ampliatus importunitate & ambitione poſtulantium, mentem principis impellente, & cum rurſus nova Conſtitutione conſultum fuiſſet, & numerus Senatorum imminutus, deniq; aut demum auctus fuit, & in immenſum crevit magna cum ſupremi ordinis jactura & inutili intenſa, totiuſque ſtatus incommodo addiderat, hoſpitationibus tota die Patriam maxime gravari & forenſes nimis remanere gravatos.

Menochius conſultus num injurioſe ſcripſerit, reſpondet, Qui Injuriarum & Male-dicentiæ accuſationem inſtituit, duo debet probari, alterum verba eſſe injurioſa, alterum prolata eſſe animo injuriandi. Et hæc Methodo oſtendit verba non eſſe injurioſa, quia laudem ducis continent cum ejus Conſtitutio dicatur optima, & potius bono zelo & pro celſitudinis utilitate prolata videntur. Deinde arguit Senatorem pœnam non incidiſſe, quia verba injurioſa etiam de ſua natura puniuntur, tantum cum animo injuriandi proferuntur, & preſumptio Juris ſtat pro eo qui protulerit aliqua verba quæ videntur injurioſa, ut dicatur ea dixiſſe abſque animo injuriandi. Ergo, ſatis ſuperque fundata eſt intentio Senatoris quod ſcripſerit prædicta, non modo non animo officiendi injuria ſereniſſimum principem, ſed potius laudandi & ſimilia verba a ſubdito bene merito de principe preſumitur prolata potius bono zelo. Secundo, quia quando verba ſunt dubia, ſtandum eſt declarationi ejus qui ea dixit; & quando ſunt dubia, ſimiliter Declaratio ab aliis verbis preedentibus vel ſubſequentibus, vel ab utriſque. Et in caſu dicit Senatorem principem laudaſſe, cum dixerit fuiſſe in arbitrio ſuæ celſitudinis, num Senatorum numerum augeret. Addit, quod injuria requirit dolum, ſine quo illata dici nequit, & in Caſu conſtat omnem dolum abfuiſſe, quia dolus non preſumitur commiſſus contra perſonam bene meritam; non preſumitur in homine probo, non preſumitur in eo qui pro beneficio Patriæ aliqua verba protulit, protulit, quæ principis perſonam videntur afficere; non preſumitur in ſubdito, quia nihil unquam contra principem molitus eſt. Quæ preſumptio multo magis comprobatur, quando verba voce vel ſcriptis directa ſunt ad principem: & ſi hæc in homine privato vera ſunt, quanto magis in Senatore gravi & illuſtri, qui alioqui ex his verbis conſciſſet ſibi contingere grave detrimentum. Cravetta in ſimili caſu dicit Judeos Chriſti inimicos, in dubio non preſumitur, aliquid dixiſſe ad injuriam Chriſti, quanto minus debet preſumi crimen injuriæ in ſubdito contra ſuum dominum. Idem ibid. numb. 26. Conjunctus non preſumitur injuria, conjunctum animo injuriandi intra ſeptimum gradum, Gloſſa in Leg. veſtes, F. de Injuriis. Multo minus preſumendum eſt ſubditum velle injuriare dominum ſuum: & Conſil. 6. Non eſt ſimile quod vir facultatibus plenus adeo ſtultus fuerit, ut prodigus eſſet perſonæ & æris, & quod dolus non ſolet committi contra tantum principem ſine cauſa. Idecius, Conſil. 256. Abſolvit quendam Paridem ſeditionis inſimulatum, quum nullo animo injuriandi dixerit alta voce quod princeps quidam male faciebat, & facere non poterat, quia ad ita dicendum poterit bono zelo moveri, & in dubio preſumendum eſt ut delictum excludatur, & quia preſumptio delicti removetur propter bonam famam & opinionem Paridis. By all which Preſumptions, more pregnantly concurring than in any Caſe extant in Law, the Pannel's Innocency is cleared abundantly. And nothing farder can be exacted but his Declaration by Oath, which he offers moſt willingly; and by the univerſal and uncontroverted Practick of all Nations, ſeconded with like Preſumptions, importeth Abſolution: Quia probatur animus non injuriandi, juramento ejus qui injuriam intulit. Guido, Conſil. 223. num. 2. in fine. Menoch. de preſumptionibus, Lib. 5. Preſump. 40. num. 32. Idecius, Conſil. 256. Qua intentione reus verba dixerit ab ejus animo pendet, & ideo ejus declarationi cum juramento ſtandum eſt, quia dependentibus ab animo ſtatur juramento ejus de cujus animo dubitatur. Leg. 1. Godophredus ad Legem ſi non convicii, Codice de injuriis, Reo purgationis juramentum cauſa cognita defertur habita ratione perſonæ, qui injurioſus natura ſua verbis uſa eſt. Gailus, Lib. 2. Obſerv. 106. Notum eſt injuriam abſq; animo non committi, & innocentiam cum animo conſtat juramento probari poſſe, & ita in Camera judicatum refert. And therefore in reſpect of the Premiſſes, the Dittay is no ways relevant, both becauſe Dolus is not libelled, and becauſe the Dittay bears that the Pannel gave the Piece challenged to my Lord of Rothes, of intention to be preſented to his Majeſty: Whereby the Innocency of his Intention is evidenced, and of his Acceſſion in having or divulging the Piece aforeſaid, ſince he was ſo far from thinking the Piece injurious to his Majeſty, in that he had ventured, by my Lord Rothes's means, not only to acquaint his Majeſty therewith, but to preſent it, as a fit Apology, to his Majeſty; as is acknowledged by the Dittay, which we accept in that part.

It is farder alledged for the Pannel, That the Hearing, Having, and not Reporting, is not relevant to infer a Concealing after the Pannel's Knowledge that the King was acquainted therewith, becauſe celamus eum qui ignorat, Leg. 1. F. de Actionibus empti & venditi. And the Reaſon expreſſed in the Act of Parliament why the Reporting is injoined, is, that ſeditious Pieces of that nature may come to his Majeſty's knowledge. After which time, the Pannel was not obliged to importune his Majeſty with ſuperfluous Reports, ſeeing it is acknowledged by the Dittay, that immediately it was delivered by him to my Lord Rothes; and ſo acquitted himſelf of all that was incumbent to him in Duty anent the point of Revealing.

It is likewiſe alledged for the Pannel, That the Points of the alledged Libel quarrelled as outrageous to Churchmen, or to Noblemen, is not relevant to infer the Crime and Pain of infamous Libelling, becauſe they are not challeng'd by the Parties intereſted, and of the Law, Volenti non fit injuria, & injuria diſſimulatione aboletur ſi quis deliquerit, & ad animum non revocaverit. Secondly, There is no Act of Parliament irrogating capital Puniſhment upon the Authors of infamous Writings, reflecting againſt Subjects, but only againſt his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, Eſtate, and Government.

It was thereafter alledged, under Proteſtation ut ſupra, by Mr. Roger Mowat for the Pannel, That the Dittay is not relevant to infer the Pain libelled upon, becauſe ane humble Supplication in Name of a Number of his Majeſty's loyal Subjects, for removing of the Prejudices which his Majeſty had or might conceive againſt them as Supplicants, and for conciliating his Majeſty's gracious Favour towards them, is not ſuch ane infamous Libel as falls under the compaſs of the Acts of Parliament upon which the ſaid Dittay is founded: but the Supplication quarrelled, whereupon the Pannel is accuſed quoad eum, and the reſt of the ſaid Noblemen, is an humble Supplication in their Names, as a Number of his Majeſty's moſt loyal Subjects, to remove his Majeſty's Prejudices, and to conciliat his Highneſs's Favour; ergo no infamous Libel falling within the compaſs of theſe Acts, quoad eos, and the Pannel. The Major is clear by the Definition, Nature, and Qualities of ane infamous and ſcandalous Libel, (where there muſt be Maligning, Detraction, and Calumny) and by the Definition of an humble and ſubmiſſive Petition and Supplication, which differs far from an infamous Libel, and altogether heterogeneous. The Aſſumption, viz. that the quarrelled Supplication, whereupon the Pannel is accuſed, is an humble Petition to remove Prejudice, and to conciliat his Majeſty's gracious Favour, is evinced in the ſaid quarrelled Supplication itſelf, in the Inſcription, in the Intention of the Supplicant; and laſtly, in the humble Deſire of the Supplication, which is the Subſtance, Life, and Quinteſſence of all Petitions: the Intention and End of the Supplicants being the Eſſence of the Petition, and the harſh or hard Expreſſions of the ſaid quarrelled Supplication (being ſubmiſſive and modeſt in the Inſcription and Deſire thereof, as ſaid is) cannot infer Guiltineſs againſt the Pannel, who is not Author nor Writer thereof. And alſe any Petition, formal by a Secretary, a Lawyer, or a Writer, to be given and preſented to his ſacred Majeſty, (even tho the Deſire thereof might ſeem juſt) being hard and difficile, or containing hask (harſh) Expreſſions not eaſy to be underſtood by every Reader, ſhall infer Guiltineſs and Puniſhment of Death upon the Supplicants mentioned therein, who perchance may be abſent out of that part of the Kingdom where the Petition was founded. And if the Harſhneſs of ſome Expreſſions, contained in the ſaid quarrelled Supplication, can infer the Guiltineſs libelled, and Puniſhment of Death, upon this Pannel, the Supplication and Remonſtrance made and preſented to his moſt ſacred Majeſty by a great many of the Nobility, who then were afraid at the large Extent of his Majeſty's late Revocation and Reduction, would likewiſe fall under the compaſs of theſe Acts of Parliament. But that Supplication and Remonſtrance was accepted by his Royal Majeſty, and his Majeſty was pleaſed with it. And ſince the ſame has tended to his Majeſty's Honour and Benefit, in the Matters of Surrender, Annuity, and Plantation of the Kirks, with competent Stipends, the Connexion is proven, becauſe the humble Supplication and Remonſtrance was no leſs expoſtulative nor this, which may be eaſily cleared by peruſing the ſaid Remonſtrance it ſelf; ergo, &c.

It is anſwer'd by my Lord Advocat, That the ſecond Alleadgance, and all the Members thereof, and Additions made to it by the Pannel's Procurators, ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the Dittay, which ſubſumes relevantly upon the two Acts of Parliament, Word by Word, as the ſame are conceived. And where it is alledged, that the infamous Libel cannot be eſteemed infamous or reproachful, quoad accuſatum, becauſe it is conceived under the form of a Supplication, and contains not Infamiam or Injuriam, but tends to pacify his Majeſty, whom the Supplicants ſuppoſed to be offended; and that it contains nothing poſitive vel enunciativè circa verum vel falſum, ſed via poſtulati circa bonum vel malum: And likewiſe where it is alledged that the Dittay is not relevant, there being nothing libelled to infer the Libel quarrelled to be ſeditious, and that the Pannel knew the ſame to be ſeditious; and that there is no Dolus libelled: It is anſwered, That all theſe Alleadgances ought to be repelled in reſpect of the Dittay, which is qualified according to the Qualification of the Acts of Parliament. And the Deſignation of a Supplication alters not the nature of the Libel in the Points where it is challenged as reproachful and ſcandalous; but theſe Points being of their own nature ſcandalous and ſeditious, cannot be excuſed under the Veil and Pretence of a Supplication, eſpecially where the Reproaches are emitted againſt his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon: Quia in minima pulſatione ſacræ & ſupremæ Majeſtatis nulla admittitur excuſatio, ut ait Horoudus, Lib 8. de Libellis defamatoriis: tanta eſt atrocitas Libellorum famoſorum; & Imperator Auguſtus Libellos famoſos in principem tractaverit ſub ſpecie læſæ majeſtatis, & citat. Ciceronem, Lib. 4. de Republica, ubi ait noſtræ duodecim tabulæ cum per paucas res capite ſanciviſſent in his, hanc præcipue ſanciendum putaverunt, ſi quis hoc tentaviſſet ſive carmen condidiſſet quod infamiam facere flagitiumve alteri; & multo magis ubi quis modeſtiæ neſcius, & pudoris ignarus, improbo petulantiq; ſtilo ſacræ Majeſtatis numen crediderit laceſſendum. And this Crime is ſo odious and heinous, that there needs no Dolus to be libelled, quia dolus preſumitur. And for the colouring of the Supplication, it is altogether impertinent; becauſe that would elude the Law, ſeeing every Man who reſolves to abuſe the ſacred Perſon of the ſovereign Prince, has it in his power to give what Name he pleaſes to his ſcandalous and odious Conceptions, whether to deſign them by ane Epiſtle, by ane Hiſtory, by a Petition, by an Admonition, and laſtly, if he pleaſes, by a Vow, to cover his Crime under the Mask of Piety. And for Supplications, the Law is clear, That albeit they be offered to the ſupreme Prince, yet if they contain a Reproach and Scandal to a Subject, they are puniſhed, Lege apud Labionem, F. de Injuriis & famoſis Libellis, §. 29. cujus hæc ſunt verba; Si quis libello dicto principi famam alienam fuerit inſectatus tenetur Injuriarum. And therefore much more, where a Subject dares preſume to make offer to his ſovereign Lord of a Supplication; and in it preſume to tax or reproach his Majeſty's Perſon, his Geſtures, his Speeches, his Promiſes in his ſupreme Parliament, and to lay Aſperſions upon his glorious Honour, Majeſty, and Dignity; which, with the reſt of the Points of the Libel, there repeated, are as many aggravant Qualities to infer the Atrocity of this infamous and ſeditious Libel. And Pharma, in his 30 Concil. num. 34, 35, 37, & 62. diſputes at length this Queſtion, An ſub ſpecie voti Libellus famoſus excuſetur? And concludes, Quod queſitus color infamiæ ſub velamine petitionis magis aggravat & injuriam & animum injuriandi. And no Man can be able to deny but the Definition of ane famous Libel is moſt competent to this particular Caſe, which is ubi vel delictum, vel vitium, vel defectus improperatur alieni perſonæ. And not only one, but all theſe concur in the particular Qualifications contained in the Dittay; and of the Law, Actus ſumunt denominationem a potentiori, præcipue in actu mixto. And read this infamous Libel, it ſhall be found in the Strain of it, and the moſt powerful Poſitions, to aim ſtill at his Majeſty's Perſon, Eſtate, and Government; which are ſo much more inexcuſable, that they were needleſs; and not only needleſs, but contrary and deſtructive of the Narration and Concluſion, which ſeems to tend for pacifying his ſacred Majeſty. For if the Purpoſe of the Supplicants had been to propitiat his Majeſty, their Sorrow and Grief for his Majeſty's ſuppoſed Offence, and an humble Deprecation of his Majeſty's Wrath, had been fit and uſeful means to procure their wiſhed Deſire: But in place of theſe, to enter irreverently and outrageouſly upon the Geſture of the Prince, upon his Acts and Geſtures in Parliament, upon the cenſuring and miſconſtruing of his Proceedings, and drawing the hail Body of the Eſtate under the Aſperity and Atrocity of their ſeditious Speeches; it is a Thing without Example. And where it is alledged, That this Petition was preſented to his Majeſty by the Earl of Rothes; and if any Injury was therein, it was removed by Diſſimulation: it is anſwered, That Diſſimulation never removes Injury, but upon preceding Knowledge. But there is no notice thereof to his Majeſty, becauſe refuſed: And, as I am credibly informed by theſe who have heard it out of his ſacred Majeſty's moſt gracious Mouth, his Majeſty has declared that his Majeſty remembers well the time that the Earl of Rothes made offer of that Supplication to his Majeſty; and that his Majeſty's Anſwer to him was, My Lord, ye know what is fit to you to repreſent, and I know what is fit to me to hear and conſider; and therefore do, or do not, upon your Peril. And the Circumſtance of preſenting to his Majeſty can have no place to extenuat, but rather to aggravat the Crime; becauſe the Pannel in his own Depoſitions has declared, that after reading thereof by the Earl of Rothes and him, it was thought of ſuch a Strain as was not to be repreſented to his Majeſty: And therefore the repreſenting, after it was diſallowed, increaſes the Offence. And where it is alledg'd, if his Majeſty had received it, that no Crime nor Puniſhment might have been inferred againſt the Preſenter; 'tis formally contrair, in reſpect of the odious and ſeditious Conception thereof, which would have deſerved the Puniſhment of Law in greater meaſure: in reſpect whereof, the ſaid hail Alleadgances ought to be repelled.

It is duplyed by Mr. Alexander Pearſon for the Pannel, That where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That the alledged and infamous Libel, tho under the Title and Form of Supplication, yet the ſame being indeed ſcandalous and reproachful, that it cannot eſcape under that Cover: It is anſwered, That the alledged Libel cannot be thought ſcandalous, quoad Supplicantes, neither doth it affirm the Particulars libelled by the Dittay cum hoc in ſe non habent; being a Supplication which of its own nature ſpeaks not but as it ſeeks, and no more than it ſeeks: and whatever Reaſons or Motives it proports to perſuade, it ends in a humble Requeſt for a gracious Anſwer from his Majeſty: That it cannot be ſaid to affirm directly, which ane infamous Libel of its own nature requires, Dicta Lege unica Codice de famoſis Libellis. The Words of the Law is, Si ejuſmodi aſſertionibus fides veri opitulata non ſit: Therefore requires Aſſertions direct, which is not in the alledged Libel; but proports Reaſons and Motives laying out the ſame to the View and Conſideration of his Majeſty, if thereby graciouſly and favourably it may obtain its Deſire. Where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That Dolus needs not be libelled, Quia delictum & injuria preſumitur facta animo injuriandi & ſic doloſe; it is anſwered, That giving, and not granting the ſame, Injuria preſumitur animo injuriandi in dubio tantum, & niſi probetur contrarium. Clar. §. Injuria, num. 17. But to the preſent Caſe it is by the moſt evident Preſumptions, above rehearſed in the Defences made for the Pannel, clearly manifeſted, That there was no mind in the Supplicants and Pannel of Injury or Wrong; therefore cannot be preſumed to have offered any injurious and ſcandalous Libel to his Majeſty, or done any thing thereanent with that mind.

And where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That if the Supplicants had a purpoſe of deprecating his Majeſty's Offence, and intreating his Majeſty's gracious Favour, they had made choice and uſe of fit Means to come to that End, and not by ſcandalous Speaking or Reproaching:

It is anſwered, What fitter means can a Supplicant uſe for intreating of Favour, than by humble Supplication? And that which my Lord Advocat calls ſcandalous Reproaches in the alledged Libel, is Grievances, and Remonſtrances thereof, humbly preſented to his Majeſty, and not aſſertive Reproaches, ut ſupra. And where it is alledged, That Diſſimulation removes not Injury, but upon preceding Knowledge; and that his Majeſty did not read nor take to Conſideration the Supplication foreſaid preſented: it is anſwered, That the Supplication offered to his Majeſty, altho his Majeſty took not the ſame to Conſideration, ſeems to aſſever the Nature of the Writing to be a Supplication, and was a great Inducement to the Supplicants to think that his Majeſty had paſſed all Offence thereof conceived. And where it is alledged by my Lord Advocat upon the Pannel's Depoſition, wherein it is alledged that the Pannel and the Earl of Rothes together, after the reading the Supplication, thought it not fit that it ſhould be preſented to his Majeſty; it is anſwered, That the Pannel's alledged Depoſition proports not the Earl of Rothes and his together reading of the Supplication; likeas it is of truth, that the ſaid Supplication was offered to his Majeſty by the Earl of Rothes, before the Pannel and the Earl of Rothes had any thoughts or purpoſe of ſuppreſſing of it: and howſoever the Pannel had had once a mind of ſuppreſſing the ſame, yet he thereafter knowing that it was indeed offered to his Majeſty, was a great Inducement to the Pannel to eſteem and think of it as ane Supplication.

It is further duplyed by Mr. John Nisbet, for the Pannel; Where it is replyed by my Lord Advocat, That it is ſubſumed relevantly, and the Dittay is qualified according to the Qualifications in the Acts of Parliament; that Dole being eſſentially required in all Actions of Injury, albeit Acts of Parliament, by reaſon of their Shortneſs, are not ſpecifick in the Expreſſion thereof; they muſt be interpret conform to the common Strain of Law, Quia in Statutis pœnalibus aliquid delictum capitaliter, etiamſi quod de dolo non fiat mentio, dolus requiritur, & non ſufficit lata culpa. Phar. Quæſt. 86. Num. 15, 25. pro qua opinione citat & quamplures doctores, qui aiunt ſe liberaſſe aliquos a pœna mortis, & eſſe mente tenendum ad Confuſionem Judicum Imperatorum, qui credunt non eſſe recedendum a verbis Statuti: & ſubjungit, num. 27. Ibid. Multo magis cum Statutum imponit pœnam pro eo quod de Jure communi non punitur. As the preſent Caſe, the Points of not reporting, and not apprehending, are puniſhable by no other Law in the World; and that the Siniſtrouſneſs of the Intention is neceſſary to be libelled, it is conſiſtent with Reaſon, becauſe the Crime conſiſts thereof; Et ideo oportet ponere in Libello, quia non probat hoc eſſe quod aliquando contingit abeſſe. Codice de Probationibus Leg. Neq; as the preſent Caſe. A ſeditious Concealing or Having, is not relevantly libelled by the having of a Piece alledged ſeditious, becauſe a Man may have a ſeditious Piece, and yet not be a ſeditious Concealer, becauſe he may be of opinion that it is not ſeditious. And it were hard in Law or Reaſon, upon the Errors of Opinion, to infer the Guilt of ſo atrocious a Crime, which, as all Crimes, requires ane expreſs Conſent. And by the Law, Nihil eſt tam contrarium conſenſui, quam error, F. de Juriſdictione omnium judicum Leg. ſi per errorem & errantis nulla eſt voluntas, Codice de Juris, & Facti Ignorantia.

And where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the Deſignation alters not the Nature of the alledged Libel, it is duplied, that the Deſignation of the foreſaid Libel, joined with the Strain and Faſhion of it, vindicates the Pannel's Innocency in the conceiving and uſing of it; becauſe it would appear to any Man to be a Supplication, and not an infamous Libel, ſeeing it is addreſſed to his Majeſty, whoſe royal and exceſſive Goodneſs excludes all Preſumption of Injury, and of the Law, Subditi contra principem ſuum fraudem committi voluiſſe non preſumitur. Menoch. concil. 404. num. 27. Cravetta concil. 309. num. 6. It begineth at ane humble Supplication of his Majeſty, and concludeth with a hopeful Aſſurance, that his Majeſty will liſten thereto: And therefore, cum ex ordine principii interpretemur finem. Baldus in Leg. quinta Codice de Commiſſis. Multo magis ex principio & fine reliqua interpretanda ſunt; & ex extremis media preſumuntur. Menoch. de Preſumptionibus, Lib. 6. It contains ample Elogies of his Majeſty's Royal Goodneſs, and Juſtice of his bleſſed Father, and their Predeceſſors. Et ideo verba debent intelligi de Actu uniformi, non difformi; id eſt, uniformiter in Laudem, & Decus, & non partim in laudem, partim in vituperium. Cravetta concil. 9. num. 27. & Verba debent potius impropriari & intelligi ſecundum fictionem Juris, delictum fugiatur. Ibid. & Pharm. Quæſt. 105. So that it is clear, that the Supplication proves not a naked and tranſparent Veil of Deſignation, but probable Grounds reſulting upon the Strain of the Piece it ſelf. Whereas my Lord Advocat aggravates the Circumſtance of the Perſon injured, being his ſacred Majeſty, the Laws adduced convinces convinces the Odiouſneſs of the Crime, when it is nottour; but extenuats the Preſumption, that the Pannel ſhould have been tainted therewith, becauſe ſo ſacrilegious a Crime is not preſumed: & maxime petulans & improbum mendacium, convinces not ane injurious Intention againſt a Prince. And the Emperors have left place to prove the Candor of Intention, notwithſtanding the moſt expreſs and formal Injuries of Words. Leg. unica Codice, Si quis Imperatori maledixerit. And where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, that Dole is preſumed; it is duplyed, Quod animus Injuriandi non preſumitur; & incumbit injuriato eum probare. Jacobus de Bello Viſu, Lib. 1. Cap. 3. Actor habet neceſſarium ponere in Libello quod animus injuriandi interceſſerit. And all the Pretorian Edicts require formally Dolum Malum, F. de ſervo corrupto, Lib. 3. & Edictum contra corrumpentem album, F. de Juriſdictione omnium Judicum. Leg. 7. §. Doli Mali. Edictum de vi publica qui Dolo Malo, F. ad Legem Juliam de vi publica, Leg. 10. Et in Crimine Majeſtatis ad Leg. Juliam Majeſtatis. Et ceſſat Dolus quia non preſumitur, Leg. Dolum, Codice de Dolo. Pharm. Queſt. 105. Inſpectione 3. & 121. In Libello debet exprimi, Quod Injurians animo Injuriandi fecerit, quando ſumus in Perſonis in quibus malus injuriandi animus non preſumitur. Salicelus in Leg. ſi non convitii Codice de injuriis, num. 4. diſtinguit utrum is qui injuriam feciſſe dicatur, talis ſit Perſona qui Preſumptionem injuriæ faciat ceſſare, an vero talis qui non facit. And far more when the Perſon that is injured concurs to exclude the Preſumption of Injury. Princeps qui tranſcendit omnem Injuriæ effectum & affectum. Cravet. concil. 9. Etiam Judæus non preſumitur aliquid dixiſſe ad injuriam Chriſti.

Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That if the Deſignation of a Supplication ſhould be admitted to palliate ane injurious Intention, the Law would be eluded, Quæſtio Colore infamiæ ſub velamine Petitionis; it is duplyed, That the Inconveniency cannot be obtruded in this Caſe, becauſe the like Preſumptions of Innocency will not be concurrent.

Where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the impudent Preſumption in preſenting a Piece of that Strain to his ſacred Majeſty, aggravates the Crime; It is duplyed, That the Citation adduced by my Lord Advocat, aggravates only the Intention, & animum injuriandi, when it is conſtant; but infeebles the Preſumption, that Noblemen of their Quality and Wiſdom ſhould have adventured to preſent a Piece that they thought of that nature; ſeeing it cannot be preſumed, that they ſhould have thought that the Name of a Supplication would have ſatisfied or eluded the King's Majeſty's Sagacity, and make them to eſchew due Puniſhment.

The Lord Juſtice-General continued the Court till Tueſday next the 9th. At which time, when it was replied by my Lord Advocat the laſt day of the Proceſs upon the Law, Item apud Labionem, That the Nature of a ſeditious or infamous Libel is not compatible with the preſenting to his Majeſty, Quia Libellus poteſt dare principi, & nihilominus in eo fama alienæ laceſſit:

It is as yet duplyed thereto by the ſaid Mr. John Nisbet for the Pannel, That the Caſe meets not, becauſe the Law adduced is of a Libel preſented to the Prince, and reflecting upon ane other Perſon than the Prince himſelf: and it has never been heard that any has been ſo inconſiderate as to preſent his own Dittay to a Prince.

Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the moſt of the alledged Libel adduced by the Supplicants, to enforce their Intention in propitiating His Majeſty, is impertinent and deſtructive of the Concluſion it ſelf; and therefore, Denominatio ſumenda eſt a potentiori, præcipue in actu mixto:

It is duplyed, That in Law, Words deſtructive of a Proteſtation, Relevantur per Proteſtationem (Verbi gratia.) The word Mentiris, ſalvo honore, ſi ſubeſſent conjecturæ per quas talis proteſtatio adjuvaretur, quod ſcilicet proteſtans non haberet animum injuriandi. Clarus, §. Injuria, num. 13. And albeit in Matter of Notion and Form, Concluſio ſequitur deteriorem partem Syllogiſmi; yet in practico Syllogiſmo, the Concluſion being the το πρακτικον, tranſmittit ab intellectu practico, to be eſpouſed and embraced by the Will, is moſt conſiderable; and the Impertinence of Midſes uſed to enforce the ſame, is acknowledged by all Moraliſts to be an Eſcape of Imprudency in the Pre-election, and not of Guilt in the Intention. And whereas my Lord Advocat contends, Quod denominatio ſumenda eſt a potentiori; it is anſwered, quod expreſſa Elogia are more powerful than ſtrain'd Conſequences. And an expreſs Supplication contained in the hail Strain of the Piece, ſhould preponderat ſome incident Glance: Et quando verba injurioſa non principaliter, ſed in conſequentiam prolata ſunt, etiam quando ſunt de ſua natura injurioſa (as is not in this preſent Caſe) preſumuntur dicta vel ſcripta ſine animo injuriandi. Mur. Conc. 107. num. 10.

Whereas it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That the Definition of the infamous Libel, is quadrant againſt the Piece quarrelled:

It is duplyed, That albeit a Piece, ubi delictum vel vitium vel defectus improperatur alicui, be materially infamous; yet formally and in relation to a Guilt and a Crime, Dolus malus is neceſſarily required, as an eſſential Ingredient in the Definition of an infamous Libel. Damhauderius in practica, cap. 138. num. 1. Scriptis fit injuria cum doloſe & malicioſe componuntur & ſcribuntur Cantilenæ, Rythmi, Libelli, Comædiolæ aut Cantiunculæ, quibus alterius laceratur nomen & fama; & libellus famoſus & compoſitio facta in ſcriptis in infamiam alicujus, ejus quod quis probare non vult, & in publico jactat, vel in loco ubi inveniatur. Phar. Quæſt. 105. Inſpect. 2. num. 1. Et ad eſſentiam libelli famoſi videtur requiri, quod fuerit poſitus in publico, vel loco ubi inveniatur. Ibid. num. 485. & Canone, Cauſ. 5. Queſt. 1. Qui in alterius famam publicæ ſcripturam aut verba contumelioſa confinxerit flagelletur. And albeit in Law calumniari materially eſt falſa crimina intendere, ad Senatus conſultum, Turpilianum, Leg. 1. §. 1. nevertheleſs non utiq; qui non probat quod intendit protinus videtur calumniari, nam ejus rei inquiſitio arbitrio cognoſcentis committitur, qui reo abſoluto de accuſatoris conciilis incipit querere qua mente ductus ad accuſationem proceſſerit, F. ad Senatus Conſultum, Turpilianum, Leg. 1.

Where it is replied, That the preſenting of ſuch a Piece aggravats the Crime, and the odious Conception thereof is puniſhable notwithſtanding the Preſentation; it is duplyed for the Pannel, That the preſenting of it by ſo worthy a Nobleman put thePannel, in bona fide, to think it not a Piece of that Nature whereof it is alledged to be, and to overpaſs, at the leaſt to miſtake the Odiouſneſs of the Conception of it, if there be any.

It is eiked (added) by Mr. Robert Macgill for the Pannel, with Proteſtation, as ſet down from the begin-beginning, not repeating that which I have ſaid; but remitting the moſt honourable and wiſe Judges (quia via jam eſt præmunita) to theſe Things ſet down before by me, touching every Particular, as they have been worthily replied by my Lord Advocat.

And, Firſt, anent the Qualification contained in the Acts of Parliament.

It is anſwer'd, Firſt, That the firſt Act libelled is only againſt Delators, as ſaid is, and expounds the Act, 83 Jac. 5. Parl. 6. as might be cleared by the Time wherein that Act was alſo made: But he remits it to the Conſideration of the Judges. Secondly, It is anſwer'd, That there being no Qualification ſet down in this firſt Act of Parliament, but a general Law, that general Law ought to receive the Qualification according to the Diſtinction propounded by me, in all Humility, of inordinat Speeches againſt a Prince, in the laſt part of my firſt Exception, in reſpect of the Abſurdity of the Parity of Crimes, and Pains which would follow, if it were not ſo limited: And remits, as before, to Gailus, anent the Interpretation of municipal Laws. And what ſhall the general Rules of the Law (miſcalled by ſome Regulæ Lesbiæ) receive their own Exceptions according to Reaſon; and the municipal Laws, which even in the moſt ſubſtantial Points of the Commonweal, will alter three or four times in an Age, according to the Circumſtances, (nam ex moribus Leges;) ſhall they, ſay I, ſtand good in a general Senſe contrary to Reaſon? Which I count to be the Judgment of the Lawyers. See in the laſt part of my Duply, ſtrengthening my firſt Exception; where it is ſhewn that the word Government, in the 134th Act, and ſo in this Act, ought not to be underſtood againſt Counſellors and Lords of Parliament: which is followed out largely in my ſecond Exception, and ſo ought not to be underſtood in any other Act, to make them Contraveners, where they had optimum animum, and according to their Opinion only might be thought to have erred, quod humanum eſt, as was alledged by Mr. John Nisbet; Neq; id prius quam rationes ad veritatem eliciendam inter ſe confligant.

The Second is anent the Colour or Mask of Supplication; remits that to the Practicks alledged by Mr. John Nisbet out of the Conſultus of Menochius, touching Government, ſet down ſo rudely, ut ſit addita ſupplicatio, and, as it were, dropp'd out of the Gall of Bitterneſs. And yet notwithſtanding the Lawyers Verdict was to abſolve the Nobleman. Remits alſo to the laſt part of my firſt Exception in the end, anent the Expoſition of Words and Sentences, taught likewiſe in the ſecond Exception, and anent the Form of Speaking and Prayer, eſpecially where contra preſumptionem doli. It is clearly evinced that the Pannel had not animum doloſum, but rather a very good Will and Intention, which he (as we ſay in a Proverb) wiſhes moſt humbly might be taken in part of Payment. And remits that anent Preſumption of Dole, which my Lord Advocat ſaid in the fourth Place to my ſecond Exception, Parte ſecunda, That whether it be neceſſar to libel, or not, yet ſeeing it is de ſubſtantia delicti, & credulitas a cauſa ſive injuſta excuſet a delicto, quia abeſt animus delinquendi, as Clarus has there alledged; ergo, to be aſſoilzed as Author, &c.

And to the Third, adduced by my Lord Advocat, anent the Definition of an infamous Libel, and the Puniſhment of Injuries againſt private Perſons, and far more againſt Princes; we diſallow altogether ſuch inordinate Speeches, and ſay, That they ought to be puniſhed as the Lawyers have defin'd, according to the Mind of the Speaker or Penner. But that the Definition of an infamous Libel cannot agree herein, ſo far as concerns the Pannel, it is not to be thought; quia directis & conceptis verbis, malicioſe & perditiſſimo animo, muſt Injuries be impropriat: which, in all Humility, the Pannel thinks not to be here; and remits to my ſecond Exception. And that a capital Pain ought to be inflicted upon all ſort of inordinate Speeches or Writings, and all ſorts of Speakers and Writers, and upon the Havers, Hearers, and not Revealers, indiſtinctly, even againſt Princes; let me ſay it, with all Reverence, as my Lord Advocat would inſinuate by the Places adduced, it is not the Lawyers Mind.

The Fifth, alledged by my Lord Advocat, goes back again upon an alledged Diſguiſing. But we deny that any thing adduced either anent Supplication or Vow agrees with our Caſe, where nothing can be ſaid to be improperat directis verbis, (elſe the Pannel had been a mad Man:) But by a wreſting way (ſalva pace dixerim) may be thought by ſome to infer Injury. And here again remits to theſe parts of my Exceptions, ut ſupra, anent the Expoſition of Words.

The Sixth is anent our moſt ſacred Sovereign his Refuſal; wherein remits to that part of my Exception anent the appealing from a Prince to himſelf, eſpecially by a Counſellor; Donec intelligatur quid velit ſupplicatio, & rationes hinc inde adductæ, quaſi ex adverſo acies manum inter ſe conferant. As to his Majeſty's own Declaration, the Pannel ſeals his Mouth with the Finger of Harpocritus, and reverences his Majeſty's Sayings as Oracles, and, in all Humility, accepts them as an Acknowledgment of the Offer made.

The laſt, I think, are the Pannel's own Depoſitions; wherein diſtinguiſh the Diſallowing and the Times, and all ſhall agree. He diſallowed of it firſt, as that of the General; it was rejected by his moſt ſacred Majeſty: but the Pannel thought that it might have been keeped till a more convenient Time, according to the Appellation alſo mentioned, and till cauſa audita it had been condemned. And the Pannel depones, That before ever the Principal came back, the Copy was ſurreptitiouſly purchaſed by Mr. John Dunmure, in falſifying his Promiſe.

It is triplyed (replied the third time) by my Lord Advocat, That the Duplies in the whole Parts and Members thereof are impertinent; becauſe the Exception was founded upon the Form and Deſignation of the infamous Libel, That being deſigned a Supplication, it could not contain Matter of ane infamous Libel; which Exception was anſwered with this Reply, That the Dittay is directly ſubſumed upon the Acts of Parliament, viz. That this, which they call a Supplication, is a Writing containing Reproaches and Scandals againſt the Perſon, State, and Government of our gracious Sovereign, as the Dittay bears; and no more was neceſſarly to be replied but upon the Acts of Parliament. And yet, for informing the Mind of the Judge, it was cleared both by the expreſs Text of the Civil Law, and by the Judgment of the beſt Juriſts, and verſed in Criminals, That the Deſignation purges not the infamous Speeches conceived in a Supplication to the Prince, being to the Infamy of ane Subject, much leſs to the Diſhonour of the ſupreme and ſovereign Prince. And this is not pertinently anſwered by no part of the Duply; but both the Acts of Parliament and Civil Law concurring, ſtand in full force to elide the Exception. And the Points urged by the Duply, has nothing to do with the Exception, but are Points extraneous, founded upon Intention, libelling of Dole, Preſumption in favours of the Pannel, and others in whoſe name it was alledged the ſaid Supplication was drawn up; which I may juſtly term Preſumption: For whatſoever diſtinction they have in their Quality from others, it is from the Bounty and Favour of their ſupreme Prince and Sovereign, who is the Fountain and Source of all Honour and Dignity. And good reaſon that they bruik (enjoy) all their Privileges, in all Cauſes with all Perſons, except where they come in conteſtation with their ſupreme Sovereign: and there, as Godophred writes, ad Legem Juliam Majeſtatis, ubi Majeſtas pulſata, defenditur nulla dignitas; nullum Culmen, nulla Fortuna eſt immunis. And in this caſe, where Reproaches, Scandals, and Aſperſions are laid upon our gracious Sovereign, the Excuſe of Nobility, that it may be preſumed that they did it not malo Animo, is rather an Accuſation than an Excuſe; becauſe no Subject is ſo bound to know the true Reſpects of Humility, and Reverence, and Obedience due to the Sovereign Prince, as thoſe to whom his Majeſty hath communicated a Shadow of his glorious Honour. And as to the Inſtance adduced out of Menochius, we have nothing to do with it; for it is likely, he that anſwered ſo, had not ſuch a Law as we have. And as to the Inſtance adduced out of Lex Unica, ſi quis Imperatori maledixerit, that by that Law there is no place left to the Accuſed to purge himſelf of his evil Intention, that is true in the Caſe of the Law, but has nothing ado with us, ubi non eſt lubricum linguæ quod facile ad pœnam non eſt trahendum; but a malicious and ſeditious Writing, compiled of purpoſe to the Reproach of their Gracious Sovereign. And in Writings of this kind, as Haroudus expreſſes in his 18th Title, fol. 208. there is no worſe Reproaches and Convitia (ſays he) than thoſe which are done by Writing, than thoſe which are done upon manifeſt Deliberation; becauſe the ſame proceeds upon ane evil and ſeditious Purpoſe, and pierces deeply, and abides longer than the Injury by Words. And for all the reſt of the Inſtances and Authorities of the Civil Law, I oppone the two Acts of Parliament, which are the only grounds of this Libel; in ſo far as it concerns the Authors of the infamous Libel, the not apprehending the Authors thereof, the concealing and not revealing of the ſame. And as to the mention made in the entry of the Dittay of the Common and Civil Law, the ſame is wholly in reſpect of the divulging and diſperſing of the ſaid infamous Libel, whereof our ſaid Acts of Parliament make no expreſs mention. And where we have our own Laws and Acts of Parliament, as we have in this Caſe, theſe muſt be the only Rule of judging. And the Exception and Duply, albeit they have many Quotations of the Common Law, yet all needleſs and impertinent; ſince they are not adduced to purge that part of the Dittay which is founded upon the Common Law. But in the Points diſputed we have good warrand to adhere to our own Acts of Parliament, (except in ſo far as we are forced by the Objections made by the Pannel's Procurators to clear the doubtful and ambiguous Terms of their Exception and Duply) becauſe by Act of Parliament made by King James I. Par. 3. cap. 48. and by King James IV. Par. 6. cap. 79. it is ſtatute and ordained, That all the Leidges be governed by the King's Laws, and no others. And his Majeſty's Advocat offers, whenever it ſhall pleaſe my Lord Juſtice-General to command him, to clear any Speech that is founded upon the Common Law, that he ſhall do the ſame by word.

It is quadruplyed (pleaded the fourth time) by Mr. Alexander Pearſon, for the Pannel, That where my Lord Advocat triplies a part of his Lordſhip's Reply to have received no Anſwer by the Duplies made for the Pannel; to wit, that part thereof, which bears, that the Writing quarrelled, although in Form and Title a Supplication, yet does contain reproachful Speeches, &c. it is anſwered, That the alledged infamous Libel, in ſo far as it concerns the Pannel, cannot be eſteemed but as a Supplication, in reſpect of the Duply and the Reaſons contained therein, which I need not repeat here.

Where it is triplyed by my Lord Advocat, that our Duply is impertinent; it is quadruplyed, That if there be any Impertinency, his Lordſhip is to be blamed therewith, for having occaſioned it by ane unneceſſary Reply. And for the Points urged by us for the Pannel, to clear his Intention, and to vindicate him from the Preſumption of Injury, in compiling or being acceſſory to the Piece quarrelled, not extraneous, both becauſe the Acts of Parliament require Intention, by the intentional words to the Reproach, ſteering of Sedition, &c. And albeit they ſhould contain nothing thereof, a ſiniſtrous Intention being required in the Eſſence of the Crime, it muſt neceſſarily have been libelled conform to the Paſſages already cited in our Duply.

Whereas my Lord Advocat triplyed, That the Character of Nobility accuſed non excuſat in this caſe; it is quadruplyed, That that is only where the Crime is conſtant, (i.e. evident:) And that eminent Quality ever wants the Preſumption, that any inveſted therein ſhould injure their ſacred Prince; whereof they are not only a Shadow, but noble and myſtical Members, as is cited already.

Where it is triplyed by my Lord Advocat, that the Caſe adduced out of Menochius, is not pertinently adduced here, becauſe there was no Law; it is quadruplyed, That the Queſtion reſulted upon the Common Law, which ordains due Puniſhment upon the Authors of infamous Libels, and chiefly againſt Princes. And the Caſe was not ſo pregnant in favour of the Party whom he abſolves, becauſe he was the Author, and had expoſed to the view of all the World the Piece there challenged. And we adhere to the Author's Opinion; and inſtances, how it has never been found to be an undutiful part in Juriſconſults and Advocats, to vindicate Pieces quarrelled to be injurious.

And where it is triplyed by my Lord Advocat, that the Inſtance Lex Unica quadrats not; it is quadruplyed, That the Inſtance of the preſent Caſe is more pregnant, becauſe the Caſe of the Law adduced, improba & petulantia Mendacia, are challenged: And in the preſent Caſe the Piece challenged is not expreſly injurious; and all that can be inferred upon the Pannel, is ane indirect and imprudent Acceſſion thereto.

And where it is triplyed by my Lord Advocat, that the Allegations of the Duply are impertinent, becauſe not alledged for the Points of the Common Law not expreſſed in the Acts of Parliament; 'tis quadruplyed, That there are alledged in our Duplies for all, and refers ourſelf to our Duplies.

To

To the whilk it is quintuplyed (anſwered the fifth time) by my Lord Advocat, That the Words of the Act of Parliament has no reſpect to the Intention of the Perſon, but only expreſs the Effect of the Reproaches which tend to move Diſlike betwixt his Majeſty and his good Subjects. And it is granted in the Quadruply by Mr. John Nisbet, That they are materially reproachful, and not formally.

It is ſextuplyed by Mr. John Nisbet for the Pannel, That the Words To the Reproach, implies Dole and Intention; becauſe the Crime prohibited by the Act of Parliament conſiſts eſſentially thereof, and is cleared by all the Allegations adduced, and more expreſly by other Acts of Parliament of that nature, as the 60th Act of Queen Mary, 6 Parl. whereof the Words are Tending to ſtir the Hearts of the Subjects to Hatred, which are emphatically Words of Intention. And whereas my Lord Advocat would inforce an Acknowledgment of material Injury in our Quadruply, we diſclaim it, and maintain that it cannot be evinced therewith; and albeit it were, there reſts a relevant Defence in Law upon the Innocency and Candour of Intention.

Thirdly, It is alledged by Mr. Roger Mowat for the Pannel, for a third principal Defence to that part of the Subſumption of the Dittay, Qualifications, and Condeſcendings thereof, bearing that the Pannel himſelf was and is Author, Deviſer, Conſulter, Adviſer of the infamous Libel, and Airt and Part of the penning, writing, and updrawing thereof; at leaſt is guilty of the hearing, and of the concealing, and not revealing the Author thereof; and moſt guilty of the not apprehending of Mr. William Haig, whom the Pannel affirmed to be the Author of the ſaid Libel, it being in his power to have apprehended him; and alſo is guilty of the divulging and diſperſing thereof, in ſo far as the ſaid Pannel knew of the penning of the ſaid Libel, gave his Opinion to the making thereof, and in token thereof interlined a part of the ſame in divers Parts with his own Hand, which by ocular Inſpection is to be ſeen, and which the Pannel has alſo confeſſed by his Depoſition under his Hand, as the ſaid Dittay in that part bears, &c.

That the Pannel ought and ſhould be ſimpliciter aſſoilzed (abſolved) therefrom: And 1ſt, That the ſaid Pannel cannot be criminally purſued as Author and Deviſer of the ſaid Libel; becauſe by the Pannel's own Depoſition, taken by the Lords of the Committee on the 9th of June, 1634, the Pannel has deponed, That the ſaid Mr. William Haig was the Author of the ſaid Libel. Likeas the ſaid Mr. William his miſſive Letter, all written and ſubſcribed with his own Hand, dated at Camphire the 27th Day of the ſaid Month of June, which Letter was directed to the Pannel, and exhibited by him before the ſaid Committee, bears the ſaid Mr. William his Grant that he was the Penner of the ſaid Supplication or Libel; and takes the Crime upon him in ſolliciting his Friends by his other Letters and Miſſives, likewiſe produced to the ſaid Lords of Committee, to deal for purchaſing and obtaining to him a Remiſſion for the ſaid alledged Crime. And ſo the ſaid Mr. William having not only confeſſed himſelf to be Author, but having dealt with and ſollicited his ſaid Friends for a Remiſſion, as ſaid is, the ſaid Dittay can never be ſuſtained againſt the Pannel as Author and Deviſer thereof; which miſſive Letters are in the Purſuer's own Hand. Item, The ſaid Pannel ought likewiſe to be abſolved from that part of the ſaid Dittay, bearing to be Conſulter, Adviſer, and Airt and Part of the penning, writing, and drawing up of the ſaid quarrelled Libel; becauſe the ſaid two Acts of Parliament, whereupon the ſaid Dittay is founded, make no mention of Conſulters or Adviſers. And Acts of Parliament, ſpecially in this kind, are ſtrictly to be taken, and ſuffer no Extention beſide that which is expreſly ſet down therein. 2dly, Giving (granting) the ſaid Acts might be extended to Conſulters and Adviſers, (as they cannot) yet Abſolvitur ought likewiſe to be granted from the alledged Conſulting and Adviſing by the Pannel, and his being Airt and Part of the penning, writing, and drawing up of the ſaid Supplication now quarrelled; becauſe the ſaid Pannel being examined by the ſaid Committee upon the ſaid 9th of June laſt, and being then interrogat who was Author and Penner of the ſaid Libel, not only has deponed, ut ſupra, That it was the ſaid Mr. William Haig, who gave the ſaid Libel to him, and who (as he thought) was the Author thereof: but being thereafter interrogat upon another Interrogator the ſame Day, if the ſaid Mr. William had any Command to draw up the ſaid quarrelled Supplication or Libel, or if the Pannel, or any of his Knowledge, was at the forming thereof, the Pannel has alſo deponed upon his ſaid great Oath to the ſaid Interrogators, That the ſaid Mr. William Haig had no Warrant from him, nor knew he of any Warrant given to the ſaid Mr. William, or that any was preſent at the forming thereof. Which clearly evinces and manifeſts that the Pannel was neither Author, Deviſer, Conſulter, Adviſer, nor Airt and Part of the penning and writing of the ſaid Libel; ſeeing the ſaid Pannel being brought before the ſaid Committee, and urged by them to give his Oath upon the ſaid Points, he has given the ſame, he has deponed, ut ſupra, denying all the ſaid ſeveral Points. After the giving of the which Oath of Verity, and ſubſcribing the ſame, as the ſame produced by my Lord Advocat bears, no Dittay or Purſuit, criminal or civil, can now or hereafter be ſuſtained againſt the Pannel upon theſe Points, whereupon already he has given his ſaid Oath; becauſe no other manner of Probation can be received againſt him, to prove contrair to his ſaid Oath, given before the ſaid Committee in manner foreſaid. And where it is libelled in the ſaid Dittay, and Qualifications thereof, That the Pannel is Author, Adviſer, Conſulter, Adviſer, Airt and Part of the penning and writing, at the leaſt guilty of the hearing, concealing, &c. not revealing, not apprehending, &c. in ſo far as the Pannel knew of the penning thereof by the ſaid Mr. William Haig, adviſed and gave his Opinion anent the making of the ſaid Libel, and in token thereof interlined it in divers Parts with his own Hand, &c.

It is alledged, That the Pannel ought to be ſimpliciter abſolved from the ſaid Qualification libelled in theſe Words, in ſo far as the Pannel knew of the penning of it, adviſed and gave his Opinion anent the making of the ſame; becauſe that is likewiſe directly contrair to the Pannel's Depoſition foreſaid, proceeding upon the ſaid Interrogator, mov'd by the ſaid Committee wherewith he was interrogat, If Mr. William Haig had any Warrant or Command from him to draw up the ſaid Libel, and if the Pannel, or any of his Knowledge, was at the forming thereof. Whereunto the Pannel has made anſwer, and upon his ſaid great Oath depone d, That Mr. William Haig no had Warrant from hi m, nor knew he of any given to him, or that any was preſent at the forming thereof. And ſo the Pannel by his Depoſition, upon his ſaid Oath, having deponed, That Mr. William Haig had no Warrant from him, nor knew he of any Warrant given to him, or that any was preſent at the forming thereof; the ſaid criminal Purſuit can never be ſuſtained to infer thereby that the Pannel is Author, Conſulter, Deviſer, Adviſer, Airt and Part of the penning, writing, and drawing up; becauſe that is altogether denied by the ſaid Pannel, as his ſaid Depoſition clearly bears. And being denied upon his great Oath, as ſaid is, that part cannot be ſuſtained upon the ſaid Qualification and Inference libelled; it being impoſſible, per rerum naturam, that the ſaid Dittay in theſe Points can any way be proven by any other Probation whatſoever, after giving his ſaid Oath.

Court adjourn'd till to Morrow the 10*th Inſtant.*

Intrant. the ſaid 10*th Day.*

The Pannel and Procurators (as before) compear'd the ſaid Day.

Quarto, It was alledged by Mr. Roger Mowat for the Pannel, As for his fourth principal Defence againſt that part of the Dittay, bearing, That the Pannel knew of the ſaid alledged infamous Libel, adviſed and gave his Opinion to the making of the ſame, and in token thereof interlined a part thereof in divers parts with his own Hand, as may be ſeen by ocular Inſpection, and as his Confeſſion in the Depoſition bears; that Abſolvitur ſhould be granted from that part, bearing that the Pannel knew of the penning thereof, becauſe that is directly contrair to the Pannel's Depoſition, before repeated, which does contain an expreſs Denial of his Knowledge of the forming of the ſaid Libel, or that any was preſent at the forming thereof. And to that part of the Qualification libelled, bearing, That in token that the Pannel knew of the penning thereof, he interlined a part with his own Hand; it is alledged, Nullo modo relevat, unleſs it had been relevantly libelled in the Dittay, that the Pannel interlined the ſaid Lines the time of the forming of the ſaid Libel, or ſhortly thereafter, which is not ſaid: For mending and interlining to be a token againſt the Mender or Interliner of a Writing, that he knew of the penning thereof, and gave Opinion to the making of the ſame, muſt neceſſarly be libelled to have been at or immediately after the writing of the ſame. Which cannot be urged upon the Pannel in this Particular, becauſe by his Depoſition, given upon the 16th of June, 1634, upon an Interrogator wherewith he was interrogat, whether he had interlined ſome Lines in the ſaid quarrelled Supplication, which was exhibited by him before the Lords of Committe, and whether he did the ſame before he ſhew'd it to Mr. John Dunmure, or to the Earl of Rothes, has deponed, That the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure never ſaw the ſaid interlined Libel, but only the Copy, which was caſt in the Fire after the redelivery thereof; and deponed, That the ſaid interlined Copy lying then before the ſaid Lords, and now in my Lord Advocat his Purſuer's hands, was that Copy which was delivered by the Pannel to the Earl of Rothes, but was not interlined till long after the Earl of Rothes redelivered the ſame; and deponed, That never one ſaw it ſince the ſaid interlining. And ſo it being that Copy which ſhould have been preſented to his Majeſty, and which was offered to be preſented, it is not likely nor probable, and with reaſon cannot be affirmed to have been interlined before the time of the ſaid Offer of preſenting. And ſo the ſaid interlined Libel cannot be counted a token (as the Dittay bears) of the Pannel's Knowledge of the penning of the ſaid Libel, and of his adviſing and giving his Opinion to the making thereof. Likeas, in rei veritate, the ſaid Interlining was after the ſaid Mr. John Dunmure was firſt queſtioned in March laſt, by the ſpace of nine Months, or thereby, after that the ſaid Supplication was offered to have been preſented to his Majeſty. And ſo a private Interlining of the ſaid Copy by the Pannel, by adding or mending ſome few Words, which neither in Matter nor Form can be quarrelled, being ſo long after the intended Offer thereof made to his Highneſs, cannot be a token againſt the Pannel, as is libelled, to make him to have been upon the Knowledge of the penning, and to have given his Advice and Opinion to the making thereof; Hoc attento, That the ſaid interlined Copy was never ſeen by any, but by himſelf, after the ſaid Interlining, which ſimply he produced the ſame to the ſaid Committee, which in Law he could never have been compelled to do, if he had expected that any ſuch Advantage had been taken thereupon, to his heavy Prejudice. For the Pannel did never fear nor ſuſpect that the ſaid Committee would have deſired or induced him to have exhibit and produced before them a Paper, the Production whereof might have imported no leſs to him than the Probation of the alledged Crime, contained in the Dittay, to make him thereby guilty and puniſhable by Death. And it is nottour that the Pannel did, at the ſaids Lords Deſire, produce the ſame to them, upon their Promiſe that it ſhould not enſnare the Pannel, ſeeing in Law he was neither obliged to produce any Writing, nor to declare, nor to give his Oath upon any Interrogators demanded of him; neither would he have done it, if he had known (as now in Experience he finds) that it might and would have brought upon him the ſaid alledged Crime and Puniſhment of Death.

It is added by Mr. Alexander Pearſon for the Pannel, in fortification of the ſaid fourth Exception propounded for the Pannel; Firſt, For that Part thereof, bearing, That the Pannel the 9th of June laſt deponed, upon his great Oath, that Mr. William Haig had no Warrant of him for drawing up of the ſaid Supplication, and that he knew nothing of the forming thereof; that the Purſuer cannot be heard now upon that part of the Dittay, to purſue the Pannel, becauſe of the Pannel's Oath and Declaration foreſaid, which cannot in Law and Reaſon be called again in queſtion; propter juris-jurandi religionem, quod ſpeciem tranſactionis continet, majoremque habet authoritatem quam res judicata & dato jurejurando, non aliud queritur quam juratum ſit. Leg. 1, 2, & 5. §. 2. F. de Jurejurando. Where it is alledged by the Dittay, That by the Letters ſent by Mr. Haig to the Pannel, it is affirmed by Mr. Haig that he had the Allowance of the Pannel to the making and penning thereof, non relevat, becauſe Mr. Haig being Author and Penner of the alledged infamous Libel, by his own Grant in his miſſive Letter, dated 27 June, and alſo acknowledged ſo by the Dittay, Mr. William Haig's Declaration foreſaid (no ways granting the ſame) can no ways be reſpected, or have force againſt the Pannel; Quia de jure ſocius aut particeps criminis adverſus ſocium fidem non facit, Leg. Quoniam, Cod. de Teſtibus. Leg. Si Filium, Cod. de Liberati Cauſa.

It is alledged by Mr. John Nisbet, That the Dittay is not relevant, in ſo far as it qualifies the Pannel to be Author of the Piece challenged by the Interlining thereof; becauſe the Interlining in one Point only, convinceth that he hath not been Author of the reſt. Secundo, The Interlining has no Contingency with the Point challenged, but is a ſmoothing of ſome apparent Shrewdneſs in Conception. And in a word, the Dittay is no ways relevant in ſo far as it qualifies any Acceſſion by the Pannel's Depoſitions; becauſe it is affirmed by the Pannel, that he was induced to depone, upon aſſurance that he ſhould not be enſnared. And of the Law, Confeſſio emanata ſub ſpe impunitatis non importat Condemnationem; Clarus, §. final. Quæſt. 55. num. 8, & 9. Ubi afferit opinionem Imolæ id aſſerentis, eſſe æquiorem; Pharm. Quæſt. 81. num. 280. Confeſſio emanata ſub promiſſione impunitatis non ſufficit ad condemnandum, nec in foro conſcientiæ, nec contentioſo; & confitentem non afficit: Eadem Quæſtione, num. 42. Hiplitus in §. Poſtquam, num. 15.

It is anſwered by my Lord Advocat, That the Exceptions proponed againſt that part of the Dittay, bearing the Pannel to be Author, Adviſer, Conſulter, Adviſer, and Airt and Part of the penning, writing, and drawing up of the infamous Libel, ought to be repelled in the hail Members thereof.

And firſt, where it is alledged, that my Lord is not Author, becauſe that he has deponed, that Haig is Author, and Haig by his Letter has granted himſelf to be Author; becauſe that is not a Defence, but a Denial: for both Haig and the Pannel might be Authors and Contrivers of an infamous Libel. And therefore the Dittay in this Point is relevant, and conſequently muſt be put to the Knowledge of ane Aſſize, (Jury) before whom the Probation and Verification of the Dittay is to be uſed; and before whom it is eaſy to ſhew and clear, that neither the Pannel's Depoſition can liberat him, nor yet Haig's Letter, who in the Defence is granted by the Procurators to be Socius Criminis. And giving (granting) the Juſtice would take the Diſpute of this to himſelf, which is proper to the Aſſize; yet if any Moment ſtood in Haig's Letter, it muſt be taken complex; for by the ſame Letter he affirms, that the Pannel was Adviſer of the ſaid ſeditious Libel.

And where it is alledged, that Deviſer, Conſulter, and Adviſer, are not contained in the Acts of Parliament whereupon the Dittay is founded, ought to be repelled in reſpect of the Act of Parliament of King James VI. his Majeſty's gracious Father of eternal Memory, Parl. 12. cap. 151. wherein it is declared, That all criminal Libels ſhall contain the Parties complained upon to be Airt and Part of the Crimes libelled: which is in this Caſe per expreſſum libelled; and the words of Adviſer, Conſulter, Deviſer, ſunt ſynonyma & ὁμολογα.

And where it is alledged, that the Pannel in his Depoſition has denied that he was either Author or Adviſer, that is a Denial ut ſupra, and not a Defence againſt the Relevancy. And where it is alledged, that the Pannel having deponed by Oath, that no other Probation can be uſed contra Jusjurandum; it is anſwered, That it is againſt all Law, Reaſon, and Cuſtom, to oppone Jusjurandum in Criminalibus. For then after Examination by the Judge, which is ever taken upon Oath, no Criminal ſhould paſs the Knowledge of ane Aſſize; and it were a Proclamation of univerſal Impunity, if Oath ſhould determine the Tryal.

But that which is alledged by the Pannel and his Procurators ſuper Jurejurando, has only place in Civilibus & in Jurejurando delato per actorem, which cannot have any reſpect in this Caſe. And it is nottourly known, that Anchindrine and Garrarie not only deny'd upon Oath, but abode by the Denial in the Torture and Queſtion; and yet notwithſtanding their Oath, and Denial by Oath, were put to the Knowledge of an Aſſize, and convicted. And where it is alledged, againſt the Specification in the Libel of this firſt Point of Author, that Knowledge, Adviſing, and Interlining, are not relevant; I declare that I adhere in the firſt place to the general Subſumption of the Dittay upon the Act of Parliament, whereby it is ſubſumed that the Pannel is Author, Adviſer, Conſulter, Deviſer, and Airt and Part of the ſeditious Libel; and proteſt, that notwithſtanding of whatſomever Defence is or ſhall be propounded againſt the Qualifications, (albeit the ſame might be found relevant, which cannot be in Reaſon and Juſtice) That the ſaid General ſhall paſs to the Knowledge of ane Aſſize, as relevant per ſe. Under which Proteſtation, I proceed to make anſwer to the Defences made againſt the Qualifications.

And firſt, where it is alledged that this Clauſule, bearing the Pannel knew of the penning of the ſaid ſcandalous Libel by Haig, and adviſed and gave his Opinion anent the making thereof; that the ſamen is contrair to the Pannel's Depoſitions, given by him upon Oath, (as ſaid is;) I anſwer, That this impugns not the Relevancy of the Dittay concerning the Qualification, and therefore muſt paſs to the Knowledge of an Aſſize. And as to the Pannel's Depoſitions, whether they be conform or diſconform to the Libel, non eſt hujus loci; becauſe neither is the Dittay founded upon them, nor are they uſed by me as Purſuer, neither as a Part of the Libel or Proof of the Libel.

And where it is alledged, that that Part of the Qualification anent the Pannel's Interlining is not relevant, except it be condeſcended quo tempore interlined, if in ipſo actu vel ſtatim poſt actum; it is anſwered, That this part of the Qualification is uſed jointly with the reſt. And there is no neceſſity of condeſcending, becauſe quocunque tempore interlined, it is a ſufficient Evidence of the Concurſe, Conſent, and Adviſing to Haig, Maker thereof; eſpecially in reſpect it was drawn up by him, viz. Haig, in name of the Pannel, and others having Intereſt in that Writing, which is truly an infamous Libel, and termed in a ſiniſtrous Notion by name of a Supplication: Likeas the Pannel his Procurators has in their ſecond Defence maintained this Action of Law, That Principium & Finis tanquam duo Extrema includunt Medium. And therefore the Pannel's Knowledge, as the firſt Imitation of that infamous Libel, and his receiving the ſame from Haig immediately after the penning thereof, and receiving to be preſented to his Majeſty to their uſe who were alledged Supplicants, and the Interlining thereof ex poſt facto, (albeit not interlined before the Delivery thereof to the Pannel) is relevant in Law with the reſt of the Members of the Qualification per ſe, by and attour (over and above) the General, to ſuſtain this Dittay, to make the Pannel Author, Adviſer, Deviſer, Conſulter, and Airt and Part of the penning and drawing up of the ſaid infamous Libel:

ſpecially ſeeing it will be conſtant (i. e. evident) by the Depoſitions, when the ſame ſhall be uſed before the Aſſize, that the ſame was not interlined longo intervallo after delivery thereof by Haig to the Pannel, but very ſhortly after in tempore quaſi continuo. And where it is alledged, That this Interlining was not till after nine Months after the Receipt thereof from Haig, that is not, nor cannot be verified, nor has no warrant in the Depoſitions. And where it is alledged, That this interlined Libel cannot be uſed againſt the Pannel, becauſe it was never delivered to Dunmure, nor never ſhewn to any, till the Pannel produced it before the Committee, and it was produced under Promiſes that it ſhould not be uſed to the Pannel's prejudice; and that the Pannel was not obliged to anſwer, neither to have produced the ſame before the Committee: It is certain the Committee urged nothing from the Pannel but by good Warrant, and to which the Pannel was obliged to anſwer upon his Alleadgance; and the Denial to give ane Anſwer to his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, who had Warrant under his ſacred Hand and Seal, which was exhibited to the Pannel, would have inferred againſt the Pannel a more dangerous Crime than that he is now accuſed upon, by declining of his Majeſty's Judgment, and of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners. And for the Committee, they urged nothing from the Pannel but a plain, true, ſincere, and ſpeedy Declaration of his Knowledge of the Author and Contriver of the ſaid ſcandalous Libel, which, as it was incumbent for the Committee in obedience to his Majeſty's Warrant to them, ſo it could breed no Snare nor Prejudice farder nor he did burden himſelf by his own Confeſſion; in reſpect whereof, the Exceptions ought to be repelled.

It is duplyed by Mr. Roger Mowat to my Lord Advocat his Reply, made to the Defences proponed againſt that part of the Dittay whereby it is alledged, That the Pannel cannot be convened as Author, Conſulter, Adviſer, &c. but that the ſaid Defence ought to be repelled, and the hail Members thereof. And firſt, That the ſaid firſt part of the Defence is not a Defence, but a Denial of that part of the Dittay; and that the Denial muſt be referred to an Aſſize, and diſputed there, and not here; and that the ſame is not relevant, becauſe albeit the Pannel has alledged another Author, yet they might be both Authors of the ſaid Libel. It is anſwered, That the ſaid Alleadgance ſtands relevant, notwithſtanding the Reply, becauſe the ſaid Defence in that part is not ſimply a Denial, but is a Denial very pregnant, inſtantly verifying that the Pannel cannot be ſaid to be the Author, and ſo criminally to be purſued; becauſe by his Depoſition before the ſaid Committee, he has not only denied upon Oath that he is the ſaid Author, but has likewiſe inſtantly verified the ſame, condeſcended upon the true Author; and not only has ſimply condeſcended upon the ſaid Author, but has likewiſe inſtantly, verified the ſame: which Verification being proponed with the ſaid Defence, is both relevant and competent now only to be decided before my Lord Juſtice, and not before the Aſſize, ſeeing it is a peremptor Exception inſtantly verified. And whereas the ſaid Reply bears, That the ſaid Author Mr. William Haig's Letter, bearing that the Pannel was Adviſer, is to be taken complex, there is no ſuch Speeches nor Words mentioned or contained in the ſaid Letter, which muſt now be produced, becauſe it has been ſeen by the Pannel, that it may ſay for it ſelf. And whereas my Lord Advocat alledges, That the Aſſize is only Judges to the Probation, and that he prove before them that the Pannel was Author, Adviſer, &c. of the ſaid alledged infamous Libel; that ought to be repelled in reſpect of the Alleadgance propounded for the Pannel, founded upon his Depoſitions and Haig's Letter: which Depoſitions and Letter being all already produced, and delivered to the Pannel, and uſed, and Liberty granted to propound his Defences thereupon, the Defence is ſo proponed, that it may be either found relevant or repelled. And it cannot but be found relevant, becauſe a Pannel being purſued for a Crime, as Author thereof, this is a moſt uſual and relevant Defence that he cannot be convened as Author. But he muſt be abſolved from that Point, becauſe he offers him inſtantly to prove ane other Author: Upon whom he likewiſe inſtantly condeſcends; and not only condeſcends, but inſtantly verifies and proves. And ſo the Exception being relevantly propounded, and inſtantly verified, as ſaid is, it muſt be here found relevant, and likewiſe proven, and cannot be referred to the Inqueſt. And where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That that part of the Defence founded upon the Pannel's Depoſitions, bearing that he has confeſſed ane other Author, and giving his Oath thereupon cannot be reſpected, being but his own Depoſitions and Declarations, and cannot work in his own favours; it is duplyed, That that part of the ſaid Anſwer and Reply ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the ſaid Defence founded thereupon; eſpecially ſeeing the ſaid Depoſitions were given before the ſaid Committee, who were appointed by his Majeſty for tryal of the ſaid Author. And the ſaid Depoſitions being a part of the ſaid Tryal, the Purſuer cannot be heard to quarrel them, eſpecially ſeeing they are uſed by the Purſuer againſt the Pannel, and are now as his Evidence. And if the Purſuer uſe them againſt the Pannel, it is lawful for the Pannel to make his uſe thereof, ſo far as makes for him, in reſpect whereof the Alleadgance ſtands relevant in that part founded upon the ſaid Depoſitions. Which, together with the ſaid miſſive Letter written by Mr. Haig, and which the Pannel propounds conjunctim, to prove his Alleadgance, verifies clearly that part thereof: And ſo being both relevant and proven, is ſufficient to elide (quaſh) that part of the Dittay, That the Pannel ſhould not be found convenable as Author. And whereas my Lord Advocat in his Reply anſwers, That the ſaid firſt Defence, or firſt part thereof, is not relevant, bearing that it is alledged for the Pannel, That he cannot be convened as Author, ſeeing there is another Author condeſcended upon, and proven; becauſe it is replied that they might both be Authors of the ſaid alledged Libel: It is duplyed, That that part of the ſaid Reply ought to be repelled, in reſpect of the Dittay it ſelf, wherein it is not libelled that they are both Authors, but only that the Pannel is Author; and when it ſhall be ſo libelled, it ſhall have an Anſwer. And where it is replied by my Lord Advocat, That that part of the Defence, bearing that Conſulters and Adviſers are not contained in the Acts of Parliament, upon which the Dittay is founded, ought to be repelled in reſpect of the 151ſt Act of the 12th Parl. of King James, of happy Memory, wherein it is declared, that all criminal Libels contains Airt and Part: To that it is duplyed, That the Defence ſtands relevant notwithſtanding of the ſaid Anſwer; and that the Pannel can no ways be drawn
